William H. Crane, one of the veteran actors of the United States stage, makes his first motion picture appearance in the Empire this week in "David Harum," a five reel feature which includes the week at the Empire. The play is well presented, portraying the horse-dealing propensities of the old banker only as an incident in a small town romance. Dr. Robinson's programme for the week-end runs to thirteen films. Mary Pickford in "The Eagle's Mate" is a five reel film of mountain staging and a story of the Crusaders is in three films.

Stock Markets

New York Stocks

A. H. Stratton & Co., Brokers, report the following:

NEW YORK, May 14.— The worst feature of the market in the first hour was that the activity was greatest on declines. A few minutes after opening trading became comparatively dull, but the activity was resumed, and at 10.40 prices were generally at lowest.

In conservative quarters it was contended that the market was in good technical position, weak holdings having been cleaned out, while there was a large volume of orders on buying side for execution, a few points under prevailing levels.

Financial conditions generally are such as to withstand any kind of a shock and bargain hunters are alert for opportunities.

The market fell off towards the close, many of the leading issues closing at from one to three points below the opening.

Chicago, May 4—Wheat firmer. There was considerable commission house buying by interests who had reports of great damage by fly in Kansas. Shorts were forced to cover but on the advance offerings again increased.

Corn was steady in sympathy with wheat. Country offerings appeared to be a little larger.

Oats, steady at decline. Crop reports were rather bearish.

New York, May 14—Regular dividend of 2 per cent. on General Electric.

Voice of The People

Editor Examiner:

Dear Sir,—Kindly allow me to congratulate Ald. Edgar for calling attention to the large number of out-of-town Italians who are employed on the paving contract. On behalf of the Trades and Labour Council I registered a strong protest to Mayor Bullen on the occasion of the special meeting called to consider the granting of another paving contract. Our very patriotic City Council should be heartily ashamed to walk along Charlotte Street and see good Anglo-Saxons standing on the sidewalks, with empty stomachs, watching some of Sunny Italy earning the living that our own flesh and blood should be getting. And Mr. Editor, not even resident Italians. The trade unionists of Peterborough have no objection to Italians getting a chance to earn a living but they do have a decided objection to any discrimination against their own kith and kin in favour of outside Italians being brought in by contractors. The City Council apparently have made no efforts to safeguard the interests of the working class ratepayers of the city in their past contracts, and will not endeavour to do it in the future contracts if the ratepayers do not get after them. They claim that the giving of another paving contract will help to keep the citizens employed, but it will have to be an entirely digerent contract to the last one, or the amount of out of work citizens that it will absorb will not be noticeable.

Thanking you, Mr. Editor,

Yours truly,
R. Mitchell.

336 Water Street.

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—The beliefs of Pastor Russell are so fundamentally different from Christian Science that he could hardly be expected to speak of it accurately, but his sermon on this subject, which you published recently, was not fair even to himself, for it put him in the position of speaking in an oracular manner without insight or appreciation.

The main thread of the sermon in question was woven about a series of mistaken suppositions regarding the position of Christian Science toward the item of human experience called death. The philosophy of Christian Science was supposed to be as follows: Whoever dies commits mortal error; death is the greatest of errors, and one's failure to overcome it here and now leaves him hopeless—he has failed in the last moment of his trial. The conclusion drawn from these premises was that the death of Christian Scientists disproves the truth of Christian Science. The fallacy of this conclusion, however, begins with the falsity of its premises, for they do not represent the teachings of Christian Science in a single particular.

The position of Christian Science, with reference to the change called death is simply that of original and unadulterated Christianity. When Christ Jesus said: "If a man keep my saying, he shall never see death," and when he said: "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your father which is in heaven is perfect," he lifted up an ideal which will sooner or later draw all men. But it is not only in the belief called "this world" that we have hope in Christ; the true idea must reign in our thoughts until the mortal qualities of human being are wholly eliminated.

The passing on of a Christian Scientist no more disproves the truth of Christian Science than the same event in the experience of St. Paul disproved his statement: "We live, and move, and have our being in God". Like St. Paul, Christian Scientists have perceived the truth of being. They have complete authority for it in the teaching and example of the Master. They have themselves experienced a satisfying degree of proof, and they do not regard any human event as final or capable of closing the door of opportunity. Jesus said: "I live by the Father" and "all live unto Him."

One of the difficulties encountered by Pastor Russell, while speaking of Christian Science, is due to his insistence on its being a system of negative thinking. Take this illustration: "Christian Scientists declare that the ten most potent words ever written are the first ten words of Mrs. Eddy's scientific statement of being—'There is no life, truth, intelligence, nor substance in matter.' I have been a daily reader of Christian Science literature for over fifteen years, and have talked with several thousand Christian Scientists, yet I never read or heard such a declaration from a Christian Scientist.

If anybody will read the scientific statement of being, on Page 468 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," to which Pastor Russell referred, the reader will find it to be a [illegible] sentences, in which [illegible] Christian Science [illegible] Christian. [illegible] regard the last words in question as the most potent ever written, while the life, power and wholeness of Spirit's opposite.

When Mrs. Eddy chose a negative form of statement corresponding to the words quoted by Pastor Russell, she spoke affirmatively: "Christian Science . . . rests on the premises of God—as the only life, substance and intelligence" (Science and Health, page 128). It is doubtless true, however, that both affirmations of truth and corresponding denials of error are requisite for clear thinking, although [illegible] been explained. This was particularly the case when Christian Science was introduced to a world that was accustomed to regard matter no less than spirit as [illegible] and good.

Another mistake that Pastor Russell fastened on making his Christian Scientists was expressed by him as "their teaching that God is everything." There is no such teaching in Christian Science. Mrs. Eddy has said, "Spirit, Soul, is not confined in man, and is never in matter" (Science and Health, page 467). Christian Science is based on infinite spirit, and the infinitude of spirit means, as expressed by Mrs Eddy, "one God and His creation, and no reality in aught else" (Christian Science versus Pantheism, page 9). Therefore the entire argumentative structure that Pastor Russell built on the supposition, "God is in everything," as the teaching of Christian Science, must fall for lack of foundation.

Pastor Russell also fell on Mrs. Eddy's use of the word 'Principle' as a synonym for God, in a manner which showed that he had given but very superficial consideration to the different meanings of this word and the propriety of giving it a new meaning. In the larger dictionaries, the primary meaning of the word "principle" is origin, source, cause; that from which anything proceeds; fundamental substance; primordial substance. It has been used by lexicographers in their definitions of soul or spirit, as follows: "Soul, the principle of thought and action in man" (Oxford English Dictionary); "Spirit, the principle of life" (Century Dictionary); "Spirit, the universal principle imparting life from the creator" (Hastings Dictionary of the Bible); "Spirit, the principle of self-consciousness, self-activity, and of rational power in general; that which signifies a likeness in man to the Divine Being" (New International Dictionary).

Taking the word "principle" as thus in use, Mrs. Eddy gave it a distinctly definite meaning, which she distinguished by means of a capital letter, and employed the word 'Principle' with several other terms to express the nature, eternal and wholeness of Deity" (Science and Health, page 465). This is to say, Mrs. Eddy did with the word in question what St. John did with the word "love". Such is "the process with every great, creative religious mind:" writes Professor Rauschenbusch in "Christianity and the Social Crisis." "The connection with the past is maintained, and the old terms are used, but they are set in new connections and filled with new qualities".

In effect, the rest of Pastor Russell's sermon was a fault-finding with [illegible] it does not [illegible] following out [illegible] the world as criminals under death sentence". "The Church should not expect divine healing, which is so much of restitution and will belong to the world by and by, after Messiah's kingdom shall have been established." Christian Science agrees that true healing depends on the will or law of God, but emphatically differs from everything else expressed or implied in these propositions. Such doctrines were repudiated over 500 years before the Christian era; indeed they should have been obsolete from the days of Moses, for he said, speaking of God, "He is thy life."

According to the teachings of inspired prophets whose sayings are recorded in the Old Testament, God is just to each individual, and does not punish anyone for what another has done, nor condemn anyone after the occasion for punishment has ceased. (See Psalm 62; 1, 12; Proverbs 24:12; Isaiah 55:7; Jeremiah 32:19; Ezekiel 18: 1-3, 20-23; Ezekiel 33: 14-20). Some of these teachers perceived that God's will is to hear or restore, and to give life to all men. (See Psalm 34:12-22: Psalm 36: 7-9; Psalm 91; Psalm 103; 1-4; Psalm 107; 13-20).

With the advent of Christ Jesus, the law of divine love was fully revealed in its universal relation to human interests: "Even the very hairs of your head are all numbered" and in its universal availability to all [illegible] "It is not the will of your Father which is in heaven, that one of these little ones should perish." As for the postponement of healing until after the establishment of a Messianic kingdom, he clearly taught that the Kingdom of God comes upon you in the very process of healing. (See Luke 10:9; Luke 11:20).

The rejection of Mark 16: 15-18, by recourse to "higher criticism," as proposed by Pastor Russell, would not help him to controvert the present possibility of Christian healing, for two parallel sayings would still remain intact. No criticism has ever found a reason for explaining the Master's command to his disciples, "Heal the sick," and his extension of it to "all nations" as recorded by the Master's command to his disciples, these words preserved by St. John, "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also."

Yours sincerely,
Clifford P. Smith,
Committee on Publication.

Canines Will Be Detained

Sanitary Inspector Spence is having a couple of wire cages made which will be used to detain dogs that are suspected of being afflicted with rabies. These will be kept at the incinerator, which is ever yawning for such a morsel as a disease smitten cur, or for that matter a canine of any description. Ald. McIntyre, chairman of the Property committee, has been authorized to detain any dog that may be thought to be effected, and take such measures as may be advisable to dispose of the subject. One dog that has been under observation for some days past has been released, having been found sound and physically able to prey upon the public for another season.

First Mosquitoes Have Registered

The 1915 model mosquitoes have arrived. Being new to themselves and the surroundings, they didn't know exactly what to do the first day or two. But they soon discovered their armament and its effectiveness on exposed epidermis.

Several enthusiasts from their first visits to Stony Lake report that there is satisfaction in the fact that this year's mosquito conscription lists not being provided with malign silencers. Hence while they may stake reckless attacks on ankles and other slimy sections of bare and half bare, they will enter a mixed zone when approaching bare necks and bald pates.

FURTHER FROM FRONT GREATER THE PESSIMISM

MENTON, French Riviera, May 11.—The most pessimistic soldier seen in France since the beginning of hostilities was the chasseur, rosy of face and well fed, who stood guard over the first class carriages of the Paris-Mediterranean train de lux here while plain clothes men investigated passengers' passports before allowing their train to cross the Italian frontier to Vintimille, the next station.

The most optimistic soldier was one I saw not many hours ago, fresh out of the mud-and-water filled trenches to the south of Arras, his face smashed by three German bullets, lower jaw, upper jaw, and cheekbone broken to slivers.

Confidence at Front.

"Have you been much over France lately?" he asked in a way which might almost be described as snappy. It was as though he had said "Form fours, column right, march!"

"Haven't been south of Paris since war was declared," I said.

"Well, say this for me, in your papers," he snapped again, tersely. "The farther south you go the more pessimistic one becomes. Nowhere is one more confident than here at the front; nowhere is one more cheerful."

One discovers this to be true the more one travels afar from the firing line. The reasons for this state of affairs lies in the statement of another French officer, who said:

"The soldier's greatest enemy is General Inaction."

Not Enough to Do.

The Alpine chasseur was down here in this farthest corner of France simply doesn't have enough to do. The weather has been ideal all winter. The exquisite country about him is veritable paradise. The turquoise Mediterranean purls upon sandy beaches under the softest of sunshine by day and the mellowest of moons by night.

"How goes it?" I asked, sticking my head out of the window. One is forbidden to get out of the train here, because no one must slip by the officials who are examining passports. A German spy might get across to Italy and from there easily get back to his own people, so they have made it easier for one to get into France than to get out of it once inside.

"Pretty bum," replied the chasseur in French equivalent. He sighed and turned his head in the direction of Marseilles. One caught his "Midi" accent with his first words.

"From Marseilles?"

"Like Forty Years."

"Yes." He sighed a great big sigh.

"Been here long?"

"About five months," replied the chasseur. "It seems like forty years."

"The fellows in the north—in the trenches—are doing great work and are very cheerful," I said to change the subject a little and at the same time to hear what this last soldier one would see before rolling over into Italy would have to say. He said:

"I wish it was all over." And he sighed again, his full, pink face still in the direction of the Rhone.

"It probably won't last much longer."

"Who knows?" said the chasseur, his arm curved out his bayonet and Lebel, fingers toying absently with the gun strap. With his free hand he reached up suddenly and pulled his tam-o'shanter further down over his eyes. The poor devil was homesick. General Inaction was striking at him hard.

"LIFE'S HANDICAP."

Lord Saye and Sele, who has been appointed commandant of the Golden Green Volunteer Training Corps, is a very strong opponent of "Votes for Women." Apropos of which fact, he has told an amusing story.

He once attended a book dinner at which all the guests were expected to appear with an emblem denoting the title of a book.

Lord Saye and Sele went in ordinary evening dress, but he carried a lady's petticoat over his arm.

No one could guess what book he represented, but when he told them everyone was greatly amused.

His Lordship's emblem represented Kipling's famous book, "Life's Handicap."

His Lordship won the first prize.

French Troops Operating North of Arras Capture Immense Amount of War Material in Addition to Large Number of Prisoners.

FRENCH OFFENSIVE DEMORALIZES GERMANS

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, May 14.—The following official communication was issued last evening:

"The fighting east of Ypres still continues. The Germans yesterday had again subjected our line north of the Menin road to a violent artillery [illegible] temporary readjustments in the line. The line, however, has since been completely re-established.

"On the remainder of the front there is nothing to report."

BELGIAN TROOPS TRIUMPH.

PARIS, May 14.—The following official communication was issued last night:

"The Belgian army, by a new attack Wednesday night on the right bank of the Yser, repulsed the enemy, who left, in retiring, several hundred dead on the ground.

"To the north of Arras we have obtained some new and important results. By the capture of Carency there has fallen into our hands much war material, which it has not yet been possible to enumerate completely. It includes two cannon, one howitzer, two mortars, a dozen bomb-throwers, a large number of machine guns, 3,000 rifles and large supplies of shells and cartridges.

"In the wood of Hill 125 we found the bodies of three companies of Germans who had been annihilated by our artillery.

HUNDREDS ARE PRISONERS.

"The enemy bombarded Carency yesterday afternoon, but without result. As masters of Carency, we have progressed towards the north, where we have established ourselves in Ablain St. Nazaire, which we hold, with the exception of some houses along the river. Around these the struggle still continues. We made several hundred prisoners. During the bombardment the enemy set fire to half the village.

"At Neuville St. Vaast we occupied new groups of houses in the northern part of the village. The number of cannon and howitzers of large calibre taken was seventeen.

"In the Argonne, at Bagatelle, we repulsed two German attacks, one at night, the other in the day. The latter was very violent.

"The success reported yesterday morning in the Forest of Le Pretre has made us masters of the last German organization which had still resisted in that woods. The position is now in our hands."

BIG FRENCH SUCCESS.

The French War Office yesterday afternoon issued the following statement on the progress of hostilities:

"We won brilliant successes Wednesday evening and Wednesday night to the north of Arras.

"At Notre Dame de Lorette we are masters of the fort, as well as of the chapel.

"In the vast quadrilateral of trenches and other earthworks which are to the south of the Chapel of Notre Dame de Lorette we have been subjected to a very violent counter-attack. A ferocious combat which lasted all night long developed in this quadrilateral. In the morning we were complete masters of the situation, having inflicted very heavy losses on the enemy.

"During Wednesday night we also took by assault all of the village of Carency, as well as the forest to the north of it, Hill No. 125. The German garrison stationed in this village and in this wood was composed of one battalion of the 109th Regiment of Infantry, one battalion of the 136th Regiment of Infantry, one battalion of Bavarian Chasseurs and six companies of Pioneers, 300 men to a company. These forces had made of Carency and of Hill No. 125, in the forest, a position of great strength. In spite of the fact that their numbers had been very much reduced by their losses in killed, wounded and prisoners on previous days, these forces during the night put up a desperate resistance to our attack delivered against a maze of trenches, block-houses and narrow passages.

TOOK 1,050 PRISONERS.

"We broke down this resistance of the enemy, and at break of day we were in complete mastery of the situation. Our troops killed hundreds of Germans at the point of the bayonet. We made 1,050 prisoners, of whom about 30 are officers. Included in these latter are a Colonel and the commandant of a battalion of Chasseurs.

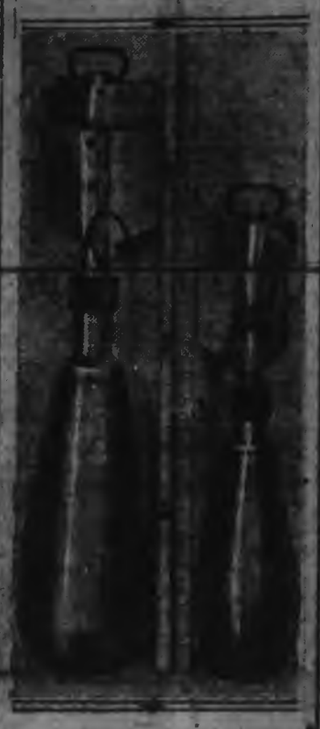
"At the southern exit of Souchez our positions were subjected Wednesday to violent attacks on the part of the enemy. Nevertheless, we retained them.

TOOK SEVERAL TRENCHES.

"At Neuville our attacks on the village itself and to the north of the village made perceptible progress. To the north of Neuville we took possession of trenches several hundred yards long, and we occupied the road called the Highway des Carrieres, which runs from Neuville to Givenchy. In the village itself we occupied Wednesday morning only the southern portion, the enemy still holding the centre and the northern part. An attack delivered late in the afternoon resulted in our occupying, house by house, all of the central portion of this village. The Germans were driven back to the extreme northern part, where we are outflanking them. Our troops in this fighting gave admirable evidence of courage and tenacity.

"In the Forest of Le Petre we occupied Wednesday a new line of German trenches."

Bombs Used by British Airmen



The bombs used with such effect by British naval and military airmen during the war are of the Marsh Hale type, as shown in the above photograph. The bomb on the left weighs 20 pounds, and carries 9 pounds of high-explosive known as trinitrotoluol. That on the right weighs 10 pounds and carries 4 pounds of the same explosive, besides 100 steel shrapnel balls, each ½-inch in diameter.

EXTENSIVE ANTI-GERMAN RIOTING TAKING PLACE IN ITALIAN CITIES

Riots Follow Report That the Salandra Cabinet Had Resigned Because of Opposition of Neutrality Party to Intervention.

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

ROME, May 14.—Extensive anti-German rioting broke out here and in a number of other Italian cities to-day, following the report that the Salandra Cabinet had resigned because of opposition of the neutrality party to intervention. Frenzied mobs, forming in different sections of the city, concentrated in the main streets and began attacking German shops. Mounted troops and soldiers in automobiles were hurried out to rush the mobs. A despatch from Milan reported that interventionists and neutralists exchanged shots in a pitched battle, and that a number of persons were killed or wounded. Angry mobs of interventionists formed quickly last night when the cabinet's action was first rumoured.

Early to-day mobs began venting their wrath against the Germans. A crowd of [illegible] boys [illegible] a German college and threatened to apply the torch.

The wildest scenes occurred near Piazza Collona. The mob attacked nearly every German shop in the vicinity, the proprietors fleeing to the residential districts for protection.

NEW RUSSIAN OFFENSIVE IS FORCING AUSTRIANS IN ROUT TO THE PRUTH

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, May 13.—The Russian offensive in far Eastern Galicia towards Bukowina is meeting with continued success, according to the official report received to-night from Petrograd. Counter-attacks by the Austrians have failed entirely to check the advance of the Russians, and the enemy's forces were in disorderly retreat throughout Tuesday, his formations becoming demoralized during the evening when the Czar's troops penetrated as far as Hoscdaniza, a town some 20 miles north of the Pruth River.

Two Austrian battalions were annihilated by the Russian artillery, and several thousand men were taken prisoner. A number of guns and 50 ammunition caissons also fell into the Russians' hands.

There is no official news from Petrograd to-night concerning the Austro-German attack in West Galicia and the Carpathians, except for the statement that the fighting Tuesday and Wednesday decreased in intensity on a great part of the front. An earlier official note, referring to the enemy's success during the last fortnight says: "The Germans have gained no tactical success. Our reserves, by a flank blow, enabled our army to rearrange a line of advantageous positions eliminating all rear of final retreat. Our army has received strong reinforcements, and is ready to exact hearty revenge."

Berlin and Vienna officially claim that their armies have occupied several towns along the San River above Peremysl, their vanguard being about 25 miles from that fortress. According to the German official report the Russians' reiterated statements that their retreat has been orderly.

Carpathians since General von Mackensen inaugurated his great drive from Cracow number nearly 146,000. It is stated that 69 cannon and 255 machine guns have been taken in the former area. The small number of heavy guns compared with the prisoners is regarded here as strongly supporting the Russians' reiterated statements that their retreat has been orderly.

The isolated battle in the Baltic province of Courland is still going on with no decision at hand. At first the German invaders, attacked at Mitau by strong Russian forces, fell back rapidly, but now they have been reinforced and have ceased to retreat. Neither Petrograd nor Berlin has yet claimed success in this engagement.

"The President Has Spoken Firmly" Says Sun

Special to the Examiner.

NEW YORK, May 14.—New York papers, without exception, had only praise for President Wilson's note to Germany. The World said: "President Wilson's note to Germany cannot fail to satisfy the highest expectations of the American people. There can be no mistake whatever as to the intentions and purposes of the American government." The Sun says: "The President has spoken firmly, the country supporting him as firmly, awaits without passion the German reply."

Special to The Examiner:

ATHENS, May 14.—King Constantine is seriously ill. Prayers were ordered in all the churches of Greece today for his recovery.

The King contracted pleurisy and a severe cold. Consultation of royal physicians was held last night. To-day an official bulletin was given out denying the report that the King's condition had been considered as hopeless. King Constantine is 45 years old. He became ruler of Greece upon the assassination of his father, King George, March 18, 1913. King Constantine was active recently in overturning the war party in Greece.

LIQUOR CONCEALED IN FURNITURE

Charleston, W. Va., May 14—Since West Virginia went dry there have been many ways of getting whisky and beer into the state, but the latest system was discovered when Fred O. Blue, commissioner of prohibition, confiscated a carload of furniture shipped from Cincinnati.

CARRANZA FORCES ARE DRIVEN BACK

WASHINGTON, May 14.—Carranza forces under General Obregon have been driven back to Irapuato by General Villa, who has surrounded that place and has Obregon cut off on all sides, according to an announcement made here to-day by the Villa agency.

Zapta has cut off Obregon's retreat southward, while the Villa forces occupy strategic points north, east and west of Irapuato. It was stated that every precaution has been taken to make it impossible for Obregon to escape Villa at Irapuato.

The agency stated that advices received from Villa were to the effect that he had destroyed the left wing of the Obregon army during the fighting in the vicinity of Leon. Obregon then retreated to Irapuato, where he had established a base before moving on Villa at Aguascalientes. Villa pursued him to that place and immediately began a siege. Another battle is expected to be fought in a day or two at Irapuato.

The State Department has received little information from Central Mexico during the last three or four days. The European situation has occupied almost the entire time of officials here and they have not given much attention to affairs in Mexico.

Stoney Lake Breezes

Items of Interest From Peterborough's Popular Summer Resort

The shores of Stony Lake are very pretty just now, presenting as they do every conceivable shade of green, from the lighter hues of the poplar to the more sombre colour of the pines. Quickly they recall the beautiful ode to spring by the Rev. J. B. Dollard, beginning:

"Lakes of the North, flash out in sheen
Of silver and engirdling green!
White birch and fragrant tamarac
Your myriad beauties fitly screen."

Vegetation is about three weeks in advance of last year, having been brought on quickly during the warm spell of April.

The cottages and islands should look their best this summer, for nature is certainly doing her share to adorn this "Garden of Eden."

Mr. Lindsay is having a rustic summer house built on his island near McCracken's Landing. Mr. John Brown of Dummer is doing the work.

The last block of the logs, which came down Eel's Creek, are now entering Lake Katchewanooka.

Mrs. J. W. McKinney of Sewickley, Pa., arrived at McCracken's Landing on Monday, where she will remain until her cottage near Kawartha Park is ready for habitation. Mr. Morrish of Lakefield, has been busy all winter getting out the timber for its construction.

The many friends of Mrs. J. D. Collins will regret to learn that the illness, which afflicted her all winter, may make it impossible for her to spend the summer at Stony Lake, a privilege she has enjoyed for a great number of years.

The Kawartha Park colony will greatly miss Mrs. E. B. Clegg and family, who are now in England visiting Col. Clegg prior to his departure for the trenches in Flanders. Mrs. Conway, who with her family has camped for several seasons near Sandy Beach, will not come up this season on account of the absence of her friend, Mrs. Clegg.

Indeed the war has been responsible for many changes along the Kawartha Park shore, the scars of which will never be healed. When we think of Heber Rogers our hearts bleed.

FURTHER PROGRESS BY FRENCH TOWARDS LENS

Fighting on Large Scale is Resumed North of Arras and the French Advance 500 Yards in the Direction of Souchez --Germans Are Being Driven Back From the Arras-Bethune Highway.

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, Eng., May 15.—The Times' correspondent at Pas De Calais, France, in describing the desperate attacks made by the Germans at Ypres during the past week, says they hurled themselves forward in attack after attack, each more reckless than its predecessor. The German infantry displayed great courage, fighting bitterly. Hill No. 60, indeed, has proved a stumbling block to the German's plans. Throughout the terrible days of the last three weeks on no occasion has the enemy launched a big attack without prefacing it with an attempt to recover the hill. There are signs that these efforts have very considerably exhausted him but doubtless they will be renewed. "This place before Ypres is a charnel house of German dead. Ypres itself is broken and battered. On the other hand the British line reset and reinforced is stronger than before. Each day our infantry assimilates its leaders drew by its achievements and qualities."

IN THE WAR ZONE

NEW YORK, May 15.—The Anchor Liner Transylvania, carrying 576 passengers bound for Liverpool and Glasgow, was believed in steamship circles to be well within the war zone this afternoon. No word has been heard from her since she sailed but it was thought she would pass off the Irish coast late this afternoon and would reach Liverpool to-morrow.. About one third of the passengers were women and there are a number of Americans also on board. The Cunard line, which leased the Transylvania for the voyage, said that it was improbable that she would be heard from until she reached Liverpool. Because of the presence of the enemy's vessels in the war zone it was said the wireless was resorted to as seldom as possible.

A LONDON STRIKE.

LONDON, May 15.—Several thousand employees of the London Tramway lines went on strike to-day, demanding extra pay for special service since the beginning of the war. Though the strike is not yet general the empire was greatly crippled and cabs have been suppended entirely, while this afternoon it was estimated that 20 thousand employees were on strike.

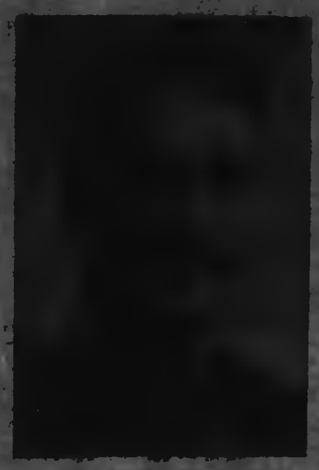
LONDON, May 15.—The Cunard line officials said to-day they would have fifty passenger witnesses before the official Board of Enquiry to disprove the German claim that only one torpedo struck the Lusitania, and that explosion of a cargo of ammunition was responsible for the heavy loss of life.

PARIS, May 15.—Preceded by a violent bombardment, fighting on a large scale has been resumed north of Arras, according to the official despatches received here to-day. The French have made further progress in their offensive movement toward Lens. They have advanced five hundred yards in the direction of Souches. A desperate battle is being fought around the Souchez sugar refin, with the Germans being driven back from the Arras-Bethune highway.

PETROGRAD, May 15.—The centre of General Mackensen's army that threatened Przemysl, not only has been halted at the line, but has been driven back at some points, according to despatches received here to-day. It is admitted that the Russian right and left wings are still falling back upon previously prepared positions.

This movement is said to be in accord with the general staff's strategic plans. The Austrian right, north of Kolomea and Czernowitz is rapidly giving way. The enemy's losses in the engagements in Southeast Galicia are now reported to total 40,000.

PTE. STUART HAYES, 57th Regt., previously unofficially reported killed, now officially reported missing.



PTE. H. JOHNSTON, 57th Regt., who was wounded on April 16th, a week before the big fight at Langemarck.

THE RED CROSS SOCIETY AND THE WORK ITS DOING

Official Channel for the Furnishing of Aid and Assistance to the Canadian Soldiers Who Are Sick and Wounded

TAG DAY ON MAY 22 .

The Red Cross Society was incorporated as the Canadian Red Cross Society by Act of Parliament of the Dominion of Canada in 1909 and thus became the official channel of communication [illegible] the public [illegible] aids, the British Red Cross Society and the Department of Militia and Defence of Canada, for the purposes of furnishing aid and assistance to the sick and wounded in war. Although not incorporated until 1909, it was really organized in 1896 by Col. Geo. Sterling Myerson, and thus was ready for active service when the call came to Canada to assist the Empire in South Africa. aLst August when war was declared with Germany His Royal Highness the Governor General, summoned a meeting of representatives of the Militia Desprtment, the Red Cross Society and the St. John's Ambulance Association and Brigade. To these were shortly added the ladies representing the national service committees, consisting of presidents of the organized women's societies of Canada, at first known as the Hospital Ship committee.

The Central Relief Committee.

This committee, organized by the Duke of Connaught is called the "Central Relief Committee of Canada." To the Red Cross Society was assigned the task of raising necessary funds for all work on behalf of sick and wounded soldiers in the war, while the National Service committee undertake to collect and forward funds and supplies for our soldiers in camp and on the field. Two of these committees, the Red Cross Society and the National Service committee have their headquarters in Toronto at 77 King Street East, Col. the Hon. James Mason, Senator, being general treasurer and William A. Dowe, Esq., general secretary of the Red Cross Society.

The Red Cross Society has the proud distinction of recognition under international law, as the authorized channel throuhg which all voluntary aid for the sick and wounded shall go, and alone has the right to use the Red Cross. Its officers are in constant attendance at the office and its executive has met weekly since the war began, and is fully organized to transmit money and supplies from Canada to London, the actual seat of war.

NEW BATTALIONS TO REPLACE THOSE OF 3RD CONTINGET

Fourth Contingent Will Be Raised to Take the Place of the Third Which Will Go to the Front by Battalions

CAVALRY GET A CHANCE

OTTAWA, May 14.—That a fourth contingent will be raised in Canada now [illegible] many from each battalion of the third contingent has so far been selected to act as reinforcements, is quite probable that in the event of further and heavier calls for reinforcements they may be taken from the third contingent by battalions. This will mean, following the practice of maintaining an undiminished force under arms in Canada, the raising of a fourth contingent to take the place of the third.

One reason that reinforcements are first being obtained only by companies is that there is no call for senior officers, of whom there is still a surplus in England and France. The casualties among the senior officers have been comparatively light, though those among company officers have been very heavy.

The disposition of the cavalry and mounted infantry recruited from the West and also in Eastern Canada is now practically decided. They will be offered the opportunity to leave for the front as infantry with the chance that when they arrive in London, the authorities may decide to use them for the purpose for which they were first raised, in which case they will be supplied with horses. It is not thought that any of the units raised will refuse this offer of active service.

Where the new battalions to replace those of the third contingent are to be raised has not yet been decided, but they will in all probability be recruited in the same districts. A third French-Canadian regiment has been practically authorized.

THE NEW ITALIAN CABINET WILL BE A WAR CABINET

This is the Confident Expectation in France Where a Declaration of Policy in Italy is Looked For Within Five Days

GERMANY'S LAST EFFORT

Special to The Examiner.

(By Wm. Phillips Simb.)

PARIS, May 15.—Private [illegible] reports that Italy will declare war against Austria before the Italian Chamber meets next week. With one accord the Government officials here blame the German intriguers for the crisis in Rome, and the resignation of the Salandra Cabinet.

"But Germany's machinations will fail," a high official told me to-day. "Mark my words, the new Italian cabinet, whoever its leaders, will be a war cabinet, and will declare Italy's policy before five days have passed."

For the moment Parisians have forgotten their own war. All eyes are turned toward Italy. The French communiques telling of fresh successes around Arras, are read only after the bulletins from Rome have been devoured. The public is feverishly interested in the troubles of their sister country. The opinion is universal here that Germany is now playing her last and most desperate card. The belief is that Germany, unable to induce Italy to join the Triple Alliance, is now determined to frustrate Italy's plan to join the Allies at any cost.

Pte. Stuart Hayes, 57th Regt.

Private messages received by [illegible] from the Adjutant General to-day state that Ptes. Sam McKinlay, Arthur W. White, Stuart Hayes and Hyber Rogers of the 57th detachment are officially reported "missing." The latter two have been unofficially reported dead and the parents of Pte. Rogers at least have no hope that the son is alive, in spite of this [illegible] missing. A cablegram [illegible] Lt.-Col. Rogers, cousin of Pte. [illegible] father, stated that Heber had sold his life dearly at the machine gun, and a cablegram A. Williams of the [illegible] Mc[illegible] "Heber Rogers died [illegible] among the Peterboro [illegible] had fallen.

"[illegible]" of course does not necessarily mean "taken prisoner." It merely shows that the soldiers in question are unaccounted for, and it is certain [illegible] military now hold [illegible] Germans unless the bodies could [illegible] identified. It may be some time before the fate of those given as missing will be definitely known.

PTE. SAM. McKINLEY.

Mr. Samuel McKinley, 230 Maryatt Avenue, formerly of 226 Wolfe Street, received word this morning to the effect that his son, Pte. Samuel McKinley, 7686, was officially reported missing. Pte. McKinley is one of a family of six brothers and five sisters. He originally came from Glasgow, Scotland, and has resided in this city for about four years. For the greater part of that time he was a member of Capt. McLean's Company, 57th Regiment, Peterborough Rangers. Two other brothers are members of No. 3 Company and the same regiment, and another is a member of the Mounted Rifles, third overseas contingent, now stationed in Ottawa While associated with the Regiment, Pte. McKinley won a number of prizes for shooting. He was a thorough soldier and took a great in-

ANNIVERSARY SERVICES AT PARK STREET CHURCH

The Park Street Baptist church will hold anniversary [illegible]. The new pastor, Rev. Dougald Brown, will preach in the morning on the subject, "A New Testament Bible Church." In the evening a special anniversary sermon will be delivered by Rev. J. B. Webb of Murray Street Baptist church. The services will undoubtedly be largely attended. Mr. Brown has already established a reputation in the city with those who have heard him and Mr. Webb is much sought after as a preacher in anniversary services. It is expected that in the morning Mr. Brown will set up a new ideal for Park Street people to work for as a church and at night Mr. Webb will lay down some essential principles for future success. Special music will be rendered at both services and the yearly thank offering will be made by the church and congregation.

PRICES ARE CUT

Mr. M. Pappas, proprietor of the Royal Theatre, has decided in war times to charge his patrons only five cents admission at the afternoon performances, beginning on Monday.

A Missionary Hero To Speak In St. John's

One of the world's most noted missionaries is to visit Peterborough tomorrow, and will preach morning and evening in St. John's Church. Rev. E. J. Peck as a young man of ability and promise dedicated his life to the uplift of the Eskimos, then almost unknown to the world, and found to be living in ignorance and degradation. For the greater part of his life Mr. Peck, in many respects like Robinson Crusoe, was lost to the world, and when he emerged from the northern solitudes a white-haired man, a most striking improvement had been effected in the habits of these Arctic nomads, amounting in many cases to an absolute transformation.

His work, then thoroughly organized, was taken up by two devoted young men, Messrs. Ribbe and Fleming, and when they were overcome by hardships Mr. Peck returned to Baffin's Land to enable his successors to return for treatment.

The veteran missionary has now finally returned from his distant icebound field and is busily engaged in work for it at the home base. He is probably the chief authority on the Eskimos and is consulted by the Indian Department in dealing with them.

In addition to his addresses to-morrow Mr. Peck will give a lecture on "The Life and Habits of the Eskimos" in St. John's schoolhouse on Monday evening illustrated by fine light views.

While in Baffin's Land Mr. Peck adopted the dress of the Eskimos and lived with them in their snow houses.

CARD OF THANKS.

I hereby desire to publicly express my heartfelt thanks, [illegible] to the many friends [illegible] of [illegible] who [illegible]

GERMANY'S NEWEST UNDERWATER CRAFT

LONDON, May 13.—According to the German naval press, the latest U boats are fitted with double-acting oil engines of 1,000 horsepower or more. These engines are as simple and run as smoothly as a marine engine and are as easily controlled.

So strongly built are these craft that they can plunge to a depth of 180 feet, at which the water pressure is enormous. A security weight, as it is called, is carried of about five tons. This can be released from inside of the vessel at a moments notice, and the effect is like that of dropping a mass of ballast from an airship. When in diving trim, that is to say, when she is awash, an up-to-date U boat can disappear under water in fifteen seconds and re-emerge in twenty seconds. She can remain under water for a whole day and night or even longer.

GREEN UNIFORMS TO BE WORN

THE HAGUE, May 14. — German troops will be clothed in grass green uniforms during the summer months, according to private information received here from Ghent, where a large factory is said to be working day and night making the new clothing. Field gray will be the colour worn again in next winter's campaign, for which the Germans are making big preparations according to the number of persons arriving in Holland.

The German War Department, it is asserted, has [illegible] many kinds of [illegible] materials, [illegible] shoes and [illegible] to last until the [illegible] original [illegible] was that the [illegible] should be checked, at the [illegible] year.

GOOD CROP PROMISE.

While in Europe, the battling armies are sowing thick the seeds of death, fertilizing the soil with human blood, we in hanoy Canada, are sowing life-giving seed plentifully with splendid promise of reaping plentifully. The Canadian Government, a day or two ago, issued a very favourable crop report. In the west, a greatly increased area has been put under crop, under favourable circumstances. The season being nearly two weeks ahead of other years, provides one of the prime conditions The good crops, [illegible] owing in two or three inches above the ground, and the prospects are favourable for a splendid crop; and, with high prices, a return to the prosperity of the west which abundance of money will bring. In Ontario the crop outlook is also good. In Peterborough county, surrounding the city, farmers tell us that the winter wheat is standing up splendidly—a foot in height, and the spring grains have hidden the ground, and are looking most promising. Even in the midst of war Canada can count upon prosperity—if we have good crops; for after all the soil and its products are the foundation of national prosperity. To use available figures in proof of this, it may be stated that the United States, in the nine months ending March 31st, exported goods amounting to 1,931 million dollars; of this amount sixty per cent., or 1,630 million dollars, represented the products of the soil. This excess of agricultural exports was maintained in spite of the enormous values represented by the shipments of war supplies.

RED CROSS TAG DAY.

With Peterborough having some thirty of her soldier boys suffering from the wounds of war, there is need for us to think of, and not only think of, but do more to help, the splendid work of the Red Cross. Money is required as the sinews of war; and money is the great need of the Red Cross in its work of healing the wounds of war. It is proposed to hold a tag day for the local Red Cross fund on Saturday, May 22nd. We have many demands upon our purses in these times; but we can have no more worthy demand than the appeal of the Red Cross work. We are all of us in this war, either for active work or sacrifice of some kind. We can, surely, make some sacrifice of personal pleasures that will enable us to contribute to the fund as proposed on Saturday next. We may feel the momentary pinch, but we must remember that tens of thousands of our soldiers, our fellow-citizens, and our neighbours, are making perpetual sacrifice, and suffering perpetual hardship. The wounds we are asked to help heal were received by our soldiers in fighting our battles; for if we do not fight for the liberties we possess to-day, we may not have them to-morrow; the mad ambition of Prussian militarism is world domination; and German domination applied to Canada would be a much more serious thing than parting with a little of our money. A dime, or a quarter, or a dollar, will mean a small thing for most of us, compared with the contributions made to the cause of humanity by those whose wounds and sufferings our contributions are asked to heal and minister.

GIVING AND SAVING.

We feel sometimes that there are sometimes many and embarrassing calls upon the purse. Appeals for patriotic funds, Red Cross funds, and other splendid enterprises in taking care of the situations created by the war, constantly come to us, and they must be met. We may feel the temporary inconvenience of these appeals, but are compelled to do more [illegible] Whilst we are met by [illegible] national demands [illegible] national resources, silver [illegible] silver collections [illegible] we must remember [illegible] we are asked to do are as nothing compared with what our soldiers are gladly doing. They lay down their lives; they suffer and suffer wounds. They are facing hardly; sailing at random amidst the roar of big guns, the shriek of shells, and the whistle of bullets; sleeping the hard sleep of exhaustion on hard ground, while we eat of our plenty in peace, and sleep soundly in peace and safety. Canada, as a whole, has not emptied the stocking, where we keep our savings; and, naturally, we are anything but hard up in money matters. Many of us will be surprised to learn that during the past year the deposits in Canadian savings banks have increased to 676 million dollars, being 5 millions greater than they were when this war broke out. If we, as a people, were bled white by war-fund contributions, we could not have added 5 millions of our spare cash to our savings banks' account, in eight months. We are fortunately situated when we can save money instead of getting into debt.

BRAVE PETERBOROUGH BOYS.

Blood is thicker than water. We take a deeper interest and greater pride in the fortunes and achievements of our Peterborough boys, though our interest in this war is Empire-wide, Peterborough sent a greater number of soldiers to the front in proportion to population, than most other places. We were proud of our slice of the contingent, and we have reason to be more proud of the account they gave of themselves in action; of the courage they showed on the fighting line. An analysis based on the figures of those in battle, shows that at Langemarck, the Peterborough men were one per cent. of those engaged. The list of Peterborough killed is four per cent. of the Canadian death roll. This is evidence that the Peterborough boys were in the thick of it; that they stood up to their work like the brave men they were. This accounts for the sad fact that we have a death roll of Peterborough boys "killed in action" of eighteen. While we mourn them with many tears, our sorrow is mitigated, or at least, compensated, by the fact they died the death of heroes, and did more than their share in "saving the situation," and paving the way for the subsequent successes of British arms. But for the Canadians, and especially the Peterborough boys, at Langemarck, the Germans might have been in, or well on the road to, Calais to-day. Peterborough has done well in helping on the cause of humanity in this war, and she will continue to do well. We shall continue recruiting soldiers, and we have faith that they will prove worthy successors of the gallant lads who have laid down their lives in far-away Flanders. They lie in unmarked graves, in alien earth, but their memory is enshrined in our hearts as their names and deeds will be in the history of this country and of this war.

Pte. Mullins Is On Missing List

His Mother Resides at 1033 Water Street in This City

The published casualty list in this morning's papers was the first intimation received by Mrs. Geo. A. Grant, 1033 Water street, that her son, Pte. H. Mullins, of the 5th Battalion, C. E. F., is reported missing. Pte. Mullin lived in Peterborough for a number of years, but for some time had been a resident of Outlook, Sask., and enlisted in Moose Jaw. He was twenty years of age, and the youngest son of Mrs. Grant.

Four More 57th Boys

hereof in whatever duties were assigned him. He was also a consistent member of the Salvation Army and took an active part in the advancement of that movement.

Up until the time of his enlistment Pte. McKinley was employed at the Canadian General Electric Company, as a fitter. His parents reside here. At present his father is confined to his bed through illness. Mrs. McKinley was to some extent relieved to hear of her son, following a long period of anxiety as to how he had fared in the battle that was responsible for the loss of so many members of the Canadian contingent.

PRIVATE ARTHUR WHITE.

Private Arthur White, of the 57th Regiment, mentioned in to-day's list of the missing, was among those selected from No. 1 Company of the Second Battalion for bomb-throwing. He was twenty-two years of age and was born in Colchester, Eng., coming to Canada two years and six months ago with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. White, Albert street. He was employed at the Monroe House, when war broke out and enlisted with the first recruits. His brother, Albert, was also in No. 1 Battalion of the First Contingent, but there is some probability that he was not at Langemarck. He was appointed first cook for the Peterborough Company, No. 1, and Stan. Rowland was assistant. His parents have not yet heard from him, and with two souls in or near the engagement at Langemarck, their anxiety may be well imagined. A third son, Oliver, who assumed the mask of Corporal in the fifth just before the war broke out, is on the Atlantic with the Second Contingent.

THE MYSTERY OF THE MANITOBA SITUATION

The Roblin Government is down and out, and its warmest friends will not claim that its ending has been a glorious one. There is a mystery about the manner of its retirement, and about the manner in which its successors take office. The public will look with much curiosity for the explanation.

The political battle has of late years been keenly fought in Manitoba. At the last general election the Government was continued, but by a reduced majority, having only seven members of the new House in excess of the number of its opponents, not a strong majority, but one which enabled it to continue its work. At the recent session the Opposition, led by Mr. Norris, made very strong accusations of criminal extravagance—to use no harsher words—in connection with the construction of the new Parliamentary buildings. Not content with what was disclosed before the Committee on Public Accounts, the Opposition members took the unusual course of personally calling on Lieutenant-Governor Cameron, and presenting a memorial, asking for the appointment of a Royal Commission to investigate the matter. General report says the Ministers were reluctant to do this, but under the urgent persuasion of the Governor they agreed to the proposal, and the Commission was appointed. Before much progress had been made with the Commission's work the Government's contractor applied to the Courts for an injunction to prevent the Commission proceeding further. An adjournment of the Commission took place, to allow this application to be dealt with in the courts. That was the state of the matter a day or two ago. Now comes the announcement that the Government has resigned. Sir Redmond Roblin issues a somewhat mysterious address, in which he admits that wrong has been done, and pleads that he is not personally to blame. But more mysterious is the facility apparently afforded by the retiring Ministers to their opponents to take over the control of affairs. Usually when a change of Ministry occurs some little time is required for Cabinet making. But the moment of the Government's retirement found Mr. Norris, the Opposition leader, ready with his slate of a new Cabinet. The majority of the House was still Conservative. To convert this into a Liberal majority the retiring Ministers, besides surrendering their portfolios, obligingly resign their seats in the House and arrange that the new Liberal Ministers who have no seats shall be elected by acclamation for the seats so vacated, and that a couple of Conservative members but of the old Cabinet shall also make way for Liberals, so that the Liberals may have complete control of Government and Legislature.

The whole situation is amazing. One wonders how it has all been brought about. One wonders also what is to become of the Royal Commission and its work.—Journal of Commerce, Montreal.

DR. GEORGE CLINTON IS IN THE CITY

With Address the Milkmen of the City—Inspection This Afternoon

Dr. George Clinton, Medical Officer of Health for the district of which Peterborough forms a part, is in the city. His mission is to address the milkmen of the city, who, this afternoon, will convene on the market square, where they will be inspected by His Worship Mayor Buller, Sanitary Inspector Spence and other civic dignatories. A number of addresses are in prospect, including one from Dr. Clinton. The latter will continue to Belleville this evening.

It is expected that at least twenty-five milk vendours will take part in the parade which is billed for two o'clock at the rendezvous mentioned above. A number of prizes are being offered for the best outfit, including horse and vehicle.

New York Stocks

A. E. Stratton & Co., Brokers, report the following:

NEW YORK, May 15.—To-day's market was a decided improvement over that of the last few days. Recoveries were general among the leading stocks, and business was brisk, considering it was a short session. C. P. R. recorded a net gain of a point and a half over the opening. War specialties were not overlooked. They were freely dealt in and were to some extent responsible for the strong undertone that characterized to-day's market.

Liner Will Enter War Zone To-day

Special Cable to The Examiner:

NEW YORK, May 15.—If the Anchor Line steamship Transylvania equals her record time on her present trip across the ocean she should enter the German war zone some time late to-day, and if she passes through it safely, should dock in Liverpool early Sunday morning. This was according to the calculations of the Anchor Line officials, and was made public because of many inquiries regarding the whereabouts of the vessel.

Inquiries at the American Line were told that the steamship Philadelphia, which sailed under the American flag on May 9, would probably arrive in Liverpool this afternoon.

Reports that the White Star liner Adriatic failed to sail from Liverpool on Wednesday last as scheduled were accepted by the line's officials here as correct, in the absence of the usual cable notifying them of the ship's departure. The delay was reported to be due to a strike by the crew for increased wages.

Monaghan Man Was Threatened

Mr. G. N. Gordon Describes Joshua Nurse as a "Man of Peculiar Habits"

COBOURG, May 15.—Joshua Nurse of the township of South Monaghan, appeared before Police Magistrate Davidson on two charges. On Sunday, April 25, Fishery Overseer W. H. Thompson alleges that he caught Nurse fishing with a net on Rice Lake. Nurse, who as his counsel, G. N. Gordon, of Peterborough described as a high tempered man of peculiar habits, said to Thompson "Come on on the bridge and I will kill you," at the same time picking up a stone and throwing it at Thompson. Nurse also told Thompson that his neighbours had threatened to mob him. On this charge Nurse was bound over to keep the peace for a year, two neighbours putting up sureties of $100 each. He is also to pay the costs. On the charge of illegal fishing he pleaded guilty and was fined $5 and costs or ten days in gaol. He paid the fine and costs of the two cases.

A VERDICT FOR THE PLAINTIFF

His Honour Judge Huycke has given judgment with costs in favour of the plaintiff in the case of Wm. Kemp vs. the Canadian Order of Foresters, which was tried in the Division Court Friday, May 7th, when judgment was reserved. The defence was that the plaintiff was not sick enough to receive benefits, and also that proper notice of the illness had not been given. The case created a great deal of interest because it was generally known that the Foresters made this a test case. Mr. Joseph Wearing was counsel for the plaintiff and Mr. W. A. Hollinrake, of Brantford, counsel for the Canadian Order of Foresters.

ONE DEGREE OF FROST

One degree of frost was registered last night The official reading being thirty-one degrees. The maximum frost for any one night during the month was five degrees. Last night's frost was not sufficient to injure vegetation. It might have the effect of retarding the development of caterpillars which, in many places, are said to be numerous.

21st Battalion Arrives on The Metagama

Special to the Examiner.

PLYMOUTH, May 15.—The steamer Metagama, with a large quota of the Canadian Second Contingent troops aboard, reached here this morning. All are well.

The 21st Battalion, of which 100 Peterborough boys are members, were on the Metagama and it will be welcome news to their relatives and friends that they are safe across. They sailed from Montreal a week ago Thursday, but for obvious reasons nothing was said of their departure from Canada, although it was known that they had left Kingston.

Rioting in Portugal Now Suppressed

LISBON, May 15.—Serious uprising throughout Portugal has been supressed with heavy loss among the rioters.

Dernberg is Going Back

Special to The Examiner:

WASHINGTON, May 15.—Dr. Dernberg, said to be the Kaiser's unofficial representative in the United States, is preparing to return to Germany.

Romance of War Ends in Marriage

SOUTH BEND, Ind., May 14.— A romance having its inception in 1898, when Robert A. Roche, forty-five, enlisted with the Indiana Volunteers, for service in the Spanish-American war, culminated here in the marriage of Roche and Miss Grace E. Flanders.

Roche and Miss Flanders met for the first time as Roche was entraining for Indianapolis. With other girls Miss Flanders threw flowers as the soldiers entered the train. Cards were passed and correspondence followed for several months until letters were intercepted by the girl's parents, who shortly after moved to Seattle. Recently the girl returned to South Bend for a visit. Again she met Roche and within an hour they were married.

Germans Voice Hate They Feel For Italy

COPENHAGEN, May 14.—The correspondent of the Politiken at Lugano has interviewed an Italian official fleeing from Berlin to Rome, who said:

"The German Government considers Italy as an enemy. The Germans hate England, but now it is nothing in comparison to the hate they bear Italy."

A German officer of the General Staff said:

"As soon as we have crossed the Italian frontier we shall be on the way to Rome and ruin all cities. Women and children everywhere will suffer, as we shall give no pardon to traitorous Italy. It will be the most bloody war in history."

Italians arrived from Germany say that Italians dare not risk speaking the mother tongue in that country. All German hotels have discharged their Italian cooks. There are only about eighty Italians in Berlin, all the others having left Germany.

The minutes of the last meeting were dispensed with.

A deputation was present consisting of the following gentlemen: Messrs. Anglesey, Bowan and Boyle, who presented a petition to the Council, asking that a sidewalk be built on the south side of McGill Street, from Lock street to Park Street as local improvements.

Mr. J. D. Tully Passes Away

Was in Drug Business in This City 39 Years—A Mason and Oddfellow

Death claimed a well-known resident of this city at an early hour this morning, when Mr. James D. Tully passed away at his residence, 282 McDonnel street, after an illness of long duration.

The late Mr. Tully was born in the northern part of England 66 years ago. When he was but three years of age he came to Canada with his parents, who took up their residence in Smith Township for a short period before removing to Lindsay. They returned to Smith Township after a time, and later to the City, or Town of Peterborough, as it was then known. He was married in 1870 to Miss Fannie Long, of England.

Few residents were better known throughout the city than the late Mr. Tully, who was for a number of years in the drug business here. In the year 1871 he commenced business, his store being on the site now occupied by the Oak Hall store. After twenty-five years there in which he was very successful, he removed to the northwest corner of George street, where he remained until the year 1910, when he sold the business to Mr. C. M. Monsur, who is now in business on George street, north of the Bank of Ottawa.

A Presbyterian in religion the late Mr. Tully was a member of St. Andrew's Church, where he took an active interest in the work of his church until the time of his illness. He was for a number of years chairman of the Board of Managers of St. Andrew's Church.

A member of Court Peterborough A.F. and A.M., and Peterborough Lodge I.O.O.F., he was interested in the work of his Orders. He became a member of the I.O.O.F. 48 years ago, and passed through the chairs. He was also a member of the Canton when there was a Lodge in this city.

The late Mr. Tully has been ailing for some time, and though he spent a few months at Clifton Springs about two years ago, he was unable to regain his usual health. He had been gradually sinking for some time, and on last September, when he had a stroke, he had been rapidly sinking and passed away about 2:20 a.m. to-day.

Besides his wife, one son and one daughter survive. The son is Mr. Victor Tully, of Belleville, and the daughter, Mrs. J. M. Hearst, of this city. Two sisters, Miss Tully and Mrs. King, also survive.

The funeral will take place on Monday afternoon at 3 o'clock from the family residence, 282 McDonnel street, to Little Lake cemetery for interment. Service will be conducted at the house at 2:30 p.m., by Rev. J. Rollins, of St. Andrew's Church.

Bethany Man Lost All His Whisky

A Bethany man lost four bottles of whiskey a few days ago when he left the parcel at the station for a few minutes, while he took a stroll around, waiting for a train. A local blackllister was this morning arraigned before Magistrate Dumble, on a charge of stealing the whiskey, to which he pleaded guilty, and was remanded until Monday next for sentence.

On a charge of being drunk while on the prohibited list, he was fined $10.00, to be paid forthwith, and in default of payment, 20 days in jail.

Another local man, who, it is alleged, received part of the whiskey, was charged this morning with having in his possession stolen goods, (whiskey), knowing said goods were stolen. The defendant was very deaf and it was with difficulty that the Chief made him understand the charge. He stated that he had received the whiskey from the blacklister, but did not know it had been stolen. He was also remanded until Monday, when it is expected that the Bethany man will be present.

The whiskey was in quart bottles, and was evidently the draft variety. Over a quart had been disposed of before the arrest. Bethany is in Manvers Township, a local option district.

TAG DAY FOR THE RED CROSS

Thousands of sick and wounded soldiers are being saved through the work of the Red Cross Society. The Society is being called upon as never before in the world's history. The work of this great institution must never be hindered for lack of funds. The citizens of Peterborough will be given an opportunity to contribute to this grand cause, as the Peterborough Branch of the Canadian Red Cross Society, are arranging for a Tag Day, Saturday, May 22nd.

Butter Was Firm On Market To-day

2c on Last Week's Price

Butter sold at 30 cents on the market this morning and appeared quite steady at the higher price. One noticed along the tables vacancies caused by the opening of the cheese factories. Farmers are finding it more profitable to send the milk to factories than churn it into butter for market sale. Eggs sold readily at 20 cents a dozen and chickens at 75c. and 90c. each and $1.50 a pair. Potatoes were weak at 60 cents and it is commonly reported that the stock held through the winter is being fed to swine. The rest of the market was uninteresting.

Interesting Recital By Miss Ferguson's Junior Violin Pupils

An interesting recital by the Junior violin pupils of Miss Mignon Telgmann was held at J. M. Green's music hall, last night. There was a large attendance of the friends of the pupils, music lovers and friends of the talented young lady whose excellent capacity for imparting her knowledge and violin virtuosity to her pupils was so well demonstrated. Fourteen or fifteen junior pupils showed admirable results of good teaching and some of them possessors of rare musical talent. Without particularizing mention may be made of the work of Master Thomas Diamond, the only piano pupil of Miss Telgmann, who showed considerable technical skill and a fine musical spirit and expression. The following is the

The Cost of a Wreck-Strewn World

By John T. Whitter

On August 1st next the value of the world's capital will have been reduced by SIXTY BILLIONS OF DOLLARS.

This is one year's cost of a wreck-strewn world in the opinion of Prof. Simon Nelson Patten, the University Pennsylvania's noted economist. Dr. Patten bases his opinion upon the economic axiom that a reduction in product produces a double effect in value.

Dr. Patten was one of the eminent thinkers gathered in Philadelphia recently to discuss before the American Academy of Political and Social Science the effects of the European war.

"It is modest to say that a ten per cent. reduction in produce will produce twenty per cent. in reduction in value," asserted one collegian. "The cost of the war for one year is about $15,000,000,000. If we take into consideration the losses of private property in Belgium, Poland and other places actually within the war area together with the disturbance of industry in other regions, a like destruction of $15,000,000,000 has occurred.

"Thus we have an actual destruction of property to the extent of $30,000,000,000 and if the loss in value is double the loss in product we can assume that at the end of the year the value of the world's capital has been reduced by $60,000,000,000. As the total wealth of the countries involved foots up to something like $300,000,000,000, the loss is about 20 per cent.

"If the war continues more than a year these losses will be enormously increased and the difficulties of readjustment correspondingly great. I do not however from this infer that the total value of the world's wealth will be permanetnly decreased. No matter how destructive the war is none of the permanent resources of the world will be disturbed, and sooner or later the liquidation of these losses will take place, giving a higher total value than before.

"Such at least has been the result that has followed all the financial crises of the past and it is likely to be true again. But all securities no matter how safe, will be affected by the industrial reorganization that follows the closing of the war."

MAN BROUGHT UP AS A GIRL

A strange case of dual personality was revealed at Marlington, W. Va., in the conviction of Max Curry, a merchant, on the charge of setting fire to his store for the purpose of collecting the insurance. He was sentenced to six years in the penitentiary. The fire is said to have been but one of many in which Curry figured.

Curry, who is well connected, was brought up in Lincoln county as a girl and was known as "Mattie" Curry. As "Mattie" Curry he went to school at Hamlin and after he was grown he taught school, associated with women as one of them and excited no suspicion. After teaching school for several years "Mattie" Curry went away and after spending some time in the west returned to Hamlin. But the individual who went away in skirts and corsets came back in trousers, and as Max Curry, and he declared he should never have worn anything else.

INCREASING USE OF ELECTRIC LIGHT.

Which is so abundant with ultra-violet light is the cause of a great deal of eye trouble. Prof. Raphonits, a Russian scientist, has succeeded in perfecting a special quartz for the making of eyeglasses, which eliminates almost all the heat and ultra-violet rays. The Tait Optical Co. have been appointed special manufacturers in Peterborough and Hamilton. 430 George Street.

TENDERS FOR COAL

McIntyre, Chairman Property Committee," and endorsed "Tender for Coal," will be received at this office up to 4 o'clock p.m. on Tuesday, May 25th, 1915, for the following quantities of first-class hard screened anthracite coal, delivered at the following places: 25 tons, egg size, City Building; 60 tons, egg size, 12 tons stove size, at Isolation Hospital; 25 tons, egg size, at the Fire Hall; and 2 tons, nut size, at the Police Station; all the coal to be weighed on the market scale and market weigh tickets furnished by the dealer, and to be delivered upon acceptance of tender so far as there is storing capacity at the several places and only for which there is not storing capacity to be held by dealer and delivered as required, payment to be made after delivery. ## Lacrosse Seniors Promising But Not Enough Boys Out Yet

The Y.M.C.A. lacrosse players joined with the lads from St. Peter's Parish last night in a general workout at Riverside to get together for the purpose of developing O.A.S.A. material. As an initial canter, it was quite encouraging, and there is every likelihood of Peterborough putting a worthy team in the district this year. Among those out were Harry Gillman, Harold Dunsford, R. Best, George Robertson, E. Reynolds, Ed. Burnham, Hamilton, a newcomer to the city, Brown, L. McCoy, Crough, M. Dunsford, Fleming, Grover Halpin, and others. These are not all the players from whom a team may be picked, and future practices should be well attended if the desired results are to be secured.

Manager Dillon's men have been practising on Tuesday and Friday nights at Riverside and the Y boys at Central Park. For the former there are the south and East City parishes still to be more generally represented, especially on Tuesday evenings. It is becoming apparent that a city league can scarcely be built up this year with four teams, especially in the present shortage of getting the likely boys out. The older players realize this. However, if the officers of the Y and Catholic teams go after the young men who are new to the game, they may succeed in operating a four-team league from which the older players would be eliminated. There must be greater efforts in this direction, however, and the work must be done right away.

The amalgamated lacrosse enthusiasts of the city are confronted with [illegible] aims, but they must give more attention to the younger men. If the local O.A.L.A. team does not travel far this summer, there need be no disappointment, but if at the end of the summer the older players fail to harvest a fair crop of "comers," the season will practically have been in vain. This point has to be grasped now while May is comparatively young. If this is done, there will be no worries in September.

The O.A.L.A. players should have a practice at Riverside at least every Friday night, but the younger boys of the Y and the Catholic parishes should be taken in hand every Tuesday night, and oftener if possible. Havelock, Hastings, Norwood, and other towns in this district have juvenile teams that show real class. Peterborough must fall in the ruck if the kids get the boys out or the future success of lacrosse in this city will surely be precarious.

ST. LOUIS SCORED FIVE IN NINTH OFF THE BRAVES

BOSTON, May 1'.—Held to two hits and without runs for eight innings to-day, St. Louis in the ninth overcame Boston's lead and won, 5 to 4. Five singles, an error by Maranville when a double play which would have retired the side without a score was possible, and two misplays by Cather, contributed to the visitors' string. Gowdy batted hard. He knocked the ball into centre field for a home run and again rapped it for a double against a sign on the left field fence offering $25 for any ball striking it. The score:

Good Lacrosse Game Scheduled For Holiday

That the Peterborough Lacrosse Club will have a task on their hands when they tackle the Riversides of Toronto here on May 24th is evident from the following letter received by Mr. J. Sutherland from the Riverdale secretary. The letter says:

OUR NATIONAL SONG

The following letter appears in this week's Toronto 'Sentinel' in reference to the patriotic pong 'O Canada'. In an editorial last week the Sentinel sought to discourage the use of "O Canada,' largely on account of its French-Canadian origin. Objection was also taken to audiences standing during its rendition, as had been frequently done at large popular entertainments at the Arena, Toronto, and elsewhere. It was urged that 'The Maple Leaf' should be used as a more imperialistic and suitable national song. The letter referred to it as follows:

"O Canada,"

Editor Sentinel: I venture to hope that you may be led to change your opinion as to the merits of the national song, 'O Canada.' We need not contrast it with, nor disparage the older composition, 'The Maple Leaf,' which will always be welcomed, for the happy expression of those impersonal sentiments to which you refer. But I think I am not wrong in saying that most musicians and all bands consider 'O Canada' as a piece of music of an exceptionally high order, and worthy to rank with the national anthems of other countries.

It has a dignity, a depth, and an impressiveness which is stirring and thrilling Canadian hearts to-day as nothing else of its kind. No one thinks of where the music happened to have its origin, and few, if any, except in Quebec, use the French words. Other words have been set to this noble tune, far more frequently used—notably Recorder Weir's 'O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.' There are as yet, however, no words generally accepted and used, and we still await them.

With whatever our opinions, may we not just as well open our eyes to the fact that throughout Canada to-day 'O Canada,' as a matter of fact, is from the Atlantic to the Pacific, being used as Canada's national song, and will be used more and more widely, especially when more appropriate words are composed?

If it is desirable to develop a healthy Canadian sentiment, and a patriotism which will be both British and Canadian, what better means can be used than the standing during the singing of 'God Save the King,' and 'O Canada,' by all assemblages thus [illegible]? The latter, of course, should not be used without the former.

J. C. Davidson.

Peterborough, Ont.

Voice of The People

UNIFICATION BADLY NEEDED.

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Sir,—This is a time when we expect and desire to give for the needs of soldiers at the front and other national purposes. In common, or uncommon, justice to our citizens, there should be as little duplication as possible in this important matter. As it is one great cause, why should not there be one great society representing it? All these different societies make for confusion and open the door to unbecoming rivalry.

We are certainly getting mixed up in this city, and if different collectors go on appealing to the same [illegible] the whole community will be [illegible] to buy tickets and give other help.

This leads me to put in a plea for our merchants, who are deserving of our sympathy in these times of financial stress, instead of being appealed to persistently for all kinds of [illegible] buttons by all kinds of collectors.

And, lastly, let me express the hope that not only will patriotic work be united without delay, but that more careful enquiry will be made as to the articles most needed and the kind which are called for by our soldiers, for probably this is being done.

Yours, etc.,

Milkmen's Parade Was a Success

About twenty-one milkmen took part in the parade that was held this afternoon on the market square. A large crowd turned out to view the aggregation, which eligited much favourable comment from Dr. George Clinton, District Officer of Health, and others. Sanitary Inspector Spence regards the event as one result of education. With few exceptions each of the vehicles received a new coat of paint and in a number of cases, they were brand new. The milkmen first lined up on the market square, after which they drove around for a couple of blocks in order to give the citizens an opportunity of seeing just what the milkmen of the city are doing in the way of modernizing their business. Up until the time of going to press the prizes had not been awarded.

THINKS HE RAN OVER GERMAN SUBMARINE

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, May 15—A German submarine is reported to have been sunk in the North Sea. The captain of the Str. Collairnie, on reaching Blyth to-day, stated that his vessel apparently had destroyed the submarine by running it down off the Northumberland coast.

No submarine was seen, but the Captain said his ship struck a submerged obstacle. A large quantity of oil subsequently appeared on the surface and the consensus of opinion was that a submarine had been run down.

"Owing to the reported presence of German submarines in the Mediterranean," says Reuter's Athens correspondent, "the British Legation has issued a notice through the local press offering a reward of $2,500 to any one supplying information which will lead to their destruction."

Russians Put Austrians To Flight on Front of One Hundred Miles

Possession of Bukowina's Capital Once More Issue of Battle—Czars' Troops Ready for a Conflict Under Walls of Peremysl

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

LONDON, May 15.—The Austrian forces in Bukowina have fallen back precipitately behind the River Pruth, on which line Czernowitz, the capital of the province, is situated. The retreat of the Austrians, according to the official Russian communication last night, began on Wednesday, the enemy's fortified position north of the river having been shattered on the previous day by the Russian attacks along a front of nearly a hundred miles. This front extended to the Roumanian border, and constitutes the extreme left of the 900-mile Austro-German battle line in the eastern war theatre.

The Russian report states that the Austrian cavalry, which was sacrificed in repeated charges to screen the general retreat of the enemy's forces, was scattered by the fire of the pursuing Russians, whose horsemen broke through the Austrian lines at a number of points and threw into disorder the hostile columns marching in retreat. The Russians are continuing the pursuit under conditions described as particularly favourable, constantly adding to the number of prisoners taken, and it appears likely that fighting for the possession of Czernowitz, which already has changed hands four times during the war, will be in progress again within a few days.

SITUATION AT PEREMYSL.

In Western Galicia the Russians have nearly completed the reorganization of their forces since the retreat from the line of the Dunajec. They are concentrating now on the line of the San, which includes the fortress of Peremysl, and it is expected that a great battle of decisive importance [illegible] ture of Peremysl is the chief ambition of the German forces under Gen. von Mackensen. An official Russian note received yesterday from Petrograd under date of Wednesday, says:

"In Galicia, after the abortive German attempt to surround the 48th division of the Russian army, the German action during the last nine days has had the character of frontal attacks against the Russian fortified positions, which have been successfully repulsed by the Russians. It is true that the Russian losses are very heavy, but it is true also that the losses of the German-Austrian army are enormous. Wishing to boom their success the Germans multiplied by many times the number of Russian prisoners taken by them, a great part of whom were wounded, as the Russian troops gradually retreating had no means of taking them from the field of battle.

"The boom about the great victory in Galicia seems to be intended to raise the spirits in Germany and to restrain Italy from the decisive step she is now about to take."

In the Baltic provinces the battle between the Russians and Germans is still going on without definite result. During Thursday, Petrograd says, the Russians took over 1,000 prisoners.

Fighting also is in progress in South Poland in the region of the Pilica River, southwest of Warsaw. The only information, however, concerning this engagement comes from Vienna, where the Austrian official statement declares that the Russian forces are carrying out a retreat. It appears likely that this movement has been necessitated by the retreat of the Russians further south in Galicia in order to protect the northerly armies from a flank attack on their left.

Six Thousand Prisoners And Twenty Cannon Taken By The French

German Losses Are Reported to Be Over Fifty Thousand ---Defeat North of Arras Most Costly in Months

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

PARIS, May 15.—The offensive of the allies was continued to-day to the southwest of Angres, where two lines of trenches were captured and a strongly fortified wood, in which the bodies of 400 Germans were found after the battle.

Fighting in the Village of Neuville St. Vaast continues. More houses held by the enemy were captured, and the losses inflicted by the artillery were extremely heavy, according to captured soldiers.

A German attack in the Ailly wood resulted in the enemy temporarily gaining a footing in the first line of French trenches, but they were repulsed in a counter-attack, and 200 taken prisoner.

TWENTY CANNON, SIX THOUSAND PRISONERS.

With a breathing spell in the fighting north of Arras on account of the condition of the ground as a result of a heavy rainfall the French had an opportunity of estimating the extent of the victories of the past week. About 100 officers have been captured since Sunday, and the French have also taken 20 cannon, including eight heavy guns, together with 100 mitrailleuses and bomb-throwers. The total prisoners taken exceeded 6,000. A comparative estimate places the total German loss since Sunday at between 12,000 and 15,000.

A force of British and French aeroplanes delivered another attack upon the German positions along the Belgian coast, destroying a number of bridges.

The British continue to hold a large force of Germans in their front and are repulsing all German attacks to reach Ypres, which has proved the graveyard of so many thousands of men since the opposing lines were established there last autumn.

Along toward the coast the Belgian army has repulsed an attempt of the Germans to regain the bridgehead which the forces of King Albert established on the right bank of the Yser Canal, while down in the Woevre another French army, in pushing its offensive, gained possession of the whole of the forest of Le Prettre, a step nearer in the allies' aim to force the Germans to evacuate St. Mihiel.

BELGIAN FRONTIER CLOSED.

The Daily Mail correspondent at The Hague telegraphs that the German military authorities have practically closed the Belgian frontier against all foreigners regardless of their nationality.

"Several American business men who sought permission to visit Brussels were informed to-day that they would be permitted to enter Belgium, but under no circumstances would they be allowed to return, he says. These orders are presumably designed to ensure secrecy for the latest extensive concentration of German troops.

UNABLE TO SUPPRESS THE RIOTS IN ROME

Whole Sections Under Mob Control---Entire City Seething With War Excitement—"Down With Kaiser"

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

ROME, May 15.—Parliament was not scheduled to meet until next Thursday. While sections of Rome were under mob control to-day, military and police apparently being unable to suppress demonstrations. The entire city was seething with war excitement. Crowds marched through the streets shouting "Down with Germany; down with the Kaiser; down with Franz Josef."

For the second time within 24 hours a mob of interventionists invaded the Parliament building smashing windows and wrecking furniture. An angry crowd attacked the motor car of the German Deputy Isrberger, smashing in the windows. The mob pressed in about the Ambassador, shouting "Death to the Germans, to the frontier with the barbarians."

Erzberger escaped by speeding through the crowd.

According to Giornale D'Italia, the final act of the Salandra Cabinet was the denunciation of that part of the Triple Alliance treaty binding Italy to Germany and Austria. This step, the newspaper said, was taken to leave Italy free to declare war without delay.

TO HEAD OFF CIVIL WAR.

To head off possible civil war King Victor Emmanuel to-day signed a decree convoking the Chamber of Deputies early next week, according to reports from authoritative sources.

The King acted on the advice of the leaders of both warring, interventionist and neutral factions. Serious rioting by mobs favouring war broke out afresh to-day, and the King was told the situation was rapidly getting beyond control of the military.

Germany Planned To Invade Italy In August Last

PARIS, May 24.—Jean Carrere, the Paris [illegible] correspondent at Rome [illegible] owing to his [illegible]

"It is a well known fact in well-informed Italian quarters that Germany's intention was to invade Italy [illegible] Charleroi and Mons. This would certainly have been done if France had not won the victory of the Marne.

"At that time German opinion was aroused against Italy, and even the King's entourage were called traitors. Threatening letters were sent to prominent Italians to the effect that Italy would be chastised for changing and Austria so soon as France was definitely crushed.

"The Germans, who then thought they would soon be masters of Paris and the north of France, intended to capture Milan and then cross the Alps and attack France from the south. After Joffre's victory on the Marne, German diplomacy, which until then had been characterized by [illegible]

GERMANS TERRIBLY EXHAUSTED

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, May 15.—The Daily Mail's correspondent at Rotterdam forwards a report from Bruges that the German offensive before Ypres is weakening because of the vigorous counter attacks of the allies farther south of the city.

"The British," he says, "reinforced and encouraged by the successful defence, have attacked vigorously and advanced against the Germans east of the city. They have captured some ground lost earlier in the week. The Germans are terribly exhausted by their ferocious efforts to win their way to Calais. I learn," he concludes, "that the next ambitious attack of the Germans will be against Dixmude."

German and Russian Fleets

Believed to Be Engaged in the Baltic Sea

Special to The Examiner:

STOCKHOLM, May 15. —Skippers arriving here to-day reported hearing heavy cannonading in the Baltic Sea off the island of Gothland. They believed the German and Russian fleets were engaged.

Germans In America All Contribute

Special to The Examiner:

PARIS, May 15.— Gaston Alphaud, of the Temps, writes to his journal from New York, under date of April 29th:

The German Embassy and Consulates in the United States have kept an annual census of the Germans in the United States, showing what cash possessed and earned, and enabling the German Government to levy a [illegible] per cent. of wages or income. These contributions amounted to over 20 million francs in August and September, and never [illegible] below three million francs monthly since.

Dr. Dernburg also organized a syndicate of banks which were pro-German, through which he tried to exert pressure upon those in the Government, and upon members of the Government themselves. Several statesmen notified Dr. Dernburg that his show of friendship was distasteful to them. Since then the attitude of both Dr. Dernburg and Count von Bernstorff toward Washington has been marked by menaces, abruptness and intimidation, thereby earning for them the gratitude of France, since their conduct has been the best possible propaganda for the allies.

Canada can put Germans in the Dominion into concentration camps but she is unable to seize their wealth, which as a result of a warning sent by wireless from Berlin to Dr. Dernburg, was transferred to United States bank on July 28, ten days before the beginning of the war.

In December Dr. Dernburg ordered the German merchants in China, numbering 150,000, to send him all the money possible. The money, amounting to $75,000,000, arrived in California some week later hidden in metal building material, and Dr. Dernburg announced that Germany would issue a local loan in Chicago of $60,000,000, saying that he was sure of American confidence in Germany and he felt convinced the loan would be covered within a day in Chicago alone. This was a safe prophecy, as the money already was there, the Chinese funds being utilized for the purpose.

JUDGMENT AGAINST PETERBORO' MAN

TORONTO, May 15.—Chief Justice R. M. Meredith has given judgment in favour of the plaintiff for the full amount claimed and interest in the suit of John H. Mait against Charles H. Moore, of Peterborough, for $7,500 for 40 shares of stock in the Battleford, Saskatchewan Land Syndicate. The defendant pleaded that he has not received the stock, so the plaintiff was ordered to deliver it as soon as the money is paid.

Lord Haldane Says Conditions May Force It

LONDON, May 15.—Viscount Haldane, Lord High Chancellor, said, in the House of Lords, that the Government might yet deem it advisable to resort to some methods of raising troops other than the enrollment of volunteers. In supporting the bill to give the Government power to control the sale of liquor in districts in which munitions of war are manufactured, which was before the House of Lords on second reading Viscount Haldane said:

"We are fighting for our lives."

He added that the opinion had been expressed that until the return of normal conditions the volunteer system would be difficult to depart from. "[illegible] action that will secure a sufficient force to meet any exigency."

WHITE STAR LINER SAILED

Special Cable to The Examiner:

NEW YORK, May 15. — Without an American on board, the White Star liner Cymric sailed yesterday for Liverpool under the British flag. She had aboard 925 persons, including the crew of 429. Her commander, Captain Bendsell, a lieutenant-commander in the Royal Naval Reserve, said that on the way across the Atlantic the passengers would have a daily boat drill and instruction in the adjustment of life preservers.

Four hundred of the passengers were in the steerage A large percentage of them were children, and nearly all were Canadians.

Realized $30 From Concert

Though the crowd was not very large at the Canadian Kitchener League concert in the Y.M.C.A. Gymnasium last evening, the members had all their tickets sold beforehand and realized in the neighbourhood of $30, with which they propose to buy comforts for the Peterborough boys in the trenches.

The Voyage of The Canadian Engineers On The S.S. Lapland

Diary of the Trip Across to the Old Country by Sapper Geo. Perks of Peterboro'—Protected by Three Battleships and Later by Destroyers.

A most interesting description of the voyage of the 2nd Canadian Divisional Engineers, who recently landed in England, is supplied by Sapper Geo. Perks of Peterborough in a letter received recently by his wife in this city. There are a number of Peterborough boys with the Engineers, including Lieut. Harry Smith, Stewart Laing, Alan Munro and Ernie Langford. After telling of the departure of the Lapland, Sapper Perks says:

The 'Grampian' also sailed with us with the 18th of London and a Nova Scotia Regiment.

The Medical Corps are on this boat with us, a thousand strong, which, with seven hundred engineers, makes quite a gathering. It isn't much of a boat and our quarters are not up to much; however Tawse Jarvis, Young and myself are all together in one state room, so we manage to put in a pretty fair time. The meals are very good, much better in fact than what we got in barracks, and we manage to wile away the time playing auction or reading.

Feeled the People.

And now to return to our departure from Halifax: Instead of anchoring in the harbour (the report was, no doubt, just started to put any inquisitive people off the scent) we kept on going and the odd way things were worked, they didn't even take out a pilot, and as we left about 6 p.m. it was dark before anyone on land could see whether we had anchored or not.

As Sunday had been a rather tiresome, trying day, I went to bed early and lost no time in getting to sleep. I was awakened bright and early on Monday morning by the ship turning somersaults and came to the conclusion we were actually at sea, and as luck would have it there was a beautiful storm raging and getting worse every minute. I went out to breakfast and had quite a time hanging on to my seat and dishes. There were quite a few out to breakfast, fewer for dinner and about twenty, out of two hundred and forty in our dining room out for supper. The way that ship rocked and jumped and rolled wasn't slow. All day Tuesday it continued getting worse all the time until by Tuesday, for supper, there were only six turned out and really I think it was the funniest day I ever put in. We would sit down to a meal and just get nicely started when, bang! everything would go, table, dishes, food and all, right on the floor in a jumbled mass of broken crockery. I think, laughing at those meals was the only thing that kept me from being seasick. I never had any idea how large a wave really could be, before. They were away higher than the hurricane deck of the boat, and then they started washing overboard, and on Tuesday afternoon we were battened down. The storm reached its worst on Tuesday night, and you should have seen our state room on Wednesday morning. Our stuff was just literally scattered all over the floor, and the beauty of it was I slept through it all with never a stir out of me. The other three were 'down and out,' and they said next morning that when they were not vomiting they were cursing me for sleeping. I fully expected to be seasick, and didn't care whether I was or not, and that is possibly why it didn't affect me—never felt the least bit sick at all.

Ran Into Fog.

Saturday.—The time has passed so quickly I can hardly realise we have been on board nearly a week. On Wednesday we ran into a very dense fog, and we were close to icebergs, which, no doubt, we could have seen had it not been for the fog. As it was they had to run at half speed, and were stopped altogether several times. It was very disagreeable outside, but as the storm had abated it gave the boys a chance to come around again. The sun came out in the afternoon, and by evening it wasn't half bad.

On Thursday I was awakened by the sun coming in on my face, so I got out and went up on deck. It was the most glorious day you could imagine—just a long, lazy swell, and hardly a breeze and just as warm as a summer's day. I guessed at once that we must be in the Gulf Stream, and sure enough my surmise was correct. We had gone further South than the course called for and so got into the stream and I don't suppose we shall leave it again.

As soon as I went on deck I thought how much you would enjoy it, and wished you could have been with me, had it been a regular trip, or something, and we were just out for pleasure. My! I hope some day we will be able to take a trip across together, it is so elegant. There was not much sign of seasickness left and everyone was on deck. A bunch of us got together and had a game of bridge, and it was so warm in the afternoon we were playing in our shirt sleeves. Friday and to-day have been the same, delightful days. Yesterday we came up with the "Grampian,' which we hadn't seen anything of since leaving Halifax. They were waiting for us, and there was wild cheering when we came abreast. They have a band with them which played 'The Maple Leaf' and 'Canada,' and several patriotic tunes, quite a concert, in fact, and it was much appreciated. The Grampian is a good deal faster boat than ours and no doubt had to wait some time before we caught up to them.

Escort of Battleships.

All day to-day we have been just drifting along, barely moving. We are apparently waiting for something, and I heard there are more transports behind, and they are to catch us before we proceed. We have three battleships looking after us, and, it sounds so funny, we haven't seen a sign of them. They are, of course, in communication with them all the time, by wireless; but fancy, protecting us, and nowhere to be seen at all. The Grampian has been sticking around all day, and whenever they come very close we cheer each other. They never come close enough to speak, but the Captains 'chew the rag' at each other by signalling, and we have a great time picking up the messages. It is good practice for us, too. It is all done by semaphore, during the day, which is quite easy to pick up, but at night they use the Morse, with flashlights, and they go so fast it is hard work to follow.

We are just about half way over, and it seems odd to be drifting around in the middle of the Atlantic, over a thousand miles from land.

Saw the Cumberland

Sunday and another beautiful day. We just sat around on deck all morning and chewed the rag. We had quite a little excitement this afternoon. We had just determined to sit down to a game of bridge when a report came through by wireless from the cruiser "Cumberland" that she would be with us in the afternoon and for us to go full speed ahead, so away we started. The Cumberland was thirty-five miles behind us, and that was about one o'clock. Of course after that, everyone was on the lookout for her, and no more bridge was thought of. We sang for about one-thirty, a mere speck on the horizon. At three o'clock we were called up for divine service and just got nicely started when the cruiser pulled alongside and started a boat over to us. That put the kibosh on the divine service. The parson told us to give three cheers anyway, which we did, and then told us to sing "Rule Britannia," which also was overwhelmingly but when he tried to get us back again there was nothing stirring. He then told us to sing "God Save the King" and dismissed us.

They had apparently some means of importance to communicate and which these warships couldn't signal, because one of her officers came aboard and spoke to the captain and then rowed over to the "Grampian" and did the same there. There were twenty sailors in the rowboat and it was pretty to see them lower it and row. A person has no idea what a swell there is until he sees a small boat in it. The way it dances around isn't slow.

A Splendid Boat.

The Cumberland is a splendid looking boat and it's great to see her guns looking out all over. She is painted dark grey and looks very dangerous. After their boat got back the cruiser went ahead. We lined in behind her and the "Grampian" is directly behind us, and we are speeding along, and it's a pleasure to be moving again. I guess the report of more transports joining us was a false alarm.

We saw a whale spouting and blowing to-day. He was away ahead of us when we first saw him, but we overtook him and one could see him swimming along near the surface. He was a dirty yellow colour. There was also a boat passed us to the north to-night, but we couldn't see what she was. We've been a week at sea to-night. I believe we are just eight hundred miles from Queenstown.

Monday—And it hasn't been as pleasant as the past few days. It rained last night and was rather threatening this morning with a raw wind. However it cleared up in the afternoon and isn't half bad to-night. We are still travelling in the same formation that we lined up in yesterday and it seems to me we are not very far from land, because we saw two sea gulls this afternoon, the first we have seen since we left. I always had the idea that gulls followed a boat right across, but apparently they don't. They follow after a boat until it is too far out for them and they meet a boat coming in and from what I can learn they seldom travel over a couple of hundred miles out to tell you about was that from should sight land to-morrow.

They have what is called the "log," which registers the number of miles we travel. It is an arrangement fastened to a line and works like trowels, only the line and everything spins around and registers on a meter in just the same way that the electric light meter registers. This time it reads miles, etc., instead of watts. What I started out to tell you about was that from reading the log we had about eight or nine hundred miles to go last night, but it apparently has been changed around so that we don't know where we are at.

There was a Norwegian schooner passed us to-day with all sails set and it certainly looked pretty. It wasn't very large, but everything was so trim and neat and it was fine to see it dancing along over the waves.

There hasn't been anything of any importance happen to-day. I played auction nearly all day and really I'm getting tired of it. Seems funny to hear me saying I'm tired of auction, doesn't it. However, such is the case.

Fired Her Guns.

Tuesday has been a lovely day, with no land in sight yet, although we are not far from it, and I'm sure we'll see it when we get up to-morrow morning. There hasn't been any excitement at all, although we got quite a start this morning when the cruiser discharged four guns. They all went nearly at once and we couldn't figure out what they were firing at. It must have been either practise or a signal. One of the fellows ran to the life-boat station with his life belt. He looked scared to death and I guess he expected the boat to go down at any moment.

"Dutch" Young and I went on an exploring trip and went down the alleyway. It is where the engines and boilers are, and it was very interesting, especially the stokers shovelling coal on the big fires. We are travelling as hard as we can, so it keeps them busy. The cylinders on the engine are immense, and I certainly love to see them travelling, or at least the pistons travelling.

I can't think of anything else to say. I just heard we have a boat drill at midnight to-night, so I'll be able to tell you all about it to-morrow.

Wednesday has been cloudy and of course foggy, so we cannot see more than a few miles, and our hopes of seeing land have been doomed. Our boat drill didn't come off, much to our joy, and our staying up until twelve didn't help us any, although we didn't mind it, as we got into several arguments.

Our cruiser left us this morning, and two torpedo boat destroyers took her place. They are great looking little boats, very low set in the water, and they can travel to beat ten of a kind. One came up from each side and we could see the halligraph sending messages through the mist quite awhile before we saw the boats.

We received orders this afternoon to have all our kits packed by to-morrow morning so we are apparently going to dock some time to-night, and there are very few on board who will be sorry. Some of the boys had apparently been jollying a young chap and scaring the wits out of him. He got his life belt on last night and slept in one of the life boats, which are swung out all ready for us.

At Sherncliffe.

After my hurried closing up of your letter I hustled up on deck to find the bunch already falling in, so had to get a move on. We gave a bunch of letters to a chap on the dock, and I hope he posted them all right.

I didn't get a chance to tell you about Wednesday night after about seven o'clock, as they put out the lights on account of our being in the danger zone and we just hustled along as fast as that boat could possibly go. They tried to make port that night, but the tide was going out and about twelve o'clock we ran aground, which brought us to a sudden stop. The boat whistled, and just to show you how well everything is guarded, it wasn't two minutes before there was a bunch of boats around us, destroyers and all kinds of things and searchlights playing on us from all directions. It was really wonderful; they all appeared like magic. We got off again all right, but only proceeded a couple of miles

We disembarked about seven o'clock [illegible] you laugh to see the trains. They are even smaller than I expected, but they certainly travel some, and the roadbed is in such excellent shape that a person never feels a jar, which is quite a relief after travelling on some of our trains. We went over the Great Western from Bristol to London, and then over the South Eastern to Chatham to our destination. We are just three miles from Hythe, a town on the coast, and about eight miles from Dover.

On Small Scale.

The country we came through is beautiful, but everything is on such a seemingly small scale, a person feels if he got out and threw his arms around he would hit something. The grass is so beautifully green and the towers magnificent. We passed through the suburbs of London, but there wasn't much of the city to be seen and really everything I saw was so crowded in, and all was so new that it will be a few days before I can collect my wits sufficiently to remember the different points of interest.

Our quarters are splendid, thirty to a shack, sixty by twenty, with lots of light, and what is most important, lots of good fresh air. The station is just about five minutes' walk from us, so we will be able to get some place every chance we get.

The weather is beautiful, the nights are cool and the days, so far, of course, are quite warm and the air fresh and clear. It's really Canadian summer weather now, without the heat.

I guess this is all I have to say for this time. I think there's a mail to-morrow and want to have this letter posted to-day.

Fatal Accident Near Millbrook

William Mann Was Killed While Engaged in Removing Stumps From a Field

MILLBROOK, May 15.—While engaged in removing stumps from a field on the farm of the John L. Patterson Bros., about one mile west of here, William Mann was struck on the back of the head by a large lever, causing injuries that resulted in his death.

The accident occurred yesterday afternoon. The lever which was being used in connection with the work, slipped, with the above result. He died almost instantly.

Dr. Turner, of Millbrook, was summoned, but when he arrived the man was beyond all aid.

Deceased leaves a wife and seven children in rather destitute circumstances.

A subscription was started among the townspeople, and about fifty dollars collected, which will be used to assist the family. The victim had resided in and around Millbrook for upwards of three years. He originally came from Birmingham, England.

WAR COSTING $200,000 A DAY

OTTAWA, May 15.—The war is costing Canada two hundred thousand dollars a day.

Up to the 31st of March the end of the fiscal year, the fifty million appropriation made at the emergency session of Parliament last August had been spent. The hundred millions voted recently is now being drawn on heavily, and very shortly the daily expenditure will be a quarter of a million a day.

These figures include the cost of maintenance of the forces at home and abroad, the purchase of arms and equipment, and the expenses of transport.

A SORE WHICH WOULD NOT HEAL

Policeman's Testimony To Zam-Buk.

Constable R. B. Nunn, of Vernon, B.C., says: "I would like to bear testimony to the wonderful healing properties of Zam-Buk. For over two years I suffered acutely with a sore on my leg which, despite all treatment, turned into an open ulcer. I tried all kinds of medicines, ointments, liniments, etc., but notwithstanding, the wound seemed only to get worse. Finally it became so bad that I was on the point of going into a hospital, when a friend persuaded me to try Zam-Buk. I did so, and the first few applications made the ulcer less painful. By degrees the inflammation went down and there were traces of healing. To cut a long story short, from the time of first commencing to use Zam-Buk the ulcer improved and twelve boxes of Zam-Buk effected a complete cure.

"Although the ulcer was healed, I was still afraid that the healing would be only temporary, and that in very short time it would break out again. To my extreme delight such has not been the case. It is close on a year since Zam-Buk healed the ulcer, and as there is not the slightest trace of any further trouble, I can safely speak of my case as a complete cure."

The above is but one of many instances where Zam-Buk has proved effective in healing old and obstinate sores after other preparations have completely failed. For eczema, piles, cuts, burns, bruises, chapped hands, cold cracks, and all skin diseases or injuries, and as an embrocation for rheumatism, sciatica, stiffness, muscles, etc., nothing can equal Zam-Buk. All druggists and stores, or from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, for price; 50c. per box. Refuse substitutes.

Life Insurance In a Crisis

Every time a great Crisis occurs LIFE INSURANCE has an opportunity to show what a giant of strength it is. Tremendous burdens are placed upon its shoulders, but it never shirks, never hesitates or groans.

When the Titanic took its awful plunge, carrying 1500 human souls into the deep, thousands of widows and orphans were left throughout the world. LIFE INSURANCE accepted the burden without the quiver of a muscle, and spread its protection around the Globe.

When seven years ago the financial world was labouring under an attack of indigestion due to undigested securities, and people could not get even their own money out of the Savings Banks, LIFE INSURANCE furnished spot cash to its policy holders upon application.

To-day when a Titanic struggle rages across the Seas and it is difficult to get loans from banks or money lenders, they find the solution again in LIFE INSURANCE.

It is to-day saving thousands of men all over the world, not only embarrassment but actual failure.

LIFE INSURANCE protects your wife and family.

Peterborough County Farmer's Review of Crop Situation

The Grains Are Coming Along Fine—Hay Crop Will Be Fair—New Meadows Were Killed Out in Many Places—Little Difficulty in Securing Help—Individual Reports From Various Sections of the County—Increase in Acreage.

This is the season of the year when the farmer proceeds to ruminate over the crops prospects while his city brother looks in his back yard and decides the one thing needed is a goat that will consume tin cans and other such refuse that may come under the watchful eye of the Sanitary Inspector. Out of a large number of farmers throughout Peterborough county who have been asked to express an opinion as to the crop prospects, not one has ventured to say that crop prospects are anything but good. The acreage in Peterborough county is much larger than other years, according to all accounts, and if nothing unforseen happens the production should be correspondingly larger.

SEASON OPENED DRY.

The season opened up dry, with a tendency to remain that way. This was followed by an abnormal heat wave that sent the thermometer bobbing up around eighty-six degrees. Following this came a drop in temperature and a few thunder showers that have contributed much to the present happy state of affairs. If anything, the weather is a little too cold, but there are many farmers who would sooner see it remain cool for a while so as to give the grain a chance to stool out before the growth becomes too rapid.

THE HIRED HELP PROBLEM.

The hired help problem has sent more than one farmer to an early grave. Farmers as a rule do not need to be told this. They admit it themselves. That such a condition should exist at all is one of those unfathomable mysteries that will probably never be explained. In some sections of the community, help is reported to be scarce, while in others the farmer will tell you it is ample. It is interesting to note that Chief Immigration Agent John Farrell, who was in Woodstock a few nights ago, is quoted as saying that it is nearly impossible to provide men to meet the eager demands for farm help which have poured in upon him from all over Oxford county this week. The farmers offer yearly contracts and top wages, said Mr. Farrell, but the response from the unemployed is not forthcoming.

A FEW REPORTS.

The appended reports gathered from various sections of Peterborough county refer to the crop conditions, the hired help problem and other matters of interest to the public generally.

JOHN CAMPBELL, Monaghan Township—Crops are looking fine. Spring seeding is nearly over. Hay crop is pretty fair, with the new seeding inclined to be light. Farmers are preparing the ground for the root crop. Help is fairly pleatiful.

JOHN KELLS, Millbrook—Mr. Kells conducts a dry goods business in Millbrook. He was out through the country yesterday and reports excellent crop prospects. The hay crop is looking fine, with the possible exception of the new meadows. Root crop is well under way.

J. O. BALL, Cavan Township—Crop is two or three weeks earlier this year than last year. Seeding is not yet completed on the low land. Hay crop is looking fine. Ground is being prepared for the root crop.

B. ALLEN, Smith Township—The new meadows are very light. The old pastures are coming along fine and seldom looked as good as they are this year. The early seeding, such as wheat, barley, oats, etc., is looking particularly good.

SAMUEL ADAMS, Smith Township—Frost did little damage to the crops, which are looking exceptionally good for this season of the year. The new meadows are light. Root ground is about ready. Most of the mangolds are in.

FRED CANN, Smith Township—Crops are looking much better than usual. Hay crop is much heavier than last year. Cold weather has had a tendency to retard the growth. There is very little new meadow land. Most of the mangolds are in. Farm labour is inclined to be scarce.

J. H. DARLING, Smith Township—Mr. Darling reports that "good help is scarce enough." Most of the farmers are supplied, but many prefer a class of extra good help that, as Mr. Darling has stated, is hard to get. Crop conditions are good in his section of the country, with the exception of the new meadows, which were killed out to some extent.

W. H. DAWSON, Otonabee Township—"The crop is looking fine so far," said Mr. Dawson, when queried by the Examiner. "The old meadows are fairly good, but most of the new seeding is killed out and the hay crop may be light." Mr. Dawson has the usual amount of crop this season. The frost of a few days ago did not injure his crop as far as he could tell, although his barley was pretty well on. Spring seeding is finished.

JOHN H. EARLE, Cavan Township—In his section of the country the crops are looking good. The grass is growing rapidly and everything looks favourable. The fall wheat is looking particularly fine. In regard to the hay crop the old meadows are in fairly good shape, though rather patchy in some places. Last year's seeding was practically all killed out. The dry weather and early frost were given as the causes. Mr. Earle is ploughing up some of his last season's seeding and some he is leaving for hay.

JAMES B. FOWLER, North Monaghan—"The crop is looking splendid," said Mr. Fowler. "We are all done with the spring seeding, and are now preparing our corn ground." Mr. Fowler has 18 acres of fall and spring wheat, 7 acres peas, 13 acres oats, 3 acres alfalfa and 10 acres of hay. All the seeding of last year was killed out excepting the alfalfa and the old meadows are patchy. The frost of a few days ago did not do any harm. Mr. Fowler did not have any trouble this season so far in securing satisfactory hired help, but his brother, Mr. Robert Fowler, has been unable so far to secure a suitable man. There were many men applying for work, but very few had had any experience.

MR. CHARLES MORTON, Mauvers Township—The crops in his section are looking fine, and the spring seeding is about all finished. Mr. Morton was in the city yesterday, and is spending the week-end in Hastings. While in the city Mr. Morton endeavoured to secure a local football team to compete with the Bethany aggregation on May 24th. It is possible that the Y.M.C.A. here will be able to send an "eleven" to Bethany. While in Hastings, Mr. Morton will be the guest of Mr. Jack Staples, another Bethany young man who is teaching school there.

Opportunities of New Ontario As Seen by Mr. John Thompson of City

Believes Settlers Would Soon Work Their Way to Prosperity—Not Much Difference in Climate

Mr. John Thompson of the Peterborough Lumber Company recently returned from the lumberman's paradise in the vicinity of Cochrane and Lake Abitibi. But apart from the rich resources of virgin spruce, balsam, cedar and whitewood which appealed to his experienced eye, were the other opportunities practically unlimited which should follow the clearing of the land. When he left Cochrane a short time ago the spring work was almost as well advanced as that noticed [illegible] Toronto and Peterborough. Mr. Thompson observed very little difference in the climate, although he said the winter might have been severer in the north.

Mr. Thompson believes that New Ontario holds far greater advantages for the settler than our immediate back country. The land is rich in timber, most of which is pulp material, the demand for which is continuously growing. When the stumps are burned they are easily removed on account of the light and loose character of the soil, the fertility of which is beyond question. The country is bountifully watered by navigable streams which teem with fish, particularly pickerel and pike. At least it was Mr. Thompson's experience that the rivers are navigable. He made one trip of fifty miles in a gasoline launch, and it was all smooth sailing. The settlers are gradually becoming more numerous, they are receiving valuable assistance, the patches of cleared stretches are increasing, but there is a vast acreage still to be taken up. Mr. Thompson did not refer to New Ontario after the manner of a "booster," but he does feel that there are families in parts of this country whose efforts in the Cochrane region would soon lead to prosperity, whereas now they are drudging along in the abreast of living and with very meagre prospects.

Referring to the first Mr. Thompson spoke of spruce he saw, from which 12 in. x 12 in. timber could be cut 60 feet in length; also of 30,000 cedar poles from 30 to 45 feet long, and so straight were they that it was difficult to distinguish the butts from the tops. Pulp material from New Ontario is being removed by special [illegible] material, the spruce is shipped in lengths to the pulp mills in New York and Pennsylvania. There is no duty and the freight rates to Niagara are as favourable as those between Toronto and Peterborough. The position which Quebec held in the pulp market is passing to Ontario and Mr. Thompson believes the time is not far distant when the mills will be altogether local to Northern Ontario. The supply is practically unlimited. Mr. Thompson has received an offer from a mill at Monteith which has a capacity of 200,000 cords of wood a year and four million feet of timber.

RETAIL PRICES AT FRUIT STORES

Tomatoes, cucumbers, lettuce, asparagus, celery, etc., and pineapples and strawberries, are decidedly enticing at any time, but especially upon their first appearance. They come rather high in [illegible] but they make a treat after the long [illegible] men offer the first products of the [illegible] and while some are naturally higher in price than they will be when the home grown are at hand, pineapples, however, an exception, of course, are as cheap as they are expected to go.

HEROIC WORK IS DONE DURING THE LENGTHY LINE OF BRITISH TRENCHES

(By G. Valentine Williams in the London Daily Mail.)

General Headquarters, British Army in the Field, France—"Rasti'ch, so rost'ich" (If I res, I rust), says an old German proverb. Our army in the field does not rest. Neither does it rust. All the time that the operations are proceeding at the front, while men are dying without a murmur and fresh men take their places, steady, sinlent spade-work is going on at different points all along the line behind our front. Whatever its nature, it has the same steadfast object always in view—namely, how to equip our army with the latest devices of science for the waging of war in order that it may the more speedily accomplish its task of crushing the German.

Never has the British race displayed its genius of adaptability more conspicuously than in the work of experiment in ordnance, explosives and aircraft, and in the practical training of the soldier (in this is seen the hand of Sir John French, the father of our present-day training for officers), which is going on by night and day at our different army centres in France. No labours are too arduous, no risks too great for the officers and men engaged if thereby the fighting efficiency of the army be increased.

"In all the five months I have been out here," a young officer of sappers said to me the other day—and there was apology in his tone—"I have never been nearer the firing line than this." Yet, day in, day out, he is taking his life in his hands, experimenting with the most powerful and most deadly explosive which the genius of man has produced. This work of experiment has cost valuable lives. Yet it never ceases. It goes marching on like the souls of the men who have cheerfully died not in the inspiriting atmosphere of battle but in the sweltering obscurity of a laboratory or testing-ground far behind the lines.

Machine-Gun School.

One of the most marked features of the military superiority of Germany when the war started was the immense quantities of machine-guns she possessed. The machine-gun is indispensable in modern war. By their skilful employment of this most deadly weapon the Germans have admirably supplemented the efforts of their troops. In the region where the fighting is at present proceeding between the British and the Germans, the latter have turned the innumerable little houses dotting the countryside into regular fortresses with the help of their apparently inexhaustable supply of machine-guns. Before Vermelles could be occupied the French engineers had to mine and blow up the place house by house, the German troops with fanatical bravery sticking at their posts to the last.

The indispensableness of the machine-gun is therefore one of the first lessons of this war. The British Army has learnt it. And, while the numbers of machine-guns supplied to battalions have been very appreciably increased, the newest pattern being probably the best of its kind in use to-day, the training of machine-gun officers has been steadily proceeding. I must confess it came as a great surprise to me to find installed in one of the towns in this part of the world a machine-gun school in full swing. Here officers coming straight from the trenches are able to go through a complete course embracing the mechaniam and the handling of the gun, and, most valuable of all, are able to combine their own experience of trench warfare with the general precepts of this branch of the military art.

In the great yard where the machine gun school is installed I found officers of all kinds of regiments, including a number of Territorial non-commissioned officers and men qualifying for commissions, going through a strictly practical course of training. Trenches had been dug and the pupils were practicing transporting, mounting and dismounting, feeding, sighting and firing the gun. At the request of the officer in charge of the school I am debarred from giving any details of the course, but I cannot refrain from expressing my admiration at the infinite ingenuity and resource displayed in adapting our officers to this new development of modern war.

Making More Officers.

With that admirable sense of the practical which is the distinguishing mark of our army in the field, it is recognized that every attempt should be made to make use of the opportunities provided on the spot for the training of officers. The territorial regiments already at the front contain the most valuable material at the disposal of the authorities for filling the gaps made almost daily in the ranks of our officers. Accordingly a cadet school has been opened, not a hundred miles from the firing line, where young privates, mainly of the Territorial regiments, are trained for commissions.

I spent an interesting morning at the school, from which many young fellows have passed as officers, and at the present more cadets are going through their training. The Honorable Artillery Company, the Artists, the London Scottish, the Queen's Westminsters, the Glasgow Highlanders, and the Irish Guards have supplied cadets.

Not all cadets are suitable for commissioned rank. In this admirable institution, run on thoroughly Spartan lines by a group of young and enthusiastic staff officers, the applicants are thoroughly tested as to their mental and moral capabilities for assuming the great responsibility resting with the officers in the field. Every week each cadet puts in twenty-four hours in the trenches in order to see carried into effect the teachings expounded in the lectures he has attended during the week in the class rooms at the school. He has to rise at 6:30 and start work at 9 a.m., filling in the time between classes by doing the ordinary fatigue work of the private in the field.

The discipline is strict and is maintained, and altogether the whole school is permeated with a delightful atmosphere of British military efficiency. Let me quote a characteristic paragraph from the rules of the school:

"Students must exert themselves to appear clean and smart; when walking in the town they should be conspicuous as the cleanest and smartest soldiers in the garrison. They should set an example in smart, soldierly bearing at all times, and take a pride in their turn-out. They should also make it a point of honour to keep their quarters as clean and free from dirt as circumstances admit, so that 19 Rue X may very rightly be known as the cleanest and best-kept billet in the town."

No Grumbling.

Thus, hand-in-hand with the great deeds which are daily being done in the firing line, does the groundwork of the army proceed behind the front. However, the officers may inwardly chafe at having to reconcile themselves to work the principal reward of which is the consciousness of duty done, they never grumble. Repair shops, testing grounds, officers' training schools behind the front—all are vivid examples of the determination inspiring all ranks in the army, the will to "do his job." "They also serve who only stand and wait."

Last week inscrutable Providence decreed that I should witness the death of one of these. One must count it an honour to assist at the passing of a hero, and the gallant boy who was instantly killed a few paces from where I stood died a hero's—a martyr's—death, if ever man did. He caressed the deadly explosive with which he worked as though it were his child. He lived for the task entrusted to him as he died for it. One must grieve for the cutting off of a very splendid young life, but, like the flame of the explosion which ended it, there shines forth brightly against the black cloud of sorrow the proud thought that he died in the spirit of this army of ours which only cares that England should live.

More Ammunition Is Required

Striking Success Difficult to Achieve —More Explosives and More Men Needed to Break Enemy's Crust

LONDON, May 15.—A strong plea for greater supplies of ammunition is made by the Times correspondent in Northern France. He attributes chiefly to the lack of an unlimited supply of high explosive shells the disappointing results of British attacks on Sunday in the district of Fromelles and Richebourg. By way of contrast he records the fact that the French, who co-operated in a combined movement against the German lines, fired 276 rounds of high explosives per gun in one day, and levelled the German defences to the ground. The correspondent says:

"It is important for an understanding of the British share in the week's operations to realize we are suffering certain disadvantages which make striking successes difficulty to achieve. Two armies, those of the Crown Prince of Bavaria and the Duke of Wurtemberg, are still in our front, holding at full strength lines which are supported by formidable artillery and are not to be taken easily. Secondly, we are still suffering from the aftermath of the first gas attack at Ypres.

Lacked High Explosives.

"At Fromelles and Richebourg we found the enemy much more strongly posted than we expected. We lacked high explosives to level the parapets. When our infantry gallantly stormed the trenches they found a garrison undismayed, many entanglements still intact, and maxims on all sides ready to pour in streams of bullets. We were unable to maintain ourselves in the trenches won, and our reserves were not thrown in because the conditions for success in assault were absent.

"Until we are thoroughly equipped for this trench warfare, we attack [illegible] It is only by means of high explosives that we can break through the hard outer crust of German defences we believe we can scatter the German armies, but to break this crust we need more explosives, more heavy howitzers, and more men."

REPORTS SHOW BETTER CONDITIONS

Financiers Agree That Crop Conditions Will Make For Prosperity

"From all directions and in practically all branches of financial activity the reports show improving conditions,' says Robert E. Kemerer, of the Standard Stock Exchange. At the time of the break in the markets the pessimists were out in force with the usual arguments of 'over speculation,' 'manipulated advances,' 'artificial inflation' and so on for a day or two they held full sway. In the face of the present agricultural industrial and commercial activity in both Canada and the United States, I cannot see the force of their arguments.

"Crop conditions alone would warrant a spirit of optimism. The latest United States Government report estimated 693,000,000 bushels of wheat, and estimates of the Canadian wheat crop place it at the exceptional figure of 250,000,000 bushels. Financiers throughout the country unite in the opinion that this feature in itself cannot but make for prosperity. Trade balances continue to swing in favour of both Canada and the United States; the latest weekly report of the latter country, showing exports of $57,783,736 with imports of $34,660,552; balance in its favour of $23,123,204.

"So far as the purely technical position of the market is concerned it may be regarded as vastly improved. Many weak accounts which were established during the recent advances, have been wiped out, and the shares have passed into stronger hands.

Romance of The Lusitania

LONDON, May 15.—A romance of the Lusitania developed when Engineer John Welsh and Miss Gerta Neilson, a milliner, were married at Manchester, the home of the bridegroom. They first met aboard the liner and became engaged during the voyage. The bride fell from a lifeboat into the sea and was rescued by Welsh. Later both were picked up by a trawler.

BOARD OF TRADE'S APPEAL FOR THE AID OF LOYAL CITIZENS

Even in War Times There Are Many Municipal Problems Which Demand the Attention of a Board of Trade—Membership Should Be Increased

The following letter is being sent to members and prospective members of the Board of Trade from Secretary A. N. Allison's office:

Dear Sir,—Read every word in this letter. It might mean dollars to you.

While you read there is a call going forth to practically every civilized person in the world and that call is "Your King and country need you." The magnificent way in which that call is being answered, especially by those who belong to the British Empire, is most gratifying. Is it not? "God save the King."

The above particularly refers to a war such as is raging now in Europe. But there are different kinds of war —many different kinds—and we are all more or less engaged in fighting one or other of them. We have battles to fight every day we live. Some we win; some we lose.

One of the greatest wars of this kind is that which is being carried on by municipalities and municipal organizations to bring about a better state of prosperity, a higher standard of citizenship, a better feeling of brotherhood and co-operation, and it is news of this war that this letter contains. A call is going forth to you every day and we only wish now to emphasize it and, if possible, receive your favourable response.

"YOUR CITY NEEDS YOU."

To make Peterborough a better place to live in to do business in, to invite your out-of-town friends to, it is necessary, and essentially so, that you should do your part in bringing about this betterment.

Peterborough is a magnificent city and a mighty nice place to live in, and to do business in. But it might be better. You would like to see it [illegible] to make it one of the finest cities on the Continent. This you will admit. But the great handicap is, and it is a great handicap, is the awful dearth or lack of interest and co-operation on the part of the general citizenship of the city. There is a great absence of the pull-together spirit.

"The fault dear Brutus is not in our stars but in ourselves that we are underlings."

That's it, isn't it? Peterborough's alright, but we, its citizens, are not making the most of its alrightness.

To obtain success in any walk of life one must work diligently, earnestly and systematically. If we, as a city, are not as successful as we ought to be we have but to look in the looking-glass to find the reason. We are not trying as we should. We are not sufficiently interested. We say, "Let George do it," and then we stand back and swear and knock because George didn't do it right, or at least he didn't do it as we thought he should have done it. And we are angry and we keep on knocking George.

If everybody did his share we would be a happy, contented and prosperous people, and we, who have the interests of Peterborough at heart, and who have these problems on our hands, wish for, and are working for, the bringing about of a nearer realisation of this splendid state.

The Board of Trade is, or should be, a leading factor in this work, and so far as the officers are concerned, we want to be. But how can we, if we don't receive the moral, financial and physical support of the citizens? Our hands are tied. Loosen them so that we may better do our work. By becoming a member you will help considerably.

The Board of Trade is in reality a citizen's committee, whose sole object as an organization is, or should be, to co-operate in every way possible, within itself, with the City Council and other organizations, to bring about more prosperity, better living conditions and so on, for you.

The Board of Trade is a body before which the citizens get an opportunity to air their troubles and bring forth suggestions for improvement. Come before it with yours.

We have to advertise abroad our advantages in an endeavour to bring to our city manufacturers desirable citizens and business men. We have to work to better conditions here, beautify our city, promote a better feeling and engender co-operation amongst ourselves.

A chain is no stronger than its weakest link. A weak link spoils the chain. So a weak citizen, or a weak organization, spells a city to a greater or less degree. Let's work together to bring ourselves up to a higher level as a city and as individuals. Remember we are interdependent. We are all affected to a greater or less degree by the success or failure of the other fellow or organization.

Now, there is no doubt in our minds about your desire to bring about improvements, and one of the best ways for you to satisfy that desire is to fill [illegible] come a member of the Peterborough Board of Trade for 1915-16. The membership fee is only $2, and we must have a large membership to get sufficient money to carry on the work successfully. Many other boards charge as high as $25 for membership. We only ask you for $2 and your interest and support.

There are many opportunities open to us for good work right now in the way of securing industries, tourists, etc., and we want to open headquarters, get out good literature, and in every possible way boost our city.

This is an opportunity for you to enlist with the best organization in Peterborough. Let's count on you. Answer the call to-day.

Fill in the application blank, enclose it in the addressed and stamped envelope along with your cheque or a $2 bill and mail it to the Secretary's Office at 160 Charlotte Street.

Do it right away.

Yours truly,

Peterborough Board of Trade,
A. N. Allison, Secretary.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

DRESS IN SHIRTWAIST STYLE.

By Anabel Worthington.

This dress, if any, deserves to be called a shirtwaist dress, for the body is a regular shirtwaist and the skirt the plainest possible four-piece model. The practical ones to which this design may be put are legion. For house wear, for shopping, for walking, and for working, it could not be improved upon. Body and skirt are attached, and the closing is straight down the centre-front. The pattern provides a choice of waist lines, high or normal, as one prefers to have it.

The waist back extends over the shoulder to meet the gathered edges of the front. The high collar is finished with a pointed tab each side, and buttons in the front in military fashion. Straight cuffs are joined to the long sleeves, which has an opening at the back, allowing the cuff to be opened out for laundering. If preferred, the sleeves may be made shorter. The skirt is moderately wide at the lower edge, with seam at centre-back and side, and the edges hemmed at the front.

In gingham or percale this smart little dress would cost not more than a dollar, and if the materials could be picked up at a bargain counter it would be double that a good deal less. The design could be developed in linen, cotton, [illegible] or even in light weight wool materials if desired, while all poplin, cotton, chintz or cretonne. Pearl buttons or buttons of the material should be used. For medium size [illegible] of 36 inch material without nap will be required. The pattern, No. 7129, comes in sizes from 34 to 44 inches bust measure.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required and age of a child.

Price 10 cents or 2 for 15c.

STRIKING INCIDENTS IN THE WAR ZONE

You cannot, if you be a civilian, get into the war zone, not even if you have all the recommendations of a Bishop, or all the elusiveness of Puck himself. You can, however, win the red edge of it, where it throws out its living servants and its dad victims. Then you can see it in the eyes of men who have been there. You can see it in the way they look at you with a far-away, misty shadow, as if they had seen many things which were beyond words, even beyond nightmares.

"All," he said, "we and the doctors meet the saddest side of war. We are not stirred by the charge, because we are not in it. We foregather with the sheaves of the wounded and the sheaves of the dead, and that is a dark harvest to be among. Mostly, too, it is in the dark of night that we go forth, because in this trench warfare that is the time of the fighting. The night may hide you, but it does not stop a bullet or the awful drone of shell-fire."

He hesitated for a minute, as if there was something he was going to say which he did not quite know how to say. "It is just this," he went on, "that I sometimes wonder why the horrible thing need ever end at all. Those trenches away to the north there—and he waved his hand towards them—are like rows of turnips in a field, so numerous that when you have destroyed or captured one, you are face-to-face with another, [illegible] so much as the [illegible] ground on an Irish hillside. You have got a little bit, and you think you are going to make progress, but you suddenly find yourself against a new order of rocks, and you say, 'how long, oh; how long?' That is the human spirit of ordeal which a chaplain catches from the trenches when he is burying the dead, not singly, mind you, but in numbers. Ah! it is a tearful thing to see fine young lads, with the bloom of manhood scarcely ripe on, their faces, laid in graves, covered over and left for ever and ever. Not a drum is heard, not a funeral note, except the quiet service, the 'Last Post,' and then on we go to the same thing over and over again." That is war as the chaplain knows it; that is what follows the blowing up of a trench the swift infantry attack, the rout of the enemy, and then the counting up of the dead.

"Generally," he remarked, "a trench battle lasts about an hour, and its infernal violence, what with big guns and small guns and bombs and rifles, could hardly last longer. The thing overwhelms the individual man, who is merely an item that survives, by the mercy of Providence or the chance of things, who crawls through at all, but lies dead far from the land of his fathers. Yes, war is the grave as well as hell, with purgatory often between, but the great gleam of it, to me, is always the human splendour of the men. They are not merely fine, they are majestic, and I often feel how poor a thing it is to be a mere chaplain beside them."

He had no more to say, or rather there was no more he would say, so we just sat quiet, exchanging the inner, unsaid thoughts which shoot across these newly turned pages of real war, as set down by a fighting captain and a praying "sky-pilot." — James Milne, in Montreal Standard.

What the Captain Knew.

The young French captain had lived in England and knew English well, and that was why, after four months of fighting in the Argonne, he had been put on intelligence duty between the French and the British Armies. "But you ask me," he said, "about war: what is it like; is it really hell? I tell you it is. It must be, because its end is the destruction of the [illegible] — that is death. Now, a dear friend of mine was killed, and lay for a day half-way between our trenches and the Germans. He had a farewell letter in his pocket for his young wife, and I must get and send it. I did, and I was trying also to carry in his body for a French burial, when the Germans opened fire on us. A bullet shot away the crest of my cap, and cut a furrow through my hair. 'What bad shots they are!' stuttered my soldier-servant, who was helping me with my friend. We laughed and regained the trenches; and that's war."

"A very near thing," I said to him, and he answered, "All things are near in war, until the last thing when you fall, casual like, as if the moment had been waiting for you and found you off your guard. Well, we had half-a-dozan German prisoners in our trench, and the Germans had been guilty of treachery and of treating our wounded badly; and we said to those prisoners, 'what of you?' They told us of their wives and their children, of their desire to fight no more, and how sweet a thing it would be if they were allowed to be free. 'How can that be?' I said to my men, and we heard no more of them — and, again, [illegible] war. We fight in red madness, and you hardly know what happens in the fever of it all. I would not say that kindly things do not happen between individual men on opposite sides, but mostly you find them on your own side."

There Mon Capitaine was silent for a little, and then he said, "You know, my servant in the trenches, although quite a common man, was a great chevalier. Somebody was shot through the brain at a look-out hole, and a cry went up in the trench of my name. He heard it, thought I had been hit, and came rushing to me. When he saw I was still alive he cried with joy, and I embraced him. That it what we French do — we fight, fight, oh! so hard, oh! so bitterly, but our hearts are tender, and we weep over a little thing and embrace each other. You asked me what is war. It is hell, with glimpses of Heaven. I could tell you more; but of one thing I am sure, that not since the days of Napoleon himself has France had so victorious and sacrificing an army as she has to-day, an army which is going to tear victory from the Germans."

Mon. Capitaine, a handsome fellow, with a hawk's black eye, softened by humour, pulled out a fresh cigarette, lit it and said that English matches were certainly better than French matches. But away up in the trenches of the Argonne they had been mighty glad to make a stump of a cigarettes give fire to half-a-dozen smoke-famished men.

The Chaplain.

The chaplain had been an Irishman insured to peace, till war called him. He had been in it for five months, and had come to know it as not merely hell, but the grave. His eyes were gentle and fair, and they looked at you with a far-away, misty shadow, as if they had seen many things which were beyond words, even beyond nightmares.

"All," he said, "we and the doctors meet the saddest side of war. We are not stirred by the charge, because we are not in it. We foregather with the sheaves of the wounded and the sheaves of the dead, and that is a dark harvest to be among. Mostly, too, it is in the dark of night that we go forth, because in this trench warfare that is the time of the fighting. The night may hide you, but it does not stop a bullet or the awful drone of shell-fire."

He hesitated for a minute, as if there was something he was going to say which he did not quite know how to say. "It is just this," he went on, "that I sometimes wonder why the horrible thing need ever end at all. Those trenches away to the north there—and he waved his hand towards them—are like rows of turnips in a field, so numerous that when you have destroyed or captured one, you are face-to-face with another, [illegible] so much as the [illegible] ground on an Irish hillside. ## Quick Despatch To The Front

Government Also Plans to Maintain At All Times 50,000 Men Under Arms At Home

OTTWA, May 15. — Quick despatch to the Front of contingents now in Canada and active recruiting to maintain at all times the total of 50,000 men under arms at home are the Government's plans.

The need of this is emphasized not only by the losses sustained by the Canadian forces now on active service, but by the call emphasized anew in the morning cables for more men.

Following the fight at Langemarck one company from each battalion of the third division was ordered to be sent ahead more expeditiously than had been planned for. New battalions are now to be authorized in the different divisional areas, though the exact allocation of them and the number of men to be called for has not been determined.

The enlistment so far has been heavy, but the recent stirring events have tended to greatly stimulate it, and the Militia Department foresees no difficulty in raising any number which may be required. The training and equipment of the forces, however, calls for a considerable time.

In the course of a few months it is quite probable that the Canadians under arms abroad or at home will be over the 100,000 mark, and increasing gradually as the exigencies of the situation call for.

Peculiar Love Story Discovered

MIDDLEBURY, Pa., May 11. — Two miles northwest of Middlesberry in the log of an old wagon shed for forty-five years has been concealed a bit of paper that reveals a tale of love.

The farm is now owned by Francis Specht. He recently tore down the structure, and while cutting up a log the curious paper was discovered. One day two sweethearts wandered into the old log waggon shed, and, after giving each other their hands in engagement, a hole was bored about five inches deep into the log, the paper was placed in the bottom, and a wooden pin was driven tightly into the hole.

Specht's axe disclosed the lovers' secret. It fell, and there lay open to his gaze the love missive placed there forty-five years ago.

On the outside was written "Engaged." Unfolding the paper was discovered another missive on the inside, also nicely folded. On one side, in a feminine hand was this message: "In memory of Mary J. Zellner, J.C. B." On the other side, in a heavier hand, these words: "Mary J. Zellner, My Dear Love, March 20, 1870." In the inner letter was inclosed a three-cent piece of currency, made under the act of 1853.

James Schumen resided on the farm in 1870, and Mary Zellner, a beautiful and accomplished young woman of Lehigh County, was a member of the family for four years beginning in 1869.

Her manners and face attracted all the young men of the neighbourhood and it is known that she was engaged to at least two young men, both of whom went West, without being able to induce the young woman to accompany them.

While living near Slatington a Miss Zellner was wooed by a worthy young man to whom she was married. She now lives at Tamaqua.

The motive for the mysterious paper has baffled all efforts of satisfactory solution. Was there some ancient superstition, or some folklore that prompted these sweethearts of forty-five years ago to hide the evidence of their troth? Was it parental objections or rival suitor that brought about the odd plighting?

CAN FORGE FINGER PRINTS

Forgery of finger prints is the latest in the world of crooks.

No longer will experts in identification bureaus and police departments declare the finger print system infallible.

So clever is the latest move of crooks that they may be, by the use of forged finger prints, a visiting card and some chemicals, fix any crime on an innocent person. In short, they can transfer forged prints to the stock of a revolver, slay their victim and leave the revolver where the telltale prints will enmesh some person against whom the criminal band holds a grudge.

Method is Simple.

The method of counterfeiting finger prints is simple. James Hoosick, a western detective, is the first to report a successful case.

The swindler or a gang singles out the victim to rob. Then they select some crook, in their own line, on whom they wish to throw suspicion.

Thief No. 1 will meet No. 2.

"Know this fellow, Jimmy?" extending a card to No. 2.

"No," says No. 2," funny card," noting that it is celluloid or highly glossed paper. He then returns the card to No. 1.

Several hours later No. 1 can, by shaking mercury powder over the card, and covering the card with collodium, draw out the prints as if on a photographic film. Placing the film on a safe, which is blown, is an easy matter. Heat then applied to the surface melts the film-like sub-

Prints Are the Same.

"All right —we got our prints," smiles the chief, after comparing those photographed on the safe and the yegg's print taken at headquarters, they are declared the same.

"And the same procedure could be followed with a revolver," said Lieut. Quackenbush. "A revolver on which forged prints have been placed, can be laid beside a victim it might be a revolver belonging to the victim's son —where would he effect off when confronted with the evidence of finger prints on the revolver stock?

"We will have to find some way in which we can define the forged print from the real by counting the skin pore notations on an imprint," said Lieut. Quackenbush. "In summer, however, there are more of these little identations noted on a card than in cold weather, so this is an uncertain method."

Chicago experts, it is said, are the only ones who can photograph finger prints on clothing. They refuse to make public their secret methods. An expert in Buenos Aires has completed some work along this line, but refuses to give out his secret to other experts.

Try Skin Absorption Instead of Cosmetics

The constant use of rouge and powder invites a coarsened, roughened condition of the skin, eruptions, enlarged pores, blackheads and wrinkles. If you've learned this from experience, suppose you quit cosmetics and try the following:

Ask your druggist for an ounce of ordinary peroxide and begin using this to-night. Apply like cold cream, washing it off in the morning. Keep this up for a week or two. The wax will literally absorb the coarse, colourless or blemished skin, but so gradually as not to discommode you at all. Just as gradually the clear, velvety, naturally-tinted underskin comes to the surface. And marvelous was becomes your overjoyed friend.

For those wrinkles and large pores, make a face bath by dissolving an ounce of powdered saxolite in a half pint witch hazel. This has remarkable astringent and tonic properties, and beneficial results come quickly.

English Cotton For Germany

It is not generally known that the cloth required for the envelopes of airships, and for the wings of aeroplanes, is only made in Lancashire, England, and that since the beginning of the war there is reason to believe that large quantities of this material have found their way to Germany under the head of cotton. As a matter of fact, it is cotton of a very special kind—"Sea Island" cotton, which is sold at 3s a pound. The yarn is very fine and strong, and is only made at very few mills in Lancashire.

When the war started the Government were apparently unaware that Germany received these supplies from England, and no special means were adopted to intercept exports. The attention of the Admiralty was directed to this very important factor by Sir Charles Macara, Bart., President of the International Federation of Cotton Spinners, and several consignments have since been stopped.

It is by no means certain that aircraft cloth is not still entering Germany as cotton goods. If Germany were deprived of this material, which, as we have already stated, comes only from Lancashire, she would be quite unable to replace her losses in aircraft. Germany has been free to import cotton from neutral countries since the declaration of war, as cotton was not placed on the contraband list until the blockade. The blockade will be inconvenient for the enemy unless Germany and Austria have laid in a large stock of cotton.

Cotton enters into the production of explosives on a larger scale than is generally assumed. The consumption of cotton for explosives by the nations now at war is at the rate of four million bales per annum. Every time a big shell is exploded it blows away 400 lbs., or a bale of cotton. Every shot, for instance, fired by the Queen Elizabeth at the Dardanelles contained that amount of cotton.

HEROISM AND ENDURANCE

PARIS, May 15.—The story relates a simple, everyday incident of the war in the air, but it is a story of sublime heroism and endurance, characteristic of the spirit which animates all the French soldiers now giving their blood for their country.

The hero is a young aviator, barely 23 years of age; his name de M——. A few days ago he was ordered to fly over a certain German position on the Belgian coast, and bombard it in order to check the activity which the enemy had shown there lately. De M—— took with him a sergeant and a 155mm. bomb, and set out on his mission.

He crossed the German lines at a height of nearly 8,000 feet. The Germans had put into position a number of anti-aircraft guns, and their shells soon were playing all round the aeroplane. Eye-witnesses say they counted no fewer than a hundred shells that burst close to the machine, surrounding it with a yellowish halo of smoke. De M—— and his companion coolly circled round, until they were sure of their aim, and then let free their bomb.

Rising to 9,000 feet to escape the hail of projectiles which the Germans still poured in their direction, the aviators made for home.

PILOT BADLY WOUNDED.

Suddenly a shell cut through the axis of the landing gear wheels, severed de M——'s left foot, and pierced the side of the nacelle, in which it made a huge, gaping hole. The situation seemed desperate. The pilot horribly wounded, the aeroplane rocked by the wind of the bursting shells, it seemed that the machine must crash to the earth. Already the compass and other instruments torn from the aeroplane were falling at the feet of the waiting Germans. And, indeed, the aeroplane was seen to plunge down, down—then, with a violent effort de M——regained control of his rocking machine, and, in spite of the terrible pain he was enduring, arrested the fall of the machine, restored its balance, and resumed the direction of the French lines.

GAME TO THE END.

From his ankle blood was pouring. The sergeant himself was struck by a splinter of shell, and could not hope that his companion would be able to keep from fainting for long, and they had still 27 kilometres to go. With one arm supporting de M——, with the other he traced a few lines of farewell to his mother in a note-book. [illegible]

"Shall I take the 'rudder'?"

"No! Keep quiet!" replied de M—— roughly, between his clenched teeth. "We are going to reach the French lines"; and de M——, racked with pain, ready to faint at every instant, held on grimly, with superhuman energy, until at last he was over the French lines, and the soldiers, who had watched and divined this tragedy in the air, rushed to help him at the landing. De M—— was game to the end, and brought his machine to earth with the skill of an expert. Then he fainted.

De M—— has been decorated with the Legion of Honour, and the sergeant with the Medaille Militaire.

De M—— declares that he will resume his aviation service when his artificial foot is ready.

Women Worked In Navy Yard

The woman who disguised herself as a man and worked for three days in the Naval construction works at Barrow, England, is Mrs. Elizabeth Ogle, a widow of middle age. She has now been found new work as a shell-maker, in a shop in which a large number of other women are employed.

She states that she wanted to earn money to help relatives. Dressed in labourer's clothes and overalls, with a wig and false moustache, she passed muster for a time among several thousand employees in the yard, and earned commendation as an excellent worker. At the end of a normal day of 9 1-2 hours at carrying timber she volunteered for overtime.

After three days one of the workmen, noticing her slight build, became suspicious, and asked her how frequently she shaved. The new hand then confessed to an official that she was a woman.

Mrs. Ogle has since suffered from the effect of heavy work in which she had been engaged. No suspicion as to her sex was aroused in the lodging house at which she stayed.

English Actress Tells Hair Curling Secret

"I cannot too strongly condemn the use of the hot curling-iron," says Rita Moya, the celebrated English actress and beauty. "It means death to the hair eventually. Moreover it is entirely unnecessary. The hair can be made beautifully wavy and curly to any extent and in any form desired, merely by using such a simple thing as pure glimerine. This perfectly harmless liquid should be applied to the hair with a clean tooth brush at night. In the morning you will find that a very beautiful natural wave and curliness has resulted, and the effect will last many days, even in damp weather.

The liquid glimerine is very beneficial and is not sticky or greasy. Neither does it streak the hair or stain the scalp. You need not get more than a few ounces from your druggist. The best way is to divide the front and back hair into four or six strands and to moisten each strand thoroughly from root to tip."

Father Time Is Defied by Pair Aged 101 and 60

JOPLIN, Mo., May 11.—Age defied Father Time, when William L. Miller, grey-bearded centenarian, and Mrs. Nancy Pike, 60, marched down the aisle of the First M. E. church before 200 persons and were married by the Rev. Charles Franklin.

This was the third matrimonial venture for the sprightly bridegroom who is 101 years old, and he characterised it as "I'm used to it." Mrs. Miller said this was the first time that she had ever cried before her wedding, but then it was happiness which caused the tears.

The aged couple were driven to the justice of peace's office in a motor car, as they wished to be married according to modern style. However, when the license was obtained, Miller attempted to coax the justice into tying the nuptial knot, despite the fact that the clergyman and people were waiting at the church.

Miller was born in 1814, and has been making his living here several years by gardening. When selling sassafras and vegetables to Mrs. Miller here a few years ago, he met her. Not long ago when she was in the city a friend in a joking way suggested that they get married. Both followed the suggestion and a rapid fire courtship followed. Mrs. Miller had been married twice before.

Both are exactly happy. When they [illegible] way through a crowd [illegible] of the justice's office they were willing. Not once did they falter, and, in climbing the stairs, the centenarian was unusually spry. The couple will live at 2007 Bird street. Miller will continue his truck gardening, but this time to support two instead of one.

German Aim Is To Wean Allies From Britain

This war is in mid-channel. The situation, as I take it, resembles roughly the situation in our civil war, when Lincoln, during 1863 (wasn't it?) held his conference with the leaders of the south.

There is no moral doubt Germany has been looking for terms. Everything indicates that, circumstantial evidence as well as "inside information." Of course, these overtures have not been made directly or even officially. Possibly the neutral powers have not been consulted.

It is more likely that two strange gentlemen have just happened to register at a hotel in Switzerland or Italy, and have just happened to meet at dinner in a private room to discuss the future of the war—purely theoretically, of course.

Whatever terms Germany has offered have undoubtedly been unsatisfactory to the allies as a whole. So far as the general alliance is concerned, the war will probably go on.

But there has been a special effort to detach France and Russia instead of the alliance. It is suspected that France could quit the war now at great present advantage — an increase of territory, probably the security of Belgium, possibly some kind of indemnity.

Germany wants to free herself to attack that enemy which is frankly the object of all popular German hate and all official German ambitions — England.

FRENCH FORTITUDE SURPRISE.

Every one who has observed France during this war has been astonished by the fortitude of the French — a fortitude hardly expected in a people so highly civilized, so polished and so essentially peaceful. It has never been so strong as in its apparent answer to German overtures.

The French have always maintained for the old, wistful dream of winning back the lost Alsace as for the permanent security of France.

If it stops now, on a minor advantage, it will have the work to do over again in the next generation—or as it feels.

But the temptation is great and special. It did not want war in the beginning, and it does not like it now. The men who must decide for France have their seats out there on the line. If they have not had other sons killed they know what has happened to the sons of their neighbours.

Here is a chance to gain temporary advantage for France — and to save the lives of those sons. I cannot imagine a stronger bribe being offered to any man. Yet they seem to have shut their eyes, and ears, these leaders of France, and to have made the heroic decision.

DEPENDS ON BRITISH NAVY.

What would happen should France and Russia desert seems beautiful material for speculation.

So far as the island of Britain is concerned, it could doubtless whistle at the Germans. So long as that navy holds England cannot be invaded from Germany direct.

If, by miracle or by the doubtful fortunes of a naval battle, the navy should fail to hold, England would be whipped, whether or no France and Russia stood firm; making the paper blockade a real blockade would starve it out. All of which is unlikely.

England's navy, even allowing for losses, is stronger than when the war began; and its efficiency in handling the submarine blockade, if nothing else, shows that the mariners of England have not lost their old technique.

Give, however, that the Germans could slip a landing expedition past the British navy, their chance of success looks small. The censor would probably not permit even a guess at the number of troops at present in the British army. But that army is large enough to swallow up any landing expedition for which Germany could find transport.

WHAT GERMAN DESIGNS MAY BE.

Of course, Germany may have designs not on England itself—in spite of all the talk in the German newspapers—but on the British colonies. As for Canada, Australia, and South Africa, the hope seems even more vain than the hope of a direct invasion.

There remain Suez, Egypt, and the whole British "sphere of influence" in the near east. It is possible that Germany might so juggle things, in the event of a separate peace with France and Russia, as to get a land passage toward Suez and Egypt. Possible, not likely, as are all these speculations.

It comes down to this: There is a thin thread of hope that all nations will soon adopt the stalemate theory concerning the end of this war and make peace before Europe is any further devastated. It is a thin thread of hope.

It is infinitely more likely that the struggle will go on with the present line-up. Should the allies, within the next two months, gain one or two considerable victories, there is a better chance.

I take it that no single victory in this war of grubbing and digging will even be decisive. But such a victory may convince Germany that its cause is ultimately hopeless, and the issues which victory means nowadays may [illegible]

STORY OF MONS RETREAT.

The story of the British retreat from Mons has been [illegible] written about, but it has never really been written. Doubtless we shall wait for the whole story until long after the end of the war.

Later and greater battles have made us forget this unique episode in warfare. It looks, indeed, like a small affair. But the "little" British army was larger than the northern army at Gettysburg, and this retreat, which was one continuous battle, lasted three times as long as Gettysburg. And here, months afterward, is one new story of Mons.

The real climax of the affair occurred not on that last night when the British army, now south-east of Paris, was looking for a good place to make a stand and die.

The pinch, the right squeeze, came at Le Cateau, two or three days before. That morning, at dawn, the Germans almost surrounded the British. Smith-Dorrien's division was caught just as it was getting out of its bivouac; some of the men rolled over and fought lying where they had slept.

ARMIES MARCH INTO A JAM.

A big army, of course, does not march by one road, but by columns along several parallel roads. And early that morning, when the British were retreating as fast as they could go—"acting as pace-makers for a lot of bloody Germans," some Tommy Atkins has said—two columns came to a point where their roads crossed.

To keep two columns marching properly in such circumstances is difficult at any time. But here, to make matters worse, a German battery got position, found the range, and began to fire shrapnel toward that point.

The columns hesitated, stopped, began to pile up. Something like panic ran along the line. A little more and the blockade might have become a jam, a hell of confusion, a rout.

At this moment an officer wearing the red tabs of the staff came riding along the line. He took in the situation, he drew up his horse, and with the shrapnel bursting about him he started to restore traffic at the cross-roads.

He raised his hand to halt this column; he beckoned to start that one. He commandeered squads of men to get overturned baggage wagons out of the way. All that morning a contingent target for the Germans, he worked with the coolness, the quiet command, the expedition of a traffic policeman on Fifth Avenue. And he got both columns through.

IDENTITY OF HERO HIDDEN.

Now here comes the extraordinary part of the story. His work that day became the talk of the army. Every officer struggling there on this line took it for granted that headquarters sent him. That wasn't true; headquarters knew nothing of the jam of the cross-roads. None of the officers in the two columns recognised him or even identified his rank. He wore the red of the staff; that was enough for them. And inquiries at headquarters brought no results.

It is likely that he was one of the staff officers killed in the next two or three days. It is also likely that he is still working at headquarters, and being a typical shy Briton of the kind that resents "making a fool out of a fellow," he has never admitted his identity. The Briton is built that way.—Will Irwin in the New York Tribune.

Scout News

A meeting of the P. B. S. will be held on Monday, May 17, at 7.30 p. m., sharp. All arrangements will be made for the three days' hike, from May 22nd to May 24th. All are asked to attend the meeting. Scouts will be asked not to wear uniforms.

All Scouts are requested to meet at the Armouries on Friday, May 21, at 7.30 p.m. sharp, in full uniform and staves are to be carried.

The Crew Patrol's Hike.

All slept soundly till about midnight, when Wallace heard a grating sound just outside the cave. He did the wisest thing possible, and that was to throw a rubber blanket over the fire. He then awoke the boys, but hardly had they rubbed their eyes when they saw a dark form glide into the cave, throw off the cover of the fire and at the mouth of the cave three gleaming rifles were covering them.

Then the largest ruffian spoke:

"Now look 'ere, younker, just move a muscle of your body and you'll have me to reckon with."

The three Scouts were too dumbfounded to speak. The oldest man went to the boys and bound them, hand and foot with a buckskin thong. They were searched by another of the ruffians and carried out of the cave down to the beach. Joe and Harold were placed in one canoe, while Wallace was placed roughly in the other canoe.

Luckily the ruffians had overlooked Wallace's clasp knife and compass. After being carefully covered with a blanket the canoes were pushed from the shore.

Wallace slipped out his knife and opened it. He felt for the weakest part of the canoe. After breaking the rib of the canoe he proceeded to cut out some circular pieces of bark from the bottom. He soon had the wood cut through, but it took his breath away when the water began to come through.

They travelled about fifteen miles north and then disembarked at the command of their leader. They soon were sitting by the side of a cheerful camp-fire. The boys were bound again but the men were much surprised because Wallace had slipped his knots. They did not think he had cut the thongs. Suddenly the leader said:

"'Ere, younker, you shiver your timbers and fetch me some 'baccy from that 'ere boat."

Wallace, hastened to the canoe, pulled out the plug, threw in the paddles and pushed out in the other canoe. The men heard the sound, and with a cry of rage the ruffians followed their "younker" to the boats. They became, with whom they [illegible] the canoe full of [illegible] gave up the chase [illegible] to his blankets, while two of [illegible] kept watch.

"STAND BY THE PRESIDENT" IS THE APPEAL

Special to the Examiner.

NEW YORK, May 15. — A quarter of a page advertisement in to-day's papers here, headed "Stand by the President," appeals to American citizens to sign a pledge promising their support to the country and mail it to the White House. Several thousand have signed the advertisement.

Recruiting Is Taking Place All Over Canada

Special to the Examiner:

OTTAWA, May 15—New battalions are being organized in different parts of the country and active recruiting from now until the end of the war is to be the word throughout the Dominion. Large numbers of troops are to be sent forward to keep the two Canadian divisions up to strength, and at the same time the number of men in training in Canada is to be kept up to 50,000. The men who are now recruited will probably not have the long wait which the second division experienced, but will go forward as soon as trained.

Beside the orders that have gone out for each battalion of the third contingent to furnish one company for immediate reinforcements, the organization of new battalions may be authorized. A new battalion is expected to be raised in the third divisional area and recruiting will begin in Ottawa at once.

87 Missing Toronto Men.

The lists of Canadian killed and wounded in the battle of Langemarck are now beginning to pour into the Militia Department. A list issued at an early hour this morning contained the names of no less than 125 men in the 2nd, 3rd and 5th Battalions missing. There are 87 Toronto men missing. How many of these are dead and how many prisoners will not be known for some time. The German Government is expected, through an international agency which is located in Switzerland and acts as a clearing house for all the belligerents, officially to report all prisoners.

The losses among Canadian officers now total 264. There have been 73 killed, 121 wounded, and 26 are missing. Among the men there are reported killed 893, wounded 2,516 and missing 403. The total honour roll now is, 3,833.

The Demand for Infantry.

It is now considered very probable that the many units of mounted infantry being raised in the West, as well as in the East, will be sent to the front as infantry. No word has come from the Imperial authorities, however, to discontinue sending horses, and it is realized that changes in the operations on the western front might create a great need for mounted troops. The Canadian units could go as infantry and the horses could be sent over also so as to be available if needed.

The Cordova Mines are to market the ore from the property and pay the proceeds into Court, pending the appeal to the Privy Council which application for leave to appeal has been made at the July sitting.

WASHINGTON, Pa., May 14.—Philip Bogdon, aged five, and Victor Hill, aged thirty-five, are dying in adjoining beds in a hospital, the child from injuries received when he was run down by Mr. Hill's automobile and Mr. Hill from injuries inflicted by a mob which was enraged at the accident to the little boy.

Phillip Bogdon is one of several children who have been hurt by automobiles at the mining village of Daisytown. The accident incited foreigners there to summary vengeance.

The child attempted to run across the road in front of the speeding automobile and was struck and knocked twenty feet.

Salvation Army's Proposals For After the War

An Imperial Scheme Looking to the Interests of the Soldiers and the Empire

Colonel Hammond, who is at present on a visit to Canada connected with the Salvation Army's part in the proposed Imperial scheme for ensuring the men who have been fighting the Empire's battles on land and sea against unemployment on their return from the wars, has travelled in many countries in the interests of the great spiritual, moral, and social work for which the Army has justly gained so much renown. In regard to the object of his present mission to Canada he recently expressed the following summary of the Army's proposals:

GENERAL BOOTH'S PROPOSALS.

"In General Booth's opinion the first thing that should be done is to set up some central authority, adequately equipped, for inviting, obtaining, and considering plans and proposals from all parts of the Empire.

"In the next place," continued the Colonel, "the General proposes that this Board, which it is proposed to constitute, should be empowered to assist, either by grant outright or by loans, any approved scheme put forward by Dominion Governments, or local authorities, or any substantial, responsible societies or individuals.

"Thirdly, a grant of £10,000,000, or some adequate sum from the war fund should be made straight out to enable the Board to meet the difficulties by the better permanent distribution of unemployed labour."

Proceeding, Colonel Hammond said "It is General Booth's opinion that it should be clearly recognized that every man who has served with the colours would have a claim on the State for provision of some kind of employment, should he be unable to resume his old occupation or find work for himself. The Board would take sympathetic interest in the case of such men, but it would soon find these met by the operation of the normal influence of supply and demand.

"Every man who was not disqualified by misconduct of some kind, drunkenness or vice, should have a free passage to any part of the Empire, where he could be profitably employed, or where there was work available. Further, the Army would send the man's family, if he had one, after him, also free of charge, as soon as he had found his feet and had a home."

NO HANDICAP FOR RETURNED CANADIANS.

In regard to a suggestion that this might handicap the chances of the returned Canadian boys for whom the Canadian Government was morally bound to make provision, the Colonel replied:

"You may rest assured that any scheme that may be devised will take into consideration, and this matter will be done by those responsible on the other side to-put competition in the way of the Canadian boys who have done their part in the struggle. Indeed, I am in a position to state that emigration in furtherance of the proposals indicated would not begin until the Dominions had completely absorbed their own returned soldiers and were ready to receive additional settlers."

The Colonel also indicated that the Army favoured the emigration of the widows of the fallen men.

Colonel Hammond has been connected with the social work of the Salvation Army for many years, and most of his travels have been in connection with the development of this branch of the Army's activities. He assured our representative the one thing that impresses him more than anything else is all his wanderings in the growing interest and belief, amongst those people who really matter, in the work of the Salvation Army, which is being regarded more and more as an essential auxiliary to the government of every State that desires to be well governed.

Gunner O'Toole Died Of Wounds

First Telegram Was Correct—The Second Sent in Error

The parents of Gunner Joseph O'Toole received the following telegram last night in reply to their query based on conflicting reports of their son's condition:

"Your telegram 14th. Deeply regret inform you Gunner Joseph O'Toole, 1st formerly 3rd Field Artillery Battery, 2nd Canadian Division, died of wounds at No. 10 Stationary Hospital, Rouen. Telegram received by you this date sent in error.

"Adjutant-General."

THEATRE LICENSES WILL BE LOWER

The Hon. T. W. McGarry has reduced the provincial tax placed on all theatres. Under the regulations [illegible] year, practically all the theatres in Ontario would be forced to pay $300 yearly for a license. The old scale struck was as follows: $100 for theatres in places of less than 10,000 population; $200 in places of over 10,000 and under 20,000; and $300 in places of over 20,000.

This has been changed for the following rates: $50 in place of under 10,000; $100 in all over 10,000 and under 20,000, and $200 in all places of 20,000 and over. Moving picture theatres will be classed as regular theatres, if there is more than one turn in vaudeville.

Mr. McGarry made the change as the result of the plea of theatre owners that they could not, under present conditions afford the first rate struck.

HOW THE POETS MAY BECOME RICH

By Elizabeth Thomas.

Perhaps you are suddenly becoming stout, or it may be that you have been putting on weight for years. In either case the cause is the same—lack of nerve-energizing power of the blood. This trouble centers in adults of both sexes and all ages, but it may be overcome very easily and without any of the privations that most people imagine necessary to reduce their weight.

Simply go to your druggist and get some oil of artizona capsules. Take one after each meal and one before going to bed. Weigh yourself so as to know just how much you are losing, weighing yourself every week. You will be astonished by this inexpensive recipe, but to cause to get the genuine oil of artizona in capsule form. It is sold only in original sealed packages. Any large druggist can supply you, or a large size box will be sent on receipt of $1.00 addressed to: The Little Drug Co., Box 1908, Montreal, Can.

CAPT. GREENE'S WIFE WINS

SAVANNAH, Ga., May 14.—Judgment for $76,682, has been rendered in the City Court against Captain Benjamin D. Greene, one of the principals in the celebrated Greene and Gaynor Savannah Harbour contract scandals, in favour of Mrs. B. McC. Greene, his wife, now a Red Cross nurse in France.

The action was uncontested, although Captain Greene was served with a copy of the petition while on his way to Florida recently. Mrs. Greene declared that her husband borrowed $62,500 from her January 1, 1909, to be used in his business as contractor, and that a balance of $37,-235 has never been paid. She asked for judgment for this amount and for $39,-567 interest.

REFUSE OFFER OF $100,000 FOR BABY

WILLIAMSPORT, Pa., May 14.—John Mosk of Philadelphia, a brother-in-law of Charles M. Ehrhrab, has so much money he doesn't know what to do with it all, but his offer of $100,000 to Mr. and Mrs. Howard Gray for their two-year-old baby daughter was not sufficient to tempt the parents.

Little Vivian Gray is the favourite of nearly every person in Roaring Branch. Mosk came to Roaring Branch on a visit, en route to California. He saw the baby and her bright chatter and cunning ways charmed him. The two became inseparable companions during his stay and when he left he offered Gray and his wife $100,000 for the tot, which they refused as quickly as the offer was made. ## Fired 20,000 Shells In Ninety Minutes

A French official report describes fully the recent operations by which the wood of Ailly, near St. Mihiel, was captured and held. It is one of the most extraordinary stories of the war.

After describing how strongly the Germans had fortified the wood, which straddled a spur, in which a triple fort had been constructed, the report states that the attack began on April 20th with bombardment from the French artillery, reinforced by the explosion of a charge of mines. The explosion of a charge of mines. This was the signal for artillery fire that completely cut through by heavier charges of three centimetre were following on a rank by rank throwers. The attack did not stop, but went on past the fort, and the engineers who followed consolidated the captured ground.

The real counter attacks began on April 6. There were eight of them, during which the Germans made almost frantic efforts to recover the position. The report says of one of them: "In an hour and a half-about 20,000 shells were buried on the spur of the Bois d'Ailly and our trenches along a front of about 300 metres with a depth of 400 metres. Shells of every calibre, but above all of heavy calibre, 105, 30, 420 [illegible] In some [illegible] all communication ceased. ## SAFFORD WAS ONLY A COG

NEW YORK, May 14.—Franklin D. Safford, convicted of perjury as a witness for Roe Zimmer in the Oliver Osborne mystery was sentenced by Judge Hough to nine months in the penitentiary.

"I consider this man Safford only a small cog in a very large wheel, and so I conscientiously recommendation for clemency made by the jury," explained the court.

When Safford was asked, whether he had anything to say, he answered:

"I am innocent. My counsel, Benjamin Slade, will make motions in my behalf."

Mr. Slade moved for a stay of execution. It was granted.

It was stated by Mr. Slade that an appeal will be taken at once. United States Marshal Thomas D. McCarthy took Safford in charge.

LUSITANIA HELD MANY RECORDS

NEW YORK, May 10.—When the Lusitania was launched June 7, 1906, she was declared to be the largest and fastest boat afloat. Her speed was such as experts had said could not possibly be attained by a vessel of such enormous dimensions. She was regarded as a nautical wonder, an ocean greyhound that could not be improved upon, the last word in water craft construction.

She was the first of the trio of great Cunarders to be launched. The Mauretania, her almost twin sister, began to sail the Atlantic a few months later, but the Aquitania didn't get into active service until a little more than a year ago. Both these boats were withdrawn from the transatlantic service when the war broke out.

The Lusitania was launched at Clydebank, Scotland, and was christened by Dowager Lady Inverclyde. She was 785 feet in length, had a displacement of 45,000 tons, and her engines developed a horsepower of 68,-000. Her launching began an era in shipbuilding.

She was the first boat, at least the first boat of any magnitude, to use the turbine engines. This revolutionised travel on the ocean, minimizing seasickness and reducing to a great extent the perils of the ocean.

Could Carry 2,000 Persons.

She was sixty feet longer than the Baltic, one of the wonders of the ocean two years ago, and put into the shade many a vessel that in former times had challenged the wonder and admiration of the world. With [illegible] she was capable of [illegible] ing a population of more than 3,000. The Kingston-Ogale Express could [illegible] run through her smokestacks, if [illegible] could be used as a tunnel. [illegible] funnels towered 154 feet above the water, and a Great Mogul engine [illegible] dled single-handed by way of [illegible]

To attain the highest possible speed was the primary purpose of the building of the Lusitania. This was done at a sacrifice of cargo room, and she spent this that she was able to carry as much cargo or more [illegible] is now [illegible] with other vessels [illegible] capacity of 20,000 gallons of water a day. A Marconi telegraph system, submarine telephone, elevators, search lights, ventilators, gripping irons and other modern comforts added to the marvellous equipment of this floating palace. The engines devoured more than a thousand tons of coal a day so that she always carried in her bunkers not less than 10,000 tons.

Under the [illegible] she would have [illegible] a speed [illegible] It was [illegible]

The rudder alone weighed seventy nine tons. Steam came from twenty five boilers with 192 furnaces. In nautical circles she always was regarded as the most graceful boat afloat. The giants that have since been built have not been able to detract from her beauty, neither have they shown an equal speed.

Government Aid Given.

The great ships of the Cunard Company were built at the suggestion of the British government. About thirteen years ago it was rumoured by the then Postmaster-General of Great Britain that ships larger, swifter, better equipped and in every way superior to anything then afloat should be constructed. The Cunard Line officials said they were ready to adopt the suggestion of the Cabinet and proceeded to lay plans for the capture of the great prize of superiority on the seas.

It was contended that a ship could be made as comfortable as any first-class hotel in any part of the world. The Cunard Line officials said they not only believed the theory to be sound, but they would make an effort to give practical effect to it. The idea of [illegible] staterooms equipped with [illegible] telephones and all the other comforts attached to a first-class hotel, was startling and novel. But the company said it would be done, and it was done.

She was equipped with ballrooms, gold [illegible] smoking [illegible] and tennis courts. There rooms could be played by the passengers in the [illegible] of weather. The [illegible] corridors [illegible] of ship to ship through the waves rather than [illegible] and her [illegible] protected [illegible] weather.

Happy Hawkins in the Panhandle

By ROBERT ALEXANDER WASON

"I wouldn't if I'd known you were goin' to carry him all over the country."

"Now, Ir-win, now Ir-win," sez the feller with the thin voice, and I just knew his eyes were dancin'. He piped it like a lonesome bluebird draggin' out the "r" till it was most a twitter and pushin' up the "win" on a tantalizin' slant.

"Nice little Bertie," sez Bass Voice tryin' to come back, and makin' about as good an out at it as a cow 'd make at skippin' the rope. Then he switched around complete and cussed for a minute in a mumblin' sort of a rumble like a bulldog darin' a polecat to fight him on equal terms, finally windin' up with a roar: "You everlastin' singin'-mouse, you; you stay out here and nurse the brat. I'm goin' on into town and prospect around a little. We've got just two-bits between us and I haven't had a drink for six weeks."

I knew I simply had to have that pair. Pals who quarrel easy mighty seldom split up and are usually reliable, and I felt sure 'at these two were on the square.

"Somethin' whispers that my luck is good to-night, Shorty," sez Thin Voice. "I'm [illegible] on into town and I shall match the two-bits with some credulous stranger —"

"Your luck is allus good — for the other feller. You lost all we had down in San Tonya, then you lost our next month's pay on that fake hoss-race, then you had to butt in and take this red-headed kid's part, and lost our jobs. I don't intend —"

"IR-win, you err," interrupted Thin Voice. "I would have saved the position with diplomacy; but you had to brutally shoot the man and this was why we considered it necessary to take the child under our protection and seek —"

"Child!" roared Bass Voice. "He's eleven in years and a hundred in devilment. When I was his age I wasn't askin' no one to feed me out of a spoon! The' was no sense in comin' up here anyway; we're not outlaws. I didn't kill the feller and if I did, the' wouldn't nobody mourn for him; but you allus have to be a show-actor and so we had to hide out for a spell. First thing you know we'll have to start to thinkin'. I'm not content with just chuck; I want a couple o' coins to rattle together in my pockets."

"How would you like a job with a trail-herd?" sez I, in as gentle tones as I could put over; but it wasn't no use, they were gone in a flash and I reckoned that was the last we'd see of 'em.

Purty soon, however, Thin Voice speaks from the bank just above us: "Where is this trail-herd you was mentionin' a while back?" sez he, "and how many different brands are in it?"

"Short ride to the west," sez I, "and only one brand. Owner goin' up with the drive himself."

"Where did ya start from, and where you headed for?" sez Thin Voice and I could easy see that a truthful answer too this question wouldn't lull no great amount of reasonable suspicions to rest; so I sez: "All right, go on about your business. You wouldn't suit me anyway. The kind o' men I'm lookin' for keep 'emselves too busy to ask questions as easy as you do. What you want is a job as special examiner in some Sunday school."

"Aw we'll take the jobs, and not ask no questions, neither," sez Bass Voice from the other side of the arroyo. I liked this splittin' up, one doin' the talkin' while the other stood necessary. It showed 'at these fellers had savvy, and savvy was what I needed.

"We got a kid with us; does he get his chuck?" asked Thin Voice.

"What's he good for?" sez I to draw 'em out.

"Blame' if I know," sez Thin Voice after a short silence. "We've only had him a month."

"We can guarantee him to be sound in wind and limb and never off his feed," sez Bass Voice. "He'll sleep wherever he's put; and that's about all we can say in his favour."

"He ought to be worth his chuck if ya handle him right," added Thin Voice; so we closed the bargain without neither side seein' the other. Monody hadn't made a sound durin' the whole session, and I was beginnin' to feel easy in my mind about handlin' the outfit from then on, if the boss would just be reasonable.

"We've got our hosses hobbled back in this arroyo a bit and are goin' in on foot, not wishin' to attract any attention. You might put yours with 'em and we could all go in together," sez I.

"How many of ya are they?" asked Thin Voice.

"Two. I'll come up to the mouth of the arroyo and one of ya can go in and Monody'll show you the ponies. Then we can go in to town together."

I found the kid tied to Thin Voice and sound asleep. As soon as they were satisfied they hobbled their ponies, rolled the kid in a blanket, laid him in the lee of a rock and we all went in on foot, although Bass Voice kept grumblin' to himself at every step.

On the way in they told me 'at Thin Voice was named Albert Gingley and called Red, and Bass Voice was named Irwin Hamilton and called Shorty. Every proper outfit has to have one Shorty and I was feelin' content.

Tascosa at this time was some the wickedest little town in the world; it was so infernal tough that not even the Law of Gravity was enforced and so it was perfectly proper for the boss of a trail-herd to pirate about on the quiet if he felt that way, which satisfied them and I still had to pretend to Monody that I had to go careful; but when we got to the first light, I paused and gave the new hands a good look-over—and they sure were worth it.

Irwin Hamilton was low-built, square-jawed, quick in his movements, wore wide straps around both wrists, and had competent hands. He was so bow-legged his chaps bagged at the sides, and his expression was sour and dissatisfied. Albert Gingley was tall, medium plump for a ridin' man, and sort o' loose in his movements; but it was his beard that caught the eye and cinched it tight, beards of any kind bein' more or less scarce. These whiskers were red—not just sandy or chestnut-bay like most red whiskers, but the shade of red that makes a Navago blanket so noisy. They flowed in little rijjles like swift rapids, and when the breeze was tossin' 'em about he looked like a prairie fire.

"Why do they call you Red?" I asked him so sober that I caught him off his guard and he answered, "Count o' my hair," sez he.

Shorty gave a smothered boom which I afterward learned was his chuckle, and sez, "You can't get the full effect of those whiskers by lamplight; but in broad day they're the worst affliction you ever saw. They look more like a can o' tomatoes poured over a red handkerchief than anything else, and if he ever tried to eat 'em off, he'd bleed to death."

"If I had freckles all over my body the way you have," sez Red, "I'd sure raise whiskers, or if I was too weak for that, I'd cut holes in a goat-hide for my eyes and wear that."

"I can let you boys have a dollar apiece," sez I; "but I intend to leave early, so don't get reckless."

"Give both the dollars to me," sez Red. "Shorty don't savvy the use of money."

Tascosa, what the' was of it, was composed of 'dobe, and wherever ya saw a light it was safe to bet on its bein' either a saloon, gamblin' joint, or dance-hall. I sent Monody along with the recruits, and I prowled around by myself tryin' to feel as much like an outlaw as possible [illegible] enjoyin' the sensation right smart. It's easy enough to put on a serious, full-grown cast o' countenance to fool other folks; but I allus pity a feller who can't get a little fun by tryin' to fool himself once in a while.

Tascosa wasn't much to speak of, bein' kept up mostly by fellers who had got into trouble other places and had just gone to Tascosa as bein' a place where no names 'd be questioned and no questions 'd be asked. My three were divertin' themselves moderately, and as I was satisfied that Red and Shorty was what had been at the bottom of my impulse to go to Tascosa at all, I began to get in the mood for hittin' the back-trail.

I was standin' in the shadow of a 'dobe general store watchin' a saloon across the way, when a feller came to the door, threw it open quick, stepped out and immediately to the left. At the same minute two shots were fired from the inside, spitterin' the door where he ought to have been standin'. He pulled his gun and waited, and then he started across the street where I was.

A ladder was leanin' up again the side of the buildin' and this nonsensical, foolin'-myself mood I was in, made me shine up that ladder before ever I stopped to think. He passed underneath the ladder and disappeared in the darkness; but I knew I'd never forget him. He had stood so light on his feet as he half crouched there by the door that he had put me in mind of a panther, and I fell to wonderin' what he'd been up to.

I went on to the top o' the roof which was built Mexican fashion, flat and with a wall around it about three feet high. I went up to the front and found I could see into the saloon across the street, though only a short way. Purty soon my three came out and stood on the sidewalk lookin' up and down. I peggea a bit of 'dobe at 'em and finally got their attention. As soon as they had reached the foot of the ladder I went down cautious and asked who had shot at Panther.

They said a big feller with a scar under his eye had done the shootin', but no one knew who it was. I nodded my head slow, as though I did all right, and then I told 'em we'd have to start to ridin' and we walked out to where we'd left the kid, Red braggin' all the way about how he had won three dollars shakin' dice.

We found the kid asleep and Shorty tied him on behind Red without ever wakin' him, and I asked what his name was. "Flames," sez Shorty. "He's got the only hair in the world as red as Red's whiskers, and they belong to the same breed, I reckon."

I rode close to Shorty when we started and after bein' silent a spell, I asked him confidential if Red was to be depended on in a pinch. Shorty bit off a double portion of tobacco, mowed it away comfortable in his head and sez, "What sort of a pinch?"

"Oh," sez I, a little taken back, "any sort of a pinch, a fight or stampede or —well anything sudden."

"He's plowed corn and pitched hay east o' the big ditch, an' never forked a pony till after he was twenty; but now—and I'm still with him."

I made out from this that Shorty was a stickin' sort of a friend, and that it sometimes took about all the grue in his patience not to let Red slide. After conversin' with Shorty as though I'd go tell the information I wanted in just the form I most craved it, I sidled up to Red, who was hummin' a mournful chant.

"Red," sez I, "what sort of a feller is Shorty in a pinch?"

"Shorty!" snorted Red. "Humph, he' never was a pinch yet, tight enough to get him in. As far as entertainin' company goes, I admit I'd sooner have a boil; but when it comes to bein' dependable, why his foundations is firmer set 'n a mountain's. Time and again I've thought I couldn't put up with his rep-tile ways any longer and then would come a time when I temporarily needed some one at my back, and there was Shorty tighter 'n a tar plaster. He's took to you, that's plain to be seen; he's done more human talkin' to you 'n he has for the past month; but for the most part he's as conversational as the shadow of a tombstone—and I like live company.

Would not be Without Zutoo Tablets At Any Cost

Such is the statement of Mr. A. O. Norton, of Boston, the largest Jack Manufacturer in the world. His voluntary testimonial regarding ZUTOO follows:

205 Congress St., Boston, Mass.

"I have been a sufferer from Headache since childhood and have used all, or nearly all the so-called 'cures' on the market. Some months since my attention was called to Zutoo Tablets and I have been using them ever since with the most gratifying results. I find they cure a 'sick' or 'nervous' headache in a few minutes and leave no bad effects. My family use them whenever needed with equally good results. I have frequently given them to friends who were suffering from Headache and they never failed to give quick relief. I always carry Zutoo Tablets in my grip on the road and WOULD NOT BE WITHOUT THEM AT ANY COST."

"Allies No Longer Fighting a Nation But a Scourge, a Pest"

"The Allies are no longer fighting against a nation, but a scourge, such a cholera or pest," writes a "Daily Chronicle" special correspondent in describing the terrible effects of the chlorine gas used by the enemy. It was along the section of the battle front stretching from the south of Langemarck to the Knocke Bridge, where two arms of the Yser meet, that the Germans first tried on a big scale their latest diabolical method of warfare. On the evening of the 22nd, at about five o'clock, the French soldiers who manned the first line of trenches saw, rising from the German trenches a short distance away a number of white fuses, evidently intended as signals.

Almost at once, all along the German trenches, a thick curtain of yellow smoke arose, and was blown gently towards the French trenches by the northeast wind. This curtain, which advanced like the yellow wind of Northern China, offered this peculiarity, that it spread thickly on the ground, rising to a height of 16 feet only. These were not asphyxiating bombs that the Germans used. They were not either chlorine fuses, which could be lighted at once, which every chemist knows is impossible, but they were big reinforced cylinders of gas, compressed at high pressure, which the Germans placed on the tops of their trenches, and of which they opened the taps when it seemed to them that the wind, coming from behind them, would carry on the poison to the enemies' trenches.

The French soldiers were naturally taken by surprise. Some got away in time, but many, alas! not understanding the new danger, were not so fortunate, and were overcome by the fumes and died poisoned. Among those who escaped nearly all cough and spit blood, the chlorine attacking the mucous membrane. The dead were turned black at once. The effect of this poisonous gas was left over about six kilometres of ground over than that the gas was too much diluted with air to kill, but suffocated many.

About fifteen minutes after letting the gas escape the Germans got out of their trenches. Some of them were sent on in advance, with masks over their heads, to ascertain if the air had become breathable. Having discovered that they could advance, they arrived in large numbers on the area on which the gas had spread itself some minutes before, and took possession of the arms of the dead men. They made no prisoners. Whenever they saw a soldier whom the fumes had not quite killed they snatched away his rifle, and threw it in the Yser, and advised him ironically to lie down "to die better."

White Flag Treachery.

A company had to submit to an infamous trick on the part of the Germans. Seeing that the well-directed fire of these was beginning to tell, a German column advanced, rifle butts in the air, and waving the white flag, calling out, "We surrender!" As soon as they came near the French they suddenly opened fire and decimated the company, of whom but very few survived. These men told me the story. Soon, however, French reinforcements arrived, and opened a terrible fire on the Germans. The French artillery fired on them at a distance of less than half a mile.

On their side, the Canadian troops, of the English left wing, advanced like a wedge between the German troops and finished those who had advanced too far. Very few survived of those who had surprised the French with the white flag. It is possible that the use of chlorine gas may one day turn against the Germans themselves. Should the wind veer suddenly they would be the first victims of their murderous attempt.

In the region stretching from the north of Knocke to the northeast of Pervyse and to Ramscappelle, the enemy attacked on the 22nd and 23rd with terrible force and an absolute disregard of human life, which proves that, momentarily at least, their back lines are well supplied. North of the famous Ferryman's House the floods prevented the use of the asphyxiating gas, as it only has effect at a short distance. The Germans came forward in serried ranks, four abreast, and preceded by three machine-guns. They advanced along the road which crosses the flooded regions, careless of the havoc the Allies' big guns caused among them. They had orders only to use the machine-guns when quite close to the Belgian troops who occupied this point, and faithful to the command they only fired when on the Belgian trenches.

The Yser Crossed.

Then they attacked with bayonets, in a veritable fury. Their great numbers aided them to cross the Yser at several places, and they retook, temporarily, Driegrachten. Much bravery was displayed on both sides. The battery of 75m. guns of the Belgian Division particularly distinguished itself. Night brought no respite to the attack and did not lessen the defence. The few points taken by the Germans were localized and isolated. Considerable reinforcements came to the Allies, and the combat which followed during the night saw the Germans thrown completely back on the right bank of the Yser at several points.

North of Dixmude the Germans attacked many times in serried ranks. During the afternoon of the 22nd two German companies appeared and attacked the Belgians who occupied an advanced positions. A bayonet fight took place, which was unfavourable to the Germans, and many prisoners were taken. During the day of the 23rd the Germans essayed some sorties in massed formation, also charged the Belgian lines time after time, between Dixmude and the west of Pervyse, using the little village of Stuyvekenakerke as a base. All the attacks were repulsed. The same day also saw brave deeds on the part of the Belgian grenadiers, who prevented the Germans getting to the French left wing, which had become weakened through the effects of the poisonous gas.

Hospitals are full. The German losses must also have been terrible on account of the massed formation of four abreast, for when one column fell, another immediately took its place. The correspondent adds, I have just witnessed the effect of the explosive bullets used by the Germans on some wounded men. The enemy have used a considerable quantity of these bullets.

LICK HIM AGAIN

Every time you lick a war stamp think of the Kaiser, and give it another lick.

Blessings and curses are equally out of place. He will get all that is coming to him. But anybody who fails to learn the lesson from the example he has set will have missed the appearance of evil.

Many of us cannot do much more than lick postage stamps, but we can all do that with a cheerful spirit. They will stick all the better for the good cheer put into the process of their attachment.

It ought to be a source of constant satisfaction that the stamps are not being licked for benefit of the Kaiser. It would be a degrading business if we had to lick stamps for the Kaiser after what we have found out about him.

We can be sure that if we do not lick stamps for King George and his merry men we shall have to lick them for Wilhelm and his pirates. This reflection makes it so pleasant to lick a stamp that one goes to a pile of unanswered letters with gratitude for the chance to give the Kaiser another lick.

The Kaiser wishes very much to stick himself all over civilization. The only way to keep him off is to stick something else up there first. The war stamp is an excellent substitute for Kaiser Wilhelm, and it will not adhere so disagreeably as he would if he ever got a chance to stick. With Wilhelm in mind, it is possible to lick war stamps all day long with a thankful, happy heart.—Toronto World.

When They Split Poland

The first partition of Poland was actively commenced 143 years ago, under the terms of a compact between Frederick the Great of Prussia and Catherine of Russia, in which Austria was invited to take part. About one-third of Poland was seized on this occasion. The second partition, in 1793, and the third, in 1795, practically completed the dismemberment of the ancient kingdom, and after the congress of Vienna, a century ago, nothing was left of Poland but a memory. Before the first partition the Kingdom stretched from the Carpathians to the Baltic, a distance of 600 miles. It is to these original lines that the Czar has promised to restore Poland after the conclusion of the present war. During the last century Germany, Austria, and Russia alike have sought to stamp out the language, literature, and national spirit of the Poles, but with little success. The attempt to force school children to adopt the German tongue has resulted in many "strikes" of the pupils, and the Poles have been so determined in their attitude that all the Governments involved have been forced to make concessions.

HINTS TO HOUSEWIVES

To Set Colour in Stockings.

When washed for the first time use in the first water a little oxgall (which can be procured at the druggists); also have a tablespoonful of powdered borax to every pail of hot water; use very little soap. After the first use of oxgall, borax will answer every purpose. Do not let the stockings remain long in any water; hang to the shade to dry.

A NECK BLEACH.

A good bleach for the neck is said to the Cleopatra bleach and is prepared as follows: Strained honey, one ounce; oil of bitter almonds, six drops; lemon juice, one teaspoonful; whites of two eggs; oatmeal to make a fine paste. Spread this thickly on a piece of cotton cloth three inches wide and tie as a bandage about the throat. Four or five applications of this will bleach the most obstinate skin. Remember that oil of almonds is a poison.

Grease Spot Removed.

A grease spot on the carpet may be removed easily if one will act quickly. First remove all that can be removed with a knife, then give the spot a thorough cleaning as above, rub dry with soft cloth; this is important and it will carry the grease with it. If any of the grease remains, lay a blotting paper over the spot and press with a warm iron.

HORSERADISH SAUCE.

Take one pint of milk and let come to a boil; add one-half teaspoonful salt and one teaspoonful sugar; then rub together one tablespoonful of butter and one of flour. Add to the milk and let boil up, then take from the fire and add fresh grated horseradish, about three or four tablespoonfuls, or to suit taste.

Cereal Macaroons.

Beat the white of one egg until stiff and add one-fourth cupful of sugar gradually, while beating constantly; then add five tablespoonfuls of any of the wheat breakfast foods, while continuing the beating. Flavour with one teaspoonful vanilla. Drop from the tip of a spoon on a buttered sheet one and one-half inches apart. Bake in a slow oven 12 or 15 minutes.

Baked Pork Chops.

Make a dressing of bread crumbs, one well beaten egg, one tablespoonful of melted butter, season with pepper, salt, sage and onion. Put the dressing in a baking dish, lay the pork chops on top of the dressing, sprinkle with pepper and salt and put the dish in the oven. When the chops are brown on the under side turn and brown on the other side. The juice from the meat will gravy into the dressing and give it a delicious flavour. Cook one-three-quarter of an hour.

HOME HEALTH CLUB

By DR. DAVID H. KEEDER

Health in the Garden.—There are more than one way in which health may be found in the garden. First and most important is the value of the fresh green vegetables, better than all the mineral dope and poisons ever collected in the largest drug store, better by far because it is safe and pleasant to use. Next in importance is the value of the fresh, out-door air and sunshine that one gets while "making garden." Last then comes a factor of which I suppose most people never take account; the elimination through the pores of sweat glands of poisonous waste matter that is brought about by vigorous work during the hot spring days.

There is no way of getting this waste matter out of the system that is so effectual as by active exercise in the open air, exercise that will cause free and copious perspiration.

The tired business man in the city knows the value of a good sweat so he goes to a Turkish bath and lies in a stifling hot room until the water comes from every pore of his skin and while he feels greatly benefited, especially after the thorough massage and the shower and a plunge in the swimming tank, which follows, as a matter of fact he has not received one-half the actual benefit he would have received by a discharge of vastly more value in the garden.

There is an element in the free out-door air that cannot be had indoors. There is something that helps life to be stronger, freer, and more worth while. Just as there is more life and health in the fresh, ripe fruit and the fresh, raw vegetables than there is in the best cooked meat that was ever served by a great chef.

By all means have a garden and pick the fresh, crisp vegetables just before you are ready to eat them. The city man cannot buy such a luxury, they must come direct from the bountiful hand of Mother Nature. A recent Farmer's Bulletin issued by the Department of Agriculture at Washington, especially emphasizes this point in regard to sweet corn, showing how some of the finest varieties lose most of their delicate and delicious flavour in from 20 to 30 minutes after being picked, but when at once cooked and eaten is delicious.

Club Notes.

I will gladly answer all inquiries for information on health subjects from readers of this publication if same are addressed to Home Health Club, 5030 Cottages Grove Ave., Chicago, Ill. Send full name and address with 4 cents postage.

Take a sample of the water thrown out from the pores of the skin while in the Turkish bath and it will be found to contain less than half the impurities and waste or poisonous matter that will be found in the same quantity of sweat that is thrown off during active exercise. Then again take the open air as against the heated air of the best ventilated bath house in the world and the garden has ten to one the advantage.

All these things can be accurately and scientifically proven by a simple chemical analysis of the exudate.

WORTH REMEMBERING

Pour cold water on grease that is spilt on the kitchen floor and scrape it off with a knife. Then wash up with strong soapsuds or little lye.

Glycerine will relieve a burn and should be kept on the pantry shelf.

To remove a fresh ink stain, saturate it with kerosene oil and let it remain for 20 minutes, then wash out.

One way of removing shine from serge is to sponge it with warm water to which a little vinegar has been added.

Grease spots on a wall may be removed by rubbing with camphorated chalk.

Women's Weakness And Health Perils

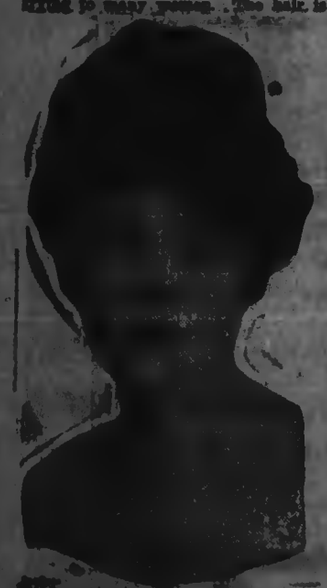
Anaemia Comes So Gratefully That the Victim Scarcely Realizes the Hold the Trouble Has Upon Her Until Almost in a Decline

Woman's work is more wearing than man's because it lasts almost every waking hour. There is no eight or nine hour day for the breadwinner's wife, and often she toils under the greatest difficulty because her strength is below what it should be. The woman who is indoors all day is very often careless about what she eats and does not keep her blood up to the mark. It becomes thin and poor, which makes her weak, headachy, tired, breathless and liable to pains in the back and sides, the scourge of her sex. New blood will do wonders for the woman who is tired out, who aches all over when she rises in the morning and feels unaccountably depressed. She can gain new blood now, and drive away the pains and aches and tiredness if she will take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. They have worked marvels for other women and will do the same for you if you are weak, tired, depressed or suffering from backaches or sideaches. Mrs. Elmer C. Taylor, Calgary, Alta., says: "I was so run down with anaemia that I could scarcely walk without aid. I was not able to leave the house. I had no colour, no appetite, and was constantly troubled with headaches, dizzy spells and a general disinclination to move about or do anything. My friends did not think I would get better, and even the doctor was apprehensive. I was constantly taking medicine, but it did me no more than a piece of narrow black velvet ribbon which is knotted about the waist. Sometimes it is a wide, soft silk sash that is tied in a loose, floppy bow in the back or at the side. Sometimes a sash is formed from an extension of the dress fronts knotted about the waist and draped under in jewelled fastening at the back. Of course a big bow is rather out of place for a negligee, which, in spite of this detachment, should be distinctly suggestive of underwear rather than outerwear. The waist may be in evening or dressing, and either sleeves to the weight of the dress are worn.



How to Wash Veils.

As a rule, only the very light and white veils are washed, but many women, knowing how quickly dust settles, make a practice of washing all veils. First be sure that the basin is very clean. Use lukewarm water and a small amount of castile or other fine soap. Don't rub the veil, but move it around in the soapy water. The action of the soap and water will thoroughly clean it. Rinse in several changes of lukewarm water and squeeze out the last rinsing by a simple pressure of the hands. Do not wring the veil and do not squeeze it too hard. Lay it out flat on a towel to dry. If the darker veils are not washed they should be shaken each time they are worn and brushed with a velvet brush.

Negligee Fashion.

A sash is a part of many of the summer negligees. Sometimes it is no more than a piece of narrow black velvet ribbon which is knotted about the waist. Sometimes it is a wide, soft silk sash that is tied in a loose, floppy bow in the back or at the side. Sometimes a sash is formed from an extension of the dress fronts knotted about the waist and draped under in jewelled fastening at the back. Of course a big bow is rather out of place for a negligee, which, in spite of this detachment, should be distinctly suggestive of underwear rather than outerwear. The waist may be in evening or dressing, and either sleeves to the weight of the dress are worn.

SPRING LOVE AND DANGER

Several billion ladies and gentlemen have made mistakes; they only thought it was love. There the danger. Spring does the rest; and afterward—frequently there is no rest.

Beware of ultra idealization. A girl with a face like an angel's may possess a temper like a young volcano. A young man who covers the soul of chivalry may be a fourflusher or a lawyer. A damsel with radiant eyes, glorious hair, Junoesque form and a ravishing complexion may develop into a cosmic chill. You never can tell.

A gentle, sweet, clinging little lady, with a voice like running waters, may have an indomitable will and a .000000128 brain. In marriage this proves the combination which softly unlocks just 40 years of agony for the larger partner. Then he passes out.

Girls, never trust a man who has no money. The grocer won't.

Young man, remember how your Uncle Charles' life was blighted by Aunt Mary's habit of speaking at length. A tongue that doubles on its tracks gets nowhere, but it creates excitement.

Nor do silk stockings make a fine disposition.

Gentlemen, is it better to wake up in the morning with a bunch of curl papers or a wad to pay your way?

Ladies, in selecting a mate you have to be shown. Take nothing for granted but his general foolishness. If you think you both have a divine passion which will last for life tell him your father is a terrific tightwad.

Marriage is stimulating or enervating, horrifying or hopeful. It has a way of getting under the skin like nothing else.

And yet — spring is here. Looks, kisses, love, sighs. In the order named. Waiting for you!

If it is your turn, step up to the dough dish, your proud face illumined by the glory of that matchless aurora borealis which sheds its radiance through the ages.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS

A sewing machine can be thoroughly cleaned by being well oiled with paraffin and left for twelve hours. Then use ordinary oil, and when carefully dried it will run as smoothly as when new.

When cream is too thin to whip easily place the dish containing the cream in a pan of cold water until it is thoroughly chilled, then put it into a pan of hot water, stir till it will whip without difficulty.

Shabby leather bags may be improved in appearance by being rubbed over with the well-beaten white of an egg, and then polished with benzine or turpentine, the latter rubbing being given with a soft, clean cloth.

When you have taken up your carpets in spring, you will find it a good plan to paint the floor of the room with a mixture of skim-milk, when dry, relay the carpet. This has been proved very beneficial in keeping out moth, and is undeniable when tacks.

Very good griddle cakes can be made with the stale end of stale bread. Break the bread up into small pieces and pour over them just enough milk for the bread to absorb. Soak this well, and to two cupfuls add an egg, a little flour, baking powder, and enough milk to make them the proper consistency.

HOUSEHOLD RECIPES

LEFTOVER COLD MUTTON.

One cup or less mutton that has been boiled down into small pieces. Take a quart of gelatine and pour over the meat, stirring it well. If liked put in tablespoon poultry seasoning. Let stand until set in a cold place. Slice for luncheon or supper.

SUGAR COOKIES.

One-half cup butter, 1 cup sugar, 2 eggs, ½ teaspoon mace. Cream all together, add 2 tablespoons milk, 3 scant cups flour with 2 teaspoons baking powder and a pinch of salt. Roll thin and bake in moderate oven.

APPLE CAKE.

Three medium-sized apples, 1 cup of flour, 1 teaspoon baking powder, ½ teaspoon of salt, 1 tablespoon shortening, 1 cup of milk, 1 egg, 2 tablespoons sugar, ½ teaspoon cinnamon.

Sift flour, baking powder and salt into bowl, add shortening, rub into flour very lightly; add enough cold milk to roll out ½ inch thick. Dust deep pie tin or shallow pudding pan with flour, put on the dough. Wash, pare and quarter the apples, press into dough. Beat egg with milk and sugar, pour over the apples; place in bottom of moderate oven and bake 25 to 30 minutes, or until the apples are tender. When cold dust with cinnamon mixed with a little sugar.

OATMEAL MUFFINS

One cup of rye flour, cold steamed in ¾ cup of sour milk, ½ cup of flour, ¼ cup of sugar, 1 egg, little salt, ½ teaspoon of soda.

TWO EGG SPONGE CAKE.

Beat for five minutes 2 eggs, whites and yellows not separated. Now add 1 cup sugar, gradually 1 cup sifted flour and one teaspoon baking powder added, sift through three times, add pinch of salt. Now add slowly 1 cup boiling water, to which has been added 1 teaspoon vanilla or lemon.

POTTED CHICKEN.

Carefully boil one chicken, remove the meat, cut into small pieces, then grind in a meat chopper; put about three tablespoonfuls in a mortar and pound until reduced to a paste, and so continue until all the meat has been reduced to a paste; turn into a bowl and add half a pound of melted butter, one teaspoonful of salt, a saltspoonful of pepper, and a dash of red pepper. Work and rub this until perfectly smooth, then put it into small pots or cups, cover the top with melted butter and set away until needed. Suet or paraffine may be used for covering the top and will answer just as well as the butter.

BAKED BEANS AND TOMATOES.

Two cupfuls of cold baked beans (mashed), five cups of warm water, two onions (chopped), two cups of seasoned tomatoes; cook 30 minutes; serve in a deep dish with split crackers or toasted bread; add a little butter.

Ragout of Beef.

Cut 3 pounds of round steak into one-inch cubes; put 2 tablespoons of suet into saucepan and when hot add the meat, browning on all sides; into the fat blend 2 tablespoons of flour, and then add 1 pint of water in which has been dissolved 1 teaspoon of extract of beef; add 1 teaspoon of salt and 3-4 teaspoon of white pepper and simmer for 1 1-2 hours.

Queen Pudding.

One pint of fine bread crumbs, one quart of fresh, rich milk (hot), yolks of four eggs, one and one-half cupfuls of white sugar, one tablespoonful of butter, one-half cupful of jelly or jam. Soak the crumbs in the hot milk, rub the butter and sugar together, and stir in the yolks well beaten. Mix all together with such flavouring as you like, and bake in a deep pudding dish. When done cover with a meringue of whipped whites and one-half cupful of sugar; cover the pudding with the jelly, and over that place the meringue and brown in the oven. Eat cold with cream. Fresh fruit is very nice instead of the jelly.

Date Pie.

Pick over and chop one pound of dates; boil in a little water until soft. To one quart of milk add two beaten eggs, one cupful of sugar and a little salt. Stir this mixture into the dates, pour into plates which have been lined with a good crust and bake as for custard pie.

A Quick Dessert.

Remove stones from the required quantity of dates cut the fruit in strips. Sprinkle with orange juice and pineapple and heap whipped cream on top of each portion.

THE IDEAL DINNER

Foods Should Be Selected With Regard to Nutritive Values.

ECONOMY IN MENU MAKING.

At This Time It Is Especially Useful to Know How to Serve Inexpensive Foods to the Best Advantage—Many Useful Substitutes For Meat.

Prepared by the United States department of agriculture.

Dinner, the heaviest meal of the day, usually has a meat or fish dish as its principal item, with vegetables and bread and butter and perhaps a relish, such as jelly, to accompany it and a sweet dessert to "top off with." If the rest of her dinner is lighter or simpler than usual a good manager often finds it worth while to let a soup precede the meat. This adds to the attractiveness of the meal and need not mean much extra work. Unless it is a thick broth or is made with milk, the soup has little nutritive value, but it is usually relished, especially in cold weather, and is often an economical way of using up leftovers. The serving of a little soup as an appetizer for the first course of dinner is a common custom in homes where somewhat elaborate meals are the rule.

Piecing Out the Meat Course.

A way of piecing out a very simple meat course is to make the vegetables especially attractive and more nutritious, perhaps serving escalloped potatoes, which have milk and butter added, or macaroni and cheese instead of plain boiled potatoes, or, if the family is fond of such things, providing some kind of simple vegetable or fruit salad. On the other hand, if some expensive cut, such as beefsteak, is the main feature of the meal the other parts of the dinner may be made simpler than usual and the total expenditure kept not far from the average, or an expensive meal on one day may be followed by a judicious use of leftovers the next day.

In parts of the country where good fresh fish is available it makes an excellent substitute for meat, for sea food has a similar nutritive value, usually costs less and is quite worthy of more frequent use than is common. Dried, pickled and smoked meat and fish also have their uses to vary the diet and can often be used for economical dishes. Cheese, eggs, beans and similar legumes and nuts are other foodstuffs which may be used for the preparation of dishes to replace meat if one wishes to do so.

The Vegetable Course.

In choosing the vegetables for a meal it is worth while to remember that potatoes, both white and sweet, the simple carbohydrate vegetables, contain much more nourishment, size and bearing in food value, and these can be used to take their place when convenience or the wish for variety makes this desirable. It would be better judgment not to serve several of this group at the same meal, not because, as it is sometimes stated in popular literature, the body is harmed by receiving several sorts of starch at one meal, or because one would overeat of starchy foods, but because the meal would be better balanced as well as more in accord with good practice if it included other types of vegetables instead of duplicating those of similar composition. Green vegetables, such as beet tops, kale, spinach, chard and other pot herbs, fruits like tomatoes, green corn, green peas and string beans and the highly flavored root vegetables, such as parsnips and turnips, should be used in combination with the more nutritious kinds, not only for the sake of their flavor, but also for furnishing the body with valuable chemical substances, especially mineral elements.

Dried beans, peas, cowpeas and lentils contain a good deal of nitrogenous material as well as starch and can be used with economy to lessen the amount of meat. Thus the old custom of serving baked beans, pease and bacon and similar dishes as the heavy dish of a meal is justified on the ground of nutritive value.

Serving the Desserts.

The custom of finishing dinner with a sweet dessert is almost universal in this country and is, on the whole, a reasonable one. Rich cooked pastries and puddings very often cause digestive disturbances, but the simpler kinds properly made are wholesome and afford fairly nutritious, and fruits, fresh, dried or cooked, and nuts are always in order and easy to serve. The desserts must depend on circumstances. On days when the housework is especially heavy it may be good management to substitute fresh fruits or preserves with cakes or cookies for a "made" dessert. If the rest of the meal is light a nutritious dessert is in order and milk, eggs, butter and sugar are ingredients which contribute materially to the food value of such dishes.

Combining Winter Fruits.

Remove the center leaves of small heads of lettuce so as to make a cup. Into this put shredded celery or apple or both with finely shredded red pepper and a few white grapes cut in halves and seeded. This should be mixed and garnished with a smooth French dressing to which has been added walnut meats chopped to a pulp.

NATTY NECKWEAR

Much Use is Made of Collar and Cuff Sets.

SATIN COMBINATION SMART.

Popularity of Dark Costumes Has Helped to Promote Interest in Lace and Embroidered Novelties That Help Set Them Off.

Variety in one's stock of neckwear is useful late in the season when gowns have been worn so often that they are passe. A dainty collar and cuff set often transforms them. Fortunately, just at this time, when white suits are out, many luxurious pieces greatly reduced down, if chosen judiciously, may be worn next season.

Neckwear is popular at present, partly due to the fashion for black and dark colored street dresses, the majority of which require a dainty bit of neckwear to relieve their severity. Almost every shape of collar in vogue, from the extreme plaited and cape backs to the high, severe stedlet, and cuffs are worn with these in all depths and designs.

Fine hand embroidered sets of organdie and of batiste edged with a ruffle of fine val lace are favorites. There are colonial effects in tucks, clusterpages and pale blue, with a distinction of hemstitching, hand embroidery or [illegible]

Satin collar and cuff sets are among the smart neckwear, sometimes cut in points. Fresh colored satin sets are particularly smart. Satin stocks, very high, in black and in white, or in black and white combinations, have severe inlaid in front sometimes combined with fan plaits in the back. These stocks are worn in an odd way with V neck waists, being simply fastened around the neck, leaving the V portion bare. They are adaptable for a low or fair or close neck waist.

Fur stocks finished simply with a rose at the left side or with a high maltese or cutout cache, shirred in medici fashion are smart.

Ostrich and velvet ribbon ruches are also used. The ostrich comes in pretty soft effects and when made in very soft, fine lace and chiffon. A very smart touch is the floral ornament for wear at the throat or waist line, which is worn on the new high stocks. Single roses are the smartest.

Illustrated here is a pretty specimen of the turned over collar in broadcloth, chief item. The front is adorned with embroidery. There is a plaited bow edged with narrow val lace. The other collar is a rather novel adaptation of the sailor effect. It is embellished with embroidered polka dots.

SUCCESS IN COOKING MEAT

To cook tough meats, sear to keep the juices in and then stew until tender. Serve with thick gravy.

Roasted meats have a better flavor first placed near the coals to sear and then drawn back to cook at lower heat.

Remember that the success of frying depends upon two things—having enough fat to completely cover the article cooked in it and having the fat smoking hot.

Dry or tough meats can often be made tender and of good flavor by braising. They are cooked in a close covered pot, with salt pork, stock and chopped vegetables gradually added in the cooked state.

When juicy meats are given should be very hot at first, and then the heat should be slowly lowered to allow the cooking to be done slowly. Keep a piece of asbestos on hand to interpose between a dish and the hottest part of the oven when there is danger of burning.

COOKING HINTS

Veal and Parsnip Stew.

A veal and parsnip stew seems suggestive of spring. For this the knuckle of veal may be utilized. Scrape and cut into small dice two good sized parsnips and half a dozen roots of vegetable oysters. Peel and scrape one knob of celery and cut fine, together with a small onion.

Put four or five thin slices of salt pork into the stew kettle, and lay on them the veal and vegetables with boiling water to nearly cover. Simmer slowly until thoroughly tender. It will take about two hours. Dish the veal and vegetables on a hot platter, thicken the liquor slightly and pour over them.

Bacon Dressing.

While bacon salad dressing will probably not be relished so frequently as the more standard French mayonnaise, and cream dressings, it furnishes a pleasing variety in the menu. This recipe is given in a correspondence study course offered by the University of Wisconsin Extension division.

Cut the bacon in small bits, place it in a frying pan, fry out the fat and brown the bacon. To every fourth cup of drippings add two tablespoons vinegar, one teaspoon salt, two teaspoons sugar, and one-fourth teaspoon peppper. If the vinegar is very strong dilute it with water. The amount of seasoning used will depend largely upon the ingredients in the salad. The dressing is used while hot and will wilt the dandelions, lettuce and water cress, and other greens over which it is poured. A potato salad mixed with this dressing is delicious.

Scalloped Potato.

Peel raw potatoes and slice thin. Put a layer of cracker crumbs in the bottom of a well-buttered medium-sized pudding dish. Next a layer of sliced potato and sprinkle with salt, pepper and bits of butter. Repeat layers till dish is full, making the top layer cracker crumbs dotted thickly with bits of butter. Add one cup of milk. Cover dish till last ten minutes and bake about one hour.

Hash.

Two pints cold boiled potato to one pint cold boiled corned beef, mostly lean. Add one medium-sized raw onion to each quart of potato and meat. Chop all together pretty fine. Season as liked with pepper and salt. Melt two tablespoonfuls butter in hot water enough to cover bottom of frying pan. Add the chopped material cover and let it gently simmer where it will not burn till the water is all taken up. If it is not stirred, a rich brown crust will be formed, and the hash may be folded upon a platter like an omelet. A relish of mustard, sugar and vinegar, well mixed, may be served with it.

Sweetcroft Potato.

One quart potato mashed very fine and smooth, season with salt, a little white pepper and one tablespoonful butter. Heat to boiling point one cup sweet milk, add to potato and beat with a large silver fork till the mass is white, thick and creamy. Pile lightly on a hot platter and serve at once.

White Cake.

Two cups of powdered sugar creamed with ½ cup of butter, 1 cup of sweet milk, 3 cups of flour sifted with 2 teaspoons of baking powder, 1 teaspoon of vanilla extract and the whites of 4 eggs beaten stiff and lightly folded in the last thing. This is also fine with 2 cups of nut meats added. Almonds are extra nice.

Ginger Snaps.

Bring 1 cup of molasses to a scald. Put in your bowl 1 cup of sugar, 1 egg, tablespoon of ginger, 2 tablespoons of vinegar. Add 1 large spoon of soda to the molasses, beat, then add to ingredients. Beat in rightly flour to make cookies stiff enough to roll. I use pastry flour, but have to double this recipe, they are so good.

Rice With Apples.

Two cups of steamed rice, two eggs, one-half cup of sugar, three apples and one-half cup of milk. Pare and core the apples and boil them until they are soft. Stir the beaten eggs into the cooked rice, add the sugar, cooked apples and milk, put into a buttered pudding dish and bake for 25 minutes. Serve with cream.

Orange Cup Custard.

Beat three yolks of eggs with one white, lightly, and add one-half a cup of sugar, a little salt and the grated rind of one Seakist orange, with one-fourth cup of orange juice.

Scald one cup of milk with one-fourth cup of cream (but do not let it boil) and pour gradually into the egg mixture. Place four buttered custard cups on several folds of paper in a shallow pan, partly fill with the custard and surround with boiling water. Bake in a moderate oven until firm (the water should not bubble) and set aside to cool. Serve in the cups with whipped cream on top, or turn out into shallow dishes and surround with sliced oranges or a little orange syrup.

Hamburg With Olives.

Place 1 pound hamburg steam in baking pan, to form a layer about an inch thick. Put through grinder a small onion and 10-cent bottle stuffed olives, spread evenly on top of steam and pour over same 1 cup of tomato catsup. Baked in hot oven 15 minutes after adding ¼ cup of water. Onion may be omitted if one doesn't care for it. This is a very appetizing dish. Will some one try it and report result?

Molasses Cookies.

One cupful sugar, one cupful molasses, one cupful lard or butter, one-half cup hot water, spoonful dash of soda, ginger and cinnamon, and flour to roll thick. Made into small cakes [illegible]

THIS SCHOOL GIRL HAD BAD FAINTING SPELLS

Was Weak and Run Down, But Dr. Chase's Nerve Food Made Complete Cure

The most critical time in a girl's life comes during the school age, when she is impelled by rivalry to put forth her best efforts in studying for examinations. At the time she should have healthful outdoor exercise and abundance of fresh air, to keep the blood pure and rich, she is confined to her studies. Is it any wonder that she becomes run down in health and suffers from headaches, indigestion, loss of appetite and spells of weakness or fainting?

The case described in this letter is a good illustration and you can read here the splendid results of using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food to help through this critical period.

"While attending school my daughter became weak and very much run down. She was frequently troubled with bad fainting spells, and nothing we tried seemed to do her any good. We were advised to try Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and did so with most satisfactory results. I am pleased to tell you that after using [illegible] cured, and has no return of the fainting spells."

This statement is certified to by Mr. Hamilton Houston, Justice of the Peace.

The reason Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is so effective in cases of this kind is because of its extraordinary blood-forming influence. By creating an abundance of rich, red blood it strengthens the action of the heart, revitalizes the exhausted nerves and builds up this system in every way.

The appetite increases, digestion improves, you rest and sleep well, and the new vigour and energy is felt in every organ of the human body. Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is doing wonders for men, women and children whose systems have become weak and run down. 50 cents a box, 6 for $2.50, all dealers or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

CHOICE RECIPES

Banana Whip.

Remove the skins of 3 bananas, cut fine, add the juice of one lemon and beat to a creamy mass. Moisten 1-2 package gelatine in 1-2 cup cold water, pour over this 1 pint of boiling water and add 1 cup of sugar, the bananas and 1-2 package of colouring powder. Beat until foamy and pour into a wet mold and set to harden. Serve with whipped cream. I use the pink gelatine and it saves colouring powder.

Chop Suey.

(Requested.)

Cut two pounds lean pork into pieces about one-inch square and one quarter inch thick. Brown slightly in pan. I use a large roasting pan.

Cut up one quart of onions into eighths, and two bunches of celery into inch pieces. I have almost two quarts of cut-up celery. Also cut up one-half pound of fresh mushrooms, or one can of them. If they are too expensive omit, and use mushroom catsup later. If you use the canned ones, save the liquor.

Now fry the meat, onions, celery, mushrooms over a very hot fire, turning constantly with a pancake turner until meat is thoroughly cooked. Add pepper and salt and remove from pan. Into pan put one tablespoon flour, two cups hot water or liquor from canned mushrooms, pepper, salt and one tablespoon of molasses. Put one tablespoon mushroom catchup in gravy if you have not used mushrooms so far. Pour this gravy about the chop suey and serve immediately with boiled rice.

Fruit Punch.

Make a syrup by boiling a pound of California grapes, cut in halves and minutes.

Have ready in the punch bowl the juice of five oranges and four lemons, one orange sliced thin, a can of shredded pineapple, a cupful of freshly brewed tea infusion. Pour the syrup over this mixture and let it stand until of Californai grapes, cut in halves and seeded, a quart of mineral water and cold water enough to make six quarts of liquid in all.

A piece of coarse muslin placed over the hole in the pot into which a plant is to be put will prevent the earth from washing away when the plant is wet.

COLLIER'S VICTORY OVER A SUBMARINE

"Bravo, captain! Accept heartiest congratulations to yourself and crew for splendid achievement."

Captain John W. Bell, master of the steamship Thordis, which rammed a German submarine off Rosahy Head, received the above telegram from the delighted owners of the vessel.

The terse official log-book describes the incident in the ship's log:

"While proceeding from Blyth towards Plymouth observed periscope of submarine on starboard side. Ordered all hands on deck in case of emergency. Then observed submarine pass forward our bows to port beam, where it took up position thirty or forty yards off. Shortly after noticed wake of torpedo on starboard beam. Put helm hard over to starboard, and ran over periscope, which I and crew heard and felt scrape under the bottom. Did not see submarine after, but saw oil floating on the water. Considered submarine disabled."

Captain Bell told how, to a boy, he pulled his little steering stroke right over the top of the German submarine, caused his craft fall of coal, to "sit down" forcibly on the pirate, and sent her to the bottom of the English Channel.

"I couldn't get away from the submarine pirate, and we thought the ship was doomed, so I put the helm over to starboard, hoping to hit her before we were ready ourselves."

An Admiral's Tribute

Admiral Sir George Egerton, Commander-in-Chief at Plymouth, sent to Captain Bell to hear about the experiences at first hand. When the narrative was finished the admiral congratulated the shipmaster on his achievement.

Captain Bell and his officers and crew have no doubt that the submarine went straight to the bottom of the Channel, thirty fathoms deep.

"We took off her periscope," they say, "and if she didn't sink she would be bound to come to the surface, but there was no sign of her except a little oil on the water.

"I realized the danger we were in, and called all hands on deck to be prepared for an emergency. The boats were already slung out.

"I watched the submarine cross our bow, and the next time I saw her was on our port beam, where she took up a position abreast of us. The periscope at times stood well out of the water. It was reddish in color, but I could not see whether it was copper or painted red. I should think it would be fully inches in diameter."

While the pirate was on the port beam of the Thordis all the crew clustered on the deck saw the wake of a torpedo speeding away from them towards the shore.

"Lord, she's missed!" cried the chief engineer, George Veitch, who had come up from below to join his comrades.

The crew expected to hear and feel an explosion, and were ready to jump into the boats at the instant of shock. It was hard to realize that the submarine, so near the Thordis that one could nearly touch the periscope by leaning over the side, had actually missed. The torpedo had travelled right under the ship, and continued its flight on the other side in the direction of the shore.

The Captain's Inspiration

Then Captain Bell had the inspiration which made him famous.

"I knew that if I ported and threw my stern towards her I could have no gun-fire," he explained. "We can only do seven and a half knots in fine weather, and that is all of the slightest use.

"The engines were still running, giving the ship some way, so I put my helm hard over to starboard and we grazed right on top of the periscope.

"We all heard and felt the hard grunching of the collision. We knew we had got her. The disappeared instantly."

That is the victory of a 250-ton coast steamer over a German submarine. Captain Bell believes that not only was the periscope torn clean away, but that he must decapitated the conning tower.

The Thordis suffered practically no damage. She tied up in Plymouth Sound, a drab tarpaulin-covering craft [illegible] "battle engagement" was a long scratch on her port stern.

Captain Bell attributes his escape from the torpedo to the rough weather and the light draught of the Thordis.

"We only drew 12 feet of water," he said, "and at the time of the attack we were plunging heavily. That must have been why the torpedo went right under us.

"It is not my first experience in the war. I was in the Scheldt as master of the Thornaby during the bombardment of Antwerp. We had to clear and go to Zeebrugge, and where the last ship to leave Ostend before the Germans came. They arrived the morning after we went. We took Belgian refugees to Calais, and I was at that port when the Germans tried to torpedo a hospital ship."

SPADE LOOMS VERY LARGE IN MODERN WARFARE

French Fighting Not Spectacular But Very Deadly—Steel Forts Already Out of Date

The armies fight like moles in France and Flanders. No more is the advance made with the blare of bands—as often the Germans boldly did, earlier in the war—nor even at the trumpet call, "To the charge!" No more the hurrah and rush of a mob of men, all gallantly hurling themselves full in the face of the enemy.

Mattock and spade are the weapons used. The advance is made silently—and underground! The attackers are invisible. The shock of the charge only comes when an explosion from beneath blows up a portion of the enemy's trenches and hurls sky-high the poor fellows who happen to be standing over it.

It is the deadliest kind of warfare, this working in the dark and in silence toward the enemy's line. Sapping is the slow process of working a way toward the enemy's position by means of burrowing below the surface of the earth. The Germans, always methodical and given to much detail, have it down to an exact science.

The Work of the Sappers.

Here is how they work it, as described by one of the official observers attached to British Headquarters:

"The approaches are excavated by pioneers working at the head, the German pioneers being technically trained troops who correspond to our sappers. Owing to the close range at which the fighting is conducted, and the fact that rifles fixed in rests and machine guns are kept permanently directed upon the crest of the breastwork, observation is somewhat difficult, but the 'head' or end of the approaching sap can be detected from the rubble-bag work which is thrown up. This cannot be done, however, when the advance is conducted by a 'blinded sap.' The latter type of sap is made by tunnelling below the surface.

"In some cases, usually at night, a sap is driven right up to the parapet of the hostile trench, which is then crowned up by a charge. Another method consists of a series of short saps, each about 5 yards long, pushed forward in succession, the last one being used as a parallel. Each sap is pushed forward in succession, the last one being used as a parallel. Each sap is pushed forward in succession, the last one being used as a parallel. Each sap is

CHAPTER X.

In the Heart of Chinatown.

WITH quick decision Wilkerson turned his horse toward Valle Vista. He felt in his pockets to see how much money he had. He discovered that through an oversight he had put into his pocket before leaving the office the last San Francisco mint check for something like $2,000. There was besides this a couple of hundred dollars.

He pulled this out, stared at it, laughed and went on. "Frisco for mine," said he.

The evening sun was pouring a pale blue light through a high Pacific fog when John Dorr came to his senses.

Twenty feet away the machine was smoldering and the smell of oil and varnish lay like a miasma in the gulch. He could hardly breathe. His arms ached where they were bound behind him. He could hear the voices passing on the road and then lost consciousness again. It was only for a moment, for Tom Kane, desert wise, traveling in the cool of the evening, stopped his burros at the top of the declivity, wondering what the fire was. He saw that the savage was gone. The knight-errant to tramps camped in the dry bed of the creek, not attending to their blaze. He led the burros off the road and down the slope, only to stop with an exclamation such as he had not used in years. John Dorr lay there with his fingers clutched into the gray sand.

He stooped over and saw that the body, heaving heavily in the misty light, still held its vital spark.

"Where is Hickman, the driver?" The cook peered around and then once more bent over the motionless form of the young engineer. With great exertion he managed to lift him up and place him across one of the pack saddles, John's arm automatically clasping the little animal's neck. Seeing him secure, and coming to his senses, Kane went down to the smoldering remains of the machine to search for was on his way and would join them soon.

Wearied by the long trip across the continent, Ruth was glad to retire early, and shortly after the dinner hour she was tucked in her bed and sleeping soundly.

Drake hastened to the depot and met Wilkerson, driving him to the Manx with all haste.

"I'm awfully glad to see you, Harry," was the effusive greeting he received from Jean.

His heart pounded with the joy of it!

After all his scheming and plotting was worth while. He would win the mine and the woman also.

The mine! The Master Key!"

The thought brought him back like the snapping of a whip.

"Where is the girl?" he asked almost brusquely.

"In there," and Mrs. Darnell pointed to the curtains dividing Ruth's room from the other.

Wilkerson started toward the archway.

"Harry!"

He turned.

"You mustn't go in there."

"Why not?"

"She's sleeping—you'll awaken her."

"Oh, all right!" He paused and looked from Drake to Mrs. Darnell. "Well, let's get down to business. Where are the papers? Have you got them yet?"

"Sah! Not so loud"— and Mrs. Darnell looked apprehensively toward the heavy plush hangings.

"Oh, that's all right, Jean. But we must hurry this thing up."

In her bed Ruth stirred. The murmur of voices came to her as in a troubled dream. Whose were they? Where had she heard that voice before? The heavy one? She turned on her side and the moonlight shone on her in a white light.

"I tell you, Jean, you must do as I say! If we want to get possession of those papers and secure the mine we must act!"

"Will you be quiet?" Mrs. Darnell's eyes blazed in angered resentment.

What were the voices saying? Ruth sat up, listened, slipped from the bed and tiptoed to the curtains.

"You'll do as I say or"—

"Harry!"

"Oh, come, old man. What's the use of all this argument?" and Drake laid his hand on Wilkerson's arm restrainingly. Their eyes met. Wilkerson calmed himself.

"Oh, all right. As you say." And he stepped to Jean and turned her around to him.

Slam! Bang!

"Hello, hello!"

With one rush the trio were upon her. Mrs. Darnell seized the affrighted girl and dragged her from the phone. She screamed.

"Stop her yelling! Stop her!" commanded Wilkerson.

"George, for God's sake, do something!"

With her hand over the girl's mouth, Mrs. Darnell held her by sheer strength, while the always cowardly Wilkerson screamed his commands in a louder tone than those of the girl had been.

Her hand fell back, and her body became limp.

"She's fainted! Call a taxi at once! We must get her out of this hotel!"

In less than five minutes they were shooting down the elevator. Another quarter minute and Wilkerson, with the unconscious form of the girl in his arms, her face covered by the cape of the maid, was rushing across the lobby, preceded by Drake. Mrs. Darnell stopped at the desk long enough to throw down a twenty dollar bill.

"The girl is sick, and we must hurry her to a hospital!" she managed to gasp.

Before the dumfounded clerk or the amused guests could step to act they were out of the hotel and in a taxi.

The hotel detective sprang from almost out of nowhere and in a second was speeding after the fleeing, man accompanied by another plain clothes with step rush the trio were upon her. Mrs. Darnell seized the affrighted girl and dragged her from the phone. She screamed.

"Stop her yelling! Stop her!" commanded Wilkerson.

"George, for God's sake, do something!"

With her hand over the girl's mouth, Mrs. Darnell held her by sheer strength, while the always cowardly Wilkerson screamed his commands in a louder tone than those of the girl had been.

Her hand fell back, and her body became limp.

"She's fainted! Call a taxi at once! We must get her out of this hotel!"

In less than five minutes they were shooting down the elevator. Another quarter minute and Wilkerson, with the unconscious form of the girl in his arms, her face covered by the cape of the maid, was rushing across the lobby, preceded by Drake. Mrs. Darnell stopped at the desk long enough to throw down a twenty dollar bill.

"The girl is sick, and we must hurry her to a hospital!" she managed to gasp.

Before the dumfounded clerk or the amused guests could step to act they were out of the hotel and in a taxi.

The hotel detective sprang from almost out of nowhere and in a second was speeding after the fleeing, man accompanied by another plain clothes the little yellow man could be heard in the entrance.

Then a door stopped the proceedings. Another series of signals. Another long wait. The door opened with a peculiar rumbling sound. They entered a queerly arranged room. At first glance it seemed very small, but as the eye traveled around its walls its strange shape gave one a feeling of fearsome oppressiveness. It was completely cylindrical.

Wilkerson at a sign from the Chinaman laid Ruth on the floor and a Chinese woman stretched to her at the back of the yellow man. Leaving her in the charge of the foreigner, the others returned the way they had come.

On the arrival of Dorr in San Francisco he was met by Everett at the ferry, and together they started the search for Ruth. First they began a round of the hotels. Failing to locate her at any of the smaller hotels, first inquiring at the St. Francis, where she was supposed to stop, they arrived at the Manx.

Weary and sore from his nervous escape of the night before, Dorr was ready to retire to his room, intending to purchase wearing apparel the next day.

Desiring to get some of his personal effects away, he tried to open the dresser drawers and discovered them to be locked. He went for a key, and to his

St. Martin-in-the-Fields is probably the only London church that can boast of having had a king for church warden. George I. held that office for a number of years and marked his interest of it by presenting the church with an organ. The greater part of Buckingham palace is situated within the parish of St. Martin's, and in consequence the births of all royal children born there are entered in the church register. Among celebrities who were buried at St. Martin's are Nell Gwynn, Robert Boyle, Sir John Farquhar, Rouilliac, the sculptor, and Hunter, the surgeon. Hunter's remains were afterward transferred to Westminster abbey.—London Globe.

Nervous Prostration and Heart Troubles

Nervous Prostration, or Neurasthenia, is one of the worst forms of nerve trouble and brings about a general weakness of the whole nervous system.

The symptoms presenting themselves are headache, a feeling of depression, disturbed and restless, unrefreshing sleep, often troubled with dreams, fright when in crowded places, dread of being alone, horror of society, fright of trouble, pressure, pain around the heart, timidness, specks before the eyes, twitching of the muscles, sensation of heart stopping, fainting spells, hysterical attacks, and sometimes a tendency to suicide.

Mrs. John Sherman, Oliphant, Ont., writes: "I suffered for many years with Nervous Prostration and Heart Trouble and I could not go up stairs without sitting down at the top before I would go to my room. I could not sleep nor could I lie on my left side, nor it would seem as if my heart would stop. I thought my time had come. I was recommended to try Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills and got one box. I took three boxes of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills and am entirely cured. From the first box I took I knew I was getting better. I have taken in all 11 boxes of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills and can recommend them to all sufferers."

"The Wonder Car"

Men who have driven other makes of cars for years—Men who have experimented—Men who have been "stung"—now drive Maxwells.

Right in this town—and all over the country—are men and women who have been driving different makes of cars for years, who now drive and swear by their Maxwells.

Each year they used to buy a different make, trying to find a car which would suit them exactly.

When the 1915 Maxwell "Wonder Car"—with its 17 new features and new low price of $925, was announced—these "motor wise" men began investigating it.

They didn't take our word or anybody's word for it—they looked into it themselves.

They found the Maxwell to be a handsome, powerful, easy-riding car.

They compared it with cars that sell at double the Maxwell's price. They found that the Maxwell contained every worth-while up-to-date high-priced car feature.

They tested the Maxwell on hills and on the level on really tough roads.

They made it prove its ability to run at low cost over all sorts of roads.

Then they began buying and talking about the Maxwell.

To-day 38,000 enthusiastic people are driving these Maxwells. Of these a great big percentage owned other makes of cars before they bought their Maxwells.

Use your common sense when you buy your automobile. Don't be talked into an extravagant car or a car that hasn't had the "acid test" of time.

Don't let them experiment at your expense.

BULKHEADS GAVE SAFETY, CAPTAIN TURNER TESTIFIED

Less than twenty-four hours before the Lusitania steamed on her last and fatal voyage her captain, William T. Turner, was testifying regarding the clearness for his vessel should several of her water-tight compartments become filled. He also testified that in about whether forty to fifty lifeboats could be lowered from his ship in less than an hour and a half. He was a witness in the action brought by the Oceanic Steam Navigation Company for limitation of its liability in the matter of the steamship Titanic. Captain Turner had been called by lawyers for some of the claimants against the company. The examination was held at No. 165 Broadway on April 30.

One of the questions addressed to Captain Turner was: "You don't pay much attention to the construction of ships?" The answer was: "Not as long as they float. If they sink I get out."

The examination on the subject went:

"You are not a mechanical man, you are a navigator?"—"Yes."

"The engineers on the staff know most about that?"—"Yes."

"Is there anything peculiarly extraordinary about the watertight decks of the Lusitania and Mauretania different from other vessels, if you know?"—"I don't know."

"Steel decks?"—"All steel decks."

"These great staircases from the saloons of the upper deck down to the dining saloons, and so on; how do you prevent water from going down there if it rises above the bulkheads forward?"—"No way to prevent it. It goes through that compartment only, and after that you are watertight."

"If two or three or four compartments forward were opened and the ship went down by the head the water might rise and go aft, might it not?"—"Those bulkheads would prevent it might rise above the bulkheads. It is conceivable, is it not?"—"I don't think so."

"Before the Titanic it was supposed that these great ships were non-sinkable?"—"Who proved that? Nobody I ever went to sea with proved it."

AFLOAT WITH AFTER END FILLED.

"I understood that all these ships were built so that if two compartments were filled with water they should still float. That you would expect?"—"Oh, yes. The rest of the ship would hold her up. I have been in a ship with the after end filled with water and still she held up."

Captain Turner was examined regarding a plan of the Lusitania which showed the locations of the bulkheads.

"How many transverse bulkheads are there?"—"Thirteen."

"Water tight?"—"Yes."

"Has the Lusitania anything in the way of longitudinal watertight bulkheads?"—"Yes, she has three fore and aft, from the forward end of the engine room to the aft."

"Now, do these bulkheads extend from the forward end of the first boiler room forward to the after end of the engine room?"—"Yes, that is right."

"Roughly, what proportion of the length of the ship do these extend?"—"Half the length and more."

"Would you say considerably more than half the length?"—"Yes, practically two-thirds of her; there are the bunkers, coal bunkers on either side, in between the bulkheads."

"Do these longitudinal bulkheads run down each side of the ship?"—"Yes."

"Are there small transverse bulkheads running between the skin of the ship and the longitudinal bulkheads?"—"Yes."

"Are these small bulkheads watertight?"—"Yes, all watertight."

WATERTIGHT DECKS AID SAFETY.

"Now in addition to the longitudinal bulkheads are there watertight decks?"—"Yes, about four."

"Are these decks watertight in the sense that they will stand a considerable pressure of water?"—"Yes, they are."

"Were these longitudinal bulkheads put in the ship when she was built?"—"All built in the ship when she was built, every one of them; not the slightest alteration since the ship came out."

"Can you state whether these longitudinal bulkheads add to the safety of the ship in case of under-water damage?"—"Undoubtedly; that is what they are there for."

"Do the watertight decks of which you have spoken in the Lusitania and Mauretania, in your opinion, add to the safety of the ship in the event of under-water damage?"—"Certainly, anything like that adds to the safety of the ship, watertight bulkheads or not."

"Now in case a ship was injured at the bow or at the forward part, as that she trimmed by the bow, can you state what the effect of these watertight decks would be as to preventing the water flowing from getting aft."

DECKS ACT AS LIDS.

"If the vessel were trimmed by the head so that the water line reached the top of some of the transverse bulkheads, would the watertight deck in the next aft compartment prevent the water from flowing into that compartment?"—"Certainly it would."

"And is this one of the reasons why you say it adds to the safety of the vessel?"—"Yes."

"Then, where water does run along the level of the top of the watertight transverse bulkheads in these compartments?"—"Yes."

"Do they act as watertight lids on that level of these compartments?"—"Exactly, yes."

"Do they prevent the water from going below them?"—"Yes; otherwise it would not be watertight."

In cross-examination Counsel showed the vessel:

"Now, these bulkheads have each a number of doors in them, have they not?"—"Simply that the watertight doors would be closed, to prevent the water flowing from getting aft."

"Now, in addition to the doors in the bulkheads, two compartments filled with water, in a safe vessel?"—"Two compartments filled with water? It just depends on how many more compartments she has and what buoyancy she has in the other compartments."

"Suppose she has sixteen compartments and two are filled with water and the vessel will float under those conditions, is she a safe vessel?"—"Of course she is; any ship is a safe vessel if she will float."

"Suppose that vessel has five compartments filled with water?"—"My dear sir, I do not know anything about it. It all depends on the size of the compartments, the amount of buoyancy. If she has buoyancy she will float; if she has not she will go down."

WANTED SEARCHLIGHTS INSTALLED.

Captain Turner is on record as wishing for searchlights.

"Do you carry searchlights?"—"No."

"Do you approve of the use of them?"—"Certainly, I do. I would like to have them. Other people wouldn't fool around with them."

"Why don't you? The owners don't order them?"—"That is right."

Lifeboats were talked of.

"Do you know how long it takes to launch a lifeboat with an ordinary vessel crew on board a large steamship in calm weather?"—"About three minutes."

"Would there not be difficulty in launching say from fifty—say sixty to fifty — lifeboats on a steamship in clear weather in an hour and a half?"—"It could be done before that."

"You could do it quicker than that? In ordinary weather, I mean?"—"Yes."

BURSTING SHELLS.

They Shatter the Nerves of Soldiers They Do Not Even Scratch.

It has been proved that the comparatively harmless bombardiers, so far as wounds are concerned, of a besieged town is terribly demoralising to the inhabitants.

When a shell bursts near a group of twenty men it may kill one and wound two, while the remaining seventeen escape without a scratch. It will be found, however, that many of these are never the same men again. No matter how they survived they were before, they are now nervous and timid and all their favorites are vanished. Very often they are jeered at by their comrades because of this change. But this is unjust reason—in fact, their brains and spinal cords have been injured by being violently shaken against the walls as they have exploded.

The same thing occurs in railway collisions. People who were robust become quite feeble and nervous, though they may not have received a scratch.

This curious effect in the case of soldiers is well recognised by doctors under the terms of the mental injuries of explosives. The injuries are really quite as physical as a shattered leg, for they consist of a kind of bruising of the very delicate tissue of the spinal cord and brain.—London Standard.

CHOOSING WALL PAPER.

In Selecting It Consider the Height of the Room.

The treatment of the walls necessarily plays an important part in the correct arrangement of any room and is often the means of bringing other out of apparently hopeless decorative chaos. If the ceiling is very low the walls must be treated in such a way that the ceiling appears higher than it really is. In such cases the use of a paper showing a very pronounced vertical stripe will be helpful if no frieze be used and the paper extends to the ceiling.

A plain surfaced paper sometimes has the same effect, while for one of a deep shade or the use of the same paper upon the ceiling and a frieze of

BRITISH DRIVE THE GERMANS BACK A MILE

British Inflict High Losses on Enemy North of La Bassee

German Line Broken Over Greater Part of Two Mile Front ---2000 Germans Either Killed or Wounded

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

LONDON, May 17.—The fighting in Flanders and Northern France, temporarily halted by the rain the end of last week, was resumed with redoubled fury on Saturday night and Sunday and resulted in important successes for the British and French forces south of Lille, north of Arras, in Champagne and in Belgium. The British army continued its offensive north of La Bassee, capturing more than a mile of the enemy's trenches at one part, and advancing a mile on a half-mile front further south, the German losses in the encounter being very high.

BROKE ENEMY'S LINES.

The following bulletin on the victory was issued last night by the Official Press Bureau:

"The first army has made a successful attack between Richebourg l'Avoue and Festubert, breaking the enemy's line over the greater part of a two-mile front.

"The attack commenced at midnight to the south of Richebourg l'Avoue, where we carried two successive lines of German breastworks on a front of 800 yards. A mile further to the south another attack at dawn carried 1,200 yards of German front line trenches, and was pushed rapidly on, extending its success 600 yards further south by bombing along the German trenches. Here we crossed the Festubert-Quinque road and advanced nearly a mile into the German lines.

"The fighting still continues in our favour, and throughout the day our troops have been successful.

"At Ypres all has been quiet for the past 48 hours, and elsewhere on the front there is nothing to report."

To the north of Arras desperate fighting continued all Saturday night, a hard battle with hand grenades winning 200 metres for the French upon the slopes which descend from the plateau of Lorette. On Sunday the new front was consolidated.

An action of a purely local nature in Champagne gave the French a very brilliant success, the German losses being enormous. On Saturday night a mine was exploded behind the French first line, and eight German companies precipitated themselves on the French positions and gained a foothold. They were driven out, and yesterday a counter-attack was carried out with such spirit that of the 2,000 men who attacked either all remained in the hands of the French or on the ground. Upwards of 1,000 German dead were found in the trenches and 300 prisoners, including nine officers, were captured.

In Belgium violent attacks by the enemy were repulsed with severe losses, and six rapid-fire guns and a bomb-thrower captured.

Anarchy and Rioting In Portugal

Special to the Examiner:

LISBON, May 17.—After two days of anarchy and fiercest rioting, Portugal was nearly normal to-day. Despatches reaching here said that garrisons in Santarim and several cities, surrendered to the revolutionary forces at midnight.

The new cabinet formed aboard the battleship Vasco Da Cama last night, assumed control of the government to-day.

The whereabouts of the deposed president, Dr. Manoel Arraga, are unknown.

Joao Chagas, the new president, is en route here from Oporto.

Leading German Britons Denounce Foe's Methods

Terrorization the Fundamental Principle of the Kaiser's Attempt to Conquer the World---A Nation Gone Mad

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

LONDON, May 17.—Sir Ernest Cassel, Privy Councillor, intimate friend of the late King Edward, and perhaps the best known British citizen of German birth, welcomed me Saturday in his splendid drawing-room, fronting Hyde Park, and gave the following statement:

"Words fail me to express the deep sorrow at the manner in which this war is conducted by Germany. I had looked upon her as one of the most civilized and humane of nations, so it was difficult to believe the first accounts of atrocities in Belgium and France. Alas, they are only too true, and since then the disregard of non-belligerent life has increased, culminating in the sinking of the Lusitania, and methods of warfare have been adopted, such as poisoning wells and the use of poisonous gases, which are a blot on civilization."

APPEALS OF NO AVAIL.

I asked if he thought persons of German origin living out of Germany should unite in appealing to the Kaiser and the Berlin Government to abandon the methods criticised.

"I am afraid," he said, "it would be unavailing."

"Have you any word for people of German blood in the United States?"

"I do not see how they could change the situation. The German nation appears to have gone mad."

"Why should not you and those who agree with you attempt to express your conviction effectively?"

"[illegible] opposition if ruthless war can do it. Terrorization is a fundamental principle of her policy."

A WAR OF CONQUEST.

"Do you think Germany from the outset planned a war of conquest?"

"What else can one think on looking back over her unparalleled military preparations and facts of recent history?"

Sir Felix Schuster, another distinguished British citizen of German birth and famous financier and economist, received me at the Union-of-London-and-Smith's Bank, of which he is Governor.. I inquired if he thought Germans living outside the Fatherland should make an effort to modify German methods.

"My own opinions are indicated in a letter I have written to the Times. In that I say that our family entirely shares the indignation and horror that pervades the British Empire. We look with amazement upon the fact that the German population tolerates methods of warfare which at all times are looked upon as unworthy of civilized nations. We are at one with our fellow citizens in the determination to support every step which will lead to final and decisive victory of the British arms."

WANT THE GREAT MASS TO SPEAK.

Great numbers of German and Austrian citizens in England are giving utterances of similar sentiments. Among these are professors, lawyers, doctors, business men and ministers.. One said as to America: "We wish instead of the vocalism of Bernstorff, Dernburg, and their henchmen, the might hear what the loyal citizens German-Americans have to say. Many of them must feel, as we here, feel that Germany precipitated and is barbarously prosecuting a war of conquest that bodes no good for any man or woman who cherishes liberty."

Canadian Guns Were Closest to the Huns

TORONTO, May 17—Gunner E. G. Blaylock of the 2nd Battery, 1st Brigade, wounded at Langemarck, is a Toronto boy, 21 years of age, born on Danforth Avenue, although he volunteered for active service at Belleville. "Excuse the writing, as I am sitting up in bed, he writes, on April 28th, after the battle, from the British hospital Hotel Wimereux. "Just a few lines to let you know that I have been wounded, but not seriously. [illegible] and am having a good time—plenty to eat and all kinds of cigarettes and tobacco, graphophone, good nurses, and doctors. I was wounded last Sunday morning at 9 o'clock by a piece of shrapnel. One piece went into my right thigh and the other grazed my right side just below the arm. I have been operated on—had the X-ray first, then chloroform, and had the piece removed. They were only flesh wounds, and did not amount to much.

"I have the pieces of shrapnel that were in me, and am going to keep them as German souvenirs. I have been up to-day walking around the hospital and am only a little lame. Expect to be sent to England or Rouen, France, for a rest, and maybe will not see the firing line again for a month, much to my sorrow. I am afraid of not getting back to the 2nd Battery. They may draft me to some other [illegible], as I do not want to be with any other battery. Our guns were closer to the Germans than any other of the British guns, and we were certainly doing good work by blowing their trenches all to pieces, and were practically in the open, with no shelter whatever only a few trees.

"They got wise to our position and started to shell us heavily on Saturday. We had many a close call, but managed to escape them all Saturday afternoon. We must have fired over 2,000 rounds at them. We could hardly find room around the gun to walk for empty cartridges. On Sunday morning at 8 oclock they started to shell us again, and we had to get in our dug-outs, as we call them, for shelter. Our dug-outs consisted only of a few 8 x 8 timbers built on some more 8 x 8 timbers laid on top of these, so that the sides were practically open.

"Their shells were bursting over us for half an hour, but they managed to drop me just over the trail of the gun and not 16 feet from our dug-out, and Mr. Shell exploded and came in one side of the dug-out. There were six of us wounded by the same shell, but as luck happened, our wounds were not serious and we will get a chance to have a rest. I hope you will not let this worry you, as it is really a mere trifle compared with some of the wounds that have happened to our lads.

Anti-German Fury Sweeping All Sections of British Society

Fierce Indignation Burns in the Old Country Which is Reflected by the Treatment of Those of Alien Birth—Disaster Will Extend the Duration of the War

Copyright, 1915, Central News.
By T. P. O'Connor.

LONDON, May 15.—The anti-German fury is sweeping all sections of society. While it began in the poorer quarters with the looting of shops, it now etxends to the Stock Exchange, to clubs and to the race courses. Sometimes it becomes cruel. Two Germans have been warned off the Stock Exchange, each of whom has lost his only son in the war. Others who have lived in England from boyhood, and some who have given hundreds of thousands of pounds to philanthropy, hospitals and scientific institutions have not escaped.

Fortunately this danger will probably pass but, on the other hand, another Lusitania disaster or a serious loss of life in London by Zeppelin raids, would bring it back increased a thousandfold. This popular rage has been increased by the violent appeals of some journals and by some members of parliament until even the Cabinet Ministers have begun to feel it difficult to stem the tide, although they share the healthy opinion of sane, decent people, that England should not lower itself to the German level by savagery. It is probable that the internment of the Germans to a larger extent than heretofore will be forced, partly indeed, for their own protection, from this savagery of the mobs, which is now so violent.

In Ireland the same fierce indignation burns, especially in the seacoast towns where the landing of the dead women and babies aroused Irish feeling to such a pitch that the verdict of "wilful murder" found against the Kaiser and his submarine captains was but a logical consequence. These symptoms point to several grave consequences. First, the Lusitania disaster extends the duration of the war probably six months or a year, for popular exasperation will make the British government for such terms to Germany as Germany can not give until she is beaten to the ground, and to reduce the great Teutonic nation to such an extreme will require a longer time than that heretofore predicted for the duration of the war unless the entrance of the United States and most of the other neutral nations into the war causes her absolute collapse.

It also deepens the universal sense of seriousness over the war of which the loud demand from all quarter, and even in the House of Commons, for the stoppage of horse racing is the most remarkable symptom.

The movement for some form of conscription, although hanging fire for several months despite the eager advocacy of newspapers like the Morning Post and the Daily Mail, now begins to procure a more extensive hearing. Although universal compulsory service is apparently impossible owing to the already serious depletion caused in the business world by recruiting; there will probably be proposals looking to stronger measures compelling young, unmarried "slackers" to enter the army.

Another movement which bobbed up some weeks ago and then disappeared, the matter of a coalition ministry, is again being discussed. This movement, which started with Lord Northcliffe and J. L. Garvin, died soon after its birth, but has been revivified under more serious leadership. The new programme would make no attempt to displace Asquith, Churchill, Grey or Lloyd George. The last named is now regarded as the most effective member of the ministry and was recently characterised by Garvin as the human dynamo of the cabinet. If such a coalition were to come to pass, Bonar Law, as Tory leader, would undoubtedly get a high office, as he has advanced in position considerably since the beginning of the war.

As to events in the field of battle we are passing through a period of great suspense, which is greatly heightened by the more scanty than usual supply of war news. However, the feeling prevails generally among all classes that things are going extremely well. On the whole, the effect of the torpedoing of the Lusitania is quite different than what the Germans must have expected. It has enormously strengthened instead of weakening British determination and roused instead of depressing the British temper. It encourages finally, the belief that before long Germany by her cruel savagery, will array all nations of the world against her.

Zeppelin Crew of Sixty Killed

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, Monday, May 17. — The Daily Mail's correspondent at Rotterdam sends an account of an engagement between a Zeppelin and a squadron of allied aeroplanes in Belgium in which the Zeppelin and two of the allied aeroplanes were destroyed. The correspondent says he is convinced that the story is completely accurate.

Two Zeppelins are said to have crossed over Brussels travelling westward on May 10. One of them returned alone at 8 o'clock that evening and was surrounded and attacked by the aeroplane squadron. Many persons counted 27 machines in the allied fleet. The Zeppelin made a spirited fight with its machine guns and tried to escape by soaring, but the aeroplanes manoeuvred skilfully and quickly and gave the dirigible no chance to get away. The Zeppelin was disabled in less than 15 minutes and it fell between Brussels and Ghent. Several explosions accompanied its fall and all the crew of sixty are said to have been killed. Two of the aeroplanes were destroyed and their pilots killed by the Zeppelin's fire.

Milkmen's Parade Was Huge Success

A. C. Curtis, of Otonabee Won First Prize for the Best Outfit--Address by Dr. Clinton

A. C. Curtis of Otonabee won the first prize in he milkmen's parade that was held on Saturday afternoon. This consisted of a copper bottle filler, which was donated by the De Laval Dairy Supply Company. The second prize of ten thousand bottle caps, contributed by Mr. G. A. Gillespie, of the Peterborough Pure Milk Company, went to W. L. White of Smith Township, while the third prize, consisting of a handsome flag, was awarded to I. Hetherington of Smith. The flag was donated by the "Examiner." There were twenty-one vehicles in the parade, two from the Peterborough Pure Milk Company, and the rest made up as follows: W. L. White, Hunter's Dairy, I. Hetherington, P. O'Connor, W. Dummitt, W. Twomey, W. Londry, W. J. Robson, C. Waller, J. Bray, C. Curtis, F. Darling W. Stalker, E. W. Curtis, E. Butler T. Riley, A. Ranger, S. Huston, and P. R. Castle.

A Credit to the Milkmen.

In the words of Dr. Clinton, district officer of health, who came all the way from Belleville to address the milkmen, "the affair was not only a credit to the city but to the milkmen, themselves. In announcing the winners, D. Clinton remarked that it was the first time he had witnessed such an event and, in fact, the first of its kind he had ever heard of, so far as Ontario was concerned. He congratulated the milkmen upon the service they were supplying in the way of clean, sanitary vehicles, and a first-class quality of milk. He also commended Sanitary Inspector Spence fo the part he had taken in bringing the affair to such a successful conclusion. It might be said that the idea originated with Inspector Spence. Dr. Clinton asserted that it was the best collection of vehicles to be found anywhere in Ontario. He concluded by voicing his approval of the bottling of milk.

His Worship Mayor Buller eulogized the milkmen for the response they had made to Inspector Spence's invitation to hold a parade. He noted the improvement that had been made in the past few years and was pleased to see that the milkmen were bent on establishing a high standard of efficiency.

To Mr. E. Butler is given the credit of bringing out the first white painted milk vehicle in Peterborough. This he did some years ago. He also possess a horse that has propelled a milk waggon around for upwards of ten years. He is said to be the oldest horse on the job.

Trenches Filled With Turks Are Blown Up

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, May 17.—According to a Havas despatch from Athens, advices have been received from Mitylene to the effect that furious fighting continues in the Dardanelles and that the Turkish losses have been extremely heavy. Shells from the allied fleet are blowing up whole trenches filled with Turkish soldiers. Prisoners admit that the Turks lack munitions of various kinds.

The Official Press Bureau here gave out to-day the following Russian official statement: "The Russian Black Sea fleet destroyed four steamers laden with coal, two tugs and 20 sailing ships and much other damage was done during the bombardment of Kefkine, Eregli and Kilemale.

"The Turkish cruiser Goben, which fired 200 shells at the Russian fleet while it was bombarding the Bosphorus, without scoring a single hit, was herself obliged to return to the Golden Horn with a hole in her hull stopped up with collision mats. A portion of her main deck was torn away and a funnel was damaged. Many of her crew were killed or wounded.

Bridge Taken From Enemy By Belgians

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, Monday, May 17:—A correspondent of the Daily Mail in Northern France telegraphs as follows under date of Sunday:

Early yesterday the Germans made a violent attack on Steenstraete, where the Belgian and French armies join. They charged several times in close formation, making desperate efforts to cross the canal over the bridge they held. French machine guns each time inflicted terrible losses.

This continued for most of the morning, but later the enemy's efforts slackened and the French made a brilliant counter-attack supported by the Belgians. The result of this was that the Germans were obliged to evacuate the western half of Steenstraete and they also lost many prisoners and several machine guns. They also lost command of the bridge.

Happy Hawkins in the Panhandle

"As far as doin' his part, why you needn't fret none on that score; he was born durin' a Norther, cradled in a mesquite tree, and weaned on prickly pear. All the toys he ever had was a rope, a parcel o' mustangs, and a couple o' six-shooters. The ain't no better hand in a cow-outfit; but if you was to inform him that Columbus had discovered America, why he'd want to know first thing who the hell had lost it. I've done my best to loosen up his mind so an idee or two could take root in it; but he hasn't yet learned the difference between human nature and mustang nature. I could tell ya a string o' tales about that boy 'at would keep ya gapin' from here till breakfast—"

Well, Red went on to tell about Shorty long after I had give up listenin'. It was plain to see that they were about as different as "A" from "Z," but then if you just start the alphabet to circlin' why them two letters come nose to tail, and there they stick. I knew mighty well 'al the mongrels in Jim Jimison's outfit couldn't do nothin' with these two.

"Did you hear anything new about the Panhandle Kid, Monody?" sez I as soon as I had ranged up beside him and Red had resumed his dirge.

"He's supposed to be robbin' stage coaches down west o' the Pecos by some, and rustlin' cattle over in Mexico by others," sez Monody with a chuckle; "while still others say he's gone soft an' left the range for good. It 'pears like the' was a woman in his gang, sister of a feller by the name of Buck Stern, who was the Kid's sweetheart. Buck was his best friend and three more o' the Stern boys were also in his gang, but Buck was the one he thought most of. Kansas and the Territory was their real range and they never came down here much except when it got too hot for 'em up there.

"They didn't do much thievin' down here, just gambled and swelled around lookin' for gun-trouble. They all say 'at the Kid was unusual quiet except when drinkin' and then he showed out his rattler blood in a minute. About a year ago he and Buck had some words in that last saloon we were in, and Buck drew his gun. Before he could put it into action the Kid shot him through the belly, turned white, stood a minute lookin' down at him and then footed it, that bein' the last any one in these parts ever saw of him. A couple o' Buck's brothers gathered him up, put him on a hoss and rode away north where I reckon they buried him. Anyway that is all any one around here knows of that outfit—so you can be easy in your mind."

"Don't forget, Monody," sez I, "that you're goin' to ride in the straight and narrow path as long as I do."

"Humph," sez Monody. "I reckon you'll be beggin' off before I get used to the novelty of it."

After that we settled into a steady doze of a night ride, only Red moanin' out a monotonous Mexican song.

CHAPTER FOUR.
Discipline.

We rode in past the herd and found 'em strayin' all over the bed-ground with no night-riders in sight, and it was gettin' along towards mornin' when the cows 'd be getin' chilly and hungry.

"Most accommodatin' bunch o' cows ever I saw," sez Red. "Do they allus take care o' themselves at night?"

"Shut up," sez Shorty.

I found the whole outfit asleep, Jim, as usual, at a little private fire of his own. It looked like a good time to start somethin' and yet I had to own up that I was to blame in ridin' off without leavin' any orders. I gave Jim a shake and he sprang to his feet lookin' ready for trouble. "How did you know your relief hadn't arrived?" sez I.

"You're back, are ya?" sez he in a lonesome tone. "I didn't much expect ya. They got a-hold o' some whiskey last night and just let the herd go. I'm about ready to own up."

"That's all right, Jim," sez I.

"May be all right with you; but it's not all right with me."

"I want a little talk with you as soon as I send those Greasers out to the herd," sez I.

I soaked a dish towel and sorted out one o' the Greasers, sat straddle of him and began to slap his face with the dish towel. As soon as he got sober I sent him out to the herd and tended to his pal. This one got a little fussy and I had to be a mite rough with him so that the half-breed poked his nose out of his blanket and wanted to know what was up. I didn't like his tone, so I told him he was the next thing up and that mighty sudden. I sent the three of 'em out to the herd feelin' purty growly, and then I went back to Jim.

"I've hired a couple o' new hands and a kid to do chores, Jim," sez I cheerily.

He sat humped over his fire and kept dry-washin' his hands in the blaze. "I doubt if we ever get this herd to market," sez he, doleful.

"Then we'll sure have a trip worth rememberin'," sez I.

"Happy," sez he, "I'm no earthly use."

"You're not much," sez I, in full as doleful a tone as his, and then I let my gaze fall to the fire and began to wash my own hands in the flame.

"In certain directions, I apprehend that I could make you look ridiculous," sez he stiffly, after a few minutes.

"Whit directions are they?" sez I, without glancin' up.

"Why," sez he just as spunky as ya please, "in any sort of a circle where culture was recognized."

"I reckon you're right," sez I; "for I wouldn't recognize culture if it was to perch on my nose; and therefore I'm of the opinion that it wouldn't be of much use in this business; but I'll say this—I'm mighty glad that you haven't lost your confidence in yourself as much as we both thought. As long as a feller can think up even one situation where he wouldn't feel like a doormat why there's hope for him."

He didn't make any reply but his face got red in the fire-light, and nothin' makes a face red but red blood. "Jim," I sez after a time, "would you wish to be a genuine boss after a year or two, or do you choose to go on playin' at boss until some feller gets disgusted and counts you out?"

"I'd prefer to be a read boss," sez he, in a low tone.

"Ah-hum," I sighed, "I was afeared you'd say that, but it means a heap o' worry for me."

"Why so?" sez he.

"'Cause," sez I, "you actually mean what you say and so you'll expect to get what you're after; but every time I head you up the right shoot to bosshood, you'll recollect that you're the real boss already and it'll make you sore to take orders from me."

"I hardly think I'm so weak," sez he, with dignity.

"There you are," sez I. "Right on the first jump, you're gone and swelled up simply because I said 'at swellin' up was the thing you was most likely to do. You better just go on playing at boss and I'll run the outfit as long as I can stand the strain."

"What is it you want me to do?"

"Are you actually in earnest?" sez I.

"I am," sez he.

"Then," sez I, "the only thing for you to do is to join this outfit as a green hand and learn to swaller your pride every time it comes into your throat. If you start in on that, why I won't monke" with you, I'll herd you right in with the rest until you get the savvy right at your finger tips. Your kind o' folks have the idy 'at they can learn everything out of a book and they tamp their brain full o' facts which are true enough, but hard to get at in a pinch. You got to get your trade right into your fingers and then they'll go right along with it when you're so badly rattled you couldn't spell your own name. I'll rawhide you into shape in the quickest time possible, provided you've got it in ya—and I think ya have — but if there's any danger of your breakin' under the whip you'd better not start in at all, 'cause I'm worse set in my ways than a bogged-down mule."

He sat still a long time and then he sez slow but meanful: "I think I could go through with it,—I've fagged at Eton."

"Well, son," I sez to him, scornful, "if you think that eatin' till you're fagged is any preparation for bein' a contented green hand in a cow-outfit, why, the' ain't any use goin' up that trail any further. Your wrist 'll be sprained, your knees 'll feel like the rub-blocks on a freight-waggon, the bones o' your back 'll get wedged so tight together 'at every time your hoss stumbles you'll think you've bumped your head on the cantle o' your saddle; but cheer up — you'll never get fagged at eatin'. A cigarette and a tin o' barefoot coffee is the regular cow-puncher breakfast and many a time you won't be called upon to eat from one breakfast to another."

He waited patient till I was all through and then explained that Eton was the name of a boy's school in England where the younger kids had to be dog-robbers to the older ones, and after he'd made it clear that the older kids were purty competent little devils at discouragin' false pride, I thawed out again and put my hand on his shoulder. "Jim," I sez from my heart, "I guessed you in as havin' bottom to ya, and I'm glad you're not goin' to disappoint me. This is our farewell for some time; I'm not goin' to spare you none, fact is, I rather expect to hand you a little more 'n your share; but remember this is real edication and remember still deeper that when the jumpin' off place comes, I'm your friend both here and hereafter."

I don't know why I took such a shine to that boy unless it was one o' the Lord's tests; but anyway, I gave him one of my keys then, and I never asked it back.

"How'll I have to act with the rest of the gang?" sez he, after a bit.

"Learnin' to take care o' yourself, Jim, is the main lesson a cow-puncher has to learn," sez I, "and one o' these days you want to quit bein' a cow-puncher and become a cow-man, when you'll need it still more. My advice to you is to take everything as a joke that you can possible twist into bein' offered as a joke; but when your last limit is reached—why, strike like a rattler. Keep your eyes open all the time, but blindfold your tongue till ya get it saddled and hridled. Our backtrail leads right along the border o' No Man's Land and from all I can hear that's where the riff-raff o' creation goes to plan new devilment. If this was my own range where I knew the trails, why, I'd count the handlin' o' this gang as bein' nothin' but a picnic; but as it is, I expect to be busy. Do your best and don't feel responsible."

Could Hardly Do Her Housework.

If a pain attacks you in the back "stop and think" what it is and what causes it.

If the kidneys are at fault—and in a large majority of cases of pain in the back they are—doctor them at once, and doctor them persistently, as it is impossible to have a well strong back unless the kidneys perform their functions properly.

Doan's Kidney Pills cure all forms of kidney trouble, and cure them to stay cured.

Mrs. H. F. Jacob, Lavant Station, Ont., writes: "I take pleasure in telling you how much good your medicine has done me. I had suffered from intense pains in my back, and was so bad I could hardly do my housework. My kidneys were also bothering me a great deal. I tried several kinds of patent medicines, and was almost discouraged, and was looking for some other kind of medicine to try when I noticed your advertisement of Doan's Kidney Pills, so I thought it could not hurt to try them. I noticed a great difference when I had used one box, and to my great relief when I had used three boxes I was entirely cured, and I have not been bothered since. I will not hesitate to recommend them to all I know."

Doan's Kidney Pills are 50c a box, or 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

THE VALUE OF IDEALS TO CHURCH AND WORLD

Conceived in Sin, Mis-shapen in Iniquity.

Birthmarks — Hereditary Blemishes —How Counteracted — Motherly Ideals — Fatherly Ideals — Business Ideals — Social Ideals — Neighborly Ideals — Christian Ideals—How to Attain Them.

[The matter under this heading is supplied by the Pastor Russell Lecture Bureau, who conduct the Brooklyn Tabernacle (unsectarian) Bible Studies, and who have arranged for its publication.]

Kansas City, Mo., May 16. — Pastor Russell spoke here today on the text, "Shapen in iniquity, in sin did my mother conceive me." (Psalm 51:5.) He said:

"Be fruitful and multiply" was the Divine commission to our first parents before they sinned. The entrance of sin and its penalty, death, brought serious impairments, mental, moral and physical, to our race. It is no longer natural to us to do right, but contrariwise; as St. Paul declared, "We cannot do the things that we would." In other words, we are constitutionally defective, because of mental disloyalty to God. Yet the mind can rise to loftier heights than it is able to lift the body and its functions. "To will is present with me, but how to perform I know not." —Romans 7:14-25.

Many are grasping after this great truth, and attempting human uplift through eugenics, etc., but nevertheless imperfectly appreciate what they teach, failing to see the matter from the Bible standpoint. The mind, the will, the body, should be entirely submitted to the will of God. Thus only can the highest good be possible. This was God's requirement of our first parents. In this they failed; and in consequence mental, moral and physical impairment have come to us as a race. "All have sinned and came short" of the glorious standard which God established.

The Bible divides the world into two classes; the mass of sinners condemned by God and out of relationship with Him; and the few who have, by covenant with the Lord, come back into relationship with Him through the merit of Christ. We shall first address the world of sinners, with the suggestion that, while they cannot hope to lift themselves up to perfection and everlasting life, they can do much toward the uplift of themselves and their children by conforming to certain Scriptural ideals. The world already recognizes this in considerable measure, but not sufficiently.

All should know, and do appreciate to some extent, the value of a good example, good training in the family. The child who continually hears coarse, rude expressions in the home will surely grow up not much better than those surroundings, if not worse. But while encouraging high ideals in the home—cleanliness, gentleness, kindness—we call special attention to the duty of parents toward their children before their birth. Few seem to realize that the general attitude of a mother's mind birthmarks her child either for good or for ill. With this fact recognized, surely every couple would feel their responsibility as creators of a family. If they realized that coarse, brutal, selfish words, acts and thoughts would be impressed upon their unborn child, surely they would strive to avoid these before their child's birth as well as after it. If they realized that noble words, conduct, thoughts and ideals, during the period of gestation, would be imprinted upon their child, how greatly would they strive to have children that would be not only beautiful in appearance, but noble in character!

Horsemen recognize this principle, and when a racing mare is in foal, her intelligent owner, desiring to breed a fine colt, will give the mother every attention. Her condition will be gratifying and comfortable. She will be led to the race track, there to see other horses running, trotting, etc., that thus her colt may be birthmarked for speed, etc. How much people will do for money, and how often they forget to do for their own families what they think to do for their horses! But the world is awakening. A New Dispensation is about to be ushered in, and its light has been streaming over the world during the past forty years, giving us increasing knowledge and higher ideals of the good, the true, the noble, the beautiful.

Our civilization has already caught the fever of the New Age, and are presenting to us fruits and flowers that are marvelous. Our newspapers are giving us beautiful photogravures. Art is becoming cheap. Every home should be well supplied, when the cost need be no more than the time to clip from the paper and to arrange tastefully upon the wall. Ideal homes are everywhere being arranged, and even the poorest today have much in life to cheer and refresh. Let us lift our ideals and make the most of life, however, cramped our financial condition. The will to do is what is needed; and where there is a will, there is a way.

Before the Christian our Lord sets the very highest ideals: "Be like unto your Father in Heaven"—not that Christians can be all that the Heavenly Father's character expresses, but that this is to be their ideal, or aim in life. Only God can know when they are doing their best; and He assures them that He will judge them, not according to their success, but according to their endeavor to live up to their ideals, and the sacrifices they make in order closely to attain those ideals.

What we have said of the homes and ideals of sinners—of those who have not come into relationship with God through the Lord Jesus Christ—is still more true of real Christians, begotten of the Holy Spirit and adopted into the family of God. Ideal homes, ideal children, ideal relationships every way, are pre-eminently their privilege and duty; and they have much advantage over others in respect to this matter. Have they not received the begetting of the Spirit? Have they not become followers of the Lord Jesus Christ? Have they not been taught in the School of Christ? (Romans 8:9.) Have they not knowledge to understand that the Spirit of Christ manifests itself in meekness, gentleness, patience, long-suffering, brotherly kindness, love? Have they not learned that any other spirit than this—such as anger, malice, hatred, envy and strife, works of the flesh and the Devil—is contrary to the Spirit of Christ? Have they not resolved to put away all these and to put on the fruits of the Spirit of Christ? They have adopted these ideals and are working along this line.

True, some of them by nature may be very deficient, very degraded; but because God is no respector of persons, He accepts all who come to Him through Christ. Those naturally deficient, those naturally much fallen, may have the more difficulty approximating their ideals, but they will surely be making progress; and those who have known them before will take note of them, that they have been with Jesus and learned of Him. God will perceive the thoughts and intents of their own hearts; and they will have His blessing in proportion as they are striving to be Godlike.

The children of Christians should be pre-eminently beautiful, both in feature and in character; for Christians have the highest ideals, and should, more than others, put these into practice. Moreover, they have Divine assistance, through the Scriptures and through God's providential direction in their affairs, that they might know, appreciate and use the things freely given to them of God as His children.

But alas! Many are Christians only in name, having never entered into a covenant with the Lord. They have neither part nor lot in the things of God. Others, who have truly given up themselves to the Lord, have been sadly neglected as respects lessons in the School of Christ. The great religious institutions of the world are not teaching the highest ideals, but instead are separating the people from those highest ideals by misrepresentations of the Divine character and the Divine Plan.

Let us awake to the true situation, awake to our privileges as children of God, awake to the true teaching of the Word. These direct not only that our conduct toward men shall be in harmony with the Golden Rule, but that we shall go beyond this and have a love which will delight in doing good unto all men as we have opportunity, especially unto the Household of Faith. It will go further, and take hold upon the very thoughts and intents of the heart. The Christian is under direct obligation to the Lord to do His will; and that will, he is informed, takes notice not merely of his actions and words, but of his very thoughts as well.—Philippians 4:8.

Happy the child who has such parentage, and especially so if the parents have been guided by an appreciation of the fact that the mother's mind during the period of gestation will mark the child for life! Happy the child who has a mother thus fully committed to God, intent upon during His will and appreciative of His high ideals! Happy the child who has a father similarly devoted to God and nobler ideals, who will help his wife at this, the most critical time of her experience as a mother, not only by providing for her comfort of body and rest of mind, but by assisting her to noble sentiments of justice, mercy, love, kindness, and by drawing her attention to things beautiful, lovely, happifying! Oh, what a beautiful character might not such a child have! What a blessing to be born with such a heritage, and then to be consecrated to God and His service!

St. Paul calls attention to the fact that some, getting out of harmony with the Divine arrangement, will forbid marriage. Such should remember that God originally said, "Be fruitful and multiply"; but we may well urge upon them the importance of seeing that the children they bring into the world will come into it with as much blessing as possible—as free from the curse of sin as possible.

Be it remembered, however, that St. Paul pointed out that the Church of Christ has a different mission in the world from others. Her mission is not the propagation of the human species, but co-operation with God in the work of the present time; namely, the development of the New Creation. The coming Age will be the time for Christ and the Church, as the Heavenly Bridegroom and the Heavenly Bride, to take care the world of mankind by resurrection, regeneration. Now, as the Apostle suggests, is the time in which the Church is to make her own calling and election sure to Divine nature, that she may become "the Bride, the Lamb's Wife." It is her privilege also to carry the Message of this High Calling to those who now have ears to hear. Thus she becomes God's mouthpiece, or ambassador in finding, calling, instructing and helping all who accept the Divine invitation, and enter into covenant relationship with God through Christ as New Creatures.

It is in view of this important work that the Apostle suggests that those of the Church who can do so should consider it a privilege to forego marriage, that they might live celibate lives, as Jesus did, and as St. Paul himself is supposed to have done—not that celibacy of itself need to be considered as a necessity for the perfecting of the Divine character, but that its practice will give increased opportunity for serving the King of kings. Many zealous Christians feel, as St. Paul felt, that the time is short and their opportunities few for rendering service unto the Lord and His Cause. Hence if marriage would interfere in any measure with this their highest privilege, they would gladly forego a measure of earthly happiness and privilege, to be more efficient servants of the Lord.

This same thought is expressed by Jesus, saying, "Some have made themselves eunuchs for the Kingdom of Heaven's sake" (Matthew 10:12); that is, have denied themselves their privilege and rights as human beings, in order to render the better service to the Lord. But such a matter is a sacrifice, a privilege, and not a command, not an obligation. Whoever chooses may sacrifice, and should not be criticised therefor. Whoever prefers not to sacrifice should not be criticised on that account. To his own master each servant stands or falls.

We must remember that the Bible has no communication whatever for those who are not Christians. The Christian business man may to some extent be copied by his neighbors. But his own responsibility is the matter in which he is interested most. A business man's ideal is the Golden Rule. "Do unto others as you would that they should do unto you," applies to his buying, his selling, to his dealing with his clerks and with his customers. It includes his advertising, and the ideals which he sets before his clerks.

We believe that more and more the Golden Rule is coming to be appreciated by the public, and that those who follow it will more and more receive a blessing. We do not mean that it will make them richer than their neighbors who may follow the other rule sometimes quoted—Do your neighbor as you believe he would do you; but do him first, before he can do you. But whether following the Golden Rule shall bring little success or much success, the business man who has given his heart to the Lord and become a son of God must follow the Golden Rule. He can do no less, though he is privileged to do as much more as he chooses in the way of benevolences.

A business man's ideals should have some bearing upon his manner of doing business, as well as upon the character of the stock he offers for sale. The Christian business man's store should be known as a place where trash and injurious things would not be found.

The true Christian is to remember that nothing less than the Golden Rule may be followed by him under any circumstances. He must see to it that his children, his chickens, his dogs, etc., do not disturb his neighbors in their proper rights. The same Golden Rule requires of him that he shall do a neighbor's part for any one in distress, even as he would have a neighbor do for him if he were in trouble. "Do good and lend, hoping for nothing again," is to be exemplified in the Christian, with the understanding that he is not to do lending that would impair his own credit, nor seriously interfere with his own obligations to his family. Moreover, proper lending would be merely in cases of necessity. He is not to be neighborly because he hopes the neighbor will return the compliment, but because from the Word of God he has received high ideals of a proper neighbor, and because he wishes to live up to the Divine requirement, doing good unto all men as he has opportunity, and especially unto the Household of Faith.

The Christian may not have time to waste in some of the social amenities common to our day. He is a representative and ambassador of the King of kings and Lord of lords. His time, his influence, his talents, are not his own. They are to be used according to his judgment of the Lord's will. He may not therefore seem to be as sociable as some might desire. He will have no time to kill in games of amusements. He has come to a realization that "Life is real, life is earnest"; and that while there is so much sin and sorrow in the world, he may not fritter away his precious moments in idleness or in that which is merely pleasurable, but not really profitable. This will not mean that he shall not take any time to look after the interests of his family in a social way and to keep in touch with his social obligations as a neighbor. It would make him dignified and, first of all, loyal to God.

Our ideals are merely fantasies, floating clouds without rain, until we bring them to the point of determination—until we consecrate our lives to these ideals and resolve to live in harmony with them. Here the Christian has much advantage every way, for he not only has his ideals from the Lord, but the promise of Divine oversight, blessing, guidance and assistance in working out these ideals in his own heart and in his life.

Killed by Madman.

Romanshorn, in the canton of Thurgau, Switzerland, has been the scene of a terrible tragedy, no fewer than seven men being killed by a madman, a soldier and seven others being wounded. The madman, Hermann Schwarz, had been recently discharged from the army owing to mental trouble. Provided with a rifle and a supply of cartridges, Schwarz barricaded himself in his room, and from six o'clock in the evening until past eleven kept up a continuous fire upon passers-by and upon people who attempted to break down the door and deprive him of the rifle. In all four men were killed and eight others were wounded. Bugles were blown to summon the fire brigade, and a large crowd assembled in response to the ringing of bells. Shortly after midnight a number of courageous individuals rushed the house, but found that Schwarz had disappeared. It was believed that he had taken to the forest, and the next morning a large party, comprising firemen, police and citizens, with dogs, started to search for him. After the pursuit had been in progress for some time, a policeman came upon the madman, who immediately fired, mortally wounding his pursuer. Schwarz then disappeared again. The hunt was continued, and after an exciting pursuit, in which more than 100 people were engaged, Schwarz, who was seriously wounded by shots, was at length arrested in the neighborhod of Romanshorn, but not before he had killed another of his pursuers.

PIMPLES

APPEARED ON HIS FACE AND HANDS.

The primary cause of pimples arises from the blood not being in a good condition. When the blood becomes impure you will find that pimples will break out all over the body, but more particularly on the forehead, nose and chin, and although they are not a dangerous trouble, they make you appear unsightly both to your friends and yourself. What you need, when these pimples break out, is to get a real good blood purifying medicine such as Burdock Blood Bitters. One that will build up the system by cleansing the blood of all the impurities and poisons which cause the skin to break out in these eruptions.

Mr. F. A. McKenzie, Portage La Prairie, Man., writes: "Last summer I was all run down and unfit for work of any kind. All kinds of food seemed distasteful to me. Pimples appeared on my face and hands, and I seemed to grow worse every day. One day a friend advised me to try Burdock Blood Bitters. Half-heartedly I did so, and the results obtained were marvellous. I regained my health, I took on flesh, and in a short time the pimples and skin eruptions disappeared entirely; thanks to the healing powers of B.B.B., I freely recommend it to all sufferers."

B.B.B. is manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

"For about forty years, I was troubled with Lame Back brought on by Kidney and Bladder Trouble. I was never confined to my bed with the trouble, but it affected my spine and I had to rest for a time. I took advertised remedies which never did me any good. Then I saw "Fruit-a-tives" advertised and decided to try them. They did me more good than any other remedy.

My son suffered from the same trouble and frequently had to leave off working, but "Fruit-a-tives" remedied it for him. I would strongly advise anyone suffering from Kidney and Bladder Trouble to use "Fruit-a-tives".

Movie Men Are Afraid to Dispel The Illusions

There are two distinct schools of thought in the motion picture industry, so far as publicity is concerned. One class of men in the business believe that the more the public knows about the ways and means of producing the pictures, the more interest the public will take in going to see them.

On this theory, one of the big Los Angeles movie concerns is planning to have a studio with big plate glass windows that will permit anybody to walk up and see the actors at work.

The other notion is that knowing too much about how the thing is done will spoil the public's zest for the film drama. Many producers fear to take a chance on blasting the illusion. They feel that while the public may be well aware that the storming of a big stone fort is not a real, sure enough battle, it would be going too far to show the public that the fort is nothing but painted canvas.

"But," you contend, "doesn't the regular human being drama consist mostly of illusions, and doesn't the audience know that what it sees is not real?"

"Yes," comes back the movie producer, "and when you go to see a magician you know that the things he does are just tricks, but if you knew how he did them you would soon lose interest."

At that juncture the movie man seems to have the better of the argument. For many of the more sensational films are made in a way that amounts almost to sleight of hand. At one of the biggest studios in Los Angeles, I saw them photographing a lion entering the tent of a beautiful young girl who was camping in the wilds of Africa.

In the picture, as it will be shown in the theatres, the girl is asleep on a cot and Mr. Lion comes romping in with an expression of homicidal glee on his features. It opens its mouth gives several carefully planned screams of terror.

Those who see this picture will say that the lion must in reality be a toothless old drone who never does anything more serious than carry on a well stimulated bluff. But that is not the idea at all. The answer is that when the lion is roaming about the tent roaring and seeking a toothsome girl to eat up, the girl is not there. Just half the lens is exposed while the lion is in the scene. In place of the girl is just a pillow stuffed under the bed clothes. The head of the bed does not show in the picture. Neither do the runways that fence in the lion and prevent him from roaming beyond the range of the exposed half of the lens.

It took a lot of patience and a long strip of film to get the lion in the savage attitudes desired. Out of perhaps 300 or 400 feet of film, in this instance, not more than about fifteen feet will be used.

After the lion had shown his real nature for a while, they shooed him back to his cage. Then the operator shifted the cover to the other half of the lens, turned back his film to the starting point and photographed a charming young woman named Marie who lay on her cot. McRae, who produces the animal pictures, had kept track of the number of turns of the crank on the camera. Each turn of the crank was a picture. From his notebook McRae could tell at just what turn the lion had been at his best—or worst. When they reached the bits of "good stuff" on the second half of the exposures, the director bade Marie to look especially terrorized. Thus are the spine-chilling animal pictures co-ordinated to give the movie fans their figurative pound of flesh.

Director McRae offered to prepare me a neat little souvenir of my visit. He said he would have his men take a picture of me with a tame leopard in my lap. The leopard, he explained, was the only tame animal they had. In proof that it was perfectly tame and harmless, he showed me a photograph of Marie, queen of the movies, with the leopard in her arms. I would have posed for the souvenir portrait except for one thing. The trouble is I have never much of a hand with leopards. Even a tame leopard is not a thing that I ordinarily hanker to caress. So I thanked McRae for his courtesy and explained to him that if it was all the same to him I would a little rather pose with a dog or a Belgian hare.—Fred C. Kelley.

DISTRICT ATTORNEY IS INDICTED

CAPE MAY, N.J., May 17. — The Cape May county Grand Jury handed in twenty-five indictments against Matthew Jefferson, District Attorney of the county. He is accused of embezzlement, larceny, obtaining money under false pretence and malfeasance in office. The bill charging malfeasance in office includes forty-eight pages of charges of neglect of duty. Mr. Jefferson declares that the indictments are a result of a plot by liquor dealers he has prosecuted.

Amonth ago a conference was held by Attorney-General Westcott, of New Jersey, Justice Charles C. Black, of the Supreme Court, and County Judge Henry H. Eldredge, at which Mr. Jefferson was requested to resign. He refused to heed this advice. Mr. Westcott will prosecute Jefferson, who studied in the Attorney-General's office.

Want to Stay In England

Germans and Austrians Appeal to American Consul Against Deportation

Special to the Examiner.

LONDON, May 17.— Germans and Austrians again besieged the American Consulate to-day, but instead of demanding protection for themselves and their property they sought the aid of the American officials to prevent their being repatriated in consequence of the decision of the Government announced yesterday by Premier Asquith. Most of the callers at the consulate were either over or under the internment age. Many were women with their children.

These persons explained that for years their homes had been in this country and that their deportation to Germany, of Austria would be regarded by them as a greater calamity than internment here.

American Consul-General Skinner took their statements, but was unable to promise any action in their behalf further than the transmission of their requests to the proper authorities.

Eighty Germans and Austrians were struck from the membership roll of the Iron and Steel Institute to-day by unanimous vote of a meeting held in London.

Light Fines on Rioters.

Large numbers of persons affected by the Government's plan are surrendering themselves hourly, rather than await arrest under the internment order. Their immediate disposition is puzzling the police, as the camps in which they are to be placed are not yet ready for use.

Fifty-two persons who took part in anti-German riots last night were arraigned to-day in various police courts. For the most part only light fines were imposed, but those who had attacked policemen were sent to Damage $5,000,000.

Riots broke out in West Ham to-day, where $300,000 damage was done to property.

It is estimated that $5,000,000 worth of German-owned property has been destroyed since Sunday.

Fire Destroys Plant of Shell Factory

NEW CASTLE, Pa., May 17.— Fire swept the plant of the Standard Steel Car Company here this afternoon and the entire under frame department, housed in a building 800 by 200 feet, was practically destroyed. The company has a big order for steel shells for the allied armies and material sufficient to turn out six thousand 6-inch shells was taken into the plant last week. It is estimated that between five hundred and one thousand shells had been completed when the fire swept through the plant, causing a loss of $150,000.

THE BEST TREATMENT FOR CONSTIPATION

The Experience of One Who Knows and Places Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills First

It is not difficult to secure a medicine that will effect movement of the bowels To cure Constipation and the complications which arise from it is another matter.

Constipation of the bowels is usually preceded by torpid action of the liver. Hence it follows that if Constipation is to be cured the liver must be set right. And here lies the secret of the success of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. They awaken the action of the liver and insure a good flow of bile, which is nature's cathartic. The liver, kidneys and bowels are invigorated and regulated, and the troubles with the digestive system disappear.

Mr. H. M. Bell, Innisfail, Alta., writes: "For some considerable time I have been using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, which I have obtained through your firm. I suppose during my life I have used nearly all the best-known pills, as I have been subject to Constipation and digestive troubles. A friend recommended Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, and I can honestly say that of all the pills I have tried nothing has suited me better — no griping—action always insured, and fine for the kidneys. This is how I have found them after a thorough test, and you may use this statement if you like."

This letter should convince you of the merits of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, but there is nothing like personal experience. If you do not feel like risking 25 cents for a box, write to us for a free sample box, mentioning where you saw this advertisement. Put this medicine to the test when you have indigestion, constipation, biliousness, backache or kidney derangements. The results will soon prove to you the superiority of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. One pill a dose, 25 cents a box; all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

THE BISHOP UNDER FIRE

Eventful and thrilling beyond words was the visit of Dr. Ingram, Bishop of London, to the battlefields of France and Flanders. "The Bishop," according to an officer who acted as his lordship's guide, "passed along the entire British front, often well within the range of the German guns, and through places devastated by shell fire, so that those who were responsible for his safety had many anxious moments. At one part of the line, where there had recently been heavy fighting, some 500 officers, many of whom had been engaged in battle, were present. Here and there along the line are little spots where our comrades who have died the death of honour sleep, their last earthly sleep. The simple wooden crosses, and a few spring flowers, mark how carefully all our soldiers' graves are kept.'

And every mound of Flemish earth
Shall witness bear as men pass by
That greater things than life and death
Are truth and right, which never die."

Throughout the week the Bishop had been looking forward eagerly to meeting the members of the Territorial regiment of which he is chaplain. The regiment is in a most exposed position, and the Bishop motored into the village in pitch darkness only broken by the weird glare of star shells fired from the German trenches about a mile away. A most enthusiastic reception awaited him. Cheer after cheer greeted him, as he entered the barn, where a 'sing-song' of the most lively nature was in progress. At 7 a.m. he celebrated Holy Communion in a barn, the roof and walls of which had been scarred and shattered by gun-fire. Over two hundred men communicated. Strange as the surroundings were, with guns firing and the crack of rifles distinctly heard, one would doubt if in any church, however beautiful, a more reverent congregation gathered together on an Easter morning. On the evening of Easter Day the Bishop preached his final sermon at General Headquarters in the presence of Sir John French, many distinguished officers and a large body of men.

BACK FROM THE FIRING LINE

First Aid to the Wounded.

LONDON, May 17. — At almost every station on the railroads you will see men shattered and wrecked for life, men who must face the future horribly mutilated, and yet they accept their fate without a murmur of complaint or bitterness. It is the same in England, in France and, I suppose, in Russia, that all soldiers are bearing their sufferings with the greatest of fortitude.

The best aid these men have is within themselves. The human body will best resist infection from bullets when it is healthy, strong, active and with all of its functions fully alive and working. The best aid to this condition is a vegetable tonic and alterative that will first put the stomach and blood right, for these are dependant on one another. Good stomach means good blood, and likewise good blood means good stomach.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery helps the stomach to do its work naturally and properly, stimulates the liver. The system is freed from poisons. The blood is purified. Every organ is rejuvenated. This "Medical Discovery" of Dr. Pierce, is free from alcohol or narcotics. It is made from the roots and barks of American forest plants with triple refined glycerine, and is the best blood purifier, because it banishes from the blood all poison and impure matter. It dissolves impure deposits and carries them out, as it does all impurities through the bowels, kidneys and skin. If you have indigestion, sluggish liver, catarrh, unsteady nerves, or a pimply skin, get Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery to-day and start at once to replace your impure blood with the kind that puts energy and ambition into you and brings back youth and vigor.—Adv.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

COAT WITH THE NEW FLARE.

By Anabel Worthington.

This modish little design for a girl's coat may be Empire or not, according as the belt is raised or lowered. It is exceedingly practical and simple, as the back view indicates, cut on the lines of a box coat, except that considerable flare is introduced into the lower part, as fashion now requires. Since there is practically no fitting to be done, the making should not take long. The coat may be trimmed with satin or the new faille silk or can be made of one material if preferred. It will not be expensive in either case, as there is little or no waste, and no small pieces or sections to cut up the material.

In serge the coat would be about two dollars and a half for medium size; in ratine about one dollar and a half. From fifty to seventy-five cents in addition would cover the satin trimming if one wished to use it. To carry out the design in silk would cost more, of course, but would result in a very charming coat for dress occasions. Either faille or poplin could be used, and, for the best effect, without any trimming. The Empire line would be the best to follow for a silk coat. For 10 year size 2¾ yards of 44 inch material would be required for the coat in the full length and a half yard less for the shorter length. The pattern, No. 7,136, comes in sizes from 6 to 14 years.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25c.

GERMANS ADMIT RETIREMENT OF THEIR FORCES

BRITISH AVIATORS BATTLE WITH ZEPPELIN

Germans Slaughtered in Whole Companies By The French

Four Counter Attacks Designed to Recover Lost Ground Were Repulsed With Heavy Losses—Fierce Fighting in Blinding Rainstorm Around Neuville and Souchez—Allies Gain New Ground in Hetsas Region.

ALLIES' AVIATORS DO GREAT DAMAGE

Special Cable to The Examiner:

PARIS, May 17.—Whole companies of Germans were slaughtered in the bloody fighting in a blinding rainstorm around Neuville and Souchez, according to despatches from the battlefront to-day.

The Germans attacked fiercely at four distinct points. They sought to recover the ground gained by the French in Saturday and Sunday's fighting in this region. The war office announced this afternoon that in each instance the enemy was repulsed with heavy losses. An extremely heavy bombardment is now proceeding north of Arras, pointing to the renewal of an infantry engagement. In the region of Hetsas the allies have made further progress, it was officially announced.

DAMAGED THE TANNERIES

GENEVA, May 17.—Aviators of the allies have inflicted damage to the amount of more than two million dollars to the tanneries at Strasburg which are working on material for the German army.

A GREAT BATTLE DEVELOPING

PETROGRAD, May 17.—A great battle is developing near the fortress of Przemysl, it was semi-officially stated to-day. The enemy has appeared in large force on both the Russian flanks in the region extending from Jaroslau to Chyrof, a distance of 35 miles. The Russians centre is falling back upon Przemysl from the bend of the San, to entrenchments previously prepared. The Germans are attacking with great vigour north of Przemysl but have been unable to make any impression on the Russian lines. To the south, and north west of the Chryof-Przemysl Railway, the Austrians are on the offensive. The Russian offensive in south eastern Galicia, north of Kolomea, is reported to be progressing satisfactorily.

FIERCE ATTACKS ON TURKS

ATHENS, May 17.—Fierce attacks by the allied expeditionary forces at the Dardanelles, have been renewed, according to the Mytilene despatches received here to-day. The allies are trying to occupy two strongly fortified heights. A Sofia despatch received here to-day said it was reported there that the allies had occupied the town of Maedos, north of fort Kilid Bahr on the Gallipoli peninsula, and Boulair north of the town of Gallipoli. The report was not credited here.

CONDITION OF THE KING OF GREECE

LONDON, May 17.—An official despatch to the Greek Legation to-day stated: "There was an increasing highness of the fever accompanied by nausea Sunday night, in the King's condition."

RAIDS DID LITTLE HARM

LONDON, May 17.—Summarized reports from the towns visited by two German Zeppelins at midnight, in the neighborhood of Ramsgate, indicate that at least sixty bombs were dropped by the aerial bombarders. Three civilians were slightly injured, and several buildings and two fishing smacks were damaged. Despite the police warnings, the people flocked into the streets, and it is a wonder that more were not hurt.

REVOLUTION IN TRIESTE

ROME, May 17.—A revolution has broken out in Trieste, Austria, according to a message to the Idea Nazionale telegraphed from the the frontier. The governor ordered the gendarmes to charge the crowd which retired fighting stubbornly. The Idea Nazionale despatch states that 47 women were killed and over 300 injured.

RECEIVED THE PROTEST

WASHINGTON, May 17.—Germany received the Wilson protest against the submarine war as applied to merchant vessels in the most friendly way. Her foreign minister treated Ambassador Gerard with the utmost courtesy and consideration when he read the American position as set forth by the president. He promised that the note would have the most careful consideraetion and that a reply would be made without delay. Ambassador Gerard at Berlin reported this to Secretary Bryan to-day. He emphasized the friendliness of reception. Whether he intimated however what the expected outcome to be, Bryan refused to say. He refused also to discuss the Gerard report in any way. Nevertheless his attitude showed that he was in a far more hopeful frame of mind than at any previous time since the Lusitania was sunk.

ARMENIANS KILLED

PETROGRAD, May 17.—The Armenian city of Van, an important American Mission centre, has been attacked by roving bands of Turkish irregulars and Kurds, and six thousand of the Armenians killed, according to despatches received here to-day. Foreigners are also among the dead.

ADMIT RETIREMENT

BERLIN, May 17.—In the official statement this afternoon the German war office admitted that their forces were compelled to retire from their advanced positions in the neighborhood of Hetsas and Streenstraate.

GENEVA, May 17.—London is to be bombarded from the air with poisonous gas bombs similar to those used by the Germans at Ypres, according to word brought here to-day from the Zeppelin [illegible] at Friedrichshaven. The twelfth Zeppelin completed at [illegible] since the war began, manoeuvred over Lake Constance [illegible] trial.

GOOD NEWS IN REGARD TO SOME PETERBORO' BOYS

Ptes. Maitland Wood and Clifton Kidd Both Escaped the Langemarck Battle—Pte. Parrington is Recovering

TO-DAY'S MILITARY NEWS

Letters received to-day have brought the good news of the safety of several Peterborough Boys. Among them is Pte. Clifton Kidd, son of Mr. R. J. Kidd, who in a card written May 1st, says he was quite well on that date.

Pte. M. Wood Writes.

Mrs. J. C. Wood, 777 Water Street, City, received a very welcome card from her son, Pte. Maitland Wood, of the 1st Brigade, 4th Battalion, dated April 27th, in which he states that he is well. He wrote as follows: "I am quite well. Will answer your letter as soon as possible."

Pte. Wood was employed in the Royal Bank at Aylmer, Ont., when war was declared, and he went to Brantford and enlisted for overseas service with his regiment there. He was a member of the Brantford Regiment when he worked in the Royal Bank there.

Maitland Wood, or "Tony" as he was popularly known by his friends here, was educated in the local schools and attended the Collegiate Institute for a time. He spent about a year in the Royal Bank here, when he was transferred to Brantford, and later to Aylmer, Ont.

Is Recovering.

Mrs. Parrington, 339 Aylmer Street, has received word from Clivedon Military Hospital, England, to the effect that her son, Private T. E. Parrington, is recovering from the injuries that he received in the battle of Langemarck. Apart from the injuries which were inflicted by shrapnel, he is in good health and is the recipient of good treatment.

Recruiting for the Fourth Contingent is going on at the Armouries, and recruits may apply every afternoon and evening. Pay starts from the date of enlistment.

PETERBORO' BOYS GAVE GERMANS A BIT OF GOLD STEEL

Pte. Stanley Garrett Writing From Sheffield Hospital Says Germans Are Cowards When You Get in on Top of Them

LETTER FROM LOCAL BOY.

That the Peterborough boys got into the German trenches in spite of the heavy losses inflicted on them by rifle and machine fire, and gave the Huns a dose of cold steel is shown by a letter received this morning by Mr. Sidney Garrett, of Otonabee, from his son, Pte. Stanley Garrett, of the 57th Regiment, who was wounded at Langemarck, and now is in hospital at Sheffield, England. The letter is as follows:

Dear Mother and Father,—Just a line to let you know I am getting along fine and hope you all at home are in the best of health. Well dear, parents I am in Sheffield, England, now. It is nice to get back to civilisation again. I had three months in the firing line, and am lucky. We had worse than hell for four or five days there. It was awful. We lost our good Major and a lot of fine boys. It is too bad. Our battalion got it pretty bad there. Bert. Carpenter was all right when I left I think. We made those Germans clear. I was in my first bayonet charge this morning. Before I got hit we were met with a hail of bullets and machine gun fire. It was just at daybreak, but we went through it all, and when we got to the German trench they got their done, which was only fifteen inches of good Canadian steel. They are good fighters when they are five or six hundred yards away, but bigger cowards never were when you get on top of them unless they are 12 to 1. Our whole division was in it, and the British Tommies came up to reinforce us, so there were English, Scotch, Irish and French all together. The Germans are nearly done I think. It was their last hope to break through. They thought the Canadians were no good, and they could get over us easy, but we were more than enough for those pigs. Some of the 10th Battalion lads captured a German colonel.

Well, I am here in a nice place. We have good grub, a good bed and lots of everything. So don't bother about me, but write me lots of letters and tell me all the news. I have four or five days' furlough before I go back to France. I guess this is all just now.

OFFICERS ALL HIT.

Mr. and Mrs. Ward, 334 Water St., have received the following card from Lance-Corporal Harvey Yates, of the 57th detachment, who was wounded at Langemarck. Lance-Corporal Yates writes from the Red Cross Hospital, Shortlands, Kent, England, on May 2, as follows:

Dear Mr. and Mrs. Ward,—Just a post card to let you know that I am going along all right, and expect to be out of hospital in a few days. I sent you a field service postcard telling you that I had been wounded. I hope you got it all right. I received my souvenir (in the left leg just above the knee) at Ypres. You will know by this time that poor old Major Bennett was killed. All our officers down to Sergeant-Major Howarth, were killed, except two lieutenants. They were wounded. All the officers were killed in the charge we made on Friday morning, the 23rd, about 4 a.m. I think nearly all the Peterborough

CASUALTY LIST SHOWS NO SIGNS OF LETTING UP

Total Casualities Recorded at Ottawa so Far Since Langemarch Have Totalled 4,751 and They Are Still Coming Up

3,206 WERE WOUNDED

OTTAWA, Ont., May 17.—The Canadian casualties sustained in the fighting at Langemarck and later, are rapidly reaching the 5,000 mark. Since April 22 last the total casualties up till this morning were 4,751. This includes 678 killed, 867 missing and 3,206 wounded.

There is no apparent abatement in the numbers coming in each day to the official records office. A sinister fact about more recent lists being that killed in action and missing figure most prominently.

It will soon be possible to ascertain how many of these now numbered among the missing have been taken prisoners and how many have been buried by the Germans. By a system of the exchange of identification tags it will be possible later to place the missing in their proper category.

PTE. EDWARD PROSSER.

Yesterday's casualty list contained the name of Pte. Edward Prosser of the 57th detachment of the 2nd Battallion, who is reported killed in action at Langemarck. Pte. CORP. HARVEY STAUNTON.

Corp. Harvey Staunton, officially reported wounded, is a well-known Peterborough boy, born and brought up here. He was at the front with the 48th Highlanders in the 15th Battalion, having transferred from the 45th Lindsay detachment, with whom he enlisted. He was a member of the 57th Regiment for a long period, holding the rank of colour sergeant, but since entering the employ of the G. T. R., several years ago, he had resided in Lindsay and was identified with the 45th. His sister, Mrs. Tenchbourn, resides on Benson Street.

PTE. J. H. WILSON.

Another member of the 2nd Battalion, First Canadian Contingent, who went from Peterborough, is Private J. H. Wilson. He is recorded in the official casualty list as missing. He originally came from the Old Country where he had a number of relatives.

Private Wilson answered the call to the colours almost as soon as war broke out and he was anxious to get away and share in the honour of driving back the invaders. He was an enthusiastic soldier and was well liked by all who knew him.

PTE. A. L. CONDON.

Word was received this morning by Mrs. Rose Condon, Wmsw, P. O., that her son, Pte. Arthur L. Condon of the 7th Battalion, is officially reported missing. Pte. Condon had been in the West for some time and enlisted at Saskatoon.

ZEPPELIN IS DAMAGED IN THRILLING BATTLE

Eight British Aviators Attack German Aerial Monster—Bomb Dropped Through Huge Gas Bag of the Zeppelin

A SENSATIONAL FIGHT

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

LONDON, May 17.—In a spectacular battle far above the clouds over the English channel, eight English naval aviators from Dunkirk station, attacked and severely damaged one of the Zeppelins that bombarded English coast towns along the Downs early to-day.

Official despatches to the Admiralty brought word of the thrilling air fight. The aviators, it was officially announced, were subjected to heavy fire from the airship's machine guns, but escaped without casualties.

The Zeppelin was first attacked by the English aviators along the British coast and driven out to sea near West Hinder Lightship. Wireless messages to the air craft camp at the French seaport of Dunkirk brought eight naval biplanes darting to the attack above the channel.

Three aviators closed in about the Zeppelin firing at close range. The others tilted into the clouds until they were directly over the big dirigible, which sped eastward at forty miles an hour.

The aviators above began dropping bombs at the Zeppelin from a height of 200 feet. One bomb crashed through the huge bag, and almost immediately a large column of smoke arose through the clouds. The crew of the dirigible quickly began throwing out bags of ballast and she rose to a height of 11,000 feet till downward and apparently drifting helplessly high in the clouds.

The commander of the flying corps wirelessed the Admiralty that he had every reason to believe the Zeppelin was so badly damaged she would be unable to make land.

GOOD-BYE KINDLY "KIT."

To Canadian newspaper readers of mature age, the news of the death of "Kit"—Mrs. Kathleen Blake Coleman, will bring a sense of personal loss. This brilliant and versatile writer died at Hamilton on Sunday, after only two days' illness. "Kit" had a way in her writing and treating of current subjects of every imaginable kind, of stimulating and informing the mind, and getting at the hearts of both her subjects and her readers. Kit was an exceedingly human woman, with broad sympathies, and a wide catholicity of philanthropy. She was Irish—in mind and heart. Her Irish mind was as witty and sparkling as her Irish heart was large and tender. "Kit," in her writings, has done a noble work for humanity. She had all the scorn of Dickens, for hypocrisy and meanness, and her most effective writing was in defence of the underdog in the fight, human or animal. She was a rara avis in literature, and her memory will be blessed for the good she has done, and the lessons she has given by her pen. Good-bye, kindly "Kit"; take you for all in all, we shall not look upon your like again.

THE LETTER OF THE LAW.

Magistrate Kingsford, of Toronto, may have been partly right, and may be wholly wrong, in deciding that the Sunday issue of a Toronto newspaper was "an attempt to make money out of public anxiety." If it is worth while his decision may be a little canvassed. Newspaper publishers know that there is no money in the issue of extras—the mechanical cost of issue is in excess of the most prodigal returns. Therefore the object of the objugated journal was not to make money out of public anxiety, but, necessarily, a laudable and enterprising attempt to relieve the strain on the public mind, which might be relaxed in reading news — even bad news—for which there was agonizing waiting. There is a possibility of being Pharisaic and puritanic, about the matter of the strait observance of the Sabbath day. A higher authority than Magistrate Kingsford, has left on record his opinion of the hypocritical sticklers, who demanded the pound of flesh and made no allowance for exceptional circumstances and high motives. Have we any evidence that the Master exalted Sabbath observance above all other religious obligations?

ARCTIC REGION WHEAT.

We sometimes have important facts crowded out of their place in our minds by the exciting incidents of the present time. In the midst of the thrilling history that Canada is helping make in Europe, we are apt to forget that Canada has other claims to distinction than her loyalty in going to the wars of the Empire, and her bravery and resourcefulness in waging them. We are recognized as the potential granary of the Empire, and when we reflect that we can grow, mature and ship to the world, the best wheat in the world, in a region on the edge of the Arctic Circle, we have a new sense of the unlimited extent of our resources. The first wheat was shipped from the Peace River District, Northern Alberta, a few days ago, and was forwarded by rail to Winnipeg, and is in the world's market. It was a kindly act of Providence to ordain a northward sweep of the isothermal line, that would permit the growth of wheat under the shadow of the Arctic Circle, that for other less favoured regions, means almost eternal frost. There are Canadians living to-day that remember when the great Canadian west was regarded as a barren wilderness, an inhospitable land of ice and snow. Step by step the area of wheat-growing has shifted northward from Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. Now the possibility of wheat-growing in northern Alberta has given a new wonder, the wheat belt has been shifted still further north, and during the past ten years, the south-west field of the Peace River District has been yielding crops.

The first shipment has been made, announced by the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway—another justification, if another were needed, for the building of our most northern transcontinental railway. It will be a highway for the development of a new Canada in the far north.

NEIGHBOURLY SYMPATHY AND APPRECIATION.

The Peterborough Hardware Company has recived the following communication from a Chicago firm. It and the accompanying article will be read with interest as showing that our neighbours appreciate us and sympathize with us.

The Peterborough Hardware Co.,..
Peterborough, Ont., Canada.

Gentlemen:—

We are sending you, separately, a marked copy of the Chicago Evening Post of May 3rd, and we think that the editorial on "Canadians Sustain Western Traditions" will interest you. At a time when our neighbours to the north are becalled upon for such sacrifices in the present war, we believe that this expression of appreciation will be welcome.

After all is said and done, you of the Dominion, and we of the States, are all citizens of the same continent, and have sympathies pretty much in common. We find ourselves feeling a very personal thrill when we read of the splendid performance of Canadian troops at the front.

Yours very truly,
W. D. ALLEN MFG. CO.
Chicago, May 10th.

This is the article referred to:

Americans can appreciate the spirit shown by the Canadian troops in the fighting at Ypres. Western traditions were sustained by the initiative and daring of these neighbours from across our northern frontier.

According to the despatches, the situation in which the Canadians were placed by the German onslaught was such that, under the rules of military manoeuvres, they should have retreated and been wiped from the field as an effective factor. But the western spirit does not recognise rules. It has a way of charging when the proper thing to do would be to fall back, and it has a way of making its violation of propriety exceedingly embarrassing to the enemy.

The Canadian line was facing north when the adjoining French line was driven in. The rush of the German wedge forced half of the Canadian front back, but instead of retreating as a whole it reformed at an angle with the other half and faced west against the flank of the German wedge. From this position it attached with such effect that the sweep of the enemy's advance was checked and part of the ground regained.

Had it not been for the refusal of the Canadians to follow the rules of the game, the Germans, in all probability, would have succeeded in throwing a ring about Ypres, hemming in the British forces defending the city.

This is the kind of fighting that American troops have made famous. It is the spirited headwork of men who have been taught to think for themselves rather than to leave all the thinking to the officers in high command. Battle plans may be mapped out with careful detail in advance, but no man is able to foresee the kaleidoscopic changes that come in actual conflict. At such time the resourcefulness of the petty officers and the rank and file may be the difference between defeat and victory.

This hearty tribute to the courage and resourcefulness of Canadians, when thrown by the fortunes of war into a tight place, is as heartily appreciated. The action of the Canadians, in these circumstances, was as much unexpected by the Germans as the German recourse to the below-the-belt methods of warfare that crested the situation, was unexpected by civilization, from the forces of a reputedly civilized country.

While a keen nose might scent the tiniest bit of patronage in comparing Canadian soldiers with United States troops, yet it is the sincerest form of praise, to equal others with achievements of which we have reason to feel proud. This war will serve two or three purposes among many other good ones. It will draw closer the bonds of brotherhood, between us and our big neighbours to the south of us. It will, if possible, bind the Mother Kingdom and the Dominions more closely together. It will also give the world a new vision of the marvellous coherence of the Empire; and of the capacity of the Dominions to be worthy and capable co-workers in imperial development; as capable and resourceful in the arts and industries of peace, as they are faithful and effective in fighting for the retention of conditions that will keep and strengthen the British Empire as the unique civilizing, and enfranchising force in the world's history—and with due reverence, the divinely chosen agent in extending the universal interests of Christian civilization.

THE BELGIAN ATROCITIES.

The report on Belgium just published by the committee, of which Viscount Bryce is chairman, has been issued at an opportune time. The world has heard much of the Belgian atrocities, but there was a disposition in many quarters to discount the stories of frightfulness which emanated from that unhappy country. It was felt that the Germans nor any other human beings could not commit such crimes in the light of the twentieth century.

The report puts an end to all such surmises. It is found that the Germans were even worse than stated by the Belgians. Former Ambassador Bryce, who was assisted by a committee of thoroughly qualified men, is able to prove that undreamed of atrocities have been committed by the Germans. Every crime in the decalogue has been proven against them, while their whole conduct has been characterized by a ruthlessness and inhumanity that hardly seem credible in this age.

Following the torpedoing of the Lusitania and the loss of hundreds of lives of innocent people, the report on Belgium will tend to alienate any lingering sympathy which might be in the world for the Germans. From the very outbreak of the war they have shown themselves to be a nation of inhuman monsters, willing and even anxious to commit any and every atrocity in order that they might gain their ends. It is time that a civilized world rose up en masse and crushed the barbarous Huns.—Montreal Journal of Commerce.

QUICK RIGHT-ABOUT-FACE OF THE HON. ROBERT ROGERS

The Hon. Robert Rogers came to Montreal after a visit to the West a short time ago, and told us that the country was "crying out in thunder tones for a general election." He has now gone back to the West, after a visit to the East, and is quoted in the Winnipeg Telegram (Conservative) as saying:

It would, indeed, be impossible for anyone to appreciate and to respect more than I do the genuine expressed sentiment as opposed to a general election. This is undoubtedly the sentiment that should properly exist. At the same time it must be borne in mind that we are at war and have to deal with the most trying conditions that the Canadian people have ever been called upon to deal with.

What has happened to cause this startling right-about-face on the part of Mr. Rogers? Simply this — that Mr. Rogers, in endeavouring to stampede public opinion, has found that he is not a leader of public opinion at all. Quickly mobilized under its real leaders, public opinion has shown Mr. Rogers for the third time in succession that it will not have a flag-flapping election to suit the aims of grabbing politicians. The administration which Mr. Rogers helped Sir Rodmond Roblin to organize in Manitoba has gone down in unhonoured and ignominious defeat. A defeat almost equally significant is that which has been administered Mr. Rogers by the Dominion elections which he had bludgeoned his fellow members of the Cabinet into accepting being vetoed by the stern voice of the people.

The influence of Mr. Rogers in the federal field has been a replica of his influence in the provincial field in Manitoba. The people of Manitoba have revolted against that influence and all it stands for, and the people of the Dominion are now doing so. We believe, with the Manitoba Free Press, that "there is nothing more certain in Canada to-day than that Mr. Rogers is about to be eliminated from the public life of the Dominion. We have entered upon an era of new thought and feeling, in which there is no place for him and his bag of political tricks. He lags superfluous upon the stage."—Montreal Herald-Telegraph.

Four Million Loan And Without Tenders Is Much Criticised

Special to The Examiner:

TORONTO, May 17.— Hon. Mr. McGarry, Provincial Treasurer, seems to be patting himself on the back a good deal these days in regard to his recent financial operations carried on for the Government. For example, in the Toronto News, Conservative, the fact is emphasised that Mr. McGarry managed to close a loan for $4,000,000 and, to quote the News, an hour and a half later word of the sinking of the Lusitania was received and the money market was upset. It does certainly look as if Mr. McGarry had some authentic premonition of the disaster and was, therefore, anxious to have the transaction closed exactly by Friday at noon.

There does not seem, however, to be an unanimity as to the great credit which should come to Hon. Mr. McGarry for his general financing since he became Provincial Treasurer. For example, the public are hardly likely to join with him in his jubilation at being able to close a loan of $4,000,000 at all, for this simply means that he has increased the debt of the Province to this extent and that the Government to this amount, merely as a sample, has failed to keep expenditures within the limit of the receipts.

This $4,000,000 has nothing to do with the war loan negotiated on the basis of the war tax which netted the Provincial Treasurer $2,000,000 and was placed in New York about two weeks ago.

The method of placing the $4,000,000 loan is also meeting with much criticism, especially because the Provincial Treasurer did not ask for general tenders. The Monetary Times, for example, says: "There seems to be little doubt that a higher price than the good one actually received could have been obtained. There is, we believe, indisputable evidence in black and white to that effect." The Toronto Telegram, Conservative, is also in a very critical mood. "It is an indisputable fact," it says, "that a better price could have been obtained for the last $4,000,000 issue, had tenders been obtained from all brokers who wished to participate." It also says that this situation does not compare very favourably with other issues recently floated.

Another source of complaint against the Provincial Treasurer is that on a recent loan, before either of the two present flotations, the Government acted through Home Smith & Co., who are not in the bond business at all, and paid them a commission of $20,000. This transaction has never been satisfactorily explained, although the Opposition has pressed for further information.

Altogether it looks as if the Provincial Treasurer was praising himself because nearly everybody else, irrespective of politics, is in a very critical mood towards his financing.

Tests have shown that the use of electric currents will hasten the operation of chemical methods for softening water for steam power purposes.

Badgers and foxes are hunted in some portions of Portugal by sending into their burrows dogs which carry small electric lights on their collars.

On a new copy or note-book holder the manuscript is moved past a line indicator as a lever on the typewriter to which it is attached is pressed.

To save hauling another car a German railroad has built a wrecking crane on top of a locomotive, which also provides the power for operating it.

The practice of planting cow peas on sugar lands between crops to increase the soil fertility is being successfully introduced in the Philippines.

HAS UNFILLED GERMAN ORDERS

Germany Has Placed Large Orders For Shrapnel, Guns etc. With Bethlehem Steel

NIW YORK, May 17.—Before the European war was declared, Germany was one of the best customers of Bethlehem Steel. More than one-half of its products for export went to Germany. Hundreds of guns now being used on land and sea by Germany were made at the plants of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation.

In connection with the purchase of war munitions from American manufacturers by European nations an authority in the steel trade on ordnance says:

"Germany has placed large contracts for shrapnel, guns and other ordnance with concerns in this country, the Bethlehem Company getting the bulk of the business. Bethlehem it is claimed, is doing a large amount of work, particularly in the manufacture of shrapnel for Germany. Germany is not confident that the Bethlehem Company will be able to make deliveries while the war continues, but is willing to spend millions of dollars by employing capacity that would otherwise be turning out shells, guns, etc., for the Allies."

German holdings in the Bethlehem Steel Company, at one time aggregated several million dollars of bonds and stocks. That country has never taken kindly to other American street securities, an illustration of which is found in the fact that its holdings of United States Steel amount to less than 2,000 shares.

Gives Life For a Child

Woman Drowned Saving the Life of a Little Girl

JAMESTOWN, May 17—Mrs. Mabelle Goucher, wife of Dr. Goucher, a prominent dentist of this city, and niece of the late Arthur O. Wade, was drowned in a deep pool of water at Stillwater, south of this city, recently, after saving the life of a little girl.

Mrs. Goucher was crossing the pool on the trestle of the Warren and Jamestown Railway with her friend, Mrs. Marcus J. Norquist, and the little daughter of the latter. The child fell between the ties into the water. Her mohter failed to rescue her and narrowly escaped drowning when Mrs. Goucher, who could swim, went in after her. She succeeded in keeping the childs head above water until a farm hand, working nearby could reach down fro mthe bridge, and get the girl, when Mrs. Goucher fell back exhausted into the water and was drowned.

Dorothy Bloomstrand, aged two years, was run over and killed by a street car here yesterday morning. Modasero Bruno, a labourer, 28 years old, is dying in a hospital here from injuries received in a collision on the Chautauqua traction line between Mayville and Westfield in which five others were hurt.

Brussels Now a City of Silence

A correspondent writing to the 'Nursing Mirror,' compares the conditions in Brussels in August last year with those existing to-day.

"Newspapers were first censored, then supressed, and are now printed under German auspices' he says; "all coming from abroad were for a time forbidden, and now none are allowed from England. The telephone service was taken over by the enemy, and we were shortly deprived of its use. The post, too, was stopped, and, though now resumed to certain towns and countries, all letters must be left open and contain no news of the war or anything of importance.

'The few trains that run for passengers are in German hands, and wherever you go you must have and py for, a passport. No bicycles are allowed and practically no motors, so the once busy and bustling streets are very quiet and silent. So are the people who were so gay and communicative in the summer. No one speaks to his neighbour in the tram, for he may be a spy. Besides, what news is there to tell, and who has the heart to gossip and what fashions are there to speak of, and whoever goes to a concert or a theatre nowadays, and who would care to tell of their all-absorbing anxiety as to how to make both ends meet and spin out the last of the savings or to keep the little mouths at home filled, with the stranger close by?

"I am but a looker-on after all, for it is not my country whose soil is desecrated and whose sacred places are laid waste. I can only feel the deep and tender pity of the friend within the gates, and observe with sympathy and admiration the high courage and self-control of a people enduring a long and terrible agony. They have grown thin and silent with the fearful strain. They walk about the city shoulder to shoulder with the foe, and never see them or make them a sign; only they leave the cafe which they frequent and turn their backs to them, and live a long way off and apart. A German officer on a train politely asked a gentleman for a light; he handed him his cigar without a word, and, receiving it back, threw it in the gutter. Such incidents happen often, and are typical of the conduct of this much-disciplined nation.'

New Light on Gum
A Lesson from the Races of the World

This Man is First—

In freedom from decay of teeth the brown Maori leads the world.

Violating all the white man's sound advice he never cleans his teeth. He eats whatever suits his whim—whatever cool New Zealand yields. Kukupa, Kaka, Weka, Putangitangi all in their turn.

Shark-steak, birds roasted on the spit and wrapped in green leaves to keep their flavor.

Why do the teeth of British school-children show nearly 80 times as much decay as his? We will tell you further on.

The Esquimaux and the Indian

Fat, and fish and bird and twenty different kinds of plants. These in the main form the Esquimaux' meals. And he ranks second in having good teeth.

And third comes our own Canadian Indian of the bleak Northwest. He eats a good deal like the Esquimaux.

Other races ranking high in the soundness of their teeth are Fuegians, Fijians, Chinwans of Formosa, Semangs, Jakuns.

But we of Canada—?

Some years ago the British Dental Association examined the teeth of 10,500 English and Scotch school-children—10,500 cousins to the boys and girls of Canada.

86% had some decay of the teeth as against 1 1/10% for the adult Maori and 1 1/10% for the Esquimaux.

Why?—the vital question stares us in the face.

Must we eat like the Maori or the Esquimaux to gain more freedom from decay?

True, their foods are much simpler—and their living much closer to Nature. But that does not account for the tremendous difference between 1.2% and 86%.

Leading dental authorities give us the following answer to our problem.

Races having the best teeth chew foods which excite the salivary glands. The Canadian Indian of the Northwest chews wood of the sugar-pine. The Maori flavors foods with the juice of the tutuberry—another keen exciter of the salivary flow.

The human saliva is Nature's own mouth-wash—the best conserver of the teeth—best since man began.

This may be news to you, but there is more:—Saliva not only neutralizes the acid which is the worst enemy of your teeth—it wars as well on many of the germs that enter the mouth through air and food. It is one of Dr. Nature's own fine preventive medicines.

Too frequently the diet of civilized man exerts a depressing influence on the salivary glands.*

It is here that the use of chewing gum comes into its own with honors. It helps to maintain the mouth and teeth in all their natural health.

It fights against what dentists call "oral (mouth) stagnation." It is a needed friend to modern man.

When YOU Chew Gum

Most of us chew gum for pleasure. But all of us who use it, whatever our motive, are getting benefit from it. Gum is serving us a mighty good turn.

Can your gum be too pure for you?—too clean for your mouth? Assuredly no. And it should be very tasty, too, because it is flavor which coaxes the tooth protecting, mouth cleansing saliva.

It is for these reasons that Sterling Gum is entitled to your welcome.

Sterling Gum is of the cleanest chicle—flavored through and through by the secret Sterling process, with the highest grade peppermint flavoring.

Sterling Gum is produced in spotless kitchens—by spotless machinery—guided by men and girls in spotless garments.

Sterling Gum made and wrapped right here in Canada.

Always free from grit—always delicately smooth in body—Sterling Gum earns a rightful place in every top right hand drawer of every sideboard in Canada. Its flavor is delightful.

The Value Of Fare-Refunding Week to the City Shoppers

It Won't Cost You Anything to Come to Peterborough—You'll be on the "Ground Floor" All the Week—A Very Opportune Event For Early Summer Buying

It is worth while to direct the attention of residents in the city to the superior privileges which they will enjoy during this attractive "Fare-Refunding Week," from a business point of view.

It should be quite evident that the city shopper will be in a position to derive "the lion's share" of the benefits which one is likely to accrue from this important six-days' event.

Because it doesn't cost the city shopper anything to come to Peterborough, the opportunities to buy advantageously should be all the more appreciated. Whatever special bargains are put on in the stores every day the city shopper can be early on the spot to have the full advantage of the sales. You will find shelffuls of new goods notably reduced every day during the week. The opportunity to select early is unrestricted.

The refunding of the fares by the merchant to non-resident shoppers, with the object of attracting large crowds of buyers to the city, is really the chief reason why merchants have been induced to make the sacrifices in prices which they are doing. They hope to be compensated by their increased volume of sales to make it worth while offering such unusual inducements to all buyers.

Besides, the event is a timely one. The summer needs are upon us, and it is just the time to do early summer shopping. All the stores are now completely stocked with summer goods, and they will prove that the buying public will find the newest goods, not only at the right prices, but at substantially reduced prices, all this week.

Judgment In Favour of the Plaintiff Given

Full Text of His Honour Judge Huycke's Decision in an Interesting Case

Following is the text of the judgment given by His Honour Judge Huycke in the case of Kemp vs. the Canadian Order of Foresters, a very interesting case to all fraternal societies:

Kemp Vs. Can. Order of Foresters.

At the close of the evidence I found that plaintiff was really ill and not shamming illness as suggested by the defence.

The only remaining question is therefore was notice of illness given, and if so, was that notice sufficient and in accord with the defendant's by-laws.

The said to have been given in June, 1914, by plaintiff, was not sufficiently proved, but I find that notice was given by his wife verbally "on his behalf" on 7th August, 1914, to Matherall, a proper official of the defendants, in that behalf. She was sufficiently her husband's agent to give notice "on his behalf" as set out in By-law No. 37, but she did not state to Metherall "the notice of such illness," and if such is necessary to satisfy By-law 37, the action must fail. Although such a provision would seem prudent and wise, the By-law is indefinite and does not provide. It does so provide in case the claimant is absent from his own Court and gives the notice to the Court where he lives, which Court as I understand, then reports to the Home Court. The wisdom of this is self evident, and the provision might well have been extended to a notice direct to the member's own Court, but the defendant's did not see fit to do, perhaps relying on the member's own knowledge of local conditions and the certificate of a local physician. If the members do not mean their by-law as I read it they should amend it forthwith. I must take it as it stands and according to it I find plaintiff was ill for the 12 weeks claimed and that notice was given by plaintiff's wife to a proper official of defendants on 7th of August, 1914, sufficient to comply with existing By-laws. Plaintiff must therefore succeed. Judgment for him will be entered for $36.00 and costs of suit.

E. C. HUYCKE,
Judge

18th May, 1915.

Mr. Joseph Wearing, Peterborough, appeared for the plaintiff and Mr. W. A. Hollinrake, K.C., of Brantford, for the defendants.

VETERAN MISSIONARY FROM BAFFIN'S LAND PREACHED IN ST. JOHN'S CHURCH YESTERDAY

Rev. E. J. Peck, One of the World's Noted Missionaries Tells of His Work and the Habits of the Eskimos—An Authority on the Eskimos

LIVED IN SNOW HUT

Large congregations heard Rev. E. J. Peck, one of the world's most noted missionaries, at both services in St. John's Church yesterday. Rev. Dr. Peck, as a young man dedicated his life to the uplift of the Eskimos, and after a number of years spent in Baffin's Land, where he found them to be living in ignorance and degradation, he has returned from his distant ice-bound field, and is busily engaged in work for it at the home base. He is probably the chief authority on the Eskimos, and is consulted by the Indian Department in dealing with them.

Rev. Mr. Peck has gone through many hardships and privations in his ministry in Baffin's Land, where for the greater part of his life, in many respects like Robinson Crusoe, he was lost to the world, and when he emerged from the northern solitudes, a white-haired man, a most striking improvement had been effected in the habits of these Arctic nomads, amounting in many cases to an absolute transformation.

Many Hardships.

After spending over seven years alone he took a trip to England, where he was married, and Mrs. Peck went back with him to his field where they lived in a hut 300 miles from the nearest doctor. Here their two boys and one girl were born. Many times he was compelled to leave his wife for a period of three months while he followed the Eskimos, who after coming to the trading post and finishing there, returned to their icy hunting ground. He would be compelled to travel hundreds of miles with his dog teams, and at last arrive at an Eskimo village. The huts would be on the ice on the sea, and made of snow and ice. Here he would be invited to the largest hut, and in the evenings the Eskimos came to worship. These huts were about eight feet high in the centre of the dome—being dome-shaped. The entrance was from a small hole at the bottom in through which they crawled. At the top was a block of ice for a window. The icy floor was covered with skins upon which they knelt or sat until sleeping time, when they rolled themselves up in the skins. Mr. Peck was compelled to wear two suits of furs to keep warm, so intense was the cold. The lamps were made of snow and filled with seal oil.

After the Eskimos had assembled in the hut occupied by the missionary, he opened the service by a hymn. Then he would have a prayer and read probably a portion of the Gospel. After the service each of the Eskimos would clasp him by the hand and take their leave, going to their respective abodes and sleep through the night.

Be Witness for God.

At the morning service at St. John's yesterday, Rev. Mr. Peck took for his text the first Chapter of the Acts of the Apostles, the eighth verse; "But ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you: and ye shall be witnesses unto Me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth."

The Holy Spirit was not only the giver of Spiritual Power, but He was the Giver of Spiritual Life. We not only needed the life to be witnesses of God, and we needed the power. We could be witness of God without going away. The mother in her family, the business man in his office, could be witnesses of God. Wherever the Lord put us we could be witnesses for God. What a joy it was to be witnesses for Christ. It was a life not lived for ourselves, but lived for others in service. All the blessings from being witnesses of God, came of course from Him.

Came to Canada 1876.

In speaking of his life work among the Eskimos, Rev. Mr. Peck said that his success was through God. He came to Canada from England in 1876, across the great expanse of the Atlantic ocean in a Hudson's Bay Company vessel. He landed at a point on the northeast part of Hudson's Bay, where the Eskimos gathered to trade with the company.

His experiences were various. He found that he had to study the language, peculiar habits, and social customs of the Eskimos, and this looked like a big task. The language problem was especially a very difficult one. They had no literature and consequently he had to learn as a little child. The Hudson's Bay Company placed at his disposal a shack where he lived alone. He got a little Eskimo boy who took particular interest in teaching his white friend the language of his people. It took Mr. Peck seven years of hard work at six hours a day to find out the fundamental facts of the Eskimo language.

While there he learned the names of 300 Spiritual being in which these poor people believed. The boy, of course, believed with his people, but he gradually learned that there was only one God. And then he became a catechist and had been for twenty years a witness of God for his own people. After eight years in Baffin's Land Rev. Mr. Peck had sixty souls working for Christ. That life was the abundant life, the overflowing life.

Killed the Infirm.

A peculiar custom and belief among the Eskimos was that when a man became old or was suffering it was the duty of another to put him to death while he was no more use. The missionary came across a poor sufferer in a hut one day who was trying to get another to put him to death. The other had heard something of the Truth and could not do it. The Hudson's Bay Company officer, who was at all times very kind, provided a team of dogs and a sleigh, and Mr. Peck was able to have the poor sufferer removed to the mission, where they tried to help him. His constitution was not strong enough for him to survive, but they believe he had grasped the Truth before he passed to the great beyond.

One of Mr. Peck's little boys became sick, and as they were 300 miles from a doctor and the country was frozen up they had to do their best towards saving him, until the ice broke up. They finally got started for an outer post in a boat. He had a covering for it, and under this covering were his wife and three children. They came to places where they had to chop a road through the ice for the boat to pass. It took them one month to reach a doctor, and he was thankful to say his son survived.

The work of Rev. Mr. Peck, thoroughly organized, has been taken up by two devoted young men, Messrs. Bibby and Fleming.

Illustrated Lecture.

This evening Mr. Peck will give a lecture on "The Life and Habits of the Eskimos," in St. John's schoolhouse, illustrated by limelight views.

Pioneer Peace River Wheat Reaches Market

Grown in What Was Once Considered Barren Area, the Shipment Arouses Great Interest

The first car of wheat ever shipped out of the Peace River country in Northern Alberta has arrived at Winnipeg, Grand Trunk Pacific officials report.

It was grown at Vaarena, but how the wheat got from Vanrena to Peace River landing is not known at the present time. From Peace River landing to Edmonton the trip was made by the Edmonton, Dunvegan and British Columbia Railway Line. It was then transferred to the G.T.R. and forwarded to Winnipeg.

When it is considered that Edmonton is located in 53-24 W. 4, and that Vaarena is located in 81-3 W. 6, some idea can be grasped of the long haul necessary to get this wheat to market. As the Edmonton, Dunvegan and British Columbia line runs close to direct north from Edmonton, and then west, the distance is close to 400 miles. From Edmonton to Winnipeg the distance is over 800 miles, so that a trip of around 1,200 miles was made before this wheat reached Winnipeg to have government inspectors announce that a point so far north could produce No. 3 Northern wheat.

It is not very many years since the agricultural world laboured under the impression that grain-growing was well-nigh impossible in Western Canada. Later, every one marvelled at the possibilities of such northerly districts as Prince Albert and Edmonton. During the last few years crops have been grown in the Grand Prairie and Peace River countries in Northern Alberta. With this first shipment comes initial evidence that at least part of the crop is genuine hard wheat.

Public Reception To New Pastor of Park Street Church

A public reception will be given to-night at 8 o'clock by the Park Street Baptist Church to Rev. Dougald Brown, the new pastor, and Mrs. Brown. Ten minute addresses will be given by Rev. J. Rollins, for the Ministerial Association; Rev. J. E. Webb, for the Baptists of the city; Alderman McKinley, for the South-end, and Rev. C. G. Smith, of Belleville, for the Peterborough Baptist Association. The chair will be taken by Mr. Joseph Wearing. Special music will be rendered by the choir and male quartette.

Splendid audiences turned out morning and evening yesterday to take part in the anniversary services. In the morning the pastor spoke on the subject, "A New Testament Model Church," and held up the first church at Antioch as an example for Park Street Church to follow. In the evening Mr. Webb, of Murray St. Church, preached from the text: "I will come to visions and revelations of the Lord" (II. Cor. xii., 1) In the vision on the way to Damascus Paul saw Christ as his Saviour. In the vision which called him to Macedonia he saw a larger field of usefulness; and in the vision which took him to the third heaven he saw his future reward. From this Mr. Webb adduced lessons for the new pastorate under Mr. Brown.

Judgment Has Been Reserved

In the case in police court this morning of Mr. Geo. H. Howson, Inspector of Weights and Measures against Wm. Fair, driver of one of the city scavenger wagons, of during the month of April, 1915, unlawfully using for the purpose of charging for cartage, a certain thing, namely, refuse, measures not duly inspected and stamped, was adjourned for judgment until to-morrow, and that against Mr. C. A. G. Spence, Sanitary Inspector, on a similar charge, was adjourned for ten days.

Mr. G. W. Hatton appeared for the private prosecutor and Mr. G. N. Gordon, for the two defendants.

The case against Mr. Fair was proceeded with this morning. Mr. Howson swore that he had received an account from the City Garbage Collection Department for work done for him in August last. He thought the account exhorbitant and refused to pay it. He received notice from the City Solicitor that it would be collected. Last week he measured the refuse cans which he stated were supposed to hold 30 gallons, and for which a charge was levied of $1.00 per can full. According to his measurements the cans held a little over 18 gallons. They were not passed by him or stamped by him. They were now in state of seizure, according to Mr. Howson, but he would not measure them to stamp until they were cleaned and to his knowledge this had not been done.

The by-law governing garbage collection was handed into court, but Mr. Gordon pointed out that the said by-law was not in force until passed by the Provincial Board of Health, and when passed by that body would be in force automatically. The magistrate took it, however.

The case against Mr. Spence will not come up for ten days.

Weird Details of Langemarck Battle

First Advance Led Past the Corner of the Canadian Line Where the Advancing Masses of Germans Were Caught in an Enfolding Fire Which Inflicted Very Heavy Loss Upon Them.

The English newspapers received by the last mail contain much additional information regarding the battle of Langemarck, in which the First Canadian Division so notably distinguished itself.

The correspondent of the London Morning Post, for instance, emphasizes the work of the 16th Regiment, from Alberta and British Columbia, in the battle. With remarkable foresight General Alderson, who was holding this battalion in reserve, instead of having it parallel to his front had it perpendicular, that is to say facing north. When, therefore, the Germans broke through from Langemarck towards the Canal and swung south to cut off the Canadians, the 16th was ready to meet them and to advance at the crucial moment to maintain the line intact. This was undoubtedly the critical part of the battle.

The British Eye Witness at General Headquarters describes the Canadian lines between Ypres-St. Julien and towards Langemarck, as they were when the big fight started, as being faced by a long, gentle slope down which the Germans came. It was between 4 o'clock and half-past 4 that the gas began to come to the Canadian lines, and thereafter St. Julien was subjected to an intense bombardment for half an hour. At 5.30 the German advance began, preceded by gas-men in a kind of divers' costume. Behind these again came the bomb-throwers.

The first advance led past the corner of the Canadian line, when the advancing masses were caught in an enfilading fire, which inflicted very heavy losses upon them. Then, however, the gas-throwers got into the range of the French lines, with the result that the break occurred. Upon this two battalions of Canadians, the 16th and also the 10th, were brought up, and hurled themselves on the Germans, who had cut round behind the lines. This checked the German advance, and the enemy retired into a little wood between Pilkem and St. Julien, where they rapidly threw up earthworks, and, by rushing in a large number of machine guns, constituted a little fortress of the place, thereby, in their turn, checking our advance.

Early on Friday morning the 1st and 2nd Canadian Brigades advanced to attack the little wood. They were preceded by bomb-throwers, a section which the same correspondent described as "particularly well organized in the Canadian Army." These men moved rapidly forward, scattered in open formation. They are armed with rifles and have percussion hand grenades in belts about their waists, which they throw as they go. This fight lasted almost the whole day, and the Germans had been driven from the wood when orders were received for the line to retire, so as to maintain intact the contact with the French.

From the reports cabled to Canada it has been understood that the reinforcements which were rushed up to the Canadian front at a critical time and which participated in the taking of St. Julien were regular troops. It appears, however, that they were English Territorials, and that they, shoulder to shoulder with the Canadians, bore themselves with the utmost gallantry. For many of them it was their baptism of fire, but the Morning Post correspondent says "On all hands I hear warm eulogies of their steadiness and courage. They behaved like seasoned troops."

According to the Morning Post correspondent it was on the afternoon of Friday, 23rd, that the reinforcements consisting of British Territorials, were brought round from behind Ypres and moved to the assault of St. Julien. Detachments of the Buffs were already with the Canadians, but these fresh Territorials included the 6th Yorks, the West Kents, and the Gloucesters. The taking of St. Julien was one of those brilliant minor affairs of which this war has been full, but which in any former campaign would have been writ large upon the page of history. It was a little epic in itself. Up the open road and along the banks of the little River Haanebeek, shot-scarred, peeped down by the [illegible] trees, and a fair mark for the artillery further on. With desultory cover along here it [illegible] at last, in one final rush they gained the place. Then, among the ruins they got a little of their own back, with the bayonet, for the Germans held their ground. It was here that the greatest number of machine guns [illegible] the day's slaughter effected. The pity of it is that the Territorials could not enjoy the full fruits of their gallant conduct, for with the remodelling of our line S. Julien was too far advanced, and had to be abandoned again.

The British "Eye Witness" present with the General Headquarters, explains that an effort on the part of the Germans in the direction of Langemarck was not unexpected, since movements of troops and transports behind their front line had been detected for some days. Its peculiar and novel nature, however, was a surprise which was largely responsible for the measure of success achieved.

The "Eye Witness" was much impressed by what occurred behind the Canadian lines during the hot artillery fire which followed the first German onslaught on the right of the lines held by the French. He relates that about this period "our men in reserve near Ypres, seeing the shells bursting, had gathered in groups discussing the situation and questioning some scattered bodies of Turcos who had appeared. Suddenly a Staff Officer rode up, shouting, "Stand to your arms," and in a few minutes the troops had fallen in and were marching northwards to the scene of the fight. Nothing more impressive can be imagined than the sight of our men falling in quietly in perfect order on their alarm posts, amid the scene of wild confusion caused by the panic-stricken refugees who swarmed along the roads.

"In the meantime to the north and north-east of the town, a confused fight was taking place,, which gave proof not only of great gallantry and steadiness on the part of the troops referred to above, but of remarkable presence of mind on the part of the leaders. Behind the wall of vapour, which had swept across fields, through woods, and over hedgerows, came the German firing line, the men's mouths and noses, it is stated, protected by pads soaked in a solution of bicarbonate of soda. Closely following them, again, came the supports. These troops, hurrying forward, with their formation somewhat broken up by the obstacles encountered in their path, looked like a huge mob bearing down upon the town. A battery of 4.7 inch guns a little beyond the left of our line was surprised and overwhelmed by them in a moment. Farther to the rear and in a more easterly direction were several field batteries, and before they could come into action the Germans were within a few hundred yards. Not a gun, however, was lost. One battery, taken in flank, swung round, fired on the enemy at a point blank range and checked the rush. Another opened fire with the guns pointing in almost opposite directions, the enemy being on three sides of them."

Elliott Bros., Whose Relatives Live in This District Killed in Action

In one of the issues of The Examiner of last week, information was given of the death of Pte. George Elliott, son of Rev. Wm. and Mrs. Elliott, of Cumberland, B.C., having been killed in action in Langemarck. In a paper received to-day by Mr. George E. Elliott, of this city, particulars are given of the death of another son, Pte. Fletcher Elliott, both boys having been killed in action in the same battle. The boys were born in Japan, where their father taught English for many years in a Japanese College. Their mother was Miss Robinson, daughter of Mr. William Robinson, of Peterborough, and all their relatives are residents of Peterborough County, who will regret to hear the sad news of the brilliant death of the young men. Fletcher was 23 years of age, and was in the Royal Bank. George was 21 years of age, and was assistant to a contractor in Vancouver. The family will have the sympathy of all their old friends and relatives in this district.

That is How Major Bennett is Described by Wounded 57th Man, Pte. Jas. Bills

Writing from the R. N. Hospital, Netley, Hants., England, to Mrs. Jas. Booth, Sherbrooke Street, Pte. Jas. Bills, of the 57th detachment, who was wounded before the battle of Langemarck, says: "I am still in hospital, but hope to be out soon. One of the nerves in my leg was cut in two, but the doctor said it would get right in time. The fellow that picked me up when I was wounded has since been killed, and four out of the six in my tent are wounded, so there is only Stevens left, and, believe me, I hope he gets through. I guess I will go back to my company some time, but my leg is very sore and stiff. The Canadians did grandly this last few weeks, but our company lost every officer in one day. Four killed and two wounded, including Major Bennett. He was loved by all men in the company, and, believe me, they would follow him anywhere. Remember me to Sam and tell him I should certainly come back to Canada if I was not fit for further service, but I hope I shall be."

OH STILL HUNT FOR A PASTOR

NEW YORK, May 17—A couple, who said they were Miss Madge Elizabeth Thompson, daughter of Wm. S. Thompson, of No. 4,487 Lindell Avenue, St. Louis, and Richard Cameron Beer, of Washington, D. C., on marriage bent, went parson hunting in this city. Whether their efforts to find a clergyman who would tie the knot were successful could not be learned.

The couple were seen at the Rectory of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the Transfiguration in East Twenty-ninth street, while they were calling on the Rev. D. G. G. Houghton. Miss Thompson denied most energetically that their intended marriage was a secret or that they had eloped.

"I do no want you to write anything about a secret marriage, for this is nothing of the sort, she said. "I am not anxious to avoid publicity, and if you will come back in half an hour the ceremony will have been performed and I will tell you all you want to know."

"Is this an elopement?" she was asked.

"Well," and after a pause she added: "Come back later. Won't you please?"

"I know you want to get all the details," said Mr. Beer. "We will give you them later—that is, if you are willing to sit outside on the stoop for a little while."

With the engine running, a taxicab stood waiting at the curb. In fifteen minutes the couple left the rectory.

Both seemed depressed. A reporter started to cross the street, but Mr. Beer caught Miss Thompson's arm, and they ran to the taxicab. Entering, they slammed the door, and the vehicle sped into Fifth Avenue.

"I declined to perform the marriage," said Mr. Houghton. "They were not accompanied by any of their relatives, and I must be careful lest some one take advantage of me.

"Miss Thompson seemed a sweet, charming girl. They appeared disinclined to have any publicity about the matter and I thought it prudent for them to ask some other clergyman. No, I did not recommend any other clergyman. I left them to paddle their own canoe."

Miss Thompson, a slender brunette, seemed to be embarassed when she talked with a reporter. She wore a dark blue tailored suit and a small tri-cornered hat with a small white feather. Mr. Beer also seemed surprised to learn that his arrangements had become known.

Russians Now Stronger After Many Attacks

Have Stood Up Under Heavy Attacks of Austro-Germans and Are More Determined Than Ever

WARSAW, May .—Recent developments on this front are extremely significant. They show conclusively the increasing difficulty with which the Germans score heavily in their sudden movements.

Indications are that the northern movement was unimportant. It only progressed until the Russians were enabled to cope with it, when it was instantly checked. Its military value to the Germans seems nothing, except as it affords opportunity to exploit rumours in Berlin of the enemy's territory being occupied.

The situation in Galicia is one which can always be anticipated whenever the Germans plan the sudden concentration of their railway facilities in western Galicia. And the suddenness of their attacks, when the Russians are supposed to be engaged along other fronts enabled them to score initial successes which, it is believed, will gradually evaporate as the Russians are able to adjust themselves to this new strain.

All the recent news from Galicia is optimistic. Though all are praying for an early offensive in the west, the situation is accepted here without complaint and with trust. Meantime the Russians are patiently, stolidly, and resignedly bearing their burden, which consists of constant acceptance of the fury of the German attacks.

Russia has, since the inception of the war, received the heavy shocks of German attacks—first in one quarter and then in another—and in the tenth month she is stronger, more determined, and more secure in opinion as to the ultimate outcome than she was when the war started.

Reports continue to pour into Warsaw concerning the desperate plight of Polish peasants within the German lines, who are said to have been already reduced to starvation, as practically all available food supplies have been taken by the invaders.

It is stated the Germans, with the enforced labour of Polish peasants, are putting in hops. The wheat and rye which was harvested in May will reach 60 per cent. of a normal crop but as this obviously is intended for use by their own armies, it presents no solution to the problem of feeding the wretched inhabitants of ravished Poland.

Elaborate Precautions Taken to Prevent His Safety

Special to The Examiner:

NEW YORK, May 17.—America's armada, the Atlantic fleet, to-day greeted its commander-in-chief, President Wilson, for the first time.

Rain, chill and drizzling, with leaden skies, tossed a soggy pall over the opening festivities attending the President's first review.

Elaborate precautions were taken for the President's safety, in view of the international situation. The entire force of available detectives, nearly 700 in all, were assigned to work secretly in protecting the President. They were scattered through the crowds at the wharves and parade route.

PRIVATE W. J. LONG.

Among those mentioned in to-day's long list of the 2nd Battalion's missing is Private W. J. Long, a young Englishman of 26 years. He had lived in this country a few years and was engaged as helper to a farmer about seven miles from the city, in Otonabee. When war broke out he hung up his hoe and came to the city, enlisted, and in the meantime boarded with Mr. and Mrs. R. Biggs at 166 McDonnel Street. Private Long has a sister residing in Peterborough. He was only a young chap, not much more than a boy, but he was quiet and determined, and entered upon his training here with all the earnestness of a veteran.

PTE. HAROLD SCOLLIE.

Private Harold Scollie, 2nd Battalion, First Canadian Expeditionary Force, is officially reported as 'missing.' Private Scollie is a son of the late W. J. Scollie of this city. He was born in Peterborough in 1875, residing here until about eight years ago, when he went to New York, where he resided until the outbreak of the war. When he heard the news he returned to Peterborough in time to enlist with his old regiment and get away with the first contingent. Both Private Scollie and father will be remembered as being prominently identified with the 57th Regiment, the latter having charge of what was then known as the Drill Hall. He was also well known as a member of the old fire brigade.

Both Private Scollie's parents are dead. One sister, Mrs. W. Stewart, resides in Smith township. Two brothers, F. L. Scollie of Fort William, and Thomas A. Scollie of British Columbia complete the family. Private Scollie was in the city about two weeks before the contingent went to Valcartier.

PTE. STETHEM.

In the casualty list of the 75th Battalion, appears the name of Henry A. Stethem of Fort Francis, Ontario. He is officially reported wounded. Private Stethem is a son of Mr. George Stethem, formerly of Peterborough, and now of Fort Francis.

Looting And Destruction by Fire of German Property

All South Africa Wrathy at the Teutons—Situation in Big Cities Assume Serious Proportions

LONDON, May 17—A Reuter despatch from Capetown field Friday says:

"Immense crowds thronged the streets to-night singing 'Rule Britannia,' and their behaviour sometimes was threatening. Troops and police found great difficulty in preventing disorders. It was announced that the Government had decided to intern all male aliens of enemy nationality, and also to protect with every force at its disposal naturalized aliens or those who have applied for naturalization.

"General Botha has issued to the people of the Union of South Africa from Windhoek, capital of German Southwest Africa, a message deploring the anti-German riots which he characterizes as unworthy of a strong and chivalrous people however great the provocation.

"In many cases," he says, "the victims have sons loyally fighting with me at the front.

Not Fair to Soldiers

"It is most discouraging for the officers and men here who daily are risking their lives fighting an honest and clean fight, to hear of these appeal to all to refrain from such events at home. I therefore earnestly acts which cannot benefit the country, but can cause only serious embarrassment."

Latest reports show that the rioting has been of a more serious character, but fear of a possible uprising among 250,000 mine boys along the Rand is now apparently having a steadying effect. The natives obtained liquor freely from looted stores, and this added greatly to the peril of the situation.

"An appeal issued by the committee which is arranging a mass-meeting for to-morrow night, asks citizens to preserve the city's good name by ensuring the safety of all property. The appeal also calls attention to the danger of unrest among the natives.

Buildings Allowed to Blaze.

Some of the largest warehouses on the Rand, containing immense stores of merchandise belonging to Germans or supposed Germans, are reported to have been systematically destroyed. When the work of destruction was at its height flames were visible for miles around. The big buildings simply were set afire and allowed to blaze. Goods found in smaller shops, hotels and offices were flung out of windows and made into bonfires. All the fire brigades have toiled ceaselessly since Wednesday night to restrict the countless fires, and but for their efforts whole streets instead of individual blocks would have been burned.

"Strong forces of police and troops are held in readiness in Capetown to-night to prevent further disturbances. Bars, clubs and hotels were closed and citizens warned to remain in their homes.

Reports from Durban describe the wholesale firing and sacking of German business houses, hotels and wool stores. The damage there is estimated as considerably over a quarter of a million dollars. Fire brigades and the police are virtually helpless and the disturbances continue.

A Tale of Destruction.

"The same tale of destruction on a large scale comes from other towns. At Port Elizabeth twenty German establishments were wrecked; in Pretoria the windows were smashed in the office of a German newspaper; Maritsburg reports a general exodus of Germans. The disturbances at Kimberley were unprecedented in the annals of the diamond fields, while the rioting at Bloemfontein also was serious.

"A significant result of the disturbances is that many prominent Germans have disavowed their country's methods of warfare."

A Serious Situation.

London, May 15—A Johannesburg despatch to the Reuter-Telegram Co. says:

"The situation here for the last 36 hours has been extremely serious, mobs resuming the work of destroying everything German or apparently German, and also completing the devastation of properties which previously had been only partly wrecked. Police and troops have been called in from all directions, however, and now have command of the situation.

"The wrathful outburst of Wednesday seemed to infect the entire country and, in addition to Capetown other centres like Port Elizabeth, Durban and Bloemfontein, quickly followed Johannesburg's lead. A semblance of order now has been restored and it appears to be the general desire that there shall be no recurrence of disorders. The civic guard and citizen volunteers are co-operating to prevent disturbances.

"One of the incidents of yesterday was the wrecking of three suburban houses including that belonging to Herr Rosendorff, brother-in-law of Sir George Allen. Serious property damage was done in the West End. No attempt was made to fire buildings, but the contents of houses and stores were converted into bonfires."

Former Peterborough Nurse Tells of Experience at the Front

Miss Thompson, Who Previous to the War Conducted a Private Hospital in This City, Has Returned From France, Where She Has Been Engaged in a Field Hospital

In the historic old College de Juilly, situated between Paris and Soissons, there is established the most completely equipped hospital in France. It was donated by Mrs. H. P. Whitney, of New York, a sister of Alfred G. Vanderbilt, sportsman and millionaire, who was lost with the Lusitania. Since the founding of the hospital last January Mrs. Whitney has taken personal charge of the institution and has retained the services of a carefully-selected staff of doctors and nurses from Canada and the United States.

One of the nurses is Miss Cede Thompson, of 73 Triller Avenue, Toronto. She arrived home from the front last Friday on a leave of absence. Miss Thompson is formerly of Bobcaygeon, Ont., and received her training in St. Luke's Hospital in New York. She is well-known here, and prior to going to the front conducted a private hospital on Brock Street. She is probably the first Canadian nurse who volunteered her services to France.

"The hospital at Juilly, although stationary and some miles from the firing line, is really a field hospital," said Miss Thompson in an interview with The Star. "We send an ambulance to the trenches three times a week, and as many wounded soldiers who can endure the motor ride, are brought back to the hospital. We have a staff of five doctors and twenty nurses, and up to the present time we have treated more than 200 patients. Our hospital has been particularly fortunate in the matters of deaths and amputations. We have only had two of each."

Near the Marne Battlefield.

The village of Juilly, in which the hospital is stationed, is a quaint little place of some three hundred inhabitants. It was only a few miles from here that the battle of the Marne was fought, and in the surrounding, luxuriant country one cannot walk ten feet without encountering a grave. The women and children are engaged in tilling the land and sowing the crops, but the fields are a sorry looking sight, for, when the plower comes to the crest of a grave she feels she cannot sow grain there, so she makes a wide detour around it and proceeds in a varying straight line until she encounters another. The furrows look as though a blind man had turned them up.

The College de Juilly is a well-known English century building with an enrolment of 160 students. It was here that Napoleon's nephew was educated in 1870 and in the stone corridors and secret vaults are many inscriptions and documents left by Napoleon's antecedents. There is a particularly cherished one that Napoleon is said to have written himself.

The hospital is in one wing of this college. The remainder of the building is devoted to various French benevolent societies which also take care of wounded and convalescent soldiers. After the battle of the Marne these nurses went to the battlefield and picked up more than six hundred of the wounded, French, English, Belgian and German. These were all cared for with the utmost attention at the College.

When Miss Thompson arrived at the village at the first of last January, the doctors and nurses had unlimited freedom and were allowed to walk on the battlefield and explore as much as they pleased. Recently the authorities have become very strict in the matter of being outdoors. No one is now allowed out between the hours of eight p.m. and five a.m., and when one desires to leave his hospital a special permit has to be procured from the Mayor of the village. When an announcement is to be made, a town crier steps at every street corner, and shouts out the proclamation. Mrs. Whitney's hospital also has undertaken to care for the needy and injured of this quaint little town, and the old college building is considered a holy temple by the townspeople.

New French Military Law.

During the past two months a very important and necessary military law has been passed in France. The arm or leg of a French soldier cannot now be amputated, no matter how serious the case is, before the injury is officially inspected and deemed positively necessary by the general of the army. The penalty for such an offence as this is very severe.

Last September the Germans were within ten miles of Juilly. They commandeered, a town by the name of Champfleury, and for six days General Von Kluk had his headquarters in one of the large country houses there. During one of her exploring trips, Miss Thompson visited this house, which is about the only one in the district left standing, and discovered a message written on the wall in German script. Translated, it read: "If you had not run away we would not have destroyed the houses," and is signed "England's Troops"—a message altogether characteristic of the Germans, seeing that the British troops were never in Champfleury.

Last April the hospital was honoured by a visit from President Poincare. He inspected the wards and equipment, and expressed his opinion that they were the best in France. He also complimented the nurses and doctors on their appearance and skill.

Algerian Volunteers.

Predominant among the nationalities that the College Hospital has treated are Algerians. Most of them are but boys of twenty and have most unpronounceable names. The consequence is that they are recipients of many ingenious nicknames from the nurses. They take to these names very readily and answer to them. When a new patient arrives, they signify to the nurses that they would like to have a name for him. One of Miss Thompson's patients, who showed no characteristics worthy of a nickname, was dubbed Nameless, and as that he was known thereafter. One remarkable point in the matter of these Algerians is that they are practically all volunteers, a contingency which is not very often encountered in native troops.

Miss Thompson says that the Algerian's cavalry uniform is a most resplendant affair. The pattens are red, the breeches blue, the tunic purple, and the long military cloak black. In their dress they very strongly resemble clowns in a circus. The Algerians are very good patients. They are always smiling and very considerate to their brother soldiers. They always call their friends "comrade."

Tatooing seems to be universal among the native troops, all the Algerians and Zouaves have animals and fishes inscribed on some part of their body. One burly trooper was brought into the hospital with a slight shrapnel wound in the back. When the doctors examined him they found that the bullet had lodged exactly in the centre of a cat's ear.

During the month of April three convalescent soldiers of the College Hospital were decorated with medals. Two of them received the military medals, and one, an Algerian, the Legion of Honour. Shortly before this ceremony one of the Algerian "comrades" died of wounds. Instead of placing the body in a coffin, two of the patients gently lifted it from the bed and carried it to the grave. There was no military salute. This is the Algerian custom of burial—simple, undemonstrative, solemn.

Paris is Gay Again.

When Miss Thompson returned to Paris in May one would scarcely know the capital as the same city of November. Then the shock of war had been so staggering that the people were stunned and at a loss to grasp the situation. They took but the slightest interest in their homes or businesses. They could scarcely eat. In May, however, everything was altered. The theatres and moving-picture houses are open, Versailles is again crowded with sight-seers, the Bordeaux museum is in full swing, the boulevards are once more popular, and the greatest of all the Parisian attractions, perhaps, the Louvre, is to be officially opened this month.

Miss Thompson sailed from France on the Rochambeau and was eleven days in crossing. The captain of the ship took every precaution to avoid German submarines and another Lusitania disaster. It was on the big Cunard liner that Miss Thompson crossed to France last November.

The total tonnage of the German losses does not include two converted cruisers or that of the destroyers and submarines. The tonnage of the British submarines is also missing.

The Bouvet was the first large French vessel lost since the outbreak of the war. She was a battleship of 12,007 tons. The French have also lost two submarines in the Dardanelles, the Cane and the Saphir.

REV. E. J. PECK WILL LECTURE

The congregations at St. John's Church listened attentively to the Rev. E. I. Peck, yesterday, to a soul-stirring account of work among the Eskibo. Hundreds of miles from the nearest doctor, and a thousand miles from a Post Office, a visit once a year from a small vessel, and not always that, to spend eight years in mastering the language for purpose of translations of hymns and Bibles, among a people who have no literature heir own, were some of the difficulties Mr. Peck had to face, commencing in the seventies. Tonight in St. John's School, slides will be shown of the varied phases of life in that great lone land, and all who can possibly do so, will of should do.

Feast of The Pentecost

Will be Observed To-morrow by the Hebrews

On Tuesday evening at sundown the festival of the Feast of Weeks or Pentecost, known to the Hebrew people as "Sh'vius," will be celebrated throughout Ontario by the Hebrews.

"Pentecost, like Passover, is an historic as well as an agricultural feast—the day of first fruits. It is also the season of the giving of the law. This significance is of comparatively late origin. The Bible knows nothing of it. We read in Exodus that the Israelites were at Mount Sinai in the third month after their departure from Egypt, and to them, as they were encamped at the foot of the sacred mountain, was vouchsafed the great revelation of God's Word which is embodied in the Ten Commandments.

"The Exodus occurred in the first month of the year, and the great manifestation therefore took place in the third. The precise date is not given in the Bible, but tradition places it at about the sixth day of the month. The post-Biblical teachers used the opportunity thus afforded them, and extended the significance of the Feast of Pentecost by making it a memorial of the Sinaitic Revelation. Thus the festival has come to be the birthday of Israel's religion, just as Passover is the birthday of Israel's nationality."

"Love Themes" Still Precious To New Woman

Are love stories detrimental to the character of women?

Is the new woman in her bachelor apartments, with all the comforts of home and one of its responsibilities, coming to the point where love no longer interests her?

Ella Wheeler Wilcox, known throughout the country as the "Poetess of Passion," and Dr. Woods Hutchinson, the noted medical authority, says emphatically, "No!"

Mrs. Dave Hennen Morris, of the National Board of Young Women's Christian Association, does not agree with them.

In a speech before the association in Los Angeles Mrs. Morris said that the love themes which are featured in women's pages and magazines are detrimental to the character of feminine readers. The board thereupon advocated a substitute in articles that would tend toward the moral uplift of young women.

VIEWS OF NOTED POETESS.

"Love is the foundation of marriage. Marriage is the foundation of the home, and homes are the foundation stones of the nation," said Mrs. Wilcox. "What more vital theme could there be than love?

"The women's pages and magazines should most certainly discuss this important question in all its phases. Anything that affects the domestic relations is vital. Anything that helps to make better wives and mothers, or better husbands and fathers, makes for the welfare of the home. Stories which stimulate sentiment can not be termed detrimental to character. But such stories and such discussions should be considered seriously and in a dignified manner. We should not have these silly questions relating to lovers' quarrels. They are both unedifying and unnecessary. Mawkish sentimentality and frivolity should be avoided."

VIEWS OF NOTED PHYSICIAN.

Dr. Woods Hutchinson laughed heartily when the question was propounded to him. "Romance is on the increase," he said. "There are more love marriages now than ever before. Certainly the popular novels prove that love stories are read eagerly and meet with the approval of millions of men and women! Some of these love stories may be undignified in their treatment and the love elements exaggerated, but they are hardly detrimental to character.

"There is no conflict whatever between the freedom of the new woman and the love impulse. Indeed, the love impulse is stronger than ever. Sentiment played little or no part in the marriages of the past. "Matches were arranged by the parents of the young people for almost every reason under the sun than that of love. Nowadays that is changed. With the removal of many of women's former occupations to the factory and with comparatively few hours in which the work of the home can be accomplished, woman no longer needs to be a prisoner in the home. Such has become free to develop her individuality and with that freedom has come a new spirit of romance which affects men and women alike all over the world."

RAIN HELPS THE WESTERN CROPS

WINNIPEG, May 17.—From all parts of Saskatchewan reports have been received showing that the rainfall was general throughout the province. For nearly twenty-four hours it has rained steadily with the result that the Saskatchewan farmers are jubilant, and fears entertained as a result of the drought of a few days ago have been dispelled.

From special reports received it would appear that the heaviest rains have been in the Swift Current and Regina districts, although almost every section of the province reports a good fall. Swift Current reports that for two days rain has been steadily falling, and that the crop in the famous south-west dry district is now assured. One inch decimal eighteen fell since Wednesday.

According to agents of the railway companies, scattered along the main lines from the Alberta boundary east to Manitoba and north and south, heavy rain has visited these districts. The districts covered by the Weyburn-Lethbridge line reports that heavy, steady rain is falling and that farmers of the district are very optimistic. Qu'Appelle valley is also receiving its share of rain as well as other sections south.

The Biever Motor Car Company,

New Haven, Conn.

Gentlemen:-

I am enclosing report of test of your Maxwell automobile recently made in our laboratory.

I should like to add the following comments:

1. RELIABILITY OF TEST.

A preliminary test was made on April 19th, using a new car which was rather stiff. The showing was so good that we decided to make a second test. This was made on April 30th, using same car. On this test, the car showed less stiffness and the performance was better than on the first car. The second test was supervised by our most expert experts, and this results, I believe to be perfectly reliable.

2. MILEAGE.

The efficiency of the Maxwell automobile as indicated by the number of miles on a level road, is exceptionally high. This mileage record is better than that of any one of forty automobiles tested in our laboratory to date.

3. MOTOR PERFORMANCE.

The efficiency of the motor and carburetor as indicated by the pounds of gasoline used per hour per horse-power at rear tires, is exceedingly good, and indicates very perfect carburetor action over the whole range of speed and load. This record like that on mileage per gallon, is the best one that we have had.

Very truly yours,

E. H. Lockwood
ASSISTANT PROFESSOR MECHANICAL ENGINEERING.

Empires Nosed The Classics Out in The Ninth Innings Saturday

Exciting Finish to a Grand City League Battle---Score Was 2 to 1--East City Easily Beat Thistles in the Second Game.

| East City | 1 | 1 |
| Classics | 1 | 1 |
| Thistles | 0 | 2 |

A big crowd of fans saw the City League games at Riverside Park on Saturday, and they were privileged to witness one magnificent battle, and another that was far from being in that category. The feature game was the struggle between the Empires and Classics, the former winning by 2 to 1 after a ninth innings rally that enabled them to come from behind and win out after all hope was seemingly gone. The second game was easy for the East Citys, who outplayed the Thistles in the field, at the bat and on the bases, and won handily by 12 to 4.

The first game between Empires and Classics was as nice a battle as fans could care to look at. Flaherty, for the former, and Gus Rose for the Classics, were in splendid form and there was nothing doing in the hitting line. Neither team scored until the seventh, when the Classics squeezed a run ever. With Rose pitching no-hit ball that [illegible] Elizabeth. The Empires got their first hit in the eighth, but did not score, and the Classics still had their one-run lead when the Empires went to bat for the last time. Flaherty started the trouble with a single which, followed by Murphy's double, Sherrett's sacrifice fly, a single by Corrin, and an error, gave the Empires two counters and won the game for them. Flaherty allowed only four hits, did not give a pass and struck out nine men, Rose, too, was only found for four safeties, and both twirlers were well supported. Running catches by Heenan, Hatrick and Corrin, and the base throwing of Kennealy, were features. The box score:

The second game was easy for the East City team. They practically put it on ice in the first innings when a combination of bunched hits and errors game them four runs. Two errors by Craig gave them a couple of more in the fourth, and in the eighth they broke loose with an avalanche of six base hits that chased five more counters across. Smythe was no mystery to the East City gang and in addition, the Thistle pitcher received lurid support. Buck O'Connell for the winners, [illegible] retired. Butcher's good hitting was a feature of an otherwise featureless game. The score:

"Fall In and Die Like Coldstreamers"

The following verses from John Bull were sent by Sergt. Downes of the Coldstream Guards, the local policeman who is now at the front:

LAYS OF A LOWLY LONDONER.

The Coldstreamer.

(At the battle of Landrecies, where two companies of Coldstreams held 3,000 Germans at bay for four hours, Lieutenant Wyndham stood up and fired one hundred rounds from his revolver to allow his men to form behind him. The order was then given to "Fall in and die like Coldstreamers.")

A dandy lad is the Coldstream glad
When you see him on parade,
With his coat of red, and topping his head,
The busby with white cockade;
So spick and span, like a soldier man,
For shirkers find they're barred—
You must be select and all correct
To join as a Coldstream Guard.

You see him again, in shine and rain,
At Buck'n'am Palace Gate,
Pacing to and fro on sentry go,
Erect and stern and straight;
And they send him down to Windsor town
To line the Castle Yard,
For the very thing to protect the King
Are the boys of the Coldstream Guard.

Then you may remark, when in the Park,
That the girls admire his style,
Like a soldier, too, he's really to woo
With a soft word and a smile;
And the girl who's smart to touch his heart
Has backed a winning card,
For Maud or Kate, a first-class mate
Is a real Ale Coldstream Guard.

When [illegible] rolling drum tells your [illegible]

His smile is a trifle grim,
But he sings his song as he strides along,
For he knows it's up to halt;
When the order's out, and he's got the route
The soldier who is starred,
All fine and fit, in his khaki kit,
Is he of the Coldstream Guard.

He takes his stand in a foreign land,
And you will not see his flinch,
When the shrapnels burst like things accurst
They can't budge him an inch;
With calm, true eye he just lets fly—
It's a bull's-eye on his card,
With an aim so nice that he don't try twice,
This lad of the Coldstream Guard.

Like a rock he stood, and he's just as good
When the order is to charge,
Afoot he's fleet—a good six feet
Of energy at large;
Agog to go and reach the foe,
At them he's pelting hard,
And they always reel before the steel
Of the boys of the Coldstream Guard.

In the hour of death his last quick breath
For the Flag he'll proudly yield,
In a forlorn hope there is always scope
For a martyr on the field;
To the captain's call spring one and all,
Prompt as on promenade,
For the ringing cry is "Up—and die
Like men of the Coldstream Guard!"

Amid steel and shot they falter not,
The officer and his men,
Erect they stand for the dear old land,
Though death come quickly then;
But heaven will mark the Tyrant dark
Whose sword the earth has scarred,
And clutch the soul of every foul
Who dies like the Coldstream Guard!

Shibardo.

Farewell Letter From Famous Rugby Players

TORONTO, May 17.— Corporal Ross Binkley, the famous Rugby player and athlete, who, with other gallant members of the machine gun section of the Toronto Regiment fell at the Battle of Langemarck, wrote a letter to his mother on April 15th while resting in a hay-mow in France. It is believed to be the last he wrote, and is a reflection of the writer's constant cheerfulness which made him so popular everywhere he was known. Corporal Binkley say, in part:

"Dear Mother,—What am I going to say and how am I going to say it? It is a most peculiar thing that since coming to France there ahs never been any period of time when I felt like writing, and, as a result, I have written only two letters.

"The morrow may bring a German bullet or a route march, or an inspection by General Something or other, but the one necessary thing for you to do is to take heed of it. You don't know where you are going to; you are simply on your way. You don't know where you are when you arrive somewhere. You pass through villages, the names of which you never heard before and which you whistle but cannot pronounce. If the end of your march is a billet, you know it will be a barn and that your bed will be of hay or straw, one used before by other troops and as 'lousy' as a cuckoo, and one that you must fight the mice to retain.

"The odor of a cow stable directly underneath mingles with that of a pig pen across the barn yard. The budding poet and love-sick swain sings of the new mown hay, but the Canadian soldier is quite sure that hay or straw never could have seen that happy condition.

"And so the days go and the nights pass, and so I suppose the days and nights will pass, until finally the predestined time arrives when the gods decide what the ultimate issue for each of us is to be. I believe we are through with the trenches. We have been seasoned, so to speak, and it would appear that when some thousands, like ourselves, are new to the matters of war, get this experience, then we may be entrusted with matters of more moment and importance. When or where this will happen is beyond our knowing. Probably it is best that it is so.

"Of the war and of the situation in general I can tell you nothing. Every day we can see the aeroplanes and hear the boom of the guns, but only occasionally does a paper reach us. They are our only means of acquiring news. You know and read more about the war than I do. My knowledge is purely local and is confined to the immediate vicinity of our billet.

"I received your letter and I am glad that you have had such good health. Am feeling fine and am really enjoying the experiences. Once in a while the 'homey' feeling becomes strong and a sight of King and Yonge Streets, Toronto, or Dundas would be welcome, but the longer that time is delayed the more welcome it will be."

Latest Miracle Is Telephoning To San Francisco

MONTREAL, May 14.—"Hello, San Francisco, can you hear me?"

"Fine, couldn't be better."

To a miracle, but we apparently prefer our miracles this way. Talking with a man in San Francisco as easily, hearing his replies as clearly and being put to no more bother about the whole thing than is required by an ordinary telephone message is, after all, too stupendous a thing to be embellished by formalities or emphasized by accessories.

Yesterday afternoon, a little group of twenty or thirty Montrealers, meeting in the office of the Bell Telephone Company, were witnesses of and and participants in this test of telephone over 3,800 miles of wire.

It was the longest distance ever attempted. A month or so ago, the connection between New York and San Francisco was established and its workability demonstrated. Yesterday Montreal was linked into the New York end and the distance became 3,800 miles. With the best facilities civilization can furnish, it takes ninety-six hours of constant travel to make the trip in person. It takes just one-fifteenth of a second to do it over the telephone.

Voices Very Clear.

If the test had not been so successful; if only a faint whisper of a voice had come from the receivers, it might have been easier to appreciate what was taking place. Talking to a man as far away as the centre of the earth is one of the things it is impossible to sense; there are no standards for ready and familiar comparison. To all intents and purposes, the conversation might have been with a man in the next room. One could hear the grating of the chair on the floor, the laughter and comments of those looking on in the San Francisco office, every shade and inflection of the voice of the man speaking. As was pointed out to Mr. Jones upon whose shoulders, until his recent advancement, have been heaped the complaints of all Montrealers who had—or thought they had—a grievance against the Telephone Company, if it only was always as easy to talk to Westmount as apparently it is to talk to San Francisco—but that has nothing to do with yesterday's entertainment.

To C. F. Sise, Jr., fell the honour of being the first man in the world to hold a long-distance conversation nearly 4,000 miles in length. After him, Sir Herbert Holt spoke for a moment, as did Mr. Walker of the Bank of Commerce, Mr. Benson, President of the Board of Trade, Mr. Pauze, President of la Chambre de Commerce, and several others. In the San Francisco office were Mr. Peck, of the Panama Exhibition, Col. Hutchison, the Canadian Commissioner, and several others.

The physical and material phase is hardly less interesting than the results that are made possible by it. About 15,000 miles of copper wire are used in connecting the two cities, as are 130,000 telephone poles. The service required two 'physical' circuits and one 'phantom' circuit. In this connection it is worth noting that, while the construction of the Panama Canal has cost $310,000,000 in the last nine years, the construction work of the Bell Telephone Company in the same space of time, has cost $630,000,000. Miracles come high these days.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

THE "ENTRE NUS"

How Invitation by Cross-Eyed Man Mixed Things Up.

By ADELE MENDEL.

"Don't say another word about the dance, I beg of you," said Beatrice. "I simply can't bear to hear any more about it."

"Since when are such subjects too frivolous for your ears?" queried Drusilla, raising her eyebrows and looking up from her fancy work. "Especially when in all your finery and glory you most likely will lead the grand march with Charles."

"Nothing of the kind," answered Beatrice in a I-don't-care-what-happens tone.

"Didn't you have a new gown for the occasion?"

"Yes, and I'll wear it if only to shew some people that I can't be stunned by their audacity."

"But if you're not going with Charles, who is?"

"Hallie Weston."

"Incredible! Why, only last week Charles remarked in his nonchalant way, 'What do you girls see in Hallie? She reminds me of the brook that went on forever, with her incessant talking.'"

"Drusilla, when a young man talks to you about a dance and asks your opinion on all details, and then at the eleventh hour asks another girl, do you think he can ever justify his conduct?" asked Beatrice.

"No, and I simply can't understand it," admitted Drusilla.

"Are you sure?"

"Positive. Hallie and I met Charles in his usual cordial way, and stopped to say to Hallie, 'I'm going to take you to the "Entre Nus" affair, Hallie must have had some inkling as she didn't appear surprised, and only said, 'I thank you; what time will you call for me?'

"For a moment I felt the keen insult that he should invite her in my presence, and then I said, 'I'm going with Jesse Tompkins.' You know Jesse is always pestering me to go with him, so I knew I could rely upon his taking me. We left Charles at the corner, and though I was the one to be offended, he doesn't even bow to me when we pass each other by."

"I Simply Can't Understand It," Said Drusilla.

"Jesse is much shorter than you; don't you feel like a giantess when you're with him?"

"Well," said Beatrice, "it seems to me like a fight that I would give either one of them the satisfaction that I couldn't go, and anyway a little man with loads of money is better than no man at all."

"That's philosophical enough, my dear, but don't get a bad case of gloom over it. If Charles is so fickle and changeable in his affections, it's better to know it now than later."

After Drusilla left, the words, "It's better to know it now," kept ringing in Beatrice's ears. She hated to face the truth that any man could so lightly throw her friendship aside after all his professions of sincerity.

"I'll not have any one's sympathy," she determined. "At the dance I'll be the gayest of all."

"Why, Beatrice," exclaimed her friend a few days later, "how much better you look than the last time I saw you. You are fairly radiant. It must be your hat. It's so becoming."

A faint color rose to Beatrice's cheek. "Don't blame it all on my hat," she said; "give me credit for a portion of my good looks."

"I just saw Hallie and she failed completely to appreciate Charley's charms," continued Drusilla; "and she never was so bored in all her existence, that she was the only girl whose partner did not send her a corsage bouquet, and he never even was concerned whether her program was filled or not. In fact she said there was no pleasure to go with a young man who was constantly noticing another girl. Why do you think he asked her and then was so rude?"

Hallie smiled.

"Promise you'll never tell."

"I'll never tell a soul."

"He was an unwilling victim. Toward the end of the evening Charlie came up to me saying, 'Hope you enjoyed yourself.'"

"Oh, strenuously," I replied.

"Doesn't your back ache from dancing with that midget?" he asked in a [illegible] sympathetic way.

"Not a bit," I answered. "Jesse is a splendid dancer."

"Then you prefer that dwarf's attentions to mine?" he exclaimed in a jealous rage.

"Just as much as you prefer Hallie to me," I replied.

"But I don't and never will," he protested, looking at me tenderly. "I asked you for tonight, not her."

"You asked me? How can you deliberately say that when I heard you invite her?"

"Didn't I look at you, when I said 'I'm going to take you to the dance?'"

"Then I laughed and laughed until I could not laugh any more."

"What was so ludicrous about that?" interrupted Drusilla.

"[illegible] about it. He's cross-eyed, and when he looked at Hallie, in his own heart and soul he was in reality staring at me. That's where all the trouble came up."

"Oh, how disconcerted Hallie would be if she knew."

"She never will. The best part of our quarrel was the reconciliation."

"It's always been my pet aspiration to see you two married," said Drusilla.

"Well, your wish will soon come true."

"Beatrice," asked Drusilla, "won't it be dreadful after you are married if Charles should say loving things to you and look at another woman?"

"I won't mind that ever again," declared Beatrice vehemently. "Because Charles says all other women look alike to him except me. So there!"

Sewage Disposal Plant Getting All Dressed Up, But No Place to Go

Walter J. Francis, of Montreal, is Coming in on Wednesday to Look Over the Difficulty and Report to City Council

Peterborough's quarter of a million dollar sewage disposal plant is getting all dressed up, but has no place to go. For several years past, at least two or three, it has been pacing up and down between the bath room and the mahogany chiffonier. Citizens had been led to believe that it would have been down in the drawing room last summer, but at the last moment the valet lost a collar button. The consequent delay, protracted as it was, became more protracted; but the word went out not so long ago that everything had been smoothed out. Citizens again grew expectant, but quite recently the civic valet—the Council—intimated that there was more difficulty and the drawing-room lights have again been lowered. Enquiry here and there bears out the fact that the present status of the sewage plant of operations is somewhat similar to that of the unhappy individual who found himself "all dolled up but had no place to go."

There was a time when it was believed that the last opposition to the Kennedy site opposite the end of Lock street had been routed. It was also decided to locate a pumping station near the corner of King George and Lock streets. To-day, however, no one knows where the disposal plant and pumping station are going to be situated. The city has arranged for Walter J. Francis to come up from Montreal on Wednesday to report upon desirable locations or the most desirable location for the necessary pumping station. As A No. 1 engineers of the Francis variety come high, this inspection will likely add a negligible couple of hundred dollars to the final quarter of a million

Voice of The People

To the Editor, The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—I was one of the many citizens of Peterborough who purchased for my Sunday's reading a copy of The "Buffalo Courier," and likewise I guess I was one of the many citizens who read the disgusting editorial which appeared in that issue under the caption of "A Voice From Over the Sea," the closing paragraph of which I here enclose:

"How are the Germans to be conquered after being thrown back beyond their own frontier? Whence are to come the men that can conquer them? Eight months ago a great ado was made about the troops from India and the wonderful things that the Indian princes would do. But for a long time there has been a strange silence regarding aid from India."

I think in the light of what has happened in the last three-quarters of a year, when the British troops have shown their mettle as never before in the history of our grand old Motherland, this kind of talk from our neighbours to the south should cause a deep resentment in Canada against the Hearst publications, who are noted for their anti-British sputterings. No "Hoch der Courier" for mine in the future, and, I hope our citizens will follow and do likewise.

Yours truly,
CANUCK.

Will Pay Visit To Peterboro'

Salvation Army Songsters of Galt Are a Splendid Musical Organization

The Salvation Army Songsters of Galt will visit Peterborough Saturday and Sunday of next week. This is a very fine musical organization, and their visit to Peterborough is being looked forward to, with keen interest.

Referring to a recent entertainment given in Galt by the Songsters, the Galt Reporter gives an extended account. In part it says:

"The numbers of the staff songsters were splendidly executed, in a well balanced, excellently trained manner. "Singing Merrily" was a number, catchy and bright, every word of which, though rapidly enunciated, was understood by the audience. This was a trait noticeable in every vocal selection rendered. "The Soldier's Chorus," "Good-bye, Pharaoh," and "The Peace of God," were all rendered by the songsters, and proved most delightful. The closing number of the programme was "It Is Well with My Soul," sung in a well-sustained manner and making a fitting close for the concert.

Although it would be difficult to choose any single number from the programme for special mention, the audience had a favourite, and although against the rules of the songsters, compelled an encore. The singer was Captain Mapp, and the song, "Jesus, the Very Thought of Thee," sung to the well known setting( Bond's "Perfect Day." Exquisitely sung, the number was enhanced by the accompaniment of Staff-Captain Florence Easton, and the violin obligato of Mr. Herbert Smeeton."

Y. M. C. A. NOTES

The forty members of the boys' department had the time of their lives on Saturday morning, when they had their first hike of the season. The boys left the building at 9.30 and hiked over to the canal and along the shore till they came to the woods just south of the Nassau Bridge, where a camp was pitched for the day. After dinner games were played. The scouting game proved very interesting, also the baseball match. Next Saturday the hike will be to Lily Lake when every member is invited to come and bring his chum.

The Boys' Secretary would like to meet every member of the Employed Boys' Club to-night at 7.30.

GOLF

BRITISH GAIN MORE GERMAN TRENCHES

Lindsay Mother Sends Only Son

"Would Rather Die of Starvation Than in Dishonour," She Says in Tears

LINDSAY, May 18.—"I would rather die of starvation than in dishonour." Such was the answer of a Lindsay mother when in the presence of Sergt.-Major Allen, her son, Pte. Blair, asked permission of his mother to join the Canadian forces for oversea service. The young man was doubtful whether his mother would give her consent, as he is her only support. However, with tears in her eyes she allowed her son to don the khaki and he is today training at Lindsay headquarters.

Four members of the Lindsay Citizens' Band have enlisted for service, namely, Ptes. Shingleton, Mark Ingle, Sproule and Hansel. The latter is already at the front.

GERMAN TRENCHES ON A FRONT OF TWO MILES TAKEN BY THE BRITISH

Hundreds of Germans Seeking Surrender Annihilated by Their Own Guns---Driven Across Yser

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

PARIS, May 18.—The official communication issued by the French War Office last night announces the capture by the British troops of several additional German trenches to the north of La Bassee, together with a thousand prisoners.

In an engagement at Ville-sur-Tourbe, the French took four hundred prisoners, and in an attack at the Ailly Wood carried several German works and captured 250 prisoners.

ON YSER'S EAST BANK.

The text follows:

"In Belgium the enemy threatened by our successful attacks of the preceding days with a complete envelopment, evacuated last night the positions which he had occupied to the west of the Yser Canal. We have, on our part, maintained all our gains on the east bank.

"To the north of La Bassee the British troops, who were very strongly [illegible] tinuing the fighting. Yesterday they carried several German trenches and inflicted on the enemy very heavy losses.

ONE CONTINGENT ANNIHILATED.

"One contingent of several hundred Germans, caught between the fire of the British machine guns and that of their own artillery, were almost entirely exterminated under the cross-fire. Our allies have taken a thousand prisoners and some machine guns.

"To the north of Arras a thick mist has prevailed all day, preventing any important action on either side. Nevertheless the struggle continues very actively, on the slopes of Lorette specially. There we have repulsed all the German counter-attacks.

CAPTURE 350 PRISONERS.

"At Ville-au-Bois, near Berry-au-Bac, the enemy made an attack on our trenches, which was immediately arrested. The number of unwounded prisoners taken by us on Sunday, in the affair at Ville-sur-Tourbe, was 350, besides fifty wounded.

"Yesterday morning, at break of day, we carried out an attack in the Ailly Wood, occupying several German works. We also took three machine guns and 250 prisoners, among whom were several officers.

"In the outskirts of the Forest of Le Pretre two German battalions made three attempts to sortie from their trenches, but our fire held them up short."

THE AFTERNOON REPORT.

The French War Office yesterday afternoon issued the following statement on the progress of hostilities:

"In the region of Het Sas we have continued to make progress. Sunday evening we occupied a house strongly defended by the enemy, and on the east bank of the canal we took possession of the first German line, making at the same time 145 prisoners and capturing four machine guns. A counter-attack on the part of the enemy was a complete failure.

"Nothing new to the north of Arras, where it is again raining, with the exception of an extremely violent artillery duel in the region of Lorette, and the sanguinary checking in this same vicinity of four counter-attacks on the part of the Germans, who suffered heavy losses.

"On the rest of the front nothing has been reported.

A TRICK THAT FAILED.

"On the Oise, at a point near Bailly, the Germans, undoubtedly in an effort to influence our sharpshooters, displayed in front of our lines a Turkish flag, a green background with the crescent. Our African troops responded to this provocation at once by rifle fire which brought this flag to the ground. A sharpshooter subsequently went out and brought the flag back to our lines."

Advised to Conciliate With States

Ambassadors Recommend to Their Home Governments That Extreme Measures Should Be Made to America

REASONS FOR IT

Special to The Examiner:

WASHINGTON, May 18.—The German government has been advised to conciliate with the United States.

Despite denials for "public consumption," is was learned definitely to-day that Count Von Bernstorff, the German Ambassador, and Dr. Constantin T. Dumba the Austrian Ambassador, have recommended to their home governments that extremé concessions should be made to America at this time.

They have reported that the President's demands are endorsed by the entire people and have pointed out that compliance with them would do more to renew American sympathy for Germany than all other efforts fathered from Berlin since the war started.

Whether or not these recommendations will be effective is not known.

Past records, some officials suggested, would indicate that recommendations of Ambassadors received scant consideration. With Italy almost certainly entering war, however, others think it possible suggestions of experienced diplomats, such as Count Von Bernstorff and Dr. Dumba, may have more weight than usual.

AUSTRO-GERMAS HAVE AGAIN BEEN HALTED IN ADVANCE ON PRZEMYSL

Russians Moving Southward for An Invasion of Bukowina Have Forced the Crossing of the River Pruth

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

PETROGRAD, May 18.—Austro-Germans have again been halted in their advance on Przemysl, according to despatches received here to-day.

The enemy's infantry engagements twenty miles north of the fortress were described in semi-official despatches as "exceptionally heavy."

The War Office announced to-day that the Russians moving southward for an invasion of Bukowina have forced the crossing of the river Pruth near Kolomea.

The Russians have swept the Germans back beyond the Dubissa River, capturing German trenches and taking a number of prisoners.

LONDON, May 18.—Comparative quiet prevails all along the battle front in Galicia and the Carpathians, according to the latest information from the eastern war theatre, but the opinion is general here that a great and decisive battle is likely to commence almost immediately. The Russians have now arranged their reinforced troops behind that water course, and the belief is general in London that they are about to launch a sudden stroke against the advancing Austro-German armies before the latter have time to establish themselves firmly in their newly-won positions.

The fortress of Peremysl is expected to play a prominent part in the operations hereafter, as it already has been partly encircled by hostile forces. The Germans have occupied Jaroslau, north of Peremysl and lower down on the San, while the Austrians yesterday announce that they have captured Lrohobycz, southeast of Peremysl and southwest of Lemberg. Lrohobycz is near the Dniester, and lies to the east of the upper San.

The following Russian official statement, dated Saturday and delayed in transmission from Petrograd, has been received here:—

"From the middle of April news began to reach us of the transport of great numbers of Germans from the western front and their concentration in western Galacia. The state of affairs thus created forced us to stop the development of our advance in the direction of Mezo Laborcz and Uszok, in order to insure ourselves facilities for sending reserves to the threatened sectors of our front.

"However, the forces which the enemy threw against our front were so considerable that our third army was unable to check the pressure on the Cenjnovitze-Goritza sector. The result was desperate and uninterrupted fighting, with impetuous counter-attacks, which prevented the enemy from breaking our front. The enemy's action was reduced to frontal attacks on the positions of the third army, which he occupied in succession. The subdivisions of our troops watched them to maintain perfect order, cope with the difficult problems of the battle and inflict enormous losses on the enemy.

"On May 14 the whole third army deployed on the San, and in conformity with this fact we were obliged to make rearrangements which were already near completion to enable the adjacent armies to unite their fronts.

OFFENSIVE ON LEFT WING.

'Although we were obliged to fall back in the Charpathians we simultaneously made a decisive offensive in Eastern Galicia, whereby we gained results essential to our left wing and inflicted a severe defeat on the Austrians on the Dniester front of over 150 verests (about 100 miles.) Within five days, beginning on the 9th, we captured in this region about 30,000 prisoners and forced the enemy to retreat in disorder across the Pruth.

"On May 14 our long range batteries at Peremysl dispersed a column of the enemy approaching from the west, inflicting heavy losses. On the other sections of the San and the eastern slopes of the Carpathians no actions are reported.

"The Austrian army defeated on the Dniester on the 14th could not maintain its position on the left bank of the Pruth, except in the region of Kolomea, with the assistance of reinforcements brought by train, bringing in the last reserves composed of sappers, detachments still in course of formation, and the last available units. On the same day our troops carried Nadworna after a great struggle. On the preceding evening our cavalry, which forced a bridge head in one attack, occupied Sniatyn. We are continuing energetic pursuit.

"In the region of Shavli (Courland) the fighting is developing favourably. We repulsed several attacks west of Shavli and successfully attacked a strong column of the enemy near the Village of Brodzi, which was endeavouring to envelop Shavli from the north. We threw it back."

SUNDAY OFFICIAL REPORT.

An official statement issued in Petrograd on Sunday says:

'While the region east of the Rivers Windau and Dubyssa is now free of the enemy, the Germans, who attempted several days ago to assume the offensive at Shavli, were repulsed Friday with heavy loss. On the West Niemen Saturday the Russians gained a series of successes.

"On Friday and Saturday fighting began on the San in the region of Lezakhow and Jaroslau. On the River Pruth Friday the Russians continued their successes, reaching several points on the railroad between Delatyn and Kolomea."

Divorced From Man Who Would Take a Bath

MUNCIE, IND., May 18.—As a reason why a divorce from James Stanley should be given her, Mrs. Emma Stanley says he never would bathe in winter time and seldom at other times.

Stanley, who was in the superior court to answer his wife's complaint, admitted his ambition was infrequent, and said, on cross-examination, the reason of his failing to bathe in winter was because of his fear of catching cold.

Judge Vanatta thought the wife had made out a case of cruel and inhuman treatment within the meaning of the statutes and awarded her a decree of divorce.

Combing Won't Rid Hair of Dandruff

The only sure way to get rid of dandruff is to dissolve it, then you destroy it entirely. To do this, get about four ounces of liquid arvon; apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the finger tips.

Do this to-night, and by morning, most if not all, of your dandruff will be gone, and three or four more applications will completely dissolve and entirely destroy every single sign and trace of it, no matter how much dandruff you may have.

You will find too that all itching and digging of the scalp will stop at once, and your hair will be fluffy, lustrous, glossy, silky and soft, and look and feel a hundred times better.

You can get liquid arvon at any drug store. It is inexpensive and never fails to do the work.

"BILLY" CARLEY'S BROTHER KILLED IN FRANCE

Peterborough curlers will sympathize with "Billy" Carley of Lindsay, in the death of his brother, Private Dan Carley, who was killed in action in France. "Billy" skipped a rink of "scrubs" in the local bonspiel, defeated Skips Little and Flavelle of Lindsay, and is remembered by his admonitions to his men.

Private Percy Chambers of Pontypool was seriously wounded at Langemarck.

WAS WOUNDED IN THE NEUVE CHAPELLE FIGHT

Pte. Geo. Curson, of 57th, However, Rejoined His Comrades Before Langemarck Battle and Nothing Has Been Heard From Him Since---Tells of the Artillery Fire at Neuve Chapelle.

Pte. Geo. Curson of the 57th detachment was wounded before the battle of Langemarck, but evidently was released from hospital in time to rejoin his Peterborough comrades before they went into the big fight, judging by an interesting letter received by T. E. Park, 309 McDonnel Street. Pte. Curson says: "I was discharged from hospital yesterday and am now at the general base Le Havre. I have just drawn out my equipment and am all ready to join the boys again in the firing line, which will be shortly.

Speaking of his first experience under fire he says: "We first saw the trenches at Armentieres and you can bet we were all excited as we drew near the firing line. The bullets began to ping and zip around us, and from then on we were continually ducking our heads until we reached the trenches. I cannot say we were nervous; just excited and longing for daybreak. I hardly know what I expected to see. I can say I was somewhat disappointed when daylight came for instead of seeing the enemy's head looking over their trenches I could see nothing and had it not been for the bullets flying overhead I would have thought no enemy were in front. I very soon learned that they were there, but that's a story I'll tell when we meet again.

The morning before the battle of Neuve Chapelle we had a message from the General. I forget what the exact words were now, but he told us how many army corps we were opposed to, but predicted victory for us. We stood to at 6.30 a.m., and at seven our guns opened fire, and it as Hell. They fired batteries at a time, then volleys, then all together. We sat tight and expected to go up every minute. Shells were bursting everywhere, in front and behind us. A trench mortar put a section of our company out of business. We were not in the charge at the village, as we were on its left. Things cooled down about noon and in the evening I was brought down by motor ambulance en route for Rouen."

Nothing has been heard from Pte. Curson since the Langemarck fight, and his name has not yet appeared in any of the casualty lists. With the letter published above he sent a photograph of himself, Pte. Ralph Shurety, formerly of Peterborough, who is with the 48th Highlanders, and another Peterborough boy whose name is not given. The photograph was taken in the hospital grounds and on the back Pte. Curson has written: "I guess this is the first picture to be seen in Peterborough of two of the old 57th wounded. The other lad got his in the head. Are we down-hearted?"

HAS RELATIVES IN LINDSAY

Private W. A. Brown, 10th Grenadiers, reported missing, was employed with the Dunlop Tire Company, Toronto, before he enlisted with the first contingent. His relatives live at Lindsay, Ont., but he has a brother an officer on the police force in Toronto. Private Brown, who is in his twenty-fifth year, was at one time connected with the 45th Regiment.

Happy Hawkins in the Panhandle

Jim looked as though he rather doubted if he'd feel entirely comfortable at havin' a total stranger come along, take away his herd, put him down in the rooky class, promise to overload him with drudgery, and then bid him not to feel responsible; but this was the only arrangement I could make under the circumstances. My disposition is such that I can take orders from New Year's to Christmas from a feller who has confidence in himself and is handlin' his own stuff; but hanged if I could ever find any peace in holdin' a convention about a little thing like a herd o' cows; so I slapped Jim on the shoulder and went to kickin' the other boys awake.

After breakfast I started that herd off in some shape with Shorty and Red doin' the pointin', the rest o' the crowd in the swing, pals on opposite sides, except Jim, the two Greasers, and the half-breed who were put on the drag, Jim to see 'at everything was kept up snug, which was easy enough as we didn't have a sore foot in the bunch and grass was fat and rank. I found Flames, the kid, to be a ferret-eyed youngster with the unusual cleverness common to strays of all kinds, so I set him to helpin' Monody, and wranglin' the extra ridin' stuff, which was an easy job, all of Jim's hosses being gentle as doves.

I told 'em to keep the herd movin' durin' the early hours but never to drive 'em. In the shape they were in careful handling could get eighteen or twenty miles a day out of 'em, and they never know what what they were out for a little stroll on their own hook. It was a pretty sight after they'd strung out to near a mile and I saw 'at th' boys all understood the handling of cows except Whiskers, who didn't even know how to sit a saddle comfortable.

There wasn't a thing in sight to suggest 'at any other humans were left on earth but us and it was like bein' at sea without a compass, the roll o' the plains makin' purty good waves, and the mirages makin' even better. Durin' the heat o' the day a feller's eyes saw a lot o' things which weren't there at all, lakes and woods and bold-runnin' streams; but everything went as smooth as grease and we were a mighty contented lot at supper. Countin' Jim, I had eleven riders; so I split 'em into four watches—Red and Shorty countin' as one watch, and Jim goin' in with the two who had been on night-herd when I arrived.

I put Jim in the second watch and told him to keep about four rods out from the herd and to sing as he rode, he goin' in one direction while the other two rode in the opposite direction, keepin' the herd between 'em. Jim said he didn't know nothin' fit to sing to a cow; but I told him a cow wasn't nowise choicy and to do his best even if he had to sing in a foreign tongue; the voice not the words bein' important.

We were all tired that night and bedded down early; but I made it a point to go out after Jim had been on guard about an hour and found him [illegible] a dancing ditty and ridin' right in among the cows.

"What do ya mean by ridin' into that herd?" I snapped at him.

He swallered a time or two, and then sez, "I didn't notice what I was doin'. That's all the excuse I can offer."

"It's worse 'n none," sez I. "Less 'n that has started many a stampede, and if you did start one, I bet my saddle you wouldn't have any more idee 'n a rabbit how to stop it."

He didn't say a word and I rode around the herd and bedded down again. I didn't take much stock in his book-learnin' but I had to own up 'at the' was some good in that faggin' business.

Red and Shorty pushed the stuff off the bed-ground before they came in to breakfast; and by the time it was finished they were strung out and paradin' in the right direction. I wanted to get to a regular market trail as soon as I could, and then to loaf on as much quick fat as possible. It was early in the season and yet it's allus bad practice to dally along when the goin' good.

Whiskers, the useless only coffee-cooler, who really wasn't a ridin'-man at all, was surly that morning but didn't quite step over the traces. He kept up his fussin' back in the drag, but whenever I'd come near he'd shut up and the stuff was so easy to handle I couldn't find any fault. While we were eatin' lunch, Whiskers asked me if I'd let him have a few dollars that evenin' so he could ride over to Tascosa, which was now to the south of us, to get some things he needed. I couldn't see it, and then he turned on Jim and cussed him purty free.

"I told you this mornin'," sez Jim, "that I would let you have a little money if the boss said you could go; but I've turned this herd over to him and have no more to say about it than you have."

"Seems funny a man can't go to town when he wants to," sez Davea Harter, one o' the two who had been absent when I arrived. "We're closer to Tascosa now than when you went in the first day you took on."

I straightened back an' scrutinized 'em all. "What is this—a debatin' society?" sez I. "If so be you'll make out a list of what you actually need I may send in an' get it filled; but Whiskers won't be the messenger."

"Well, what I want is a faro layout," sez Harter.

"Bring me out a blonde music-teacher," sez Kendall, Harter's pal.

Then they started in and became very gay, finally leavin' off what they wanted for 'emselves and statin' what should be brought out for Jim and me. I couldn't make out what had give 'em their heart until finally Whiskers averaged off my silence again' the noise his side was makin' and thought the time was ripe for a showdown.

"You're makin' a play at bein' the Panhandle Kid," sez he; "but you're about as much like him as you are like Adam's off ox. Is this feller the Panhandle Kir," Red?"

"Well," piped Red, "I never saw him; but from what I've heard tell, the Panhandle Kid is about two sizes smaller."

"The Panhandle Kid never knew nothin' about cows," sez Whiskers. "This feller's a bluffer, that's what he is."

"Who did I tell that I was the Panhandle Kid?" sez I nervous like. "I never told nobody that I was the Panhandle Kid."

"Well, I don't propose to work under you as a boss," sez Whiskers.

"Me neither," sez Harter and Kendall. The two Greasers an' the half-breed shook their heads.

"I don't see any way out o' this except to fight it out," sez I, gentle and smiling. "Hwo do you want to fight, Whiskers?"

He was settin' close to me and had got his gun handy, while I was only trustin' to memory to find mine. "Why with guns," sez he, jumpin' to his feet an' pullin' his forty-five.

He was a slow-movin' old freighter and I beat him to it both ways. As he threw up his gun I straightened out my arm, quick like, ratsin' the muzzle o' my gun and spikin' him square in the centre of his forehead with the butt of it. Then I turned my face towards the rest and laughed when I started to tighten up my lips he grabbed up a bucket and soused the old one vehement-like, as though he sort o'hated everybody in the outfit, 'specially himself and the victim.

"Now, men," I sez sober and serious as whiskers began to splutter over givin' the world one more try-out, "I've already spanked two members of this outfit and that's my extreme limit; the next time I lose my patience, it's goin' to be plantin' time in the Panhandle. I think you fellers were only puttin' up a joke on Whiskers, and I want you to have all the innocent fun you can think up; and we have strayed quite some little distance off the airline, and so I can't pamper you as continuous as you seem to expect. Just to show that I'm perfectly friendly, though, I'll tell ya confidential that up my way, disputin' with a boss is the Injun sign for war. Now spread yourselves back on that herd."

They went free and hearty without slippin' me one sullent look; and I shook hands with my luck and felt grateful. I was unspeakable young at that time and only acted from instinct; but about all experience has ever done for me was to show me that my instinct was right in the first place. I was allus naturally strong for justice, but was allus a little suspicious o' the law, and this left me free to decide questions pronto—which is a big thing in dealin' with rovin' men.

After I had enjoyed watchin' my outfit take up their duties with a new and better heart, I turned around, and saw Monody's eyes borin' clear through me—from a foot distant.

"Who are ya?" sez he.

"I'm Happy Hawkins," sez I, and it took all my will-po er to keep my eyelids from narrowin'. "I had a little fall-out up in Wyoming and came down here for my health. I was feelin' purtyish and kicky when I arrived; but that's about worn off."

For near a minute we eyed each other straight and then his heart-grin stole out and spread all over his face. "Nope," he said, shakin' his head, "you ain't connected with the law, you don't lie with your lips, and you can't lie to me with your eyes. I'm goin' to tie right up to ya—so count on me till you cut the rope yourself."

He spoke in a curious low tone with a heap o' music to it, though most times he was as raspy as a crow, and then he turned to his waggon, and I rode after the herd feelin' more respectful to Fote than to myself.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

AN OLD SEA CHEST

It Contained Treasure Which Brought Happiness to Both Old and Young.

By GENEVIEVE ULMAR.

"It's the law or poverty—take your choice," was the stern dictum of obstinate, self-opinionated James Ross, uncle of Philip Carle, who stood before him.

"I am sorry, uncle, but it's not the law for me," came the clear, definite response. "I'm not cut out for it, the business is distasteful to me, and I would rather have a crust of bread and my artistic ambitions, than the softest judicial seat and a fortune."

"So much the poorer you, so much the richer I," quoted the old money grubber. "You need bank on no dependence on me hereafter. Wait." And the speaker snapped open a drawer in his desk and took from it a small package. "That belonged to your father. It is legally mine, but I give it to you, as a memento or to waste, as you like. I wash my hands of you."

Philip Carle made his exit feeling that he had made a pretty bad mess of his affairs. There was no help for it, however. The artistic impulse in him was strong, and uncertain as seemed the field he was bound to stick to it.

He had not gone to his self-centered relative to ask money for himself. While he had very little of that commodity personally, the needs of another had urged him to apply for assistance. He undid the wrapper of the little parcel. It contained a diamond ring, probably a remnant of the wealth he knew his dead father had once possessed.

"I will never sell it," he said, walking on thoughtfully, "but"— and he stopped at the first pawnbroker's shop he came to.

"I will loan you three hundred dollars," its proprietor said, and Philip nodded with a lump in his throat, trying to believe that what he was doing was right.

"What About This?"

He at length turned into a small tailoring shop. Its show windows were neat as a pin. A rather unique sign swung over its doorway. It read:

"Only the lilies of the field can clothe themselves cheaper than you can in this shop."

"Well, how is business, Mr. Garland?" inquired Philip of an old man with the worried yet expectant face of a parson waiting and hoping for work.

"Getting worse, if possible, all the time," was the reply. "I am afraid my venture is a poor one. Locality bad, or else I do not know how to win trade. There's the mortgage, too. They have given me a bare twenty-four hours to settle or give up possession. Why does not my brother come on?"

"There is the money to relieve your present necessities," said Philip, handing over the proceeds of the loan.

The old man stared; quick tears arose to his eyes. He waved back the generous hand extended, but Philip persuaded him with success. He induced his friend to make one more trial of his business experiment, and left him with encouraging words.

"I had to do it," Philip told himself.

"I can't see Mr. Garland lose his all, if it is only for her sake—dear Isabel! How he has struggled to give her a musical education. So near to acquiring it, too. I won't regret a good act."

It was Philip's first picture, the portrait of this Isabel, that smiled down from an easel as the young artist entered his studio. Quite incidentally he had become acquainted with Mr. Garland and then with his ward. Isabel was the daughter of the closest friend of the old man who had started him in life, lost his own wealth, and a more loyal guardian never lived.

Isabel was perfecting a musical education and Garland never let her know how hard he was pressed. For over a month he had been in an optimistic mood. He had received a letter from a brother, a sea captain who had been off on a two years' cruise. It came from a distant city and on its heels a large seaman's chest. The letter announced that very soon its writer would follow, and that he had come to share a royal fortune with his brother.

But since then not a word had been received from the sea captain. Business had fallen away, and now the generous-hearted artist had sacrificed his all to assist his friends.

No love word had been spoken between Philip and Isabel. Evenings when he visited the neat parlor behind the little shop, however, and the happy twain conversed of art, music and of all things beautiful, both felt that their souls were in complete harmony.

One week later Philip visited the Garland place to find the old man immersed in the deepest gloom. He had received a telegram announcing the death of his brother in a hospital. The last words he spoke were transmitted: "Tell my brother that the chest and its treasure is all his own."

Its "treasure," according to Garland, consisted of some sailor clothes, a few nautical instruments and a keg containing some oily compound of the deep.

"It's the end," said the old man dejectedly. "My main worry is that your generous loan is lost. They threaten to sell me out tomorrow."

Philip could do nothing further in a money way. He was resolute not to abandon his friends, however. That afternoon he made a contract with a picture house to do some copying. The recompense was not large, but it would fit into a plan he had for taking care of Garland until the latter could find new employment.

He was greeted with a sad spectacle when he reached the Garland place that evening. The old man was pacing the floor distractedly. Isabel, pale and distressed, was seated on all that had been left in the place by the ruthless creditors—the old sea chest.

"It will be easy to arrange for your care until you get on your feet again, Mr. Garland," said Philip cheerfully. "What are we going to do with the chest, though? Let us open it and select what is worth while."

They set aside a compass and some other few things out of the heterogeneous contents of the chest.

"What about this?" inquired Philip, lifting out the keg. "Why, Mr. Garland!"

Reversing the keg, the young artist uttered a very startled exclamation. Across one end there was traced in ink the word: "Ambergris."

One hour later the happy old man knew that the old sea chest had contained treasure, indeed. Worth more than its weight in gold, the ambergris, rare and readily salable, represented over twelve thousand dollars.

"Now Isabel can finish her music!" cried the old man joyfully, "and you, oh, my dear friend! command the fortune you have discovered to assist you in any way in your artist's career."

Isabel clung close to the arm of the young man who had so loyally shared their troubles, as he escorted them to a near hotel. The pressure of that dear hand thrilled Philip Carle. The old man walked prudently ahead of the happy pair.

And when they parted for the night, the decision had been reached that the musical and the art careers should be pursued—together.

CAME OUT OF HIS TRANCE

But It Took Some Language by the Motor Bus Conductor to Arouse Him.

"Fares, please."

But the passenger on top of the Fifth avenue motor bus gave no heed.

"Fares, please." This time a little louder.

Still the passenger oblivious.

"By the ejaculatory term 'fare,'" said the conductor, "I imply no reference to the state of the weather, the complexion of the admirable blonde you observe in the contiguous seat, nor even to the quality of service vouchsafed by this philathropic corporation. I merely allude, in a manner perhaps lacking in delicacy but not in conciseness, to the monetary obligation set up by your presence in this conveyance, and suggest that, without contempering your celebrity with enunciation, you immediately proceed to liquidate or—"

And at this point the passenger emerged from this trance.—New York Mail.

ALL FOR THE SAKE OF BETSY

When Col. J. J. Astor Jeopardized His Yacht and Passengers for a Dog.

Some years ago Col. J. J. Astor and his yacht Nourmahal and his son, Vincent, were reported lost at sea, the New York correspondent of the Cincinnati Times-Star recalls. Every one got excited about it—especially in New York newspaper offices. It was a New York newspaper, you may remember, which ran this headline over the story of the wreck of the Titanic: "Col. John Jacob Astor Lost at Sea; Two Thousand Others Also Drowned."

The Astor part of the headline was in very large pink letters and the rest was comparatively modest type. When the Nourmahal was reported lost the papers began to talk about sending out searching expeditions. The government dispatched a cruiser to search for Astor. Now Richard Barry tells the story of that episode for the first time. "Astor was very fond of his pet dog," says Barry. "The pet dog hated the sea. The second day out on the cruise the dog began to mope. Astor told the captain of the yacht to point her nose for shore. 'I'll take Betsy off and give her a run,' said the master of millions.

"They landed that day on the Carolino shore and Betsy got her run. But one run wasn't enough for her. Each day, as they voyaged south, Betsy was taken on land to stretch her legs. Finally they were off the Honduras coast, and Betsy began to howl for a frolic. The captain protested that the coast line was insufficiently charted, and that the Nourmahal was in danger of being wrecked if he was obliged to run in too near.

"'No matter,' said Astor. 'Betsy isn't happy.'

"So they put in, and shelved the Nourmahal on a rock, and every one north of Panama became violently excited because it wasn't possible to hear from the Astors, and it cost the yacht owner a good many dollars to get her off. But he didn't care. He was fond of Betsy—and Betsy had her run."

Had Heart Trouble FOR YEARS.

Weighed 87 Lbs. Now Weighs 138 Lbs.

Miss Beatrice Lougheed, Staples, Ont., writes: "I feel it my duty to tell you what Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills have done for me. I had heart trouble for quite a few years. I doctored for it, and altogether my bill amounted to $400, and still no cure. One day when very sick I was lying on a couch close to where some almanacs were hanging. I took one down, and was reading about what Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills cured, and thought I would try them. I got six boxes to start with; have only taken three boxes and I never felt so well in my life as I do now. I only weighed 87 pounds when I started to take them, and now I weigh 138 pounds. I hope all poor sufferers will be benefitted by them as I have been."

Wherever there is any weakness of the heart, Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills will strengthen it and build up a strong healthy system.

Was a Witness of the Attack By Enemy

Merville, North of France, April 25, by Paul Balband to the Toronto Star. Yesterday I had the great pleasure to come across two Torontonians, Lieut.-Col. Dr. G. G. Nasmith and Captain Ellis, son of my dean and pupil, Dr. Ellis of the Faculty of Applied Science, Toronto University. They have put up an institute of bacteriology on the second floor of our town hall.

As I heard Dr. Nasmith had been a witness of the treacherous attack by the Germans between the Canal of the Yser and the road to Poelcappelle, when they forced the French troops to give way (as it was impossible for them to stand the fumes of chlorine used by the enemy), I went to enquire about his health and what he had seen. "I witnessed the thing myself," he said. "We were looking for the Canadian headquarters and with the motor we were between Ypres and the front line, about four kilometres behind the line, when we saw a kind of ochre smoke in the direction of the trenches. Then the guns began a tremendous bombardment.

"We watched, standing by our motor car. Then, bye and bye, the noise became clearer and the report of the firing not nearer. In the meantime, our batteries began to crash, one of them right in front of us, others behind us. From the first guns to the last of the battery, the guns went off with the regularity of a clock. The shooting got nearer and nearer and we began to think we were in a dangerous position, when we heard the zip-zip of the bullets.

"Did you hear them?" he asked.

"Yes, I did," I replied.

"Well," went on Dr. Nasmith, "you know then what it is like. Then some Zouaves appeared, running, turning, shooting, running back again, and as they passed, they seemed to wonder how we stood calmly there smoking cigarettes. And they all showed us their chests, saying, 'Poitrine!' Poitrine' (chest chest!) meaning they could not breathe.

"We picked up a few of them who were wounded and carried them to an ambulance through Ypres. But the Germans had begun the bombardment of this town and shells were pouring on it and made the crossing rather dangerous. We passed safely through, but the cries of a woman were simply awful. The number of shells which had been shot that day must be tremendous."

I asked Colonel Nasmith which gas was used by the Germans, "Chlorine," he said, "and it is most poisonous. They took the opportunity of a very light breeze blowing from the German trenches toward the French. Nobody can stand that and it would be death to remain.

I heard since that this gas gives pneumonia and the effects are so powerful that a British major, who was standing three kilometres (nearly three miles) behind the lines, was affected by the gas and vomitted for the whole afternoon.

I just hear that they used the same means of destruction against the British lines near St. Eloi and a great movement of retreat was also felt there, but on both fronts, British and French, around Ypres, our troops have retaken the advantage.

The Canadians by their bravery, have strongly contributed to save the situation in the British lines, and have covered themselves with glory. This was first reported to me by an interpreted attacked to the first army of Sir Douglas Haig, and I was quite pleased to hear of the brave conduct of my adopted compatriots of the other side of the ocean.

Recognition of a Royal Scots officer's gallantry was made when at a special parade of the 2nd Company, 9th Battalion (Highlanders), the Royal Scots, at Bruntsfield Links, Lieutenant Kenneth Mackenzie was presented with the bronze medal and certificate of the Royal Humane Society for rescuing a soldier who had fallen into Leith Docks.

A FUND TO ASSIST THE CANADIAN SOLDIERS

The following letter has been sent the Christian Guardian, from Rev. H. A. Frost, who formerly preached in Charlotte St. Methodist Church following the death of Rev. T. J. Mansell:

A Fund to Help Canadian Soldiers.

To the Editor of the Christian Guardian:

Dear Sir,—The following letter, received a few days ago from Captain Harry A. Frost, one of the Methodist chaplains with the first Canadian contingent, will be read with very deep interest by the readers of the Christian Guardian:

"Coman's Hotel.
"21 and 23 Castle Hill Avenue,
"Folkstone, April 9th, 1915.

"Rev. T. Albert Moore, D.D.,

"Dear Brother,—I am writing you to-day in regard to a matter which I hinted at in my last letter to the Guardian in January. It is to give our Methodist people an opportunity to assist the Canadian boys, and especially Methodist lads, on this side of the water.

"This call ought to have come through our senior Methodist chaplain, Major Emsley, but as he is located with No. 1 General Hospital I am the one who has the roving work to do. I will give you an instance. I went to Southampton on a few days' leave. When there I met a Canadian medical officer, and learned that there were Canadian boys in Netley Hospital. I went out, and found one hundred who had not seen a 'padre' for six weeks. We know our boys are scattered around in about twenty different hospitals. Now our plan is for each church at home to put a certain amount of money at our disposal, and then in turn we shall visit these outlying hospitals and minister to our men. I don't mind spending my own cash for the boys, but it doesn't begin to cover what I would like to do. I simply cannot provide little extras which bring brightness into the men's lives when ill.

"Now this is my plan: To have a fund opened in Toronto, by you or some other responsible official of our Church, and to send on to us the money as we need it. We shall spend the money as judiciously as we can, and when the war is over the balance that is left could be used with honour to the boys and credit to our Church in erecting a memorial to the brave Methodist lads who gave their lives for their country's sake.

"I don't see any reason for making this fund too large. At the present $1,000 or $1,500 would enable us to do a great deal in the next six months, and possibly would cover all our requirements. If this meets with your approval, and you can assure me of a couple of hundred in the next month, will you cable me to that effect as soon as possible. A cable to this address will reach me.

"In a letter to the Guardian, which I shall write in a few days, I shall endeavour to give our people some conception of the magnitude and scope of the work. With kind regards,

"Yours sincerely,

"(CAPTAIN) HARRY A. FROST,
"Methodist Chaplain."

The C.L.A. Society of Charlotte St. Methodist Church has decided to make a donation for the project. If any others desire to contribute, donations may be sent to the Rev. J. P. Wilson, 309 Reid street, or to the Secretary of the C.L.A. Society, Mr. Jamieson, 498 Gilmour street.

"You Don't Look Right, Jones"

Errors of living, among which tea or coffee-drinking is one of the most common, has stirred the New York Health Department to prepare a booklet of suggestions for indoor workers, and among other wise bits of advice this booklet says:

"Bracers are harmful. This applies to the use of tea, coffee and alcoholic beverages."

Sound advice!

All over Canada, for years, tea and coffee drinkers, indoor and out, prompted by their own feelings and enlightened by science, have gotten rid of tea and coffee troubles by changing to —the pure food-drink.

Postum, made of choicest wheat and a small portion of wholesome molasses, has a delicious snappy flavour, yet contains no caffeine (the harmful drug in tea and coffee) nor any other harmful element.

Postum comes in two forms:

Postum Cereal—the original form—must be well boiled, 15c and 25c packages.

Instant Postum—the soluble form—is prepared in the cup. A teaspoonful in a cup of hot water makes a delicious drink instantly. 30c and 50c tins.

Both kinds are equally delicious, and the cost per cup is about the same.

WILL ATTACK LAKEFIELD ON MONDAY NEXT

Village Co. of 46th Regiment Will March to Nassau Plains and Hold a Military Field Day

WILL EVEN DIG TRENCHES

The officers of the Lakefield Company of the 46th Regiment, under Captain Bygott, had a staff ride on Tuesday afternoon to go over the ground and make definite plans for the grand Military Field Day to be held on Monday, May 24th, Victoria Day.

Major Farrell, of the 46th Regiment, Port Hope, is expected to be present and act as umpire and critic of the manoeuvres.

Captain ygott will be in command of the force consisting of B Company Militia under Lieut. Ben-Oliel, the High School Cadets under Lieut. Carter and Company Leader Lemay, and the Grove School Cadets under Instructor Marling and Company Leader K. Mackenzie.

The force will have some mounted troops and transport. It will meet at the Town Hall at 9 a.m.

The force will proceed by the Smith Township road to Nassau Plains where, after a competition in establishing outposts for its protection, it will bivouac for dinner, using field kitchens and every necessary military convenience.

The officers have undertaken to provide a treat of ice cream and fruit for the force.

After dinner model fighting trenches will be constructed on the heights.

A shooting competition for a prize will be held between the three sides. There will also be a baseball game for a prize between the challengers, the High School Cadet Corps and the Militia Company.

On the return journey the force will advance upon Lakefield as an attacking force and capture the village and the G. T. R. train.

It is possible, however, that the Home Guard may decide to defend Lakefield. As to that we have no information at present.

Visitors may be allowed at the bivouac between the hours of 12 noon and 2 p.m.

A very interesting spectacle for the residents will be found in the attack upon this village. Naturally we are not informed of the exact direction from which the attack will be made. Students of strategy will have to form their own conclusions.

This "Day" will be one of great pleasure and instruction for the members of the force and will provide much food for discussion among our noted arm chair critics.

Stoney Lake Breezes

The weather of the last few days has been grand. Of course we have had an occasional shower, but they simply serve to accentuate the beauty of the bright days.

One would imagine that things would be quiet on the lakes so early in the season. Not so, however; times are lively up here. The sound of the carpenter's hammer, the hewer's axe and the motor boat's put-put reverberate across the waters. The erection of Mr. Neil's log cabin, of Mrs. McKinney's mountain lodge, of Mr. Fraser's summer home, and the additions to Mr. John Hunter's and Mr. J. W. Wilson's cottages serve to keep things moving.

The water is still coming up. Nearly all stationary wharves are covered.

The sister islands near Kawartha Park are fast disappearing. Since last Saturday the level has raised about a foot. Keay Island may be on the map, but it certainly is under water now. Mr. East's cottage seems to be floating around on the east side of Eagle Mount. McCracken's Landing wharf is groaning beneath the load of brick for Mr. Hamilton's house; already the bottom row lies submerged. Kawartha Park prize-package wharf is nowhere to be seen.

If the cottagers could only see their islands now a flood of bills — for — damages would pour into the lap of our versatile representative from West Peterborough.

Leaving the water for a moment and turning our attention to the land, we are at once reminded of the Government's slogan: "Patriotism and Production." Mr. E. Wyly Grier, the artist of Toronto, has become inoculated so strongly with the idea that he has rented a patch of ground on the Burleigh Road, and intends to make the desert blossom with vegetables for Stoney Lake consumption.

Rev. Mr. Gibson, of Toronto West, has opened his cottage for the season, as have Mr. and Mrs. Ackerman, of Norwood.

Mr. Walter, while cranking his new motor boat, had the misfortune to sprain his wrist very badly, necessitating his seeing a doctor in Lakefield.

Miss Pearl Brock, of Toronto, joined her mother at "Shingleshanty" last Monday.

High Cost of Torpedoes

LONDON, May 18.—The torpedoes now being used in the British navy cost from $3,800 to $5,000 to construct, according to a naval expert. Even the newest British torpedoes are less expensive than those used by the latest German submarines, which have a diameter of 21 inches and travel at a speed of 40 knots an hour, having an effective range of seven miles. The internal mechanism includes a high speed rotating engine, shafts and gears, and 200 pounds of high explosive.

Says Minister of Militia in Reply to Complaint of Soldiers' Wives Who Have Not Received Separation Allowance

Mr. J. H. Burnham, M.P., states that he has received a number of complaints to the effect that some of the soldiers' wives were not receiving their separation allowances. Mr. Burnham communicated with Major-Gen. Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia, and received the following reply by wire:

"Every wife whose husband has furnished a certificate that she is his wife is receiving separation allowance. There are a number who have not yet received their certificates from clergyman or other prominent people, consequently have not furnished same to us, but that is their fault, not ours.—Sam. Hughes."

The other graduates from Canada are: Hazel Dawson of Watreloo, Genevieve Sanderson of Peterborough, and Olive Thompson of Whitby. In the intermediate class a scholarship is to be awarded Miss Lillian M. Hudson of Gadsby, Alta. This scholarship permits Miss Hudson to pursue her next year's course in the training school free of tuition. She will be especially commended at the graduation exercises for her excellent work in the two years she has been at the hospital.

EXPLOSION WRECKS MOTOR GARAGE

NEW YORK, May 18.—A terrific explosion lifted the roof forty-five feet above the top of the Mutual Auto Exchange, Nos. 317 and 319 West Fifty-ninth street, shattered every one of the thousands of windows within a block of the scene, wrecked fifty or more automobiles and caused consternation among the audiences of two theatres, the tenants of two hotels and several hundred dancers.

As the roof crashed down upon the two-storey structure after its aerial flight it crashed through the second floor and buried seventy-five automobiles in the debris.

Although the explosion was described by Deputy Fire Chief "Smoky Joe" Martin as being the most terrific in his whole experience he could not understand why only three persons were injured and none of them seriously. There was even an absence of panic in the two theatres, although in one of them fifty persons were literally blown from their seats, while plaster from the ceiling fell on the others.

Two hours after the explosion it was reported that two employees of the garage, washers of automobiles, one white and the other coloured, were missing, but two men said they saw one of these men run out. After two hours' of searching the firemen said they did not believe any one had been killed. It will require days to excavate the ruins.

DOCTOR SAID SCIATICA— RHEUMATISM—LUMBAGO

But He Could Not Help Me, and Endorsed the Use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills

Mr. Wm. Parker, 105 Cayuga street, Brantford, Ont., tells in the following letter of his remarkable experience with Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills: "My doctor treated me for some time for Sciatica, Rheumatism, Lumbago, but to no purpose, for I had to lay off work. The visiting officer of Sick Benefit called to see me and advised the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, stating that he had been cured of the same trouble by their use. I asked the druggist about them and he recommended them highly. Not being satisfied with this, I went back to my doctor, and when he said they were good I began their use. The promptness with which they enlivened the action of the kidneys and bowels was wonderful, and it was not long before I was rid of all my trouble.

"I was so bad that I could only walk by hanging on to a chair or the wall. My wife had to lace my shoes. Only those who have had this ailment can realize the way I suffered. I am writing this letter to let people who have my trouble know of these pills. You are at liberty to use this letter, and if anyone interested will call or write to me I will give every detail."

Write to Mr. Parker, enclosing stamp for reply, and he will verify this statement. He will do this out of the gratitude he feels for his cure and because he realizes how difficult it is to obtain the cure of these dreadfully painful ailments.

There are so many treatments recommended for rheumatism that you naturally doubt them all. Here is an opportunity for you to verify the cure and put this great medicine to the test. It will only cost you a quarter to try Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. They get at the very foundation of rheumatism, and by removing the poisons from the system take away the cause of pains and aches.

PRETTY DRESS FOR SCHOOL.

By Anabel Worthington.

The school dress must also be the home dress and the play dress, for little girls are not changing their frocks for every change of occupation. But what is suitable for school will do for many occasions. This little dress is just the thing, as it is simple to make and to launder, and in appearance is very neat and appropriate. The box plaits are a feature of the design and smart looking, which is a reason for keeping them, but if one prefers they may be omitted entirely, since they are only laid on and not cut with the dress. The two piece skirt is slightly circular and without gathers at the top, but with an inverted plait at each side.

Plain and checked material combine with good effect to bring out the lines of the dress, though of course one material may be used throughout if desired. For ten year size 3½ yards of checked and ½ yard of plain material 36 inches wide would be required. The pattern, No. 7,132, comes in sizes from 6 to 14 years.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25c.

GERMANS' TERRIBLE LOSSES ALONG THE YSER

KITCHENER CALLS FOR 300,000 MORE MEN

2000 DEAD GERMANS LEFT ON THE WEST BANK OF YSER

Enemy Fighting Desperately to Retain the Positions They Had Won at Terrible Loss of Life, Are Cut to Pieces by the Shell Fire of the Allies---Bridges Jammed With Retreating Germans Upon Whom the Allies' Guns Inflicted Frightful Losses.

SURPRISE ATTACKS PROVED FAILURE

Special Cable to The Examiner:

PARIS, France, May 19.—(French official communique.)—Two thousand Germans were slaughtered by shell fire when the Teutons made their last stand on the west bank of the Yser, according to the official despatches to the war office to-day. The Germans fought valiantly to retain the positions they had won at terrible loss of life. They counter attacked with great daring but were pressed back steadily while the shrapnel mowed down their ranks. The heavy artillery of the allies demolished several of the bridges over the Yser. Those that remained were jammed with the retreating Germans attempting to carry off some of their wounded officers. The official report said that in addition to two thousand bodies the allied troops found several hundred rifles in the enemy's abandoned trenches. During last night the Germans made several attempts to cross the canal by surprise attacks. From sunset last night until sunrise to-day the French illuminated the whole district with "white light" bombs, and every body of the enemy that approached the canal was spattered with shrapnel. The Germans abandoned the attempt at daybreak.

From Notre Dame de Lorette south to Arras, the opposing artillerymen are continuing the duel begun on Sunday night. The entire region is being shaken by the boom of big guns. There is every indication that an important engagement is about to begin in this sector.

ROME, May 18.—The Giornal D'Italia, says war has been virtually declared, with the unanimous consent of the King, Government and the Nation.

In an article summarizing the situation, the Tribuna says: "The die is cast, the Rubicon is crossed, and the Triple Alliance has been denounced."

LONDON, May 18.—There have been no new developments so far to-day in the threatened break between Winston Spencer Churchill, the first Lord of the Admiralty, and Lord Fisher, the Admiral of the Fleet, and first Sea Lord. It is understood however that the matter will be the subject of a statement in the House of Commons to-day. The Daily Telegraph this morning says that the resignation of Lord Fisher is thought to be probable.

NAMES OF MISSING TO BE ADDED

OTTAWA, May 18.—The casualty list from the front continues to grow at a fairly rapid rate. Of the six thousand odd Canadians stated to be killed, wounded and missing after the battle of Langemarck, 5006 have up to this morning been mentioned in the official cables. The missing reported now exceed the one thousand mark, the exact number being 1007. The killed reported number 705, and the wounded 3244. Apparently the wounded have been practically all reported but there are still names of many of the missing to be added to the lists. Some of the names of the missing are turning up tragically; for instance the news is just arriving that some of the Canadians were buried by English regiments with their own dead.

HOSPITAL AT QUEBEC

OTTAWA, Ont., May 18.—A clearing hospital is to be established at Quebec to classify the Canadian wounded sent home as unfit for further service at the front. It is expected that large batches of those heavily wounded at Langemarck, and those whose nerves have been destroyed by their terrible experiences, will arrive from time to time hereafter. Corps of doctors at the clearing hospital will classify these men for pensions or otherwise.

LONDON, May 18.—Lord Kitchener this afternoon issued a call for 300,000 more recruits for the British army.

This was announced in the course of a speech by Kitchener this afternoon in the House of Lords. He also said that the British and French had found it necessary to retaliate in the use of gases. The allied armies engineers had prepared an effective gas weapon in reply to that used by the Germans.

A Letter From Dr. Blanchard

Local Veterinary is Lieutenant in British A.V.C.

In an interesting letter received by Mr. P. J. Grady from Lieut. Dr. Blanchard, of Peterborough, who is in France with the Army Veterinary Corps, the writer says he is well and has just what he wants. Any amount of horses to look after, and all kinds of cases to treat. "It's not a bit like South Africa here," says Lieut. Blanchard. "We have everything you can think of, and, as you know, I like it as it is steady from the time I start to the finish and every day. I expect to be sent to the front mighty soon, as they seem to want us bad. I hope so, as I want to hear and see what is doing there if it is rougher. I see that the Canadians have been getting cut up some, but they don't seem to be a bit downhearted."

Lieut. Blanchard had been in France for a month when he wrote.

His son, Lance-Corp. Bruce Blanchard, has just landed in England with the 21st Battalion.

63 MEMBERS OF LOCAL QUOTAS ON CASUALTY LISTS

Analysis Shows How Heavily Peterboro' Units Have Suffered in France—Nearly 60 per cent of 57th Men Dead, Wounded, or Missing

COMPLETE LIST SO FAR

The heavy part that the detachments from the 57th Regiment and 24th Field Battery have had to pay in the fighting so far in France is shown by a study of the casualty lists. The 57th detachment which left Peterborough with four officers and 124 men, was probably a little over 100 strong when it crossed to France, a number having been sent back from Valcartier for minor physical defects, while three members were invalided home from Salisbury. Since going to the front fifty-eight of the 57th have appeared on the casualty list. The 24th Battery quota, about 75 strong, has had five members on the roll of honour so far, and it is feared that all the artillery casualties from the Langemarck battle have not yet been reported. Altogether the names of sixty-three of the 57th Regiment and 24th Battery have appeared on the list. In addition, other Peterborough boys with other regiments have been reported, bringing the total up to seventy men.

Here is a summary of the casualties among the 57th and 24th Battery men:

| | 57th. | 24th. | T'l. |

| Prisoner of war | 1 | 0 | 1 |
| Missing | 13 | 0 | 13 |
| Wounded | 28 | 2 | 30 |

The list is as follows:

SERGT. BOONE MEETS DEATH

Well Known Member of the 24th Field Battery Detachment in First Contingent is Officially Reported Killed in Action

AN ELECTRICAL ENGINEER

Sergeant Gordon Valentine Boone, B.A. Sc., who was announced killed in yesterday's list, enlisted with the 24th Field Battery from Peterborough. At the front he was a member of the 4th Battery, 1st Brigade. Mr. Boone's home was in St. Johns, Newfoundland. He came of fighting stock, and was a direct descendant of Daniel Boone who erected the famous Boonesborough Fort in Kentucky. Mr. Boone was educated in Sackville University and Nova Scotia Technical College, from where he obtained his degrees with honours, later coming to Peterborough in 1912, finishing his time as an electrical engineer at the C.G.E. He was a staunch Mason, and a prominent figure in hockey and cricket. He was 30 years of age and was highly respected, being a great favourite with all who knew him.

By hockey fans he will be remembered as a member of the Test Room hockey team in the Mercantile League, and he was known to all as "Dicky" Boone, the nick-name being adapted from that of his namesake, the well-known Montreal player and manager. Sergt. Boone was also an enthusiastic member of the Peterborough Cricket Club. He had never had any previous military training, but his intelligent deal soon earned him promotion, and he quickly rose to the rank of a sergeant. He was a chum of Gunner G. A. McDougall, also of the C.G.E., and the two enlisted together and died in the same battle.

VAUDEVILLE ATTRACTION

Makes Big Hit at RED MILL

Manager Clayton will from now on feature highclass vaudeville as well as universal photo plays.

The theatre was crowded at each performance, and every lover of classey vaudeville was well satisfied. Six reels of first run universal photo plays made a fine programme. If you have not as yet seen the Alright Brothers do so to-night or to-morrow.

The Red Mill will close for alterations on June 1st, and will open with a fine big vaudeville stage. H. Clayton, Manager.

Red Cross Tag Day

The Red Cross Society is, in one respect, greater than all the governments o fthe world—it rises above the suspicion of selfishness, or self interest. Even in such days as are at present upon us it follows the calm and even tenor of its service, undaunted by barbities.

The Red Cross means Humanity—the succor of wounded, the care of the dying whoever they are, and wherever they are found.

There is no lack of brave men and women ready to do Red Cross work in the trenches and beyond them. Years have perfected the societies' oraganization into an efficient work.

What is wanted and wanted urgently, is financial support, for the general fund, upon which the amount of work which can be done entirely and absolutely, depends.

The Red Cross has no endowments. Its present appeal for support comes at a time when the cost of the war in life and suffering has been made more personal to us all by the price which Canada paid at Langemarck.

It is hoped the contribution given by the citizens of Peterborough on Saturday the 22nd will be very generous, as every tag sold will mean comfort to some soldier, perhaps, who knows, a Peterborough boy.

Pte. Heber Rogers is Wounded And is a Prisoner in Germany

Card Received From Him by Friend in London Says Peterborough Boy is Doing Well in Enemy's Hospital—His Parents Receive Cable Telling Good News.

WAS GIVEN UP AS DEAD

A cable from London yesterday brought joy to the home of Mr. R. B. Rogers last evening, and joy everywhere where Pte. Heber Rogers is known. The message the wire brought was brief but all important, inasmuch as it gave the information that the young Peterborough soldier for two weeks mourned as dead, was alive, and although wounded and lying in a German Hospital a prisoner of war, is doing nicely.

The news came from Miss Glassford, of London, Eng., an aunt of Pte. Geo. Minorgan, who had been like a mother to Ptes. Rogers, Minorgan and Gibson during their stay in England. It had been arranged that in case of anything happening the boys she was to be communicated with and that she would send the word home.

Yesterday morning Mr. Rogers received a cabelgram from Miss Glassford that Heber was a prisoner of war. Scarcely daring to believe the news, he cabled for further particulars, and this morning received the following message:

"Received card written by Heber May 1. Am in German hospital, wounded, prisoner of war, doing well. Wire mother. Am writing home."

Cablegram signed,
Miss Glassford.

Pte. Rogers had been given up as dead. From his relative, LA.-Col. Rogers of the 2nd Battalion, a cable was received saying, "Heber sold his life dearly at the machine gun," and further apparent confirmation came in a despatch to the Toronto News stating that "Heber Rogers died like a man." The official message received from Ottawa stated that he was reported missing, but his relatives here had little hope that he was alive until Miss Glassford's cable arrived.

It is evident that during the fierce fighting, Pte. Rogers dropped wounded beside the machine gun and was believed by his comrades to have been killed. When the Germans swept over the ground a little later the wounded Peterborough boy was picked up by the enemy and taken to the rear. Afterwards being removed to a German hospital. True to his promise, he found a means of communicating to Miss Glassford in London, his card being two weeks on the way.

Naturally his relatives and friends are overjoyed at the news, which will be gladly received everywhere in Peterborough.

PTE. A. W. PHIPPS, wounded Peterborough boy, who tells of the charge of the 2nd Battalion at Langemarck in a vivid letter in this issue.

PTE. JACK ASPEY, one of the 57th detachment mentioned in Pte. Phipps' letter as doing scout work at Langemarck. Nothing has been heard of him since.

"I COULD SEE THE BOYS DROPPING ON EACH SIDE OF ME"

Pte. A. W. Phipps' Thrilling Description of the Charge of the 57th Lads at Langemarck---Major Bennett One of the First to Get Hit---"I've Got It Boys, But Go On and Do Your Best" Shouted Company Captain as He Fell Wounded---"On We Went, Cheering Like Madmen" Says Pte. Phipps, Who Dropped Himself Shortly Afterwards.

Mrs. A. Phipps, 2 Fradette Avenue, has received a letter from her son, Private Arthur Phipps, of the Second Battalion, First Canadian Contingent, also one from the chaplain of the hospital in which Private Phipps was confined following the injury that he received in the battle of Langemarck. Private Phipps' letter, which is dated May 2nd, reads as follows:

"I am pleased to say I am improving every day, but nobody but myself knows what I have gone through this last week. I guess it will be two or three months before I go to England. The wound that I received is in the right leg. It was done by a piece of shell. There is no bone broken. It is just a flesh wound. It happened on the twenty-third of April. On that date we had to get out of bed about nine o'clock at night. We were informed that the Germans had broken through our lines. In five minutes we were marching out to meet them. We were all anxious to get into close quarters with the Huns. We marched through a village that was all in ruins. About every fifty yards we were falling over wagons, dead horses and men. This kind of thing extended over an area of three miles. The stray bullets from the trenches ahead were coming closer every minute. Many a time we were compelled to drop quick or we would have been shot. It was a pitiful sight for all of us. Further along we saw lots of Canadian wounded helping one another along and shouting: "Give them hell boys." We had orders to stop and lie down in what we call extended order. We were there for about half an hour when they called on Jack Aspey and others to go and find out where they were; that being the last time I saw Jack. We all started again and went in single file so as not to be exposed too much. In going around a house we met a Canadian Highlander harrying a German along with him. The Peterborough boys were all together in front. We went on until we had to drop and lie down, for the Germans spotted us coming along and sent a few shells over. That lasted for half an hour, when the order came to fix bayonets and charge. We were about eight hundred yards away from the German trenches, and to make matters worse we had to run up hill. You ought to have seen the Peterborough boys charge. Major Bennett was almost the first to get hit. On we went shouting like madmen, ready to bayonet the first German that we came across. All at once they turned the machine guns on us. The shells were bursting all around, and we were compelled to drop and rest awhile. Then we got up again with our bayonets, and Oh what a sight it was. The shells were dropping close and when they fell they always left a gaping hole in the ground. I could see the boys dropping on each side of me every step I went. But on we went and all at once I heard my Captain shout: "I've got it boys, but go on and do your best." I saw him drop, but there was no time for anything but the Germans. To my dismay I had to drop for a shell burst right in front of me, and a piece entered my leg. It was horrible to bear. I lay there for eighteen hours until next day, when the stretcher bearers came and carried me to the dressing station. I stayed there until I was removed in an ambulance to the hospital. There I remained a day and was finally removed to Boulogne. Most of the officers were killed in our company. I cannot say how many of the boys are left. Give my best regards to all.—I remain, ARTHUR.

IS NOT WORRYING.

In addition to the above, Mrs. Phipps has received the following communication from A. K. Finsmore, Acting Chaplain:

No. 13 General Hospital, Boulogne
Base, May 1st.

"Your son, Private Arthur W. Phipps, has asked me to write a line to inform you that he is doing very well. His wound is progressing favourably, and he especially asks you not to worry about him. He is quite comfortable, and the doctors and sisters are very kind. He hopes to be sent over to England very shortly, and in due course he will go to Birmingham and see his relatives there. When he is discharged and convalescent he will have leave for a time to go where he likes. The future after that is uncertain; but he will let you hear when he is moved. I may add on my part your son is very cheerful and does not worry in the least. Everything points at present to his making a good recovery.—Yours faithfully,

A. K. FINSMORE, Acting Chaplain.

LONDON, Eng., May 18.—The Anchor Liner Transylvania, carrying 879 passengers, narrowly escaped the same fate as the Lusitania, according to passengers who arrived here to-day from Glasgow. A German subfarine shot a torpedo at the Transylvania on Sunday afternoon, they asserted, but the death missile passed forty yards astern.

COLLEGIATE CADETS AND THEIR UNIFORMS

'Tis said that Capt. Jamieson, of the Collegiate Institute, had to threaten fatigue duty to get his Cadets to school in uniform on the required afternoons. Once a week lately the Collegiate youths have been noticed in their neutral tinted uniforms. Last week, however, only six boys attended in uniform, and directly the fiat went forth to the embryo soldiers that this week any truant uniforms would draw down a penalty of wearing them to school on four successive days. Collegiate boys are peculiarly partial to the opinions of the fair "Co-eds" and apparently they feel that they do not cut prepossessing figures in their beige khaki. Some of them mangle the uniforms to the "T" and slip out before drill, and don the despised outfits. Most of the boys seemed in their last march out on George Street to possess a certain satisfaction and pride in their appearance. A few were stooped at the shoulders like Crimean veterans, but they were only occasional exceptions.

WORLD-WIDE POPULARITY OF TEA.

"In the tea trade there is much talk of enormous increases in the drinking of tea everywhere since the war began. Russia, already a huge consumer of tea, is calling more and more to the beverage, now that vodka is banned. In France, too, tea is beginning to threaten the supremacy of coffee. The greatly increased means higher prices in our [illegible], especially as there is only a [illegible] corresponding increase in the [illegible]. Dealers are naturally taking advantage of the position." — London [illegible] "Times," 20th April.

"ONTO."

The Globe, great as it is, has been convicted of using the word "onto" in a heading, and in a semi-serious, if not serio-comic article, defends the use of this verbal monstrusity. It is having, therefore, considerable fun poked at it by its contemporaries. Apart, altogether from etymological or literary justification for the use of such a hybrid word, its employment is objectionable because it is not sanctioned by the usage of competent literary authority. When writers of reputation and recognised authority in literature write, "I depend 'onto' you," instead of "I depend 'upon' you," then, and not till then, can we reconcile ourselves to the acceptance of the incongruous cacophony. The point to be kept in mind is the avoidance of the corruption of the English language, which has been changed and improved through the development sanctioned by the greatest names in literature. It is bad enough that the orthography of the language should be tinkered at by amateur philologists, each taking his lazy way to phonetic simplicity, without unauthoritative adoption of word building, founded upon the expedients of illiteracy. In literary reform, or at least change of form in the meaning and use of words, and in the spelling of words, there must, to avoid confusion, be recognised authority. When that authority speaks we can heed. Let all things be done decently and in order.

NO COLLUSION.

So quietly was the change of government in Manitoba effected—one party quietly slipping out, and the other as quietly slipping in—that in default of explanation, the apprehension of collusion was suggested. It was feared that there was something in the nature of a saw-off, in which event a change of government would only be substituting one evil element for another. It is a pleasure, then, to be informed that there has been no collusion, no consultation except the formal one necessary, in making the change. The Roblin Government saw breakers ahead. The tiller wouldn't answer the hand of the skipper, and so the skipper skipped, deserted the ship, and automatically and constitutionally the leader of the Opposition stepped into his shoes. The Roblin Government was confronted with the consequences of a Royal Commission investigation, into charges of gross, if not dishonest, waste of the public money in the construction of new parliament buildings, that seriously involved the Government. It looked as if the charges would be proven. The Roblin Government knowing that the facts to prove the charges existed, "got from under," with perhaps the idea that the investigation of the Royal Commission would be discontinued. But there is no probability of this. The investigation will be continued, with incidentally the result of the counsel for the late government being placed in a peculiar position. His clients, the late government, have disappeared—ceased to exist; and he has nobody to defend, except the reputation of his late retainers. There may, or may not be, an election; but if there is to be one, it will be abundantly justified by the circumstances. If the new government finds that it has not enough support in the House to enable it to carry on the government, it will have to appeal to the people. At all events the satisfactory fact remains, that the change of government was not attended by party collusion, with the necessary sacrifice of the principles of honest dealing and honest government.

UNITED STATES AND THE WAR

The relations of the United States to Germany are pretty well strained; but it is not probable that anything more serious will take place than for the United States to compass towards Germany a position of armed neutrality. There may be a commercial or trade war; there may be a partial or complete disruption of diplomatic relations, which are conventionally regarded to as tantamount to a declaration of war; but the United States will hardly go to war, with the usual weapons of war. Nor would it be to the advantage of the Allies to have the United States go to war with Germany. At the moment the United States is not prepared to enter a big war. Her army—officers and men—number less than 75,000, a mere corporals' guard as armies are numbered these days—and several thousands fewer than Canada has now under arms. The United States has a considerable navy—40 or 45 battleships, 9 or 10 coast defence warships, 14 or 15 armoured cruisers, 20 protected cruisers, and 3 unprotected cruisers, with a proportional complement of submarines, torpedo boats and destroyers. This navy, assuming that it is in a state of fighting efficiency, as to men, guns and ammunition, would be useless against Germany, because the German navy is hidden and cannot be got at. In case of war its greatest use would be to protect the sea paths, make commerce safer and strengthen the blockade of German ports and eliminate German commerce. The army and navy of the United States would, for a long time at least, pending necessary preparation, not be able to put up a serious offensive, and for a long time she would not be of much military aid to the allies. The United States, by remaining out of the war, could help the allies more effectively. If she went to war she would doubtless do things on a large scale, and the whole resources of her industries would be devoted to providing for arming and equipping her larger army and navy. Now the allies have a reasonably plentiful supply of men. What they need most is ammunition. By remaining out of war the United States could supply—which she could not, and would not, if she went to war with Germany—the allies with an immensely important quantity of ammunition, and in this way be of greater help to the allies. She is furnishing a good deal of war munitions now; and will likely, under the sting of German contempt of the rights of her citizens, and overt insults, be willing and justified in doing much more in this direction than she is now doing.

ORTHODOX FLAPDOODLE.

The Toronto News is printing a primer on politics in a serial form. Day after day it is ejecting ponderous platitudes on responsible government and what it means, as if everybody of intelligence was not seized of its principles. It says that "it is the theory in France, in the United States that the people govern" and that "responsible government requires consultation with the people." All this is academic self-evidence. But what have these things got to do with the wisdom or unwisdom of holding a general election in war time which is the underlying object of the News' propaganda? We all accept and are acting on the theory that the people govern. We all admit "responsible government requires consultation with the people." Our constitution provides means and times for consulting the people. Our constitution specifies the time when this consultation shall take place and how long the results of this consultation shall be effective. We had our last consultation of the people in 1911. Our next consultation is fixed by law at 1916. The present government theoretically and legally has the confidence of the people who were consulted four years ago. Is there any claim that the government has forfeited the confidence, or fear that it has lost the confidence, of the people? Under the circumstances the country—the people—is content to have the present government remain in power, without an interim endorsation, and with no general election till the term of the present parliament has expired—in October, 1916. One can't see why the News continues harping upon an election. It persists even after the "Minister of Elections," Hon. Robert Rogers, has spotsatized, and abandoned the demand for a war-time election. Our contemporary is more patriotic, more loyal to the constitutional principle that the people must be consulted—not irregularly, but regularly—at the proper time, and when such a consultation is not urgently contraindicated, by the conditions in which the country finds itself. So long as the News confines itself to abstract exploitations of political platitudes, it will find everybody to agree with it; but if it demands the concrete application at the wrong time, the mass of patriotic Canadians will dissent. Housecleaning is a necessary domestic evil; but no one would think of interrupting a family festivity like a wedding by earthquaking the house in preparation for a housecleaning propaganda. Our contemporary may think in its heart, as others think openly, that it is time for a housecleaning at Ottawa. If this is true, we must select the proper time for it.

A WEAK GUARANTEE.

Where did the fifty tons of nickel taken out of the hold of a Swedish steamer bound from New York for Copenhagen come from? If it was Ontario nickel, what about the guarantee of the Nickel Trust that none of it would find its way to Germany? If it had not been in danger of doing so Britain would not have seized the Augusta's cargo.

All Parties In Italy Are Now Clamouring For War

Special to the Examiner.

ROME, May 18—News that the Salandra Ministry is to be retained has swept over Italy and united all factions in a great cry for war. Reservists of the age of 55 have been called out. The fact that King Victor Emmanuel has at last accepted Premier Salandra is taken as proof that he has come at last to favour intervention and has given his consent to mobilization. Momentus events are expected momentarily. The King's lifeguards already have been supplied with campaign uniforms. When it became known last night that the Cabinet was to meet to-day for the first time since its resignation was handed to the King, the people made up their minds that war was at last a certainty and began a demonstration. Practically a third of Rome's population, 200,000 citizens of all classes, ranging from noblemen to peasants, and labourers and even including priests, assembled in the Piasa Popolo. Everyone wore the tri-colour.

The Giornale D'Italia, which has been a strong supporter of the Salandra Cabinet and was among the first to advocate military preparation publishes a significant article to-day.

"War," says the paper, "is virtually declared by concord of the King, the Government and the nation. The wonderful secret dream which for half a century has strengthened Italy in its long wait, is about to be transformed into radiant reality. We shall never forget our unfortunate sister towns desperately fighting under a foreign yoke in defence of their Italian nationality. To-day the hour of their liberation has rung.

"Italy is about to engage not only in a war to liberate the remainder of the Italian provinces under foreign rule, but in a war for civilization."

THERE WILL BE A RECKONING.

An inquest was held in Ireland on the dead bodies of defenceless travelers murdered by the Germans in the sinking of the Lusitania, and a verdict of wilful murder was solemnly registered against William II. of Germany and the officers and crew of the submarine that torpedoed this unarmed passenger vessel.

The verdict of that coroner's jury is destined, we venture to predict, to play a prominent part in history. It is a formal step in the procedure of justice, and the way may be long, but it is a British habit to supply such patience as may be required to bring crime home to the criminal at long last, regularly, decorously, in a court of law by a fair trial, and then hang them.

Of a piece with that verdict are the words, simple in themselves, but significant with meaning to British people the world over, spoken by Mr. Asquith in Parliament. He said,

"We shall not forget, and we ought not to forget, this horrible record of calculated cruelty and crime, and we shall hold it to be our duty to exact such reparation against those who are proved to be the guilty agents and actors in the matter as it may be possible for us to do."

When hot words are spoken in anger they may be forgotten when the temper changes, but these are the cold and deliberate words of a statesman who does not give way to anger and who here expresses the resolution of a nation that is not vindictive but which can be implacable in following a course that it has fully decided upon as being just. It will be well to file away for reference these words by Mr. Asquith. The world will hear of them again.—Toronto Star.

EGG SUPPLY IS LARGE

All the produce and provision markets are firm and high with the exception of the egg market. There is an enormous consumption of eggs, but it does not seem to be so large as the inordinately large supply. The United States warehouse on May 1st had over half a million cases on hand more than they had at this time last year. In Ontario the storing of new-laid eggs has been going on for two or three weeks and last year it did not begin until about the present date. The fact is there has been such a super-abundance of eggs that no matter what inroads have been made by consumption there has been a plethora. In the States they have so many eggs that they don't know where to put them. Most storage facilities have been taken up for beef, meat and so forth, and there is hardly any room for eggs. In consequence, the merchants over there are doing their best to export and this is naturally a bear influence upon our market prices here in Canada.

It might be said that this storing which has been going on by the egg man is a fairly bold move, in view of the fact that the months of heaviest production are this (May) and the next. If production is any heavier than it is at present, and the market tendency continues downward, there will be a glut of eggs on the market, or that reason egg men have a nerve if they store eggs at present prices.

Cheese continues to be very strong on the market. Not only is the old cheese higher still, almost out of sight, but the new make has advanced in price this last week. The export demand for Canadian cheese continues unabated, and we see by advices from England that over there they haven't got as much cheese by a long way, as they could take, says the Canadian Grocer.

Flour, in common with wheat, experienced a slight bear movement for two or three days, but has firmed up some and prices are now fairly strong. There is not, however, very much doing except that there is some demand for Manitoba spring wheat flour in Great Britain. Domestic business continues fairly easy and the only reason that prices keep up is that they are in accord in some sort with the wheat market. On the other hand, they are still below the market, and while there is comparitively very little business being done in flour, we shall not expect to see lower prices for some time yet. Business in mill-feeds is still more or less dead, the coming of the new grass having cast a damper on whatever business activity there was last week.

Bulk teas, following the lead of package teas are advancing, particularly the lower-grades, which are most difficult to get and highest in the primary markets.

A Board school teacher, putting his hand on the shoulder of a boy of doubtful character, said: "I believe Satan has got a hold of you." "I believe so, too," was the reply.

1,500,000 Shells In Three Days

LONDON, May 18.—"Between Saturday and Tuesday night the British fired a million and a half pounds of shell," writes a Morning Post correspondent in Northern France in describing the fighting along the line from Ypres to La Bassee, which he admits, owing to the great strength of the German trenches, had very little tangible result.

The Germans, according to this correspondent, have continued desperate efforts to break through between Ypres and Hill 60, but although the fighting has been of the most sanguinary description, the British still hold their positons.

Further south, however, the British in their turn, have been attacking, between Fromelles and Neuve Chapelle, endeavouring to make good a position on the Aubers ridge, when they would command the open plain to Lille, only five miles away.

The region was subjected to a terrific bombardment, the correspondent says, equal in intensity to that which paved the way for the advance at Neuve Chapelle, and of longer duration. But when the British advanced they found that the Germans, profiting by the lesson of Neuve Chapelle, had greatly strengthened their trenches, particularly against shell-fire, building practically permanent forts of concrete and steel, so that they were able to hold their positions, and the British only reached the lower slopes of the ridge.

Client: "You ought to have gone into the army, not the law." Solicitor: "Why?" Client: "By the way you charge there would be little left of the enemy."

MATTY USING SPITTER JOHNSON CURVES THEM

It is interesting and perhaps significant to note that two of the game's leading pitchers in two big leagues —Walter Johnson of the Washington Americans, and Christy Mathewson of the New York Giants—are adopting measures to improve their pitching system. It is said that Matty—the Old Master—is using the spitter for the first time in his career.

It has been an accepted truism in baseball that when a veteran pitcher [illegible] the use of the spitter it is self-acknowledgment that he no longer is master of the effective shoots which carried him through in previous seasons. And even with the spitter Matty does not seem to be getting much result.

It is also said of aWlter Johnson that he is pitching more curves than ever before. This probably is a fact, as he has shown very uncertain control so far this season. Whether Johnson is turning to a liberal use of curves to save his arm for seasons to come or whether his speed has left him is problematical.

The fact remains that he is a curve ball pitcher to-day.

JAMES J. JEFFRIES HAS PNEUMONIA

LOS ANGELES, CAL., May 18.—James J. Jeffries, former heavyweight champion, is seriously ill of pneumonia. Physicians said that unless complications set in his recovery was probable. Friends of the ex-champion did not know of his illness until last night, when he was said to have passed the crisis. He has been sick for more than a week. Jeffries was so far recovered to-day that he was able to walk about and visit friends.

BASEBALL

In the Junior School League series the Queen Mary team defeated Queen Alexandra by a score of 8 to 7 on the Queen Mary grounds on Monday, May 17th.

Batteries for Queen Alexandra—Armstrong and Jordan.

Batteries for Queen Mary—Patterson and Pogue.

Umpire—Lloyd Stewart.

On the Central School grounds, yesterday evening, in the Junior series of the Public School Baseball League, a most keenly contested game of ball was played between teams representing the Central and King George schools. Three extra innings had to be played to decide the game, which went finally to the visiting team by a score of 14 to 9. Anderson and Hagerman were the battery for the winners, while Green and Cavanagh and Bergoine caught for the Central team. The score by innings was:

| Team | Runs |
|---|---|
| Centrals . . . . . | 4000220010— 9 |
| King George . . . . . | 2100220015—14 |

Ranch Owner Is Found Starving

NEW YORK, May 18.—Weak from the lack of nourishment and exposure, Leslie E. Blots, ranch owner, of Winters, Wis., collapsed on Sunday night as he was going up the hundred stone steps in Colonel Park and fell thirty feet to the bottom of the stairway. With a possible fracture of the skull he was taken in a critical condition to the Washington Heights Hospital.

When revived he told the story of how he had failed to find work which would furnish him with enough money to obtain a pardon for his father, who, he declared, is in prison in Wisconsin. He said his father had been accused of shooting a man who had shot his mother.

"I have had no food in almost three days," he told Dr. Glucksteln at the hospital. "When my money gave out I walked hundreds of miles, but never was able to get employment."

Because of Mr. Blots's condition it was feared that he may contract pneumonia. The patient says he is forty years old.

GOING TO ENLIST TO AVENGE WIFE'S DEATH

American Ships as Hostler For Liverpool and Hopes to Join British Army.

BOSTON, Mass, May 18.—To avenge the death of his wife, one of the Lusitania victims, William Finch, of Lynn, left for Liverpool to-day aboard the Leyland line steamship Canadian. He will enlist in the British army and hopes he will be immediately sent to the front. Finch could not afford to pay for his passage, so he shipped as a hostler, to aid in caring for 1,000 horses on board for the British army.

Harry Jones, of Lynn, and six men from Barre are also hostlers aboard the Canadian on their way to fight the Germans. Jones' family had intended to leave aboard the Lusitania, but took passage on the Carthagenian, with the result that they reached Glasgow safely.

Fire Destroys Dundas Property

House and Barns of Mariposa Township Farmer Wiped Out

LINDSAY, May 18.—The solid brick dwelling house and large frame barn owned by Mr. David Dundas, on the Oakwood road, were totally destroyed by fire early Sunday morning, the loss being very heavy.

The Dundas property, known formerly as the Dillman property, was one of the best in Mariposa Township, situated about a mile east of Oakwood, and near Taylor's Corners. The major portion of the household contents was saved by the neighbours, who worked heroically in an effort to extinguish the blaze. The live stock were also saved.

The Cause.

Shortly after 6 a.m. Mr. Dundas arose, and previous to going out to the barn to milk the cows, built a fire in the kitchen, a frame building adjoining the brick house. It is surmised that a spark from the chimney started the fire, which soon licked up everything in its course. Mr. Dundas in the meantime had finished milking one cow, when he smelt wood burning, and on running out of the barn to investigate, he was amazed to find the kitchen on fire. The members of the family were quickly aroused from their sleep and a determined effort was made to quench the blaze.

Fire Alarm Given.

In the meantime the rural fire alarm system, which is attached to the rural telephone system, was set in motion, and in quick time the surrounding countryside gathered at the scene of the fire, farmers driving in in rigs and autos. They gave every assistance possible, carrying water in buckets, and called out the fire brigade from the village of Oakwood, the equipment consisting of a hose reel and a pumping engine.

Strong Wind Blowing.

Owing to the strong gale which was blowing, the fire fighters soon discovered that it would be next to impossible to save the residence, and consequently a large number busied themselves in getting out the furniture and the family wearing apparel.

Barn Caught Fire.

A determined effort was made to save the barn from the ravaging flames, but the strong wind worked against the strength of the fire fighters and a shower of sparks dropped on the frame building. In little time this splendid structure was a mass of flames and nothing could be done to save the barn or contents. However, the neighbours managed to get out all the stock.

Dog Was Burned.

Like the captain of a sinking ship a faithful dog stayed with the fire until the last, and went down in the charred ruins. The animal seemed loath to quit the barn and perished in the flames. A cat was also badly burned, and later had to be despatched to the happp hunting ground.

An Old House.

The dwelling was some forty years old, but one of the best in the township. It was a solid red brick structure and a very comfortable home. The barn was a large one, and well equipped. Mr. Dundas' loss will be heavy. The insurance on house, barn and contents amounts to about $4,000.

BANK HOURS REDUCED TO ASSIST ARMY

LONDON, May 16.—After the Whitsuntide holidays English banking hours will be reduced two hours daily. That is to say, the banking and banking offices will open at ten and remain open until three, instead of from nine to four, as at present.

The purpose of the change is to enable additional clerks to enlist in the army. The reduced hours will enable bank tellers to devote two additional hours daily to other work, and in this way permit a reduction of the staff.

The Stock Exchange committee has compiled a list of the foreign members of the exchange. The list shows a total of 210, of which 147 are Germans, 16 Austrians, 1 Turk, 1 Hungarian and 7 Americans, all naturalized British subjects. The preponderance of the German element has attracted attention.

The exchange to-day readmitted a few Germans who have sons in the British army. Business is stagnant on the exchange.

"THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD" IN THE ARCTIC DARKNESS

The Rev. E. J. Peck, Veteran Anglican Missioner Relates the Progress of His Efforts Among the Eskimos---A Large Attendance at St. John's School House.

Under the auspices of the Woman's Auxiliary of St. John's Anglican Church a capacity audience filled the schoolhouse attached to St. Johns Church, last evening, to listen to a thoroughly interesting lecture, or more strictly speaking, talk by the veteran Anglican missionary, the Rev. E. J. Peck, on his evangelizing work in the far north among the Eskimos. The lecture was generously illustrated with coloured slides, which, together with the subject matter, aroused wrapt attention on the part of a most appreciative audience.

In the absence of the Rector, Canon Davidson, who was called away on pressing affairs, the chair was ably filled by Mr. W. F. Johnston, the advisory church warden, who in one of his usual happy speeches, introduced Mr. Peck to the assembly, eulogizing his work in the far northern lands, and paying in passing a well-deserved tribute to the members of the W. A. and the ladies generally of St. John's for the opportunity afforded the congregation of hearing Mr. Peck, as well as for the general arrangements carried out. "As usual," said Mr. Johnston, 'all the work done by the St. John's ladies is done well."

The well-known hymn, "From Greenland's Icy Mountains" having been projected on the screen, was heartily joined in by the meeting. Following this, Mr. Peck commenced his talk, describing the progress of evangelization among the Eskimos, the information being interspersed with views of the Eskimo countrf, the means by which he and supplies got there, the native dress, the mode of living, the dwellings, manners and customs, etc., etc.

These Eskimos, who the lecturer stated originally came from Siberia, number some 30,000 and inhabit the shores of Greenland, Labrador, Baffin's Bay Hudson Bay to the Mackenzie river. In the 17th century the Moravian brothers started a missionary enterprise among the Eskimos, but the Anglican Church was extensively prosecuted by 'the Apostle of the North,' Bishop Bompas, followed by Bishop Stringer. Then it fell to the lot of Mr. Peck. He showed, as a slide, the small 100-ton brig, in which he and the stores necessary to be taken were conveyed to Labrador, a country without a tree, covered with snow for a great period of the year, but yet where in summer of eight weeks, there is practically no night, and where the temperature is 80 deg. in the shade.

The fantastic and somewhat picturesque dress of the Eskimo men, women and children, the snow houses and method of building them, the dog teams and sledges, the mission buildings, the tents used in summer, the trapping and harpooning of the seal and walrus, were all described and illustrated. By the way, Mr. Peck said that the Eskimo ladies are remarkably fastidious in their fondness for dress, and although they are mainly made of furs they spend a large amount of time in the fashioning and making of their garments.

Mr. Peck told of a little church made of poles and common seal skins. These skins were sewn together by the natives, stretched when wet over the framing, and when dry shrunk so as to make a tight outer covering. But food running short, the dogs, who are the beasts of burden, tore down the skins and ate up the church. Some kind friends in England sent a supply of timber which enabled him and his friends to build a wooden church and mission house.

The lecturer stated that as regards food, bread is practically unknown, large quantities of seal, walrus and occasionally deer meat, having to be eaten to keep up the temperature in the body, for the snow houses cannot be heated above freezing point, otherwise they become a shower bath.

The lecturer finished up by an appeal to the young people to become active, live missionaries to carry on the arduous labour, privation and discomfort.

The whole of the proceeding was replete with vivid interest and met with continuous applause.

At the close of Mr. Peck's remarks, Mr. W. F. Johnston thanked Mr. Peck for his interesting address, his remarks being loudly applauded. The Benediction having been pronounced, the assemblage broke up.

A Mammoth Sugar Refinery

17,000 Tons of Concrete in Construction of Atlantic Sugar Refineries

St. John, N.B., boasts of having at least one great building that may be truly termed "as solid as a rock." This is the Atlantic Sugar Refineries, which required two years in the building. Seventeen thousand tons of concrete and three thousand tons of steel were required in its construction, and it is recognized as being not only a credit to Canada, but also the most up-to-date plant of its kind on the continent.

Some of the machinery, which was designed expressly for this refinery, is almost human in its working. This is particularly true of the machines which fill the two-pound and five-pound cartons of LANTIC GRANULATED SUGAR.

These machines fold and seal the cardboard cartons, and weigh each one so that the carton contains the full weight of sugar as stamped on the outside, and all this without being touched by human hands. The Atlantic Refineries also contain many other interesting devices for the refining and purification of sugar, which enable this complete plant to have an output of one million pounds of sugar a day, or a yearly output of three hundred million pounds of sugar.

Only cane sugar will be used in the Atlantic Refineries, so that those who buy LANTIC SUGAR either in cartons or the 10, 20 or 100 pounds bags, will be certain to obtain the very finest granulated cane sugar refined under the most sanitary conditions.

Reception to New Pastor And His Wife

At Park Street Baptist Church Last Evening—A Splendid Programme

There was no doubt as to the sincerity of the welcome extended to Rev. Dougald Brown, the new pastor of Park Street Baptist Church, and Mrs. Brown, when the congregations of the Park Street and Murray Street churches united in a public reception at 8 o'clock last night in the South End Church. There was a fine programme of speeches by resident ministers of the city, and several musical numbers.

A pleasing feature of the evening was the presentation of a beautiful bouquet of flowers to Mrs. Brown by the ladies of Park Street Baptist Church.

Ten minute addresses were given by Rev. J. Rollins for the Ministerial Association, Rev. J. R. Webb for the Baptists of the city, Adjutant McElhenny for the south end, and Rev. C. G. Smith of Belleville for the Peterborough Baptist Association. The chair was taken by Mr. Joseph Wearing.

The order of the programme was as follows:

Opening Hymn.
Prayer—Rev. Jas. A. MacKenzie.
Selection by the Choir.
Address—Rev. Jas. Rollins.
Address—Rev. J. R. Webb.
Male Quartette.
Address—Adjutant McElhenny.
Address—Rev. C. G. Smith.
Selection by the Choir.
Hymn — "Blest be the Tie that Binds."

After the programme, which was held in the main auditorium of the church, the congregation adjourned to the Sunday School Hall, where refreshments were served by the ladies of the two churches, and an hour spent in social intercourse.

Popular Officer Leaves the Force

P. C. Cookman Severs His Connection With Police Dept. This Evening

The Peterborough Police Force loses one of its most popular members when P. C. George Cookman, who has been called upon to return to the employ of the British Government in the Government dock yards, severs his connection with the force this evening.

P. C. Cookman leaves for England on Thursday, where he will go into the employ of the Government as a mechanic in the Government dock yards. He was employed at this work for a period before coming to Canada and has been called upon to return.

He has been connected with the local police force since 16th June, 1914, and as a police officer has won the friendship of his brother policemen and many citizens, who regret to see him leaving the city, and unite in wishing him success in his new employment.

Well Known Hockey Player Joins Machine Gun Section of the 39th Battalion

Another well known local athlete left for the front yesterday, when Cyril Giroux, who performed on the local O.H.A. teams for a number of years, left for Belleville to join the machine gun section of the 39th Battalion, under Lieut. C. R. Cameron. Pte. Giroux, who is a son of Mr. Geo. H. Giroux, of the Trent Canal Office, enlisted here last week.

A Whiff From Home

A Gilmour street lady, whose birthplace is Nova Scotia, was delighted yesterday with a delightful and fragrant reminder of home. She received a box of trailing arbolus in full bloom and fresh condition. Its delicate and delicious scent—a blend of the perfume of apple blossom and clover bloom, filled the house. It appears that the trailing arbutus (epigaea repens) grows abundantly in shady woods of Nova Scotia, though it is very rare in this part of Ontario, the only spot known to the writer where it grows, being in Belmont township, north of Havelock. This is to be regretted, for apart from its poetical associations, the arbutus, "trailing its blossom covered vines," is the most delicate and fragrant of our spring blooming flowers. It is also abundant in Prince Edward Island, showing that our Maritime Province people are specially favoured.

White Frost Last Evening

There was a heavy white frost last night. The possibility of any serious damage resulting is minimised by the fact that the temperature did not go lower than within one degree of freezing. So far as can be learned the vegetation did not suffer to any extent. The cold raw wind which brought with it a few rain showers was accompanied by a temperature of thirty-three degrees. Rain has been general throughout Ontario and the temperature has been unseasonably low in all provinces except British Columbia.

In the West.

Winnipeg, May 18.—The cool wave, prevalent further west, struck Manitoba Sunday and light frosts were recorded over most of the province east of Brandon, with two degrees in Winnipeg and considerably colder in the north, the low point being Swan River, where the thermometer touched 31. This was accompanied by a bitter gale from the northeast, driving rain or sleet and even some snow flurries.

Frost will do damage to the growing field crops and Manitobians are weather wise to the extent of not growing tender garden stuff until May 24th. So far as the spring wheat is concerned, conditions remain entirely satisfactory, cool nights and plenty of moisture contributing to sturdy root development. The crop is well ahead of schedule and is in a position to withstand, if necessary, prolonged drought.

Fifteen points in Manitoba, which on May 11 reported an immediate need of rain, have experienced heavy rains within the past thirty-six hours. The crops are now in fine shape. A number of Saskatchewan points previously in need of rain report rain of from 24 to 48 hours duration, while Alberta records snow and rains. The value of the precipitation is inestimable at this stage of the growing crops.

You can keep your skin free from hair or fuzz by the occasional use of plain delatone and in using it you need have no fear of marring or injuring the skin. A thick paste is made by mixing some of the powdered delatone with water. Then spread on the hairs and after 2 or 3 minutes rub off, wash the skin and all traces of hair have vanished. Be careful, however, to get real delatone.

TEN SUBMARINES FOR GREAT BRITAIN

Special to the Examiner.

BOSTON, May 18—The ten submarines which the Foreriver Shipbuilding Corporation is constructing at Quincy for the British Government, will be launched early next month within five months of the time the keels were laid, it was learned to-day. The trial trips will follow soon after, and the boats could be ready for commission by July 1, although they are not to be delivered until after the war. The average time for constructing submersibles in this country previously, has been more than two years.

Ladies' Hairdressing in London and Paris

By Constance

When I was in Europe this year I found both cities so thickly dotted with hairdressing parlours and hair goods stores that I wondered if the women ever had time for anything but the care of the hair. Personally I was chiefly interested in finding a really good shampoo and I found that they never use makeshifts but always some item made for shampooing only, and I was happily surprised when several inquiries each brought the suggestion that our own American made canthrox shampoo is best. They like it because in addition to being perfectly safe and making the hair free from dandruff, excess oil and dust, it is so simple to get canthrox from any druggist and just dissolve a teaspoonful in a cup of hot water, knowing you will then have a preparation that makes the hair not only entirely clean but so fluffy that it appears very heavy. Canthrox stimulates the scalp to healthy action, making the head feel good, and the hair look good.

William Fair Was Fined Five Dollars and Costs

For Using Receptacles For the Collection of Garbage That Were Not Properly Stamped by the Inspector of Weights and Measures—Case Against Sanitary Inspector Spence Dismissed

In to-day's Police Court, William Fair was fined five dollars and costs amounting in all to $6.25, for using receptacles for the collection of refuse, that were not properly stamped, as required by the Weights and Measures Act. A similar case against Sanitary Inspector Spence, under whose supervision, William Fair operates, was dismissed.

Police Magistrate Dumble delivered the following judgment:

"This charge is against a scavenger for using vessels for holding refuse to be removed, which had not been duly inspected and stamped by the Government Inspector, as required by Section 65 of the Weights and Measures Act. William Fair caused to be made six iron cans, size 18 by 20 inches, these cans were stamped marked as holding thirty gallons each, and under the by-law of the city, the scavenger was authorized to collect from the owner of the premises, one dollar per can holding thirty gallons.

The Inspector of Weights and Measures in his evidence stated that the cans in question, instead of holding thirty gallons held only eighteen and one-half gallons, yet the scavenger charged one dollar per can or six dollars for the six cans.

Our, and the primary object of the act in requiring all measures to be inspected and stamped with their capacity is to prevent fraud. This man got tins which held as much as two men could conveniently lift. There was no objection to their size, but there was a very serious objection to paying nearly twice as much as the city by-law allowed. To hold thirty gallons the tins would require to be 24 inches in diameter, by 40 inches high, instead of 18 by 20 inches. Mr. Howson very properly objected to being cheated.

This case opens a very important [illegible] that these falsely marked cans have been the means of many people being overcharged. It is of the greatest importance that the necessary inforcement of the Health By-law should not be made so burdensome as that people will try to shirk their duty. The defendant should be guided by the tariff, but he candidly admits that he usually bargains for what he can get, hence the many complaints of overcharging. The Health Inspector states that he guaged the cans and reported them as holding thirty gallons now explained by him to be wine measure, but wine measure was never intended to apply to night soil cans. Even if wine measure were the right measure to apply to these cans they would each hold twenty-two and a half gallons, and not thirty gallons. Wine measure is to Imperial measure as 5 to 6.

I find that the failure to have these cans measured and properly stamped by the proper officer enabled defendant to exact from the public an exorbitant price for his services, the very thing that the Weights and Measures Act was intended to prevent.

I don't think the defendant was aware of the fact that his cans were improperly marked, but I feel that I must enforce the law for the protection of the public. It is to be hoped that properly guaged and marked cans will be provided, and the charges revised to make them fairer to the public.

I adjudge that the defendant do pay a fine of five dollars and costs, to be paid in ten days, and in default of payment, imprisonment for twenty days.

D. W. DUMBLE.

May 18, 1915.

The costs are made up as follows: Information and complaint, fifty cents; copy, ten cents; service, twenty-five cents; constable's attendance, one dollar and a half; hearing, fifty cents; [illegible]

Wants Specific Performance of the Contract

Judgment Was Reserved by His Honour Judge Huycke in the Lytle-Shearer Case in County Court This Morning

Judgment was reserved this morning by His Honour Judge Huycke in the cast in County Court, Lytle versus Shearer, in which Foster Lytle is suing A. G. Shearer for specific performance of an alleged contract in connection with the purchase of a certain piece of land, the east half of Lot 19 on the 5th Concession of the Township of Harvey.

Mr. G. N. Gordon appeared for the plaintiff and Mr. V. E. McElderry for the defendant.

THE EVIDENCE.

Foster Lytle, the plaintiff, when sworn, stated that on May 14, 1914, he had received a letter from Mr. Shearer saying that the land in question was sold, and that he (Lytle) was not to trespass further.

The latter part of 1910, the agreement between Shearer and Lytle was made. He did some clearing and cropping. In 1912 he cut 15 cords of wood, and in 1911 he cut 28 cords. In 1913 he sowed about 10 acres of the land.

A receipt was put in as exhibit 2 for $15 allowed as interest by Shearer for cutting the wood.

TO PAY $250.

He was to pay $250 for the place, with interest at 6 per cent. He sowed fall grain in 1913 and took it off in August, 1914. He did not put in any further crop in 1914 because he was notified not to trespass. After he got the notice from Shearer he consulted a solicitor.

Witness considered the land more valuable now by $100 than when he bought it from Shearer. It was valuable to him as it was situated across the road from his home farm. He had cleaned it up, picked stones, etc.

Mr. Reeves now occupies the farm.

DID NOT OBJECT.

To Mr. McElderry, witness said he had as long as he liked to pay the purchase price of the land, $250. He was a tenant on the farm when the deal was made. He did not make any objection to Mr. Shearer after he received the notice, but cut the rye and left.

He did not sign any agreement with Mr. Shearer. He was to go to Mr. Shearer's and sign the agreement, but Mr. Shearer did not have time when he went.

To Mr. Gordon he said he left the case with his lawyer.

THE DEFENDANT.

A. G. Shearer, the defendant, said there was no written agreement with Lytle for the purchase of the land. He said he had told Mr. Lytle he would sell it to him, allowing any time up to five years to pay the principal. It was in the fall of 1910 he met Lytle and made this agreement. He did not at any time refuse to put the agreement in writing.

There was two years' interest not paid. He knew notice had been given Lytle to quit, and he did quit the premises, and made no objection to him. He sold the property to Mr. Reeves.

Lytle owed Mr. Shearer a store account as well of about $150, which had not been paid. The place was not improved in value by Mr. Lytle, but had been by Mr. Reeves.

NO NOTICE BEFORE SALE.

To Mr. Gordon, witness said his son did his book-keeping, rendered accounts and handled collections, etc. Lytle had not been notified before the sale to Reeves was made for $300, timber and all. He would swear Lytle had not removed more than three cords of stone while he was there.

SAID HE WAS THROUGH.

Mr. Albert Reeves, who purchased the property, said he wrote to Mr. Lytle, saying he had made the purchase and wanted possession. When he went to see Lytle he asked if there was anything on the place he wanted to take off. Mr. Lytle said there was not, that he was done with the place anyway.

Harry Shearer, son of the defendant, was called to produce the Lytle account. A copy was taken for an exhibit.

Sewage Disposal Plant Has Been "Considered For Four Years

In the beginning, the City Council, several years ago, reached the conclusion that the inevitable sewage disposal plant would be well located on the Otonabee side o fthe river, opposite the foot of Lock Street. Let the citizens recall the fact that the city fathers saw the necessity of providing a modern equipment for the proper disposal of sewage which, up to the present, flows, untreated, into the river. In the first year of Mr. Bradburn's mayoralty term the Townships of Otonabee and Monaghan got together and issued an injunction demanding of the city the discontinuance of the contamination of the river. This legal spur quickened the city's inclination to start something in the desired direction, but as a compromise, Mr. E. A. Peck and Mr. E. H. D. Hall, representing the municipalities, got together to discuss the injunction. The Townships to the south were serious enough, but they did not intend to "be mean about it." If the city would get busy and erect septic tanks and that kind of thing the farmers would be satisfied. The result was that the injunction was hung up over the city's head something like Damocles' sword, with a bent point and dulled edge.

Mr. Bradburn (Mayor) got busy. After him, Mayor William Buller got busy. To-morrow, Walter J. Francis of Montreal will get busy for an hour or two, and after that a procession of other persons will probably get busy. The simple fact is that four years have passed, and the only tangible result of all this activity is a piece of sewer on King George street, and the plans. Don't overlook the plans. They would form an important asset if Otonabee started to rattle the injunction just now. Engineer Parsons first drew up the plans. The Provincial Board of Health endorsed them. But the Otonabee people who wanted the river purified, raised the objection that the plans, while attempting to relieve one nuisance, set up another about which many had deep-grounded suspicions.

Thus the opposition which the Otonabee people raised to the pollution of the river, an opposition which urged the city into action, was almost equalled by the counter-opposition which followed the announcement of the proposed location of the disposal plant in Engineer Parson's plans. Caught between these two forces, the City Fathers were rather at a loss to know what way to turn. First, they decided to go ahead and lay the trunk sewer between Park and Lock Streets. Secondly, the engineer's plans were again subjected to Toronto inspection, and finally received the signature of the Provincial Health Officer.

In the meantime the Otonabee farmers adjacent to the city had not been idle. Mr. H. P. Kennedy, who owns the land opposite the street railway wharf, with a frontage almost to the end of Park Street, lined up with the Township forces. He has threatened to fight the city's plans to the finish. Demanding sums ranging from $100,000 down for is property, is another indication of his attitude towards the city's proposed site.

Latterly, there have been suggestions from the city side that it might be well to locate the disposal plant across the river at Park Street, and as above intimated, it can scarcely be said that the Council has really decided exactly where the plant is to go.

Mr. Harold Hill In Orangeville

Former Choir Leader of Local Church is Making Good in New Field of Labour

That Mr. Harold Hill, former choir leader of Park Street Baptist Church, is making good in his new field of labour at Orangeville, Ontario, is indicated by the appended item that refers to a song service in which Mr. Hill took a prominent and successful part:

The song service by the choir, under the direction of Mr. H. Hill, the new organist and choirmaster, drew a large congregation to the Methodist Church on Sunday evening. The theme of the evening was the familiar 23rd Psalm. The opening number by the choir was the old and well-known anthem, "Taste and see," by Sir J. Goss. Then followed the ladies' quartette, "Rock of refuge," by Mrs. (Dr.) Bowles, Mrs. Robinson, Mrs. Green, and Miss Bell, who sang in their usual pleasing manner. After the prayer the choir introduced the theme of the service by singing Macfarren's anthem, "The Lord is my Shepherd." A little later this was followed by the solo, "He shall feed His flock," from Handel's "Messiah," which was most effectively sung by Miss Vera Hogg. Immediately afterwards Mrs. Bowles sang the companion number, "Come unto Him all ye that labour and are heavy laden," in an excellent manner. The last portion of the pastor's discourse was followed by a solo, "Just as I am" (Danks), by Mrs. Emerson Reid, of Toronto, who delighted every one present with her fine rendition of this exquisite number. The closing number was, "Pilgrims of the Night" (Nickol), in which Mrs. Bowles sang the beautiful obligato and solos. After the benediction the choir sang a vesper, "Lord bless us ere we part" (Hill), thereby bringing to a fitting close a delightful song service. The choir did excellent work under the leadership of Mr. Hill, and the new choir master was warmly complimented upon the acceptable character of the service.

Anti-German Rioting In Victoria B.C.

Peterborough Boy Tells of the Excitement in the Coast City

In a letter to the Examiner, H. S. Elliott, one of the Peterborough boys with the C.G.E. squad of Royal Canadian Engineers at Esquimault, B.C., tells of the anti-German riots in Victoria, B.C. He says:

On Saturday evening, May 8th, 1915, in the Kaiserhof Hotel there was a German flag placed over the top of the picture of the Lusitania, which was the cause of the trouble. The soldiers and citizens immediately began to throw the furniture and bottles about. There was also a celebration in the German club over the sinking of the Lusitania which agitated the people more, so about 8.30 Saturday evening a crowd began at the Kaiserhof and destroyed all the windows, furniture, pictures and mirrors in the bar. They started for the German club and completely wrecked the club.

The third place was Simon Leiser, wholesale department, and after causing great destruction, the citizens carried away wagon loads of material. The masses of people that had collected by this time began wrecking the property of Lenz and Leiser. To the fourth place the damages were estimated between twenty and thirty thousand dollars. There were two hundred militia turned out at 1.30 Sunday morning to aid the police to restore peace again.

On Monday night the riot began again, but not with nearly the fierceness of the previous night, and Wednesday night things were restored to almost normal condition. I think the trouble is practically over, although a detachment is kept in readiness to subdue any fresh outbreaks.

Barne's Met His Match

SYRACUSE, N.Y., May 18.—Wm. Barnes, master of boss rule and party organization, met his match yesterday, when John M. Bowers, chief counsel for Theodore Roosevelt, took the plaintiff in hand for a gruelling cross examination. The ex-State chairman, calm, nonchalant and debonair at the outset, was ruffled and frowning when luncheon recess was taken.

Bowers led Barnes to admit that he was opposed to Governor Hughes in 1908, in the anti-racing legislation, that he talked with Senators Grattan and McCarren, Democrats, about it, and worked for the defeat of the measure Governor Hughes urged.

Barnes also admitted responsibility for editorials in the Albany Evening Journal in 1908, attacking Governor Hughes as "Bull dozer" and advocating the defeat of the Governor's racing programme.

Militia Department Is Trying to Locate The Missing Soldiers

OTTAWA, May 17—Now that heavy lists of the missing are coming in the casualty lists the Militia Department is receiving numerous inquiries for more information. The Departments doing all possible to obtain such information, but not a great deal can be done. While the Canadian officers who were taken prisoners seem to be allowed to send messages to their friends, the men cannot do so.

If the United States should break off diplomatic intercourse with Germany one source of obtaining the names of prisoners would be lost, for the United States ambassador at Berlin has been sending out such lists. An international bureau in Switzerland also exchanges such lists between the belligerent countries.

Mr. MacNamara added: "The number of persons of all nationalities killed in connection with these sinkings is approximately 1,556. The tonnage of German shipping, not warships, sunk or captured by the British navy to May 18 is 514,665. So far as known, not one German or neutral subject has been killed in connection therewith."

Consulting Sanitary Engineer

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—I notice by our local press that Mr. W. J. Francis, Civil Engineer of Montreal, P.Q., has been called here by our Council to give expert advice re our sewage disposal scheme.

While Mr. Francis may have a fair knowledge of the engineering profession in general, he is certainly no expert in sanitary engineering. Our City Council could have, very easily, secured the services of an expert sanitary engineer without going out of this Province; but as your esteemed contemporary, The Review, speaking of Mr. Francis, says "he is well known in local Masonic circles," I suppose that is quite sufficient.

Yours truly,
Civil Engineer.

"THE GREATEST WAR IN HISTORY IN THE LIMELIGHT."

This is the attractive title of the illustrated lecture to be given to-night (Tuesday) at 8 o'clock, in the Public Library Hall, by Mr. H. J. Osborn, London, England. Needless to say, it is THE WAR, the present war in Europe; that the treatment is up-to-date is indicated by the fact that a series of "Lusitania" views will be shown, by absolutely new projections which will be seen for the first time at this lecture. Mr. Osborn's war set includes 120 pictures, and these, with the talk, make a fine entertainment of a peculiarly informative character, which should not be missed. Since his last visit to Peterborough, Mr. Osborn has lectured in over 100 Ontario places, for Patriotic, Red Cross, Belgian Relief, and other funds, and is very favourably reported in the press of Ottawa, Kingston, Welland, Hamilton, Brantford, Orillia, Lindsay, Renfrew, Bowmanville and many other places.

Mayor Beddy will preside at the lecture.

FOLEY-GLEASON WORK IS NEARING COMPLETION

Patching last year's pavement in places where slight depressions had formed was an evidence to-day that the Foley-Gleason operations in connection with their existing contract, are all but terminated. Several citizens have suggested that streets to be paved in future should be selected a year or two in advance. This would permit the laying of all gas, water and sewer services, and sufficient time would follow to allow the earth to settle in the trenches before the pavement was laid. Not a few of the indentations that were being filled in to-day on George street seemed to have been caused by the settling of earth in trenches.

SIXTY COMPANIES SHARE RUSSIAN SHELL ORDER

Senator Nathaniel Curry, president of the Canadian Car and Foundry Company, in a recent interview in New York concerning the $3,000,000 Russian shell order secured by his firm, said:

"There are about fifty companies in the United States," said Senator Curry, "and about ten companies in Canada engaged in the manufacture of different parts of shrapnel and explosive shells. These orders have been split up among companies in the Eastern and Middle-Western States and throughout Eastern Canada."

MILK MEN MADE A SPECIAL EFFORT SAT'Y

It has been good-humouredly remarked that several of the classy milk delivery outfits of Saturday had fallen off several degrees in class on Monday. In their endeavour to make a good showing on the market, some milkmen exhibited new and fancy harness rarely used in the drudgery of every-day delivery. Some even had horses in the exhibit which were seen as drivers on Sunday, and on Monday had a day off. It is believed they have every day off the milk wagon, with the one exception.

Says Prisoners In Germany Are Badly Treated

Mr. R. J. Todd received the following clipping from the Morning Post, sent to him from London:

They are treated brutally, they are tortured; they are starved; they are murdered. They are denied news and told false news, and they are surrounded as it were by a savage grin of hate. We published yesterday a message which came through from one of the camps: "We are being starved here. We get rice water and horse beans only; no solid food; one loaf of bread for six days. Several men have been run through with bayonets by the guard, and a large number are being flogged and tied to a barber wire post for six hours with their toes just touching the ground. They do this without any cause. We have one blanket and all the men are suffering with dysentery. The guards knock us about unmercifully with rifles and sticks. We have hardly anything to wear, as our captors took them away. It is worse than being in Hell. They have given pants, coats and shirts to the French, but will give the British nothing. The wounded do not get proper treatment and several of them have died, and there will be a lot more yet." This is true, every word of it, for it is all corroborated by abundant evidence in the White Paper recently published.

Stock Markets

New York Stocks

A. H. Stratton & Co., Brokers, report the following:

NEW YORK, May 18—Trading continued very dull to the end of the first hour and price changes were confined within narrow limits. Brokers advised customers that the market would probably only back and fill pending the arrival of the German answer, and would decline sharply if the reply were unfavourable and that for the time being it was advisable to avoid Bull commitments. The insistence by certain German papers that Germany make no change in its way of conducting the war was regarded in some places as a forerunner of an unfavourable reply, while in conservative quarters it was contended that such things were merely intended as feelers to ascertain what was the least that would satisfy American demands, or some measure lessen the present tension.

NEW YORK, May 18.—Prices sagged a little further in the second hour but that seemed to be due to neglect rather than to pressure of stock. Trading was exceedingly dull and the street's general attitude was a waiting one. Words of caution were expressed in many quarters, but whether they had any other justification than the unfavourable forecasts of German reply contained in press despatches is an open question. It was said American Can. has received sub-contracts running into millions of dollars for the manufacture of timing springs for use in shrapnel shells and is turning them out with out curtailment of its facilities for making cans and other ordinary products of the plants.

NEW YORK, May 18.—Volume of trading in early afternoon was down almost to the irreducible price minimum, but prices were a shade firmer than they had been earlier in the session. Predictions of an unfavourable reply from Germany brought out no stock, and indications were that the market was in thoroughly liquidated condition. Among experienced traders there were few who thought that the refusal by Germany to make concessions to American demands would result in declines of more than two or three points from present level.

Market has has large decline, and prices are low enough to discount anything unfavourable. Such business as was done was comparatively small, a great majority of transactions being of 100 shares, while there were few above 200 or 300 shares.

CHICAGO, May 18.—Wheat dull and heavy, with some pressure owing to favourable reports outside of southwest and dull cash demand. Oats steady, with light offerings, and some complaints of injury from killing frosts in North-West.

Corn weak, with good deal of liquidation on favourable weather and poor foreign demand.

WOMEN DRINKERS GROW AS MEN QUIT

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., May 18. — Excessive drinking among girls and young women, as one of the most persistent evils now facing the temperance cause, was deplored by William S. Bennet, of New York to-night, at the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the National Temperance Society in the First Baptist Church.

"To this extent the temperance movement has failed," he said. "With the whole male population of the country aroused over the question of stamping out the traffic, each year sees a heavier increase in the number of drinking women."

That liquor is being subjected to a united attack by the various Legislatures in the country, Mr. Bennet indicated, asserting that during the year more than 300 bills asking to wipe out the evil had been introduced in the different States.

He advocated the government buy up the breweries and close them immediately as one of the most profitable investments that could be made in the interests of public welfare.

Losses in the Germany Army Total Over Two Millions

GREAT ASSULT HAS BEGUN ON PREMYSL

Hostile Armies Have Begun Great Bombardment But Sacrificed Thousands of Men to Gain Footing Across San River

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, May 19.—The Austro-German forces in Galacia are centring a tremendous effort around the fortress of Peremysl, according to, the official report issued in Petrograd Tuesday night. The Russian statement declares that the efforts of the enemy are being carried out under a withering Russian artillery fire, but adds that the Germans are strengthening their foothold across the San River at Jaroslau, north of Peremysl.

The western guns of the big fortress itself have been in action, the enemy having brought up his field pieces and engaged the forts in a duel of great intensity. To the southeast of Peremysl, in the marshy region of the Dniester, the Austrians have captured a series of Russian trenches at the cost of heavy sacrifices. The losses of the enemy in general are said to run into tens of thousands.

The Austrian official statement says the [illegible] that the Teutonic allies have secured a grip on the east bank of the San, declares that they have taken from the Russians since the beginning of May 128 cannon, 368 machine guns and 174,000 prisoners. Whether or not this includes the spoils claimed by the Germans is not stated.

THE RUSSIAN REPORT.

The text of the Russian official report is as follows:

"In the Shavli region (Courland we continued to press the enemy closely. In the region between the Niemen and the Verjbolovo railway our troops have assumed the offensive and are engaging the enemy.

"In the sector between Opatow, on the left bonk of the Upper Vistula, and the whole Galacian front up to the environs of Kolomea, on May 14, great masses of the enemy attacked our positions, centring their efforts in the region to the north and south of Peremysl. On the left bank of the Vistula we not only repulsed furious attacks, but assumed the offensive and captured three thousand prisoners and numerous guns and machine guns. Near Jaroslau, despite our withering artillery fire, which is inflicting immense losses, the Germans are still endeavouring to consolidate their position on the right bank of the San river. Here, during the course of the day, we brought down many hostile aeroplanes, which were correcting the fire of the enemy batteries. Under Peremysl, the artillery fire has been intense, the enemy bombarding the western forts.

"Between Peremysl and the great marshes of the Dniester, masses of the enemy which attacked us reached in many places our fire. Nevertheless, at the cost of enermous sacrifices, the enemy succeeded in capturing the trenches of two of our battalions.

"The attacks of the enemy in the region of Drohobycz, Stry, Bolikow, Bolina, Delatyn and Kolomea were delivered with extreme energy, but were everywhere barren of results. The losses of the enemy in general are estimated by tens of thousands."

German Losses Total 2,050,000

400,000 Have Been Killed

LONDON, May 19.—The Daily Chronicle says: We have received what purports to be an authoritative statement of the casualties in the German ranks from the beginning of the war till March 23. The number of lists of dead and wounded and missing until that date was 180. Between March 23 and May 15 45 further lists have been published, making a total of 224. Statements in our possession contain a grand total of casualties of first 180 lists. This covers a period of fighting from August 2 till February 14. The remaining 45 lists deal with the period between the middle of February and the end of March. According to the general statement from which we quote the classified loss until February 14 is 1,175,681, as follows:

|---|---|
| DEAD:— | |
| Officers | 10,951 |
| Non-Commissioned Officers and Men | 237,697 |
| WOUNDED: | |
| Officers | 19,630 |
| Non-Commissioned Officers and Men | 728,406 |
| MISSING: | |
| Officers | 1,853 |
| Non-Commissioned Officers and Men | 177,144 |

We have not any classified statement with regard to the next 45 lists, but on the basis of 180 earlier lists they would probably add an additional 300,000 to the total.

It is to be borne in mind that the six weeks covered by the latest 45 lists include exceptionally severe fighting in Poland, Galacia and the Carpathians, as well as tremendous and sustained struggles in Flanders and Northwest France. The probability, therefore, is that the grand total of German casualties till March 31 cannot be far short of 1,800,000.

Another quarter million must certainly be added for the fighting of the last six weeks. The total in dead therefore exceeds 400,000.

Italy's Military Strength In Comparison With Other Powers

NEW YORK, May 19.—Italy theoretically has universal military service, but in practice falls far short of this. The standing army on a peace footing is 275,000. The organized reserves are 480,000, and the mobile militia 320,000, a total of 800,000.

In addition, there is the territorial militia, most of it untrained and largely existing on paper, of a nominal strength of 2,250,000.

It is the best military opinion that in time of war Italy can put 2,000,000 men under arms.

The Italian army compares with the other warring armies as follows:—

| | Peace Footing. | War Strength. |
|---|---|---|
| France | 570,000 | 3,800,000 |
| Russia | 900,000 | 5,000,000 |
| England | 150,000 | 1,000,000 |
| Total | 1,620,000 | 9,750,000 |
| Germany | 790,000 | 4,500,000 |
| Austria | 385,000 | 2,000,000 |
| Turkey | 280,000 | 1,000,000 |
| Total | 1,450,000 | 6,500,000 |
| Italy | 275,000 | 2,000,000 |

Italy has a small navy but one believed to be very efficient and somewhat more powerful than Austria's.

Italy's naval strength as compared with the fighting nations is shown in the following table:—

| | England & Allies. | Germany & Allies. | Italy. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Dreadnoughts and battle cruisers. | 57 | 20 | 6 |
| Older battleships | 32 | 31 | 8 |
| Large cruisers | 55 | 6 | 9 |
| Light cruisers | 105 | 47 | 11 |
| Destroyers | 448 | 178 | 46 |
| Torpedo boats | 266 | 129 | 78 |
| Submarines | 219 | 38 | 20 |

The following table shows the aircraft possessed by the fighting nations at the beginning of the war. (These numbers are known to have been greatly increased):—

| | Dirigibles. | Aeroplanes. |
|---|---|---|
| England and Allies | 47 | 1,320 |
| Germany and Allies | 26 | 600 |
| Italy | 12 | 180 |

ITALY'S ARMY MAY MOBILIZE IN 24 HOURS

Not Likely That War Will Be Declared Until After Opening of Parliament Which Takes Place To-morrow

Special Cable to The Examiner:

ROME, May 19.—Italy may order a mobilization of her army within 24 hours.

A declaration of war is not expected until after Parliament meets to-morrow to approve of the Government's war programme, and it may not come for several days.

These were reports in circulation to-day while members of the Chamber of Deputies were arriving for to-morrow's session.

At least three hundred members were in Rome early to-day. Newspapers supporting the Salandra Cabinet, said the sentiment among the deputies was almost unanimous for war. Another session of the Cabinet adjourned shortly after midnight to-day. No statement was given out other than that the Government had fully determined on its policy and would make it known when the deputies meet to-morrow.

ROME, May 19.—The situation grows hourly more intense. The Austrian and German Consuls left Rome last night without announcement. The staffs of the Consulates are accompanying them.

The Turkish Ambassador conferred with Baron Sonnino, the Foreign Minister, yesterday afternoon, and afterwards it was reported that he had been instructed to leave Rome together with his Austrian and German colleagues. The Giornale d'Italia, organ of the Salandra Government, announces definitely that Prince von Buelow and Baron von Macchio, the German and Austrian Ambassadors, have demanded their passports.

Premier Salandra and Baron Sonnino were received in audience yesterday afternoon by the King immediately after the Turkish Ambassador had returned to his Embassy, and this evening the Cabinet Council is in session.

The Messagero said yesterday that it was of the opinion that Prince von Buelow and Baron von Macchio were only awaiting definite instructions from their respective Governments to ask explanations of the Italian Government concerning Italy's purposes, and that this request would be answered by handing them their passports.

Several cases and trunks belonging to Prince von Buelow, the German Ambassador, and Baron von Macchio, the special Austrian Ambassador, which are believed to have contained the documents of the two Embassies, already have been sent out of the country. That of Prince von Buelow passed through the Customs house at Chiasso, and that of Baron von Macchio through the Customs authorities at Pontebba, on the Austrian frontier. Neither was examined, being entitled to diplomatic immunity from search.

GREEN BOOK IS PREPARED.

The Italian Parliament will be opened Thursday beyond doubt, and it is considered likely that Premier Salandra will then make important announcements, possibly proclaiming mobilization. Italy's Green Book, explaining the failure of the Austrian and Italian negotiations, will be issued at that time and distributed to the members of Parliament, so that no explanations are likely from Baron Sonnino, the Foreign Minister.

The Green Book will contain diplomatic documents tending to show the attitude of Italy from the beginning of the war and the strenuous efforts made by the Italian Government to reconcile the obligations of the Triple Alliance with the Italian national aspirations and the principles of nationality, on which is based the existence of Italy and the hopes of future greatness.

Stoney Lake Breezes

Next to Peterborough, Toronto sends the largest number of visitors to Stony Lake. This part of Kawarthadom is becoming very popular with an increasing number of residents from the Queen City. Empire Day should see a large contingent from that direction. Already the Stony Lake Navigation Co. have had a number of inquiries about the sailing of their boats around holiday time. Judging from the experience of former years there will be a boat on Saturday, Monday and Tuesdad (Monday being the holiday.) The regular daily service will commence June 1st.

The month of May is an ideal time to spend a holiday in Stony Lake. The beauty of nature budding forth reminds one of that exquisite poem on May Day" by Miss Isobel Graham:

"Welcome! merry month of May,
With the festive garlands gay,
Bower and branch adorning,
Who would sing of aught but spring?
Love's the pulse of everything
On a bright May morning."

If it were not for the mosquitoes, the month of May would vie with September for supremacy in being the best camping time of the year.

The water continues to rise. Numbers of small islands which are in plain view during July and August are now completely out of sight. This is the time of the season when it is wise for motor boats to follow the channels pretty closely.

Next Wednesday the merchants of Lakefield run their annual excursion to McCracken's Landing, where a jolly time will be spent. Dinner will be served by Miss Morgan at the Victoria House.

Mrs. J. W. McKinney and her mothThursday and arrived at McCracken's Landing Monday morning. They will remain at the Victoria House for some time, during the completion of their new cottage.

The "Empress" made a trip up the lakes on Friday with a large load of freight and a number of passengers.

Mr. and Mrs. J. B. McWilliams and Mrs. Miller have opened their cottage for the season.

Mr. E. H. D. Hall's cottage was also opened on Friday.

Mr. John Hunter has built a kitchen and bedroom on to his cottage near McCracken's.

A jolly party of young people took the Gibson Island by storm early in the month. Since their departure the upper end of Stony Lake has settled down into its usual composure.

Happy Hawkins in the Panhandle

By ROBERT ALEXANDER WASON

CHAPTER V.

DODGE CITY.

Some animals are proud and sensitive, and some never feel any respect for ya until you've give 'em a lickin'. The mean ones in my crowd belonged to the second section; and they began to work easy and contented that very afternoon, and I began to hope that we'd have some sort of a mix-up in the herd that would shake us into a real team, but the' wasn't a thing for the men to do except loaf along and ruminate on how much fun they were missin'by not bein'otherwise engaged so I decided that a practical joke would be about the only kind of a safety-valve in reach, and decided to offer up Jim.

He had took my advice about trustin' me with his responsibilities, and after he had come in from his night guard, he'd turn to and sleep as peaceful as sardines in a can; but he was altogether too fussy and too careless about disposin' himself for the night. He'd change from one suit of underwear to another and then not put on any outer garments. I couldn't figure out how he was goin' to be of any use in a stampede; but he said it wouldn't take him a second to dress, he wore daytimes would give him a fever.

As soon as he had struck his sleepin' gait, I notified the other boys that it was now time to train the green hand in the etiquette of receivin' an invitation to a stampede party. They all entered into it joyful and this was a good sign to me.

I had already turned in his pantlegs at the bottom, bastin' the hems to one side so his feet would catch in the fold, and I had also scattered his truck a shade more 'n he had left it, and now as soon as we had saddled up and smothered the fire a little we turned ourselves loose. The night guard came in yelling stampede and to clear the way as it was headed straight for camp. Jim was helped a little in his wakin' up and jumped to his feet. As fast as he'd jump up some one on his way to his own hoss would bump into him and knock him over, Short♦ would then ride over him draggin' the trace-chains, and Red who had chose to stay on foot tried to act like the whole herd by snortin', bellowin', and runnin' up and down his back every time he'd stretch out full length.

When we got on our hosses we'd rush by and over him, split right and left, circle short and repeat, while he'd manage to get one leg fast in his trousers and be dancin' around on his free foot by the time we'd get back to him. I snatched the trousers out of his hand and tore out the bastin' when I thought he'd had enough and then we rode on and stayed long enough to give him time to dress, after which we came in as business-like as a yoke of oxen. Jim was standin' holdin' his saddle and lookin' foolish.

"Look here," I sez to him hard and scornful, "it's all right for you to throw off this time, because it turned out to be nothin' but a few steers with a nightmare; but if that had been a regular stampede, we'd 'o' needed all hands—mounted and with their clothes on."

The fire had been stirred up again good light on it. He swallered a couple o' times and then managed to get out, "I'll try and be on hand next time."

That sure was some school where he'd been fagged out at. He studied how the rest of 'em bedded down, and that was the last time anybody had to send his night-invitation a day ahead.

I had noticed purty close and no one had been undershot with him. Red had handled him the worse; but Red was perfectly whole-hearted in his devilment and would have treated his own grandfather the same as if he had been the one elected to get the trimmin'.

It was a nice drive and I really enjoyed it a lot. There's a roll to the plains and a mystery, the same as to the mountains, and I can easy see how a feller who had got his soul tied to the plains first would miss 'em as bad as I missed my big, old, quiet, knowin' friends with their nightcaps o' snow; but, as it was, I used to feel foolish, all the time tryin' to climb up the edge of a saucer, and this is exactly what bein', in the midst of those plains reminded me of.

Durin' the day I loaded Jim with all he work. I could scheme up and at night we initiated him into the hidden secrets that make a cow-puncher about the wearin'est animal in the world. Shorty had a rawhide platted by a blind Greaser down in Old Mexico, and it was the slickest tool ever I handled. Red used it to work the snake gag on Jim, and Jim responded to it more thorough 'n ever was done before, I reckon. When the rope mounted his chest and started to crawl across, Jim held his breath 'till I feared the top of his head would blow off; and the rest of us purt' nigh exploded, too, tryin' to keep from laughin'. We worked all the old gags on Jim, and he sure was worth the trouble, for he never balked at nothin' and he allus seemed pleased after he found out how free we'd been rawhidin' him. Mighty few men think any the less of a feller who bites on even an old gag, and even fewer men think that the feller who hangs back and does the burro-act needs an extra cinch around his head to help brace his skull again' the heavin' of his brain.

Jim stood his seasonin' in a way to show he was game to the bone, and Monody, Red, and Shorty all fitted in so well that the riff-raff didn't have enough heart to start any trouble and the only thing I could find to fuss about was the fact that I didn't have any idy where we were, and if any one else did, he was too polite to mention it. Then after we'd been out about ten days or a week, Jim pointed out some sones to the south-east of us which he said were the Antelope Hills over in the Territory east of his ranch: and that gave us our bearings for true and we headed more to the north.

Jim had been livin' on his ranch for five years, changin' hands all the time because his ways weren't popular, and this was the first stuff he had ever sold. He had about used up his cash on hand and the sale o' that herd meant a heap to him; but that night he blossomed out and proceeded to air his views again! He had the idee that the only reason Britain had let go of the States was because she had been so busy teddin' to more important details that she didn't have time to bother with us; while on the other hand Shorty had the idee that Texas had licked Britain single-handed and didn't think it worth braggin' about either.

Shorty had once seen a map of the world, and he judged things altogether on size. Fact was he had a sneakin' sort of a feelin' that Texas ort to be ashamed of herself for jumpin' on a little halftin' like what Britain was; but still he didn't chooze to sit and listen to a bloomin' Englishman put on airs.

When it was a case of violence, why, Shorty tended to it himself; but when words were all that was needed, Shorty allus sicked Red on to settle it. Jim boasted free and hearty about Britain's navy and art, galleries and colleges, and such-like, and you'd naturally think 'at Shorty wouldn't have cared much about this bein' as how he wouldn't have known what to do with any of these things even if he had owned 'em all; but he didn't like Jim's manner, and so he rumbled in his chest, and Red took it up.

Red never felt embarrassed except when he was all alone. When he had a chance to put on a benevolent look, comb out his beard, and address an audience, why, the' simply wasn't any way to make him bashful except to hit him from behind with a brick. "Navies are all right," sez he lofty-like to Jim. "The's a heap o' fun in a navy to them 'at like such things. Texas had a navy when she was called upon to slap Mexico and take all her decent land away from her, and she had another navy durin' what is called the Civil War, which was a most uncivil war to Texas. We had all the Yankees licked we could coax into Texas, and were just makin' ready to branch out and tend to the rest of 'em when peace was declared. Biggest piece o' foolishness I ever heard of! But, truth to tell, Texas never set much store by a navy, nohow. We had all the land we wanted to bother with, and so there wasn't any sense in our islands what had got shattered off when the world was bein' created."

Jim he got indignant and began to relate all the wonders of what he called the tight little island of Merrie England, until Red took on a beat look and sighed prodigious.

"Englishmen are game, all right, I'll say that for 'em," sez Red as soon as Jim settled back with a satisfied expression. "The' was one down to the South who was fond o' huntin', and he had some corkin' hosses, but had lost his dogs. One day he was out ridin' on one of his best hosses, and he overtook a barefooted kid ridin' the sorriest-lookin' mule ever was seen; but the kid had taught the mule to stop and squat every time he tickled him with his toe.

"They were ridin' along friendly together, the Englishman instructin' the kid in how much more his people knew 'n the kid's people did and the kid he was thankful for the information and did his best to remember all of it he could.

"Presently he tickled the mule and the mule squatted the same as a setter dog would. 'What's the bloomin' beast doin' ' sez the Englishman. 'He's settin' the coyote off yonder,' sez the kid, pointin' to one just barely in sight. ' 'Pon me word!' sez the Englishman. After a time the kid saw some quail light and he tickled the mule again. 'What's he fast on this time ' sez the Englishman. 'He acts like as if it was birds,' sez the kid; 'but I don't see none.' The kid beat the mule with his heels, but the mule wouldn't stir until the kid tickled him with his toe on the other side, and this the kid didn't do until the birds finally rose.

"'Well, you can blow me bally head for a rotter,' sez the Englishman, 'if that isn't a most remarkable creature!'" For the next mile he tried to buy the mule, but the kid refused. Finally, though, the kid consented to an even trade, saddle and all. The Englishman agreed and they swapped right there, the Englishman mountin' on to the piece of old carpet the kid had used for a saddle and the kid gettin' up on the thoroughbred. The' didn't any game attract the mule's attention until they got to the middle of a ford, when the kid rode close and managed to tickle the mule without gettin' caught at it, and the mule squatted right down. 'Will you kindly tell me,' sez the Englishman, 'what this peculiar animal is settin' in this case?' 'He's settin' a blame foreign sucker,' sez the kid, ridin' up out of the ford and leavin' the Englisman kickin' the mule in the slats, and wishin' his bloomin' old navy would come and rescue him, doncha know."

That was the first time Jim had ever heard that idiotic tale; but he'll recall the laugh Shorty and the rest uncorked to his dyin' day. It had a lastin' effect on his vanity, too. Well, it was a good thing we had Jim for a safety valve, as that drive was about as excitin' s a promenade on a tredmill, and anything is better 'n nothin'.

Next day we passed within sight of Fort Supply, and after fordin' the North Fork of the Canadian, went into camp. Turnin' the outfit over to Red, me and Jim went in to the post where we found that we had been enjoyin' the luck of an infant, for the Injuns had been cuttin' up quite a little over on the Chisholm Trail to the east; but the Western trail on which we now were was new in use and not popular yet.

Jim was bent on takin' that bunch right into Kansas City, but they laughed it out of him there at the post and told him that Kansas City had been movin' east mighty rapid durin' the last few days.

"You're boss," sez he on the way; "but I don't care what happens, I'm goin' in to Kansas City before ever I go back to that ranch"

SO SAYS EMINENT SPECIALIST.

So-called stomach troubles, such as indigestion, wind, and stomachache are in probably nine cases out of ten simply evidence that fermentation is taking place in the food contents of the stomach, causing the formation of gas and acids. Wind distends the stomach, and causes that full, oppressive feeling sometimes known as heartburn, while the acid irritates and inflames the delicate lining of the stomach. The trouble lies entirely in the fermenting food. Such fermentation is unnatural, and acid formation is not only unnatural, but may involve most serious consequences if not corrected. To stop or prevent fermentation of the food contents of the stomach and to neutralize the acid, and render it bland and harmless, a teaspoonful of Mcurated magnesia, probably the best and most effective corrector of acid stomach known, should be taken in a quarter of a glass of hot or cold water immediately after eating, or whenever wind or acidity is felt. This stops the fermentation, and neutralizes the acidity in a few moments. Fermentation, wind and acidity are dangerous and unnecessary. Stop or prevent them by the use of a proper antacid, such as bicarated magnesia, which can be obtained from any druggist and thus enable the stomach to do its work properly without being hindered by poisonous gas and dangerous acids.—M. It Multiplies Power.

The telephone, like the crane, multiplies power.

The telephone increases personal efficiency and enlarges the volume of business by extending the field of the merchant's activity.

If the modern business man had to travel every time it was necessary to have a personal talk with a customer or business associate, he would be in the position of a builder without a crane.

Are you using the telephone as you should—systematically applying it to the needs of your business?

The telephone, especially the long distance service, makes possible real economy, and with it a greater, not a lower, efficiency. A careful study of the subject will repay you.

RAISING THE WIND

How Mark Gilson Paid Off the Mortgage on the Old Farm.

By MILDRED C. GOODRIDGE.

Mark Gilson had two objects in life; first, to raise the mortgage on the old folks' farm; next, to marry Nettie Lyale. The mortgage was only $500, and, that paid, all hands, pretty Nettie included, could live very comfortably. For over a year, however, Mark had striven and struggled in the city, and his earnings continued small and his savings few and far between.

Recently Mark had added a side line to his regular occupation and, time given, there might be some promising results. With capital, things might have been hastened. Not having the capital, Mark worked in a small way, but learned a good deal. Mark's side line was old coins and rare postage stamps.

Mark's investment in coins was very limited, for values were standard and profits high. Once in a while, however, he ran across a real bargain in stamps. He liked the fad and, in fact, had become quite an expert in philately.

Mark worked for a real estate firm. He came back to the office one morning quite elated over his last savings deposit, which brought his balance up to the two hundred mark. He was ready for a joke, therefore, and he chuckled good-naturedly when the bookkeeper pointed over his shoulder and said in a mysterious whisper:

"Mark, if you want to see a real live king, take a look into the front office. No joke—honest Indian."

"A real king?" repeated Mark, skeptically. "King of what?"

"Juana island, off the coast of Chili. He's King Asa Zib, and no mistake. Owns an island, has his national flag, coat of arms, and a royal guard when at home. Erratic down Easter, they say, who preempted Juana island, got recognition from three or four South American republics, and has come here to finance his island. Old friend of the boss, you see. He's got a hard turn down, though."

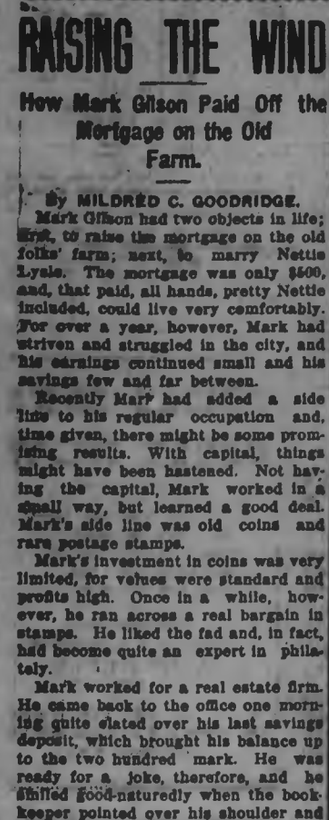
"How is that?" inquired Mark.

"Why, he brought along a lot of ore specimens, thinking he'd struck gold on his island. Mr. Boyd had an assay made. His mine wouldn't pay to work."

Just then the king in question came out of the office. Mark took a good look at him. He did not in the least appear royal. He looked disappointed, dejected and his kingly robes comprised a faded check suit.

"Tell Mr. Boyd I have gone back to my rooms at the Prospect hotel," the king advised the bookkeeper. "I may see him tomorrow."

"Very well, sir."



A Momentary Inspection of the Wallet Revealed No Money.

The king left the office and walked unceremoniously into the next room.

"From the office of Boyd & Co.," he said. "I believe this is your property, sir. You dropped it in the corridor."

"Why, so it is!" exclaimed King Asa Zib. "I am greatly obliged to you. Just now—that is—when I call again on Mr. Boyd, I will not forget you."

"Not in the way of reward, sir," said Mark. "I don't expect that. In fact, your majesty," continued Mark, "I'd like to add to your revenues."

"Eh! What's that?" challenged the secretary, pricking up his ears.

"Yes, sir," went on Mark boldly. "You'll excuse me, but I've heard something about your circumstances; I happen to know that you need money."

"There's no question as to that," observed the secretary, with a sickly smile.

"I can furnish it," declared Mark confidently. "You needn't invest a cent. Say I can get you two thousand dollars, or even five thousand dollars. Do I get ten per cent commission, if I do?"

"Another quick money scheme, I suppose," muttered King Asa Zib.

"Yes, quick—and sure," asserted Mark. "Let me ask you: what postal arrangements do you have at Juana Island?"

"Oh, a few letters go and come," explained the secretary. "When we send them, the steamer captains mail them at the first landing. We give them an occasional present for carrying them to the mainland."

"Exactly, an ideal situation for my plan," insisted Mark. "Here's what I can do: I'm in strong with all the stamp collectors. I'll arrange for an issue of Juana Island stamps."

"But you couldn't sell ten a year to the natives."

"Don't need to. We'll list them as new and rare, and distribute the whole issue among stamp collectors all over the world."

"I say, you're clever," complimented the secretary, and King Asa Zib's eyes brightened.

"Clever enough to have you give me the commission to put the deal through?" insinuated Mark.

"Go ahead," nodded King Asa Zib.

"You have the royal sanction," grinned the secretary, with a chuckle.

It took Mark just an hour to get a numismatist with money into the scheme. The next day that enterprising individual interviewed King Asa Zib, and a contract was signed, sealed and delivered, with all rights clearly defined and safe-guarded.

King Asa Zib went back to his island home with a relieved mind. The philatelic world welcomed the new stamp to its collections, and paid for it eagerly.

It was thus that keen willed Mark Gilson paid off the mortgage on the farm, and wedded the girl he loved.

MADE FROM HUMAN HAIRS

Most Remarkable Series of Portraits Placed on Exhibition in German Studio.

Portraits made out of single hairs, each hair being some 30 inches long, can be seen now in the establishment of L. P. Federmeyer in Germany. His work is considered as really the most remarkable of its kind in the world and he is becoming known as a genius in his profession.

On the walls of his establishment may be seen hanging mottoes and designs and, higher up, large bust portraits of world famed men. You glance at them as you would glance at any picture on entering a home, but when you are told that these pictures were made up entirely of human hairs, without a single line of paint, crayon or pencil, you are half inclined to doubt the veracity of the proprietor. When he produces a magnifying glass and you see hair, some of it chopped almost to powder, your doubts are satisfied.

There are pictures of Victor Hugo, Gambetta, the French statesman, and Napoleon I. There is one picture of a group of cabinet ministers. The remarkable thing about it is that each of the seven portraits comprising the cabinet is made up of a single hair, not longer than thirty inches.

Penn's Inexhaustible Elm Tree.

When the old tree fell it was utilised after the American fashion. A few cords of it were sent to the Penn family in England; an armchair was made from it and placed in the commissioner's hall in Kensington. Hundreds of thousands of work stands, vases, paper weights, knife handles, paper cutters, etc., were made from the remainder of it. During the Centennial in Philadelphia in 1876 a new impetus was given to the manufacture of the great elm relics, and several planing mills had all they could do to supply the demand. Probably there never was a tree so remarkable for its versatility. Pretty and useful articles of pine, maple, walnut, oak, ash and cherry were made from the great elm and sold to the reverential tourists from all parts of the great republic. It is estimated by the careful statistician who compiled the facts for this work that not less than six cords of hickory walking sticks, with the bark on, were made of this great elm and sold to centennial pilgrims from the city.—G. J. Burdette, "William Penn."

Seventeen-year-old Quartermaster

Many gallant deeds have been performed by youthful heroes in this great war, but, according to a French correspondent, the bravest of all was that of Yvon Nicolas, of the 2nd Regiment of Marine Fusiliers, who for his heroism was made a quartermaster on the battlefield. In spite of heavy German fire at a certain point, Nicolas hoisted his gun on some sacks of earth which separated him from a German trench. Unperturbed by the heavy rifle fire, he got his gun into action and succeeded in destroying the greater part of the enemy's trench. The gun did frightful execution, and, seeing comrades fall on all sides, the Germans abandoned that part of the trench which had not been wrecked.

PEOPLE OFTEN SAY

"How Are We To Know When The Kidneys Are Out Of Order?"

EASIEST THING IN THE WORLD!

The location of the kidneys, close to the small of the back, renders the detection of kidney trouble a simple matter. The note of warning comes from the back. The kidneys become overtaxed and fail to do their work at nature's call.

Backache is the signal sent out by the kidneys the minute they become overtaxed. Those who heed the warning when it first comes, usually have but little trouble.

The danger lies in delay. Doan's Kidney Pills stimulate the action of the kidneys, and enable them to perform their duty perfectly.

Mrs. Greig Murphy, Lower Ship Harbor East, N.S., writes: "I have used Doan's Kidney Pills in my family with great success, and don't think there is a better pill for the kidneys. I was very miserable with my back, and could hardly get about. I got a box, and tried them, and found that they were really good, so I took in all about six boxes, and soon found my back cured, and my kidneys as well as ever."

Doan's Kidney Pills are 50c per box, 3 boxes for $1.25; for sale at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

When ordering insist upon having "Doan's."

ANY DYSPEPTIC CAN GET WELL

By Taking "Fruit-a-tives" Says Capt. Swan

Life is very miserable to those who suffer with Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Sour Stomach and Biliousness. This letter from Captain Swan (one of the best known skippers on the Great Lakes) tells how to get quick relief from Stomach Trouble.

PORT BURWELL, ONT., May 5th, 1913.

I have had trouble with these diseases for years. I lost a great deal of flesh and suffered constantly. For the last couple of years, I have taken "Fruit-a-tives" and have been so pleased with the results that I have recommended them on many occasions to friends and acquaintances. I am sure that "Fruit-a-tives" have helped me greatly. By following the diet rules and taking "Fruit-a-tives" according to directions, any person with Dyspepsia will get benefit".

H. SWAN

London Has A Smokeless Inn

It will be news to most people that there is in England a tavern where smoking is prohibited.

The house is situated in Artillery Row, not a stone's throw from Liverpool Street Station, and it is remarkable how few Londoners know of London's only smokeless tavern. It was established in 1832.

The stranger who enters its doors is promptly served with a pamphlet in which is set forth the curious rules by which the establishment is bound.

Rule No. 1 puts up the bar against him who has drunk unwisely and too well.

Rule No. 2—"No person or party of persons can be served under any circumstances more than once, the rule being that he, she or they (as the case may be) must have left the house at least half an hour before either are entitled to be served again."

Says Thin People Can Increase Weight

Food Alone Produces Fat, Says Noted Expert—How to Turn Food Into Healthy Flesh.

The reason that some people are chronically thin and under normal weight, says a noted authority, is because of a chronic leakage of the fat-making elements in their food. The assimilative functions of their stomach and intestines are not working properly. Only a small portion of the food nourishment of their meals ever reaches their blood—just enough perhaps to keep life within the body—the rest passes out as waste. The problem of gaining weight and flesh depends entirely therefore on a natural stopping of this dangerous waste of fats and the correction and repair of the organs of assimilation.

For those who wish to gain healthy flesh and put on from ten to twenty pounds of weight a single Sargol tablet taken at meals for a few weeks will almost invariably produce the desired effect. Sargol does not of itself build flesh, but, swallowed with your food, it sets upon every mouthful you eat, first separating all the fats, oils, sugars, starches and other flesh-making materials from the food waste and then preparing all the nourishing elements in a form which the blood can readily accept and distribute all over the body. Sargol stops the leakage of fats, keeps all the flesh-making materials within the body, allows only the worthless waste to leave it. It further repairs the faulty organs of assimilation, enabling them gradually to properly perform their natural functions so that the new found flesh "stays put." Sargol is not an experiment. Thousands have used it and proved it. Its action is natural and harmless and it is seldom indeed that it cannot produce an increase of from ten to twenty pounds of natural healthy flesh on any person who is underweight. Leading druggists everywhere sell it with a positive guarantee of weight increase or money back as found in every package.

RARE RELIC AT ARRAS

Devastated Arras possesses an ancient church, Notre Dame des Ardents, which remained uninjured despite the terrific bombardment, and which contains a unique relic that is nearly 1,000 years old. The relic is known as the holy candle. It is guarded in a richly enameled silver casket, made to the order of Jean de Sasquespee, lord of Beaudimont and owner of Arras, and a curious history is attached to it. Legend says that in May, 1105, the Holy Virgin appeared during the night to two minstrels. A terrible plague depopulated Arras at that time, and the Virgin gave the two minstrels a candle, which they in turn gave to Bishop Lambert, of Arras, and told them that the hot wax of this candle mixed with pure water would cure the inhabitants of Arras of the dreadful malady. The remedy proved efficacious, and a grateful populace erected the Monastery of Ardents. The candle has been carefully guarded, and it is the firm belief of the inhabitants of Arras that it frequently saved them from utter destruction.

Distinguished Privates

"This afternoon I saw the Oxford City Volunteers Training Corps—of which the Poet Laureate is a member—as they swung along the street," says a writer in The Magazine. "Town and Gown' marched side by side. I caught sight of Private Gilbert Murray (Regius Professor of Greek), and Private W. M. Goldart (Vinerian Professor of Law); close by him marched a well known Oxford philosopher; and towering a head taller than anyone else was our great Professor of Literature, Sir Walter Raleigh."

SUPPLYING HORSES TO IMPERIAL ARMY

Major-General Birkbeck's Wonderful Organizing Ability Responsible For Success of System

There are a number of military men unobtrusively carrying out important work for the army in busy offices at Whitehall, where the limelight of publicity does not reach them. Such a man is Major-General Birkbeck, the Director of Remounts, to whom the army owes an immense debt for the able manner in which he has collected horses from all quarters of the globe for the use of the British troops. Twelve days after war was declared he had 24,000 horses ready for the regular army and 30,000 for the Territorials, an organising feat which will live in history, and this despite the fact that for years critics had prophesied a disastrous shortage of horses when the cavalry, artillery, and transports had to be equipped for a big war. Now Major-General Birkbeck has the responsible task of replacing horses killed or injured at the front, and of securing huge reserves so that there may be no shortage in the future. He established remount commissions in the Colonies—Canada sent 20,000 horses—and by this means is keeping pace with the demands of the Expeditionary Force, which is requiring horses by tens of thousands.

Making a Horse Census

The army is now reaping the benefit of several years of untiring work on the part of Major-General Birkbeck. Alarmed by the alleged shortage of horses in Great Britain, the War Office in 1913 formed a remount directorate, with the Major at its head. He had a stiff problem to solve, but, gathering round him an able body of workers, he set on foot a magnificently-organised scheme which enabled him to get into touch with every horseowner in the United Kingdom. He sent officers all over the country, who had the power to inspect the stable of the humble tradesman as well as the mews of the wealthy horseowner. Animals fit for army purposes were registered, and thus a complete census of horses was obtained. Every part of England was then divided up into a division, at the head of which was placed a deputy assistant director of remounts, who at a moment's notice could set to work to supply several hundred horses for the army from the local stables. On the outbreak of war this scheme, which has only been briefly outlined, operated like clockwork. All over the country officials purchased the necessary animals, stamped them with the Government mark, and forwarded them to the various concentration bases. It was a triumph of organization, and it says a great deal for the ability of Major-General Birkbeck that he brought such intricate schemes to perfection in the comparatively short space of two years.

Mentioned in Despatches

The Director of Remounts is an expert judge of horses, and he knows the exact type of animal which can best withstand the rigors of campaigning. He has studied the subject both in peace and in war. For five years he was Commandant of the Cavalry School at Netheravon, and during his many campaigns he had ample opportunities of observing the behavior of army horses on active service. Major-General Birkbeck entered the army thirty-two years ago, and served in several important campaigns, including the South African War, when he was mentioned in despatches and gained two medals.

Does Wireless Cause Explosions?

A well known scientist recently suggested that the mysterious explosion which destroyed the British battleship, the Bulwark, might have been due to the influence of wireless waves. The theory that wireless causes explosions was put forward some time ago by a French engineer. To prove his point, he called attention to the fact that the disaster to the British steamer, the Volturno, which was burned in the Atlantic, took place just on the junction point where the wireless waves from the Eiffel Tower and Glace Bay meet. The mysterious mine explosion at Senghenydd also occurred on the Clifden-Paris wireless line.

The French engineer also points out that in his opinion wireless has a strange effect on the mind, and he considers that it is for this reason that collisions between ships have greatly increased of recent years. Many of these mishaps have taken place at the junction of wireless wave routes, and it is said that the wireless so affected the brains of ships' commanders that in critical moments they lost control of their vessels. This theory is confirmed by the fact that birds flying near wireless stations move in an uneasy, agitated fashion, as if their senses were under some strange influence.

GERMAN WAR BREAD A CAUSE OF HATRED

Staff of Life Made From Potato Meal Not a Proper Substitute For Wheat Bread

It is of the utmost significance that the venomous hatred of England is most marked, and, indeed almost confined to the civilian population of Germany; the army does not subsist on "K" bread, it lives on the foodstuffs of France and Belgium and Poland.

That bread is the staff of life is a truism that few are compelled to realize, but if you were a diabetic, condemned to subsist on bread made from other sources than wheat, you would quickly acknowledge its truth.

There is no real substitute for wheaten flour, and Germany is now realising that bitter truth. "K" bread —so-called because K stands for kartoffeln (potatoes)—is compulsory on all but invalids.

The Kaiser eats it, and so do the Kings of Saxony and Bavaria and the rulers of all the grand duchies; yet, in spite of this, the Germans will not endure it gladly.

Cannot Maintain Health

There is a limit to docility. It is hardly likely that the health and strength of the German people can be maintained for long on a diet of "K" bread, even though the censored press extols its virtues. Scientific Germany knows better.

Wheat is a cereal containing, besides those nitrogenous or proteid bodies essential to life, a sufficient quantity of starchy or carbohydrate material to meet the needs of the tissues; potatoes, on the other hand, are pure starch, and nothing else, and it is obvious that bread made of 80 per cent. wheaten flour, 10 per cent. potato meal and 10 per cent. rye contains an excessive amount of starch, more than the body can profitably dispose of. The strain on the 64 million livers and stomachs of Germany will be incalculable.

The German doctors' press is already discussing the value of "K" bread, and though some physicians keep a stout upper lip, the majority are concerned and uneasy. Dr. Paul Eisbache of Berlin says: "The housewife should take care the alteration of diet does not provoke disgust." Is not that sufficiently significant?

What "K" Bread Causes

One can hardly believe that this obsession of hate comes from the real mind and heart of Germany; it is rather the effect of a diet that provokes irritation, depression, moodiness, and despondency, that makes learned professors talk like babbling infants and trained diplomats behave like blundering idiots.

An excess of starchy food, such as Germany is now compelled to take, must cause universal dyspepsia and all its attendant evils, and the strain on the organs of digestion to convert this starch into sugar will have serious and quite unlooked-for effects.

Such bread is quite unfitted for young children, for instance, who cannot easily digest starch at normal times.

If week after week and month after month the German people are compelled to exist on "K" bread—perhaps with a still more diminished percentage of wheaten flour—it is certain that the health and strength of the populace will suffer seriously.

All sorts of ill-health will be rampant, and, in other words, an enfeebled Germany will confront her enemies.

It is extremely probable that besides disorders and indigestion, disorders of the blood and disorders of the nervous system will become widespread.

There is a suspicion that the "Hymn of Hate" was composed after a meal that overburdened the liver of Herr Lissauer.

QUEEN SITS IN TRENCH

LONDON, May 18.—"The Daily News" correspondent says that Sir Cecil Hertslet, ritish Consul General at Antwerp, speaking at Eastbourne, stated that wounded Belgian officers had just given a touching description on an incident that occurred the other day in the Belgian trenches on the Yser.

Queen Elizabeth went to speak to her soldiers. The men in the trenches did not recognize the kind and graceful lady as their Queen. One soldier said: "Come along madame; make yourself at home; and another, "Ah, but, madame, the trench is dangerous." The Queen replied, "Not for me; I'm so small."

One of the men produced a sack and placed it on the slope of the trench. The Queen sat down on the sack and began to distribute the chocolate and cigarettes she had brought. Presently another soldier came from another position, and recognizing her majesty, said: "Oh, the Queen!" All the soldiers then, of course, rose and stood at attention. Her majesty, after expressing kind wishes for their welfare, left the trench.

On the sack on which she had sat were inscribed the words "Resting place of the Queen." The soldier to whom the sack belonged was asked whether he would sell it as a souvenir, and he replied: "Not for a hundred thousand francs."

A teaspoonful of butter added to the sugar and water boiled for icing, which has become grainy, will make it smooth and creamy again.

Sugar, raisins, rice, tapioca, barley, dried peas, and beans are much cheaper bought in big quantities and stored away in tin cans or biscuit boxes.

Outfit Ship of Mystery

BROOKLYN, N. Y., May 18. — A full-fledged mystery has developed along the Brooklyn waterfront regarding the present whereabouts of the steamship Ramos, the only submarine-testing vessel in America, recently fitted out at the plant of the Robins Dry Dock and Repair Company, in Erie Basin.

Speculation has been rife about the Ramos ever since she was hurriedly equipped as a submarine "mother ship" about the time that Charles M. Schwab was said to be forwarding parts of submarines to Canada for assembling there, and, with knowledge now general along the waterfront that she is at work at present somewhere on the St. Lawrence River on a mission veiled in inscrutability, some of the men who worked on the Ramos assert she is helping to test Schwab submarines.

SOMEWHERE IN QUEBEC.

According to the owners of the Ramos, Sloan Dannhower & Co., Inc., whose chief business is submarine boat testing, tending and towing, their submarine "mother ship" is under charter to the Canadian Salvage Company, but silence is the only answer when any attempt is made to learn if this chartering company is a Canadian Government concern. Deeper silence is the answer to all questions regarding the purposes of the Ramos, but if one asks just where in the St. Lawrence the submarine "mother ship" has gone the answer comes joyfully from the owners, "We don't know."

CHARTERING WAS SECRET.

"Of course I have my suspicions," said Richard A. Wright, a consulting engineer, who is associated with Sloan Dannhower & Co., in the Woolworth Building. "But the Canadian Salvage Company has chartered the Ramos for only a few weeks, and it hardly seems possible under the circumstances that she should be where I think she is and be doing the things I suspect she was chartered for."

"You mean the time of chartering isn't long enough to permit the company to do any real testing of submarines?"

"Oh, not a word, not a word," said Mr. Wright hastily. "I've already said too much. You understand, I haven't any cognisance at all of the purposes of the Canadian Salvage Company with the Ramos. I haven't the slightest idea why they chartered her. I may tell you, if I told you all I suspected about the Ramos being in the St. Lawrence at this particular time you'd have a real sensation."

TO TEST SUBMARINES.

"You could say, though, Mr. Wright, couldn't you, that the Ramos is essentially constructed to be a 'mother ship for submarines and that submarines must have something to do with her voyage to the St. Lawrence"

"Oh, of course, it's true that the Ramos was fitted out to be used especially for submarine boat testing," admitted Mr. Wright, "but she is also intended for salvage work."

BLOOD THIN AND WEAK TOO NERVOUS TO SLEEP

Here is Another Case in Which Dr. Chase's Nerve Food Proved Its Great Reconstructive Influence

Thin blood and exhausted nerves usually go together. A considerable portion of the blood is constantly consumed in keeping up the vitality of the nervous system. Once the blood is deficient, either in quantity or quality, the nerves suffer and bodily pains result. Headaches, neuralgic or sciatic pains are the indications in some cases, while in others weakness, nervousness, irritability and sleeplessness are the most marked symptoms.

Mrs. R. F. Catlin, Elm Springs, Sask., writes: "For years I was troubles with nervousness, and could not sleep nights. Also had lack of colour as a result of the blood being thin and weak. My husband saw Dr. Chase's Nerve Food advertised, and got some for me, and wanted me to try it. I did so, and it has proven a wonderful help for me. By enriching the blood, it has restored colour to my face and has built up the nervous system so that I rest and sleep well. It is a pleasure to recommend so excellent a medicine."

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food goes direct to the formation of pure, rich blood, and for this reason is the most certain means of increasing the quality as well as the quantity of blood in the human system. The feeble, wasted nerves are restored, and through the nervous system new vigor and energy is imparted to every organ and member of the body.

You will be surprised at the way this food cure puts new strength and vitality into the weakened body. And the best of it is that the benefits are both thorough and lasting. In this the Nerve Food differs from mere stimulating medicines which give rise to false hope and when discontinued leave you as weak as before. Put this great restorative treatment to the test and prove its merits in your own case. 50 cents a box, 6 for $2.50. All dealers or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

IN COTTON GABARDINE.

By Anabel Worthington.

Cotton gabardine is the new material this year to take the place, perhaps, of piqué, cotton corduroy and similar fabrics. It resembles the wool gabardine in weave, and promises to be popular as well as smart. It was successfully used for the misses' dress illustrated, in blue with white linen belt and collar. The design is very simple, but not lacking in strong style features. The almost square cut of the neck opening, the broad belt, and the pointed pockets are all touches that lift the design out of the ordinary without adding anything to the labor of making. There is a choice of sleeves, one plain and long, the other short and finished with a turnback cuff.

The shirt is a four-gored model, gathered at the top except just across the front, and stitched to the waist. The straight front closing makes this little dress an easy garment to put on. It is as suitable for small women as for misses, not being restricted in style to the youthful only. In linen, cotton, gingham and similar wash fabrics, it could be nicely developed, or might be made up in shepherd's check, serge or wool poplin. Among the silks, crepe de Chine and taffeta would be, perhaps, the most suitable. For 18 year size, 5½ yards of 36 inch material would be required. The pattern, No. 7,127, can be obtained in sizes from 16 to 20 years.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25c.

Convention is Asked to Stop "Third Degree"

ALBANY, May 14.—Prohibition of the third degree was urged upon the Bill of Rights Committee of the Constitutional Convention at a hearing here to-day.

Urging an amendment which will permit a jury to consider the failure of a defendant to take the stand in its bearing on his guilt, Henry A. Foster, of New York, said:

"The present system, which gives a defendant immunity from testifying, works out this way: The rich malefactor, on the advice of counsel, shuts his mouth and puts it up to the District Attorney to prove his guilt. The poor malefactor is dragged off by the police and given the 'thrid degree' until he confesses, whether he is guilty or innocent."

Mr. Foster urged a system of legal examination of all persons accused of crime, before their indictment, which shall be patterned somewhat after the French system.

He described an alleged third degree room in police headquarters, New York, so arranged that it can be made hot or cold at will, and be flooded with light or shrouded in darkness by the turn of the switch. It is a subterranean chamber, Mr. Foster declared, and is equipped with every resource for the "modern police inquisition."

Describes Horror Chamber.

He described such a chamber in Los Angeles, in which the police are even able to summon a ghost to their aid in forcing a confession from an accused man.

Denouncing these police methods, the speaker said:

"I suppose laziness has a lot to do with the system. It is much easier to sit in the shade and rub red pepper in a man's eyes than go out into the sun and look for evidence."

Louis Marshall, chairman of the committee, interrupted to ask: "Have you considered that an innocent man —one, say, who is ignorant, timid, fearful of the law and shocked at being accused of crime—might at the hands of a brilliant cross-examiner, if forced upon the witness-stand, undergo such a 'third degree' experience that he would be made to appear guilty even in his innocence?"

"Oh, George, am I dear to you now as I was before we were married?" "Cannot say exactly. I didn't keep any account of my expenses then."

"I am afraid that your friend is a bit of an egotist, isn't he?" "At bit! Why, if he hadn't been born, he'd have expected people to ask, 'Why not?'"

When You Wash Your Hair Don't Use Soap

Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali, which is very injurious, as it dries the scalp and makes the hair brittle.

The best thing to use is just plain mulsified cocoanut oil, for this is pure and entirely greaseless. It's very cheap, and beats soaps or anything else all to pieces. You can get this at any drug store, and a few ounces will last the whole family for months.

Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in, about a teaspoonful is all that is required. It makes an abundance of rich, creamy lather, cleanses thoroughly, and rinses out easily. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and is soft, fresh looking, bright, fluffy, wavy and easy to handle. Besides, it loosens and takes out every particle of dust, dirt and dandruff.

THE HIRE OF PRISONERS

Germany Allotting Captured Men For Agricultural Work—Must be Paid

The following is the text of the official notice published in Germany regarding the scheme for the employment of prisoners of war:

The military authorities have announced their readiness to provide prisoners of war in large numbers for agricultural employment. The conditions on which such prisoners are to be employed are now being issued to the Provincial Councils, to which all applications for prisoners are to be addressed. As far as possible only prisoners of war will be supplied for are already skilled in various agricultural occupations. To meet the requirements of small landowners, prisoners can be employed by the day in quite small parties (two men) and Communal authorities will also be accepted as employers on behalf of small owners.

The employment of prisoners of war is regulated by Article 6 of the Hague Conventiea of 1907, which provides that:

The State may employ prisoners of war, with the exception of officers, as laborers, according to their rank and aptitude. This labor shall not be excessive and shall have nothing to do with the military operations.

Prisoners may be authorized to work for the benefit of public bodies or private persons, or on their own account.

Work done for the State shall be paid on the scale obtaining for members of the national forces engaged on similar works, or, if there be no such scale, on a scale proportionate to the work done.

When the work is done for the benefit of other public bodies or of private persons, the terms are to be regulated in agreement with the military authorities.

The earnings of prisoners are to serve to mitigate their lot, and the balance shall be paid out to them on their release, subject to deductions for maintenance.

French knapsacks weigh 49 pounds, which is considerably less than their weight during the Franco-German war of 1870.

EGGS COOKED TO SUIT HIM

How John Randolph Had Them Boiled With Assistance of String of Servants.

Most persons who eat eggs at all are particular about them. The boiling of an egg seems a simple matter, but many a breakfast has been spoiled and many a temper rasped by the cook's failing to observe the precise number of minutes and seconds that the process should occupy.

That very original man, John Randolph, is said to have invented a method of getting his eggs cooked exactly to his taste that worked perfectly. As in the case in many country homes in the south, the kitchen was in a separate building at some distance from the house, and servants were plenty.

When the "sage of Roanoke" took his seat at the breakfast table there was a line of servants from the dining room to the kitchen. Mrs. Randolph, the mother of the statesman, held an open watch in her hand.

"In!" exclaimed Mr. Randolph, and the word "in" was passed from mouth to mouth until it reached the waiting cook, who dropped the eggs into the water. After the requisite number of seconds the holder of the timepiece signified that the cooking was done. "Out!" went forth the command in like manner, and the eggs were quickly removed.

The system required six or seven servants to cook one egg, but Randolph was accustomed to declare that this was the only way that he could get it cooked to suit him.

MARKING HEROES' GRAVES

Efforts Being Made to Identify Resting Place of Each Briton

The pathetic task of identifying and marking the graves of British heroes who have fallen in France and Belgium is being carried through by a special department of the British Red Cross Society under the direction in London of Lord Robert Cecil.

Various expeditions have been organised, and already the battlefields of the Marne, of Compiegne, and certain areas in the extreme north of France have been very carefully examined.

All graves which have been marked with crosses are registered, and marks of identification are supplied as far as is possible where they are missing.

In many cases where names have been written in ink or pencil the markings have been much injured by rain, and the members of the expeditions are arranging for the names to be properly painted upon the crosses and the crosses varnished, or so replaced by stamped metal inscriptions that they may be weatherproof.

Many graves, of course, can never be identified, but the friends of men who have fallen are assured that all that can be done will be done.

WOMAN SUFFERAGE

It's War Time Aspect

LONDON, May 19. — The women of England are doing their duty. They are taking care of the wounded, or if they cannot assist in work of that kind they are adding their savings to promote the good work. They are knitting and sewing for the soldiers at the front. The suffragists have given so little trouble to the government that it will undoubtedly soften the hearts of those in Parliament, since the "militants" have turned all their energies to aid the fighting men of England, and so sufferage may soon come after this terrible war is over.

Thousands of women in Canada have overcome their sufferings, and have been cured of womanly ills by Dr. Pierce's Favourite Prescription. This medicine, though started nearly half a century ago, sells more widely to-day then any other womanly tonic. It can now be had in tablet form as well as liquid, and every woman who suffers from backache, headache, nervousness, pain at times, should take this "Prescription" of Dr. Pierce.

Many a woman is nervous and irritable, feels dragged down and worn out for no reason that she can think of. In ninety-nine per cent. of these cases it is the womanly organism which requires attention; the weak back, dizzy spells and black circles about the eyes, are only symptoms. Go to the sources of the trouble and the other symptoms disappear.

Dr. Pierce's medicines are manufactured in Canada at the World's Dispensary, Bridgeburg, Ont.

Doctor Pierce's Pellets are unequalled as a Liver Pill. Smallest, easiest to take. One tiny, Sugar-coated Pellet a Dose. Cures Sick Headache, Bilious Headache, Dizziness, Constipation, Indigestion, Bilious Attacks, and all derangements of the liver, stomach and bowels. 25 cents vial, by druggists.—Adv.

Ladies' Hairdressing in London and Paris

By Constance

When I was in Europe this year I found both cities so thickly dotted with hairdressing parlours and hair goods stores that I wondered if the women ever had time for anything but the care of the hair. Personally I was chiefly interested in finding a really good shampoo and I found that they never use makeshifts but always some item made for shampooing only, and I was happily surprised when several inquiries each brought the suggestion that our own American made canthrox shampoo is best. They like it because in addition to being perfectly safe and making the hair free from dandruff, excess oil and dust, it is so simple to get canthrox from any druggist and just dissolve a teaspoonful in a cup of hot water, knowing you will then have a preparation that makes the hair not only entirely clean but so fluffy that it appears very heavy. Canthrox stimulates the scalp to healthy action, making the head feel good, and the hair look good.

NO BETTER THAN SWEAT SHOPS

PARIS, May 14.—Conditions which prevail in workrooms opened to enable the wives of soldiers to earn a living, the Petit Parisien says, are deplorable. There now are 600 of these establishments in Paris, half of them subventioned. Many of these which are operated under private auspices are declared to be no better than sweat shops. Even in the best managed of these in the subventioned class, women are able to earn an average of only 38 cents a day for eight and one-half hours work.

In some of the work rooms conducted by sub-constractors for army shirts and other military supplies, the Petit Parisien asserts, women get [illegible] a day, while many operatives exchange their services for board and lodging.

A WEAK CHESTED BOY.

My boy Frank seemed weak-chested and took a very severe cold," writes Mrs. D. Stevens, Ninga, Man. "The many medicines used did not seem to benefit him, until we tried Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine and found it to be exactly what was wanted to cure him." No treatment is so thorough and effective as a cure for croup and bronchitis.

"I wonder how Mrs. Inkleigh got her start as a writer of fiction." "Composing references for her discharged servants, I understand."

COALITION CABINET ANNOUNCED BY PREMIER

"CANADIANS HAVE WON EVERLASTING NAME"

—ASQUITH

RECONSTRUCTION OF THE MINISTRY ON A BROADER POLITICAL BASIS

Such Was Premier Asquith's Announcement in the House of Commons This Morning---Changes in the Cabinet Will Not Affect the Foreign Secretary, Sir Edward Grey or the Prime Minister Himself---Warm Praise for the Canadians.

HAVE WON EVERLASTING FAME IN FRANCE

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, May 19.—In the House of Commons this afternoon Premier Asquith announced that a "reconstruction of the ministry on a broader political basis is under consideration." This announcement from the Prime Minister was regarded as official confirmation of the report that a coalition cabinet is to replace the present Liberal ministry. The premier emphasized the fact that the political truce to be declared by the formation of the new cabinet is for the period of the war only. The government, he said, had decided upon this move as an act of patriotism. The premier's announcement was made amidst tense silence. The galleries ceased their chatter and a death like silence settled over the chamber when Asquith arose. A ripple of applause from the Unionist and Labour seats followed his declaration and then the galleries joined in the cheering.

Attracted by the ministerial crisis, one of the largest crowds in history had thronged the House of Commons this afternoon to await Premier Asquith's expected announcement. The floor and the galleries were packed. The Liberal leaders were engaged in a series of conferences before the commons convened. Despite their objection the formation of a new cabinet was deemed inevitable.

The Times to-day stated that the Government has asked support from the opposition in forming a new ministry. Unionist leaders have tentatively given their consent, the Times said, but are insisting that they be given an equal share of the important portfolios in the new cabinet. Any change to be made in the cabinet will not affect the Prime Minister, the Foreign Minister, Sir Edward Grey, or England's policy for the prosecution of the war, Asquith said.

Premier Asquith spoke briefly at the Guild Hall before going to the Commons, in eulogizing the British colonial contingents who came to the assistance of England. He declared that the "Canadians have won for themselves in France an everlasting name."

"There is no part of the Empire that would not suffer annihilation rather than become subject to another sovereignty," said Asquith in his Guild Hall speech. The fact that the Prime Minister exempted only his office and that of Sir Edward Grey was taken to mean that the shake up in the ministry is to be more violent of an upheaval than had been reported.

PARIS, May 19.—(French official communique.)—A bloody battle in the mists overhanging Flanders, resulted in the repulse of a strong German detachment with severe losses. How the Germans seized upon the fog and rain to cloak their advance against the position held by the allies on the east bank of the Yser, was told in the official despatches to-day. They approached to within a few yards of the French trenches and opened the attack by showering bombs and hand grenades. Then they came charging towards the French trench and overflooded the fields. Machine guns shattered their foremost columns. The first line was almost completely annihilated. Supporting columns broke out and retreated through the fog in great disorder. Except at this point there has been a lull in the fierce struggle around Ypres and Arras, the war office announced to-day, the fog and the rain impeding operations.

BOMBARDING PRZEMYSL FORTS

PETROGRAD, May 19.—The bombardment of the outer forts defending Przemysl from the west by the Austro-Germans, is increasing in violence. The Russian aviators report that the enemy has brought up heavy pieces in the vicinity of Babic. The boom of guns continues throughout the day and the noise of battle can be heard within the city. The Germans north of Przemysl are making serious attempts to surround the fortress. They have attacked the Jaroslau-Przemysl railway at several points, but have been driven back with heavy losses.

The Austrians west of Chyrov, south of Przemysl, have been unable to advance. The war office has no confirmation of the reports that Czernowitz, capital of Bukowina, has again been occupied by the Russian army of General Ivanoff, though the report is given some credence in official circles.

MATERIAL PROGRESS MADE

ATHENS, May 19.—It is reported here that General Wilhelm Weber, the German commander in chief of the Turkish forts of the Dardanelles, is dead of wounds. Fighting still continues incessantly against all the Dardanelles forts, and material progress is reported by the British and French forces. The Russian fleet continued the bombardment of the Bosphorus forts to-day and a large squadron of the allied air ships attacked the fortifications of Constantinople, doing considerable damage, and apparently exploding the ammunition depot in the western section of the Turkish capital.

WASHINGTON, May 19.—Germany's delay in answering the American note demanding the cessation of the submarine warfare against merchant vessels, caused renewed anxiety in official circles to-day. It was realized that Italian developments were paramount, so far as Germany was concerned, but it had been hoped that at least an official intimation of the Kaiser's position would be forthcoming. However, Ambassador Gerard to-day notified the State Department that there was no possibility of a reply until next week at the earliest. The assigned reason was of course the Italian situation, but it was believed Germany welcomes delay to have all sides of the matter passed on by the military and civil authorities.

PTE. JEFFERIES OF 57TH WAS SHOT THROUGH MOUTH

In Letter to His Brother He Says He Will be Disfigured For Life—Tells of the Charge of Peterboro' Boys at Langemarck

USED THEIR BAYONETS

Mr. Geo. Jefferies of Indian River has received a letter from his brother, Pte. Chas. Jefferies of the 57th detachment, who was wounded at Langemarck. Pte. Jefferies, writing from Dublin, Ireland, on May 2, says:

Dear Brother and Sisters—Just a line and I hope it will find you quite well, as it leaves me feeling a bit better now. Well, George, you will see where my abode is at present. I don't know how long I shall be here, but it is a nice place and they look after us well. This makes the fifth hospital I have been in, four in France and this one. Glad to be out of it for a time, you bet. Say, old sport, it was proper Hell for four days up around Ypres. We had just come out of the trenches for four days when word came down that the Germans had driven back the French and taken their trenches. So off we had to go and get them back. Well you can fancy us after being in the trenches for four days and having to go in again for another turn did not make us feel good at all. But in we had to go, so we started out about midnight. Had about six miles to walk. All this time the Germans were advancing on Ypres.

Dear George,—I shall never forget the sights I saw going up to Ypres. There were only old men and women left and they were all ordered out of the town, as it was being heavily shelled with "Jack Johnsons" and lyddite. My God! it was awful, but we kept going. Old Bill had more than he could do to make us run. Well, we hit the first lot of Huns at the Yser Canal. Not many but they had the best of us as they were, dug in, but George it did not take long to shift them. Say, it isn't a nice thing to stick your bayonet into a man, but if you want to live you've got to do it.

Now for the best scrap. It was just getting daylight when we came up to a wood full of Prussians, and I guess you have seen in the papers where we lost all our officers. Well, we made a good charge and beat

A Call To Peterboro'

The call for recruits for the fourth contingent is out, and Peterborough must do its share to contributing towards the new battalion to be raised in this district. So far the city has answered nobly every call made upon it; every quota asked for has been raised, and no call has gone unanswered, by the city's bravest and best. Peterborough has needed to send no recruiting officer into the highways and byways, drumming up men. A few printed cards, a notice in the papers, and the city's civilian soldiers have come forward to don the khaki. And now more must come. Kitchener has asked for more men. Canada must do its part in providing them, and Peterborough's share must be supplied. Our first contingent men showed their mettle on the bloody field of Langemarck. The Peterborough men in the second are in England waiting for the word that will send them to the firing line. At Belleville, Kingston and Ottawa, there are 275 more Peterborough boys in khaki who will shortly cross the seas. But more must step forward now to take their places. Recruiting is going on in the Armouries each day at 4 and 8 p.m. The battalion will be mobilized shortly going under canvas at Barrisfield, thus escaping the barracks life that other contingents have had to endure. The time is short: the response must be quick and hearty.

There is a message for the mothers of Peterborough in the lines written recently by A. G. Hales, the famous war correspondent, which may be paraphased as follows:

Oh, mothers of Canada, have ye none
Who will aid them in the fray?
No gallant lads who will join the ranks,
To help them win the day?

Women of Canada, mothers and wives,
I know how your hearts will ache.
Ye have worn the crown, ye must bear the cross,
Though some of your hearts will break.
Mothers and wives, ye have worn a crown
Greater than men can wear.
Oh, women, the will of the gods be hard,
Heavy as death is the cross to bear.
Ye must give your sons to the Moloch of war
Though your hearts for ever will ache,
The ripened fruit of the cradle days
Ye must send to the front for your honour's sake
Some will go down in the bitter strife,
Some will return no more;
Oh, women, the will of the gods be hard,
'Tis the aftermath of war.
But your sons must fight, lest ye be shamed
By the women defiling foe.
Your children is dearer to them than life,
Mothers, ye must let your strong sons go.
They will fight for you, ye will pray for them,
As ye prayed in their cradle days.
The gods have given this cross to bear,
Ye cannot fathom their ways.
Kiss them, fondle them, send them forth,
To stand in the battle's van.
Then life your eyes to the star-lit skies,
And thank God ye have mothered a man.

Lads of the good old breed, this is our hour of need,
Your country calls you now,
Up on your feet and say, "Britain, I'm yours to-day!"
Swear it and keep the vow.
Think of the brutal host, think of our own East Coast,
Where women's blood ran red!
Lads, must I ask again? Lads, shall I ask in vain?
Will you avenge our dead?
Think of that bitter hour, when German lust of power
Wrought murder grim and great;
Out of the sea they came, bent on a deed of shame,
Silent and sure as fate;
Skulking in craven fear, lest our brave tars were near,
They wrought their evil will;
They dared not face our men, but they will come again
To ravish and to kill.
Think of each baby face in its cold resting-place,
Hard by the whispering sea;
Children by Canada bred, now sleeping with the dead,
Butchered whilst playing at each mother's knee;
Lads, must I ask again? Lads, must I ask in vain?
Will you avenge our dead?

COOL WEATHER HINDERS SHOPPING

Warmer Days Coming---City People Should Shop Early ---Big Rush Looked For Balance of Week

The opening days of the Merchants' Fare-Refunding Sale have been marked by winter-like weather, which has proved a serious detriment to shopping. Men and women with a practical turn of mind can hardly be blamed for declining to consider the matter of buying summer goods with the temperature at 40 deg., no matter what bargains that may be offered them.

The Lady of the Bargain Hour is somewhat of a wonder in a certain quiet way. She is mistress of the wages of stretching out a dollar to the length of two. She is a distinct fascination to the list of constant customers at any store. She knows, however, that it is better to save a dollar on something that is actually wanted in the family than two dollars on something that is not wanted for some time to come.

Just as soon as the weather warms up a bit, the Lady of the Bargain Hour will open up her purse strings and begin to spend money. Then the merchants will miraculously begin to find that there are lots of people that have lots of money to spend. Men and women who have faith that a dollar which changes hands ten times is ten dollars, but a dollar that is resting away in the old stocking isn't a dollar at all. It's a souvenir.

But here comes Old Sol! and to-morrow will witness a spectacular change. When he pours the crowd, filling the aisles and counters. The true Lady of the Bargain Hour—she is a definite object in view. She has devoured the announcements in the papers and there's a new suit, or a Panama hat, or an Oriental rug, or a couch hammock hanging in the balance. There's the saving of three, four or five dollars involved in her early appearance in a certain department. For, as we have it upon proverbial authority, that the early bird gets the worm, we have it on actual evidence that the early shopper secures the cream of the day's specials.

Indeed, the Lady of the Bargain Hour could never have possessed the smart appearance which she has herself and the well-dressed children, or the pretty home, were it not for watching the newspapers. She capitalizes, for instance, at $12.75 the little navy tailets coat and skirt which she never could have afforded at its regular price of $20.00. She procures for the hall at $27.00 the Persian rug which the family exchequer would never have permitted at the original marking of $36.00. By taking advantage of a clearing line of little girls' summer dresses, she obtains four quaint little gingham frocks for the usual price of two. But she must learn to be alert in judgment and brisk in decision. For sometimes she meets with disappointment. While standing in rapt contemplation of a dressing table she is on the verge of deciding to purchase, she finds it extremely trying to have someone behind her slap a large hand down upon the white enamel top, exclaiming at the same time: "I'll take that."

Certainly. "Economy is of itself a great revenue."

G. A. Gillespie bought the entire offering at the opening meeting of the Peterborough Cheese Board this morning, paying the exceptionally high price of 18 3-8 cents a pound.

This figure is entirely unprecedented in the Peterborough district, although it has been exceeded this season at other boards, some of which received 18 7-16 and 18 15-16 cents a few weeks ago.

The Peterborough introductory price for 1915, however, was regarded with evident satisfaction for this reason:

Highest previous price..... 13½c.
To-day's price ..... 18⅜c.

The explanation of the current figures is found in the war's effect on commerce and markets; with a decrease in receipts in the British market.

The following buyers were present: G. A. Gillespie, W. Flavelle, T. H. Thompson, J. A. Kerr, who was disguised in a trim winter-grown moustache, W. H. Morton and J. S. Cook.

Mr. Flavelle opened at 18 cents; Mr. Morton raised 18 1-16. The price went quickly to 18 3-8c by Mr. Flavelle. Mr. Gillespie offered 18 3-8c. for the whole Board.

Every factory accepted.

Annual Business.

This morning's first meeting of the Cheese Board for 1915 included the regular annual business.

Mr. Switzer felicitated the Board upon the large attendance of members and expressed the hope that the 1915 season would be most satisfactory. He noted that the buyers were as numerous and apparently as pros-

LANCE CORPORAL CUMBERLAND IS REPORTED WOUNDED

Cablegram From Sir Geo. Perley Conveys the News and Also the Information that Pte. Stuart Hayes of the 57th is Still Missing

ARTILLERYMEN SAFE

His Honour Judge Hayes of Guelph, formerly of Peterborough, has received the following cablegram from Sir Geo. Perley, the Canadian Commissioner in London:

Keith reported from base, wounded. Stuart still missing.

The cablegram refers to Lance Corp. Keith Cumberland and Pte. Stuart Hayes, both of whom were unofficially reported killed and then officially reported missing. Mr. Eldred Cumberland, 8 Fleming Place, has received a wire from Judge Hayes to-day giving him the contents of Sir George Perley's cablegram, and the news will be joyfully received in Peterborough, although there will be deep regret that the best word that can be obtained about Pte. Hayes is that he is still missing.

Artillerymen Safe.

A field postcard has been received from Gunner George Findlay of the 4th Battery, 1st Brigade, First Canadian Contingent, British Expeditionary Force. Gunner Findlay reports that he is "quite well," evidence that he survived the Battle of Langemarck. Gunner Findlay boarded at 277 Stewart street prior to his departure for the front.

A similar card has been received from Driver Sidney Luther of the same unit. It is addressed to his mother, Mrs. J. M. Luther, 135 Lansdowne street and contains the cheering information that the writer is well. The card is dated April 30th.

Mrs. Adam Davidson has received a message from her son, Driver Adam Davidson, of the Divisional Ammunition Column, bidding her good-bye on the eve of sailing from Canada.

Mrs. Wm. Colquhoun, 139 Wescott street, has received a card from her son, Bombardier Geo. Colquhoun, of Peterborough, who is in France with the 9th Field Battery boys, in the 4th Battery, 1st Brigade, that he was safe and well on April 30th. Similar good news was received by Mrs. Jas. McCormick, Orphington Road, from her husband, Gunner Jas. McCormick, also of the 4th Battery.

Arrived Safely.

A cable has been received to the effect that Harry Leahy and Russel Patterson, of Peterborough, have arrived safely in Shorncliffe Camp, England. They are attached to number five Queen's Stationary Hospital.

SERGT. FIELD IS IN HOSPITAL IN GERMANY

Peterboro' Boy, Was Officially Reported as Killed Some Days Ago

Another Peterborough boy mourned as dead, has been located in a German hospital, badly wounded, a prisoner of war, in the person of Sergt. Arthur F. Field, of the 57th Detachment, 2nd Battalion.

Mr. John Crane, manager of the Dominion Bank, and Mr. E. W. Travers, manager of the Bank of Montreal, have each received telegrams from the sister of Sergeant Field, stating that he is "badly wounded and in a German hospital."

Sergeant Field was officially reported killed some days ago.

$150 PER SECOND.

Exhaustion of financial resources is bound to be a factor in terminating the present war, or creating conditions that will hasten its end. Of all the powers engaged, Great Britain is the strongest financially, and best able to bear the tremendous strain. What this strain means to all the allies is in part demonstrated by the fact comprised in an official statement, that the financial expenditure of Great Britain is nearly 13 million dollars per day—equivalent to $150 per second; $9,000 per minute, or $540,000 an hour. These figures become almost inconceivable when we multiply them by five, the number of the other great powers, whose expenditure daily must reach an equal, if not in some cases, a greater, sum than that expended by Great Britain. It does not seem possible that the warring nations can long stand the terrible pace of expenditure of nearly 22,000 millions a year. Of all the warring nations Great Britain can best stand the strain. She not only finances with comparative ease, the great work of her own expenditure, but is able to assist her financially weaker allies. The British armies may be short of explosive ammunition, but Britain has a grand store of Lloyd George's "silver bullets"; and it is the silver bullet that will give the heart wound to this great war.

"BE BRITISH."

The British are too busy to play party politics. While Britain is spending $150 per second to maintain a couple of million soldiers, and a tremendous fleet, there is sterner business to be done than count noses to discover which party shall "rule the roast" in the national kitchen. It is asserted in a despatch that the Government and Opposition parties in Great Britain have agreed upon an arrangement to defer the general election—to hold no election—while the war is in progress. The patriotic statesmen of Britain evidently do not feel themselves capable of doing two things at once—waging war effectively, and playing the political game. Are our Canadian people cleverer than they? Can we adequately do our duty in helping the Empire in its time of stress, amidst the disruption of programme and action that would result from a general election? We go to Britain for all sorts of precedents; shall we not respect the most magnificent precedent Britain has ever established, the precedent of giving the duty of national preservation precedence over the comparatively petty interests of party ascendancy. The British realize the spirit, sung by Macaulay—"None are for the party; all are for the state." Can't we rise that high in Canada? We are doing our duty magnificently in sending our soldiers to do magnificent fighting. We are doing our duty magnificently now, with all our citizens irrespective of party brand, unitedly giving home help to carry on the war. We are taking undivided interest in the work; shall we continue the application of that interest, or shall we drop everything to get into the game of party politics? Let us follow the British example—be as "be British" in the biggest way! do our duty as Canadian Britons, and retain the reputation of imperial patriotism which we have won at the price of precious lives?

HELP THE RED CROSS WORK.

When Kitchener, who knows, praises Canadians who do, we are justified in regarding the bravery and, reserveless 'of our soldiers, with pride. While we admire their courage, we must reflect that this courage is not put into actions without great sacrifice—with loss of life and grievous wounds and other suffering. In a general way we lament the horrors of war, in reading the newspapers from day to day, but we only begin to fully appreciate them when the blow comes home. We have a long and roll of our own home boys, killed or wounded or missing—a total of thirty-three in all; and of these thirty are registered as wounded. They are our own, and their sufferings, and the call for [illegible] our hearts and—purses. We must remember that amongst the thousands of wounded soldiers in hospitals in the war zone, there are thirty of our very own to be helped.

We should not confine our sympathy and aid to these alone; but they should help us specialise our sympathies and make us more anxious to help—because our own are among those who need our help.

One of the most effective agencies of relieving the sufferings of wounded soldiers is the Red Cross Society. Its usefulness depends upon the financial resources at its command, and the public is looked to to supply the funds, for there is, inexplicably, no government support in an effective financial way. With the recent heavy casualties to Canadian troops, the presently available funds will be speedily exhausted. With thirty of our Peterborough boys suffering from wounds, a direct appeal to respond to the direct appeal of the local Branch of the Red Cross, comes to us with directer force. In the hurry and absorption of our daily pursuits, let us still keep in mind what contribution to the Red Cross funds means to our fellow-citizens and fellow-subjects in the battle area. Let us, as a sacred duty, prepare to make a splendid success of Red Cross Tag Day next Saturday, May 22nd. Money is needed, and we are called upon to supply it. Shall we not nobly respond to the call next Saturday?

KEEP LEVEL HEADS.

If Canadians were light-headed we should be tilted off our feet by the praise that is coming to Canada through the splendid achievements of Canadians in the battle line, in the industrial arena, and in general cooperation with the Empire in helping the military work of the Empire. We have had the battle record compiled by [illegible] high praise, not only from great British generals and judges of good fighting, with Kitchener at the head; but from great generals of our French allies; and from the United States press and people, and from the world at large. Now we are warmly commended for our work on munitions—a credit both to the spirit and capacity of our industrial chiefs. Col. Bertram, chairman of the Canadian Committee, charged with the supervision of the manufacture of shells in Canada, states that he has received a cable from Lord Kitchener, which speaks in the highest terms of praise of the wonderful work Canadian manufacturers are doing in the manufacture of war munition. He said that at the present time Canada is turning out more shells than all the manufacturing establishments of Great Britain employed on shells, except those expressly devoted to shell manufacture. This, combined with Kitchener's and the world's praise of the military achievements of Canadian soldiers, is ground for pride. With all this Canadians need not be carried away and become vain. What we have done at home and abroad, has been simply our duty—the first and highest thing in a Briton's agenda of activity. Canadians at home and abroad have done no more than we expected of them. To have done as well as others would have been a disappointment; to have done better is what we expected, and what the world will, hereafter, expect. With all the praise we are getting, we need not be proud to vanity. We must hold our heads level, and should be encouraged to continue doing our best. We have still great work to do. We have a magnificent country to develop—a country which breeds such men, and realizes such high ideals, as Canada, must be regarded as a good country in which to seek a home. The development of our new country will need the enterprise and courage we have shown on the battlefield. We must keep our heads level; for the working out of Canada's great destiny needs clear minds, clear vision, clean ambitions, and the courage to meet and conquer obstacles, and achieve victories over the forces opposed to mutual commercial, social and moral progress.

"ADVANCE AUSTRALIA".

"The Australian Government have well deserved the praise contained in his despatch to them by the Secretary of State for the Colonies. The thanks of every Englishman are due to their enemy, Germany, for it is she who has been the means of demonstrating to Great Britain the value of colonial [illegible]. It is to be hoped that after this gigantic war steps will be taken to insure the presence of an overseas fleet in all British colonies. The Australians will hand their name down to posterity as the initiators of a Grand Imperial Naval Policy which will link together the farthest outposts of the Empire. 'Advance, Australia!'"—The Navy.

OF TOWN-PLANNING.

Toronto and other Ontario municipalities have need of such town-planning legislation as has been adopted in Nova Scotia. The new Act provides the Eastern Province with a central town-planning controller working under the Provincial Commissioner of Public Works. Every city, town and country municipality must appoint a local town-planning board, consisting of the Mayor, two members of Council, and at least two ratepayers, to hold office for three years.

Each local board will have power to acquire and dispose of lands, and to appoint a town-planning engineer, architect or surveyor. No street, road or public right-of-way can hereafter be laid out, and no tract of land can be sub-divided or sold as lots, unless in accordance with plans and particulars approved by the board. Within three years every local board must either prepare a set of town-planning by-laws or a town-planning scheme. These provisions will tend to check wild-cat real estate speculation and produce symmetry and convenience in public thoroughfares and public services.

The Act specifies certain widths for streets, certain distances between buildings, and the number of buildings of various kinds which may be erected upon each acre of land. There is provision for the civic expropriation of land for 200 feet on either side of any thoroughfare, and for the purchase of land outside the municipal limits. New Brunswick has a somewhat similar law, and the City of St. John is preparing its town-plan. If the rapid growth of Toronto and other cities during the last ten years had taken place under the requirements of such a measure we would have had better cities to live in to-day. Scientific town-planning is a department of municipal development to which much attention is devoted in Great Britain, and it is to be hoped that Ontario may not linger behind.—Toronto News.

HOW CANADA MEETS LORD KITCHENER'S CALL TO "SHELL OUT"

That Canadians are working for the Empire as effectively as they are fighting for it on the fields of Flanders, is indicated by Col. Bertram, Chairman of the Canadian committee charged with the supervision of the manufacture of shells in the Dominion. In an interview published by the Montreal Journal of Commerce, Col. Bertram tells of having received a cable from Lord Kitchener speaking in terms of the highest praise of the wonderful work Canadian manufacturers are doing. Canada, the War Minister, said, was at the present time turning out more shells than were all the manufacturing establishments in Great Britain employed in shell making outside of those firms whose regular business it was.

Since the Canadian committee began operations under authority of the British War Office contracts for shells have been let aggregating over $154,000,000. The first shells were shipped in February and the average of the early shipments was 300 shells per day. Now the daily shipments average over 10,000, and by July 1 the average must be brought up to 40,000 shells per day, in order to complete the number required before the end of the year. To that end every available machine shop, railway repair shop, and other plant capable of turning out shells or parts of shells is working to its capacity. The work is profitable to the mechanics engaged upon it. Col. Bertram says that he knows of men on a piece-work basis who are earning as much as eight and ten dollars a day.

That there is need for all the shells Canadian workmen can turn out, is made clear from some statements made by Col. J. B. Miller of the Polson Iron Works, who has just returned from England. While there, he paid a visit to Woolwich Arsenal. After inspecting the shells made at Woolwich, he came to the conclusion that those made in Canada are just as good, and perhaps better finished. The need for artillery ammunition is imperative. During the recent battle of Ypres it was estimated that a million shells a day were fired by the opposing armies. That was the greatest artillery duel of the war to date, but the daily average expenditure on the western front will be close to half a million shells of various sizes. General Joffre is said to have notified the French War Office that he will not enter upon any sustained offensive movement till he is assured of 200,000 shells per day. The British army, using a like proportion of shells, would require about 150,000 per day, and the Germans, to meet this terrific storm of shells, would have to use at least 300,000 daily on the western front, or give way before the Allies' superior artillery fire. These figures indicate how supremely important is the work now being done by tens of thousands of Canadian mechanics. They are taking part in the defence of the Empire as truly at the turning lathe as are their brethren who risk their lives at the battle front.—The Globe.

Peace at Home While War Lasts; An Open Letter to Presbyterians

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Sir,—Sad beyond expression would it be, if the Church, which should be a source of unity and strength and comfort to the nation at this sad time, should be made, instead, an element of division and weakness. May I suggest that a way to avoid this, without anyone surrendering what he thinks to be right. The situation, in brief is as follows:

The majority of the Union Committee, at its meeting in December last, agreed to recommend to our Assembly which meets in Kingston, in June, to proceed this Summer to another vote on Church Union. On the other hand the minority of the Union Committee has recommended the Assembly to drop, for the present, the question of Organic Union.

If the Assembly should not proceed to another vote, it could only create division. The pressure has only led to further steps in resisting that pressure; as witness the following:

At the recent meeting of the Synod of British Columbia, early in April, there were present about fifty members. Twenty of these, ministers and elders, gathered at a meeting called for the purpose, and organized for the Province, for the preservation of the Presbyterian Church.

At the recent meeting of the Synod of Alberta, about the middle of April, thirty members of the Synod, ministers and elders, gathered at a meeting held for the same purpose, organized for the Province, and appointed a large committee of ministers and laymen.

These two committees are in two of the largest eastern Home Mission Provinces, and include well-known pioneers who have been active in furthering Home Mission work for a generation. The Alberta Committee has just issued a statement claiming "the almost complete elimination of overlapping in that Province, through the co-operation of the Methodist and Presbyterian Churches," and, quoting the report to the Synod of Alberta of its Home Mission Convener, "that out of a total of six hundred preaching points under the care of his Committee, there is overlapping with the Methodist Church in only twenty-one cases."

Still further, there has been recently organized a Woman's League for the preservation of the Presbyterian Church in Canada."

All these are in addition to the General Organization, with its committee of over six hundred ministers and elders. This General Committee represents the more than fifty thousand who voted against terminating our own Church organization, and as many of the non-voting half of our Church as may prefer to remain in it.

These tens of thousands believe in unity with all true Christians; but they believe that where there is not room for two Churches, it is better for the people to worship together, in connection with one or other of the existing denominations, than attempt to compel the whole Church into a new Church organization. They believe that it is not best to give up the Presbyterian system, with its Scripturalness, freedom and efficiency, for a system so greatly inferior as that of the basis of union, and they have declared their purpose not to be sharers in such a step.

All these things show that pressure can only create unrest and disunion in our own Church.

But the object of this writing is not to urge that the Assembly should adopt either report, but to suggest that, on account of war conditions, wholly unforseen by last Assembly, both the majority and the minority reports presented to this Assembly be referred to the following Assembly in 1916. That assembly can deal with these reports in the light of conditions then existing.

The great body of the best people in both political parties have been strongly opposed to a war election; and when our Empire is in a struggle for life; when so many members of our Church are absent at the front; when families are in anxiety, and bereavement and sore sorrow all over the land; when even the negotiations for reunion between the two great Presbyterian Churches in Scotland have been entirely discontinued during the war; when no true interest can suffer by referring these two reports to the following assembly; would it not be unwise, unworthy, unpatriotic, strangely lacking in sympathy with the one tremendous issue, —to force a needless vote which can only bring division and strife. If contention must come within, let it be deferred till the war without is ended.—E. Scott, D.D., Editor Presbyterian Record.

Man and Wife Supposed To Be Murdered Turn Up Very Much Alive in Another Accident

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., May 15.—Mr. and Mrs. Charles Washem, formerly of Brainerd, Minn., and Fargo, N.D., who were for months believed to have been murdered by robbers near East Saint Louis, Ill., while on a trip down the Mississippi river in a small boat, have been found in Minneapolis alive and well. They have been living here since January 19th.

The report of their murder was due to a strange freak of chance, Mrs. Washem said, and followed a narrow escape from death by drowning when their little boat was capsized in the Mississippi river. Their marriage certificate, which was in the boat with them, floated to shore and was apparently taken to a camp on the river bank by the finder.

Later a man and woman were found slain in this same camp on October 19, 1914.

Their bodies were not identified at first. Then the marriage certificate was found in the camp. This seemingly identified the pair.

All over the country went the news that Mr. and Mrs. Washem had been murdered. Their friends in Brainerd and Fargo read the despatches and mourned.

Meanwhile, Mr. and Mrs. Washem and their baby daughter, born in camp on the trip, were trying to get back up the river, and were so situated that they didn't see any newspapers. They never knew until the otehr day that the world at large, including all their old friends, believed them the victims of a double tragedy.

It was Mrs. Washem's desire to join a Minneapolis church that revealed the couple's presence here.

The marriage certificate found in the tragedy camp bore the signature of the Rev. F. B. Sapp of the Christian Church at Fargo. Communication with the Rev. Mr. Sapp and with friends of the Washems in Fargo and Brainerd revealed that in July, 1914, Mr. and Mrs. Washem had started from South Saint Paul for Saint Louis in an open rowboat on the Mississippi river. The identification was considered complete and the young married couple given up for dead.

That was the last the Rev. Mr. Sapp heard of the Washems until recently, when he received word from the First Baptist Church, Minneapolis, that Mrs. Washem was preparing to become a member of the church and wished a transfer of her letter in the Christian Church at Fargo.

The clergyman was startled. He sent back word that, so far as he knew, Mrs. Washem and her husband were both murdered last fall. This started the investigation which disclosed the presence of the couple in Minneapolis.

At her present home, No. 1115 Fourth Street, Northeast, Mrs. Washem told the story of the river trip, the addition of another member to the cruising party through the arrival of a brand new baby, the boat accident that nearly resulted fatally for all three, their rescue by fishermen and the return northward.

Mr. and Mrs. Washem started from South Saint Paul for Saint Louis in a small boat on July 4, 1914. The craft was an ordinary rowboat. They had a small tent, which was usually pitched on the river bank each night, a small supply of provisions and a quantity of fishing tackle.

Mr. Washem did the rowing, and the boat averaged from 25 to 30 miles a day, the current assisting materially. The fish they caught were sold at the towns which lay in their path and the proceeds went to replenish the larder from time to time.

In camp ou the river bank at Proctor, Minn., a month after the start of the cruise, Mary Ann Washem was born. They stayed at Proctor for some time. Finally, the journey was resumed. All went well until the end of the cruise was almost in sight.

A few miles above Saint Louis, on the evening of the next to the last day of the trip, the little rowboat was caught between the swells raised by the steamers Grey Eagle and Bald Eagle, which were passing in the main channel of the Mississippi.

The boat was upset. Mary Ann Washem, less than two months old, was in her mother's arms. Mother, father, and baby were hurled into the stream.

Three fishermen passing nearby in a launch sped to the rescue and the three Washems were taken out of the water. Their rowboat, with all it contained—all but the marriage certificate—sank.

The fishermen took the family to East Saint Louis, where Mr. Washem obtained work. The family left East Saint Louis, however, before the double murder on the river bank a few miles above the city and did not hear of their supposed fate.

Employment having been intermittent and the family being in hard straits much of the time, Mrs. Washem said, neither she nor her husband had written their friends since their river trip ended. Neither had any idea that they were believed to have been murdered.

BOOTS THAT STOOD THE TEST

AMES-HOLDEN McCREADY LIMITED, Canada's largest shoe manufacturers, supplied, within thirty-three days, 32,217 pairs of leather ankle boots and 30,000 pairs of canvas shoes for the outfitting of the First Canadian Contingent, the largest quantity supplied by any manufacturer.

These boots were worn by our soldiers on active service both in this country and in the training camps in England. They were subjected to the most severe usage that boots could be subjected to. They travelled over rough roads and smooth. They waded through mud and through slush past all description. They were soaked by the never-ceasing rains of an abnormally wet English winter. They were baked on hot stoves, grilled on steam radiators and roasted before open fires. Yet, THEY STOOD THE TEST.

Out of the entire 32,217 pairs of leather boots supplied by this company only a single pair was shown to be open to criticism when the Government enquiry was made six months later.

Experts employed by the Government examined 1365 pairs and 348 odd boots made by various manufacturers. Among the number were found only seven pairs of boots of Ames Holden McCready manufacture, of which five were found to be repairable, one pair unrepairable, and ONE PAIR HAD A SOLE UNDER GAUGE.

The best proof of the durability and serviceability of the Ames Holden McCready boots, however, was afforded by the sworn statements of soldiers who had worn these boots constantly from the time they were issued in September, 1914, right through to March, 1915. They swore that they had worn the boots through all the rough experiences at Valcartier and on Salisbury Plain and that they had given excellent service throughout. Sergeant Nussey, of Toronto, who had served twelve years in the British Army, appeared before the Committee with a pair of such boots still on his feet and submitted them to the committee's inspection.

The testimony of these witnesses has since been amply corroborated by numerous reports and letters received from officers and soldiers at the front all testifying to the good wearing qualities of the Ames Holden McCready boots.

• • • •

When the question was raised concerning the quality of the Canadian soldiers' boots, Ames Holden McCready Limited placed themselves IMMEDIATELY upon record, by writing to the Government, as desirous of having the most thorough investigation of the matter. The appointment of a Parliamentary Committee and the official enquiry followed. It occupied several weeks' time. The Committee stopped at nothing in their efforts to get at all the facts.

This Company purchased the best leather and supplies available in Canada and spared no expense in manufacturing the boots. All our invoices, and shop and manufacturing records were produced before the Parliamentary Committee for their inspection and information. We had nothing to hide and were proud of the boots which were furnished to the Government.

THE AMES HOLDEN McCREADY BOOTS CAME OUT OF THE ORDEAL UNSCATHED.

The Committee reported to Parliament that the boots supplied by this company substantially complied with the sample, that no paper or other fraudulent substances had been employed in their manufacture and that all charges involving the integrity of this company or of the boots supplied by them had been abundantly disproven by the sworn evidence taken before the Committee.

The report, which was adopted by Parliament, was A COMPLETE VINDICATION FOR AMES HOLDEN McCREADY LIMITED.

• • • •

In bringing these facts prominently before the people of the Dominion, Ames Holden McCready Limited are actuated by the desire not only to protect their own good name—which needs no vindication with the thousands of Canadians who are familiar with this company and its products—but also that of a notable and important Canadian industry, which has been unwarrantably aspersed.

WILL SUPPORT AUSTRIA

BERLIN, May 19.—Germany will support Austria with all the resources at her command if Italy declares war on the Dual Empire, the Berliner Morgen Post declared editorially to-day.

"Austria and Germany are determined to show Italy official good-will to the last second," said the Morgen Post. "They will not declare war on Italy and will tolerate any offensive public utterances.

"But if Italy expects to fight only Austria she is mistaken. Germany will support Austria."

Germany expects Italy to declare war within a few hours.

OTTAWA, May 19.—The casualties reported to the Militia Department up to 10 o'clock this morning number 5041. Of these 709 have been killed, 3275 wounded and 1057 missing. The names of several hundred more who were missing after the Battle of Langemarcke are still to come in. The impression prevails in official circles that apart from the Princess Pats the Canadian division has not been heavily engaged in the recent forward movement of the British forces.

IMPROVING EVERY DAY

LONDON, May 19.—The following review of the recent operations at the Dardanelles was given out to-day:

"Every day sees an improvement in the Anglo-French positions. The enemy are reported to have lost very heavily."

CAIRO, May 19.—The Turkish attacks upon the allied expeditionary forces at the Dardanelles have been repulsed "with heavy losses", said an official announcement to-day.

OTTAWA, May 19.—Casualties announced to-day:

Second battalion, wounded, Hubert Claude Haysome, England.

Britons Are Bound to Finish the Job—Many Coming From Ends of the Earth to Enlist

LONDON, May 18.—What is the temper of England, and what the thought of the common folk? It is this—and it does not find true expression either in the speeches of politicians or in the diatribes of party newspapers. There is a deep, baregrowl growing in the heart of England, there is a refusal on the part of the people, as a whole, to be involved in hysterical demonstrations, there is no flag flapping, but there is a steadily growing feeling that a job has been tackled, the end of which is a long way off, although what the end will be is not in doubt.

Landing in Liverpool it was hard to realise that England was at war, except for the crowds of soldier-crammed recruiting posters on the walls, and the intermingling of khaki with civilian clothing. War has brought sorrow to many a home, yet there is a striking absence of mourning costumes from the street. The country smiles with greenery, meadows and hedgerows. Apple trees are blossoming, the gardens are bright with flowers, and at first glance in city, town and country people would appear to be following their avocations much as usual. It takes a little time to get below the surface, but when that is done a heart of gold, the gold of love of freedom and justice, refined in the laboratory of stress, is found, and one thanks God that the spirit which has flung an empire of freedom around the world is still as vigorous as ever in the land of its upraising.

Little by little the temper of the country reveals itself. It has always been the Englishman's inalienable right to grumble. If he had not fretted and growled—and then done things — English freedom would never have existed. And so to-day there is the fret and growl which will inevitably be followed by the accomplishment of the fixed purpose that the struggle against attempted domination of the world must first be won, and then shall come the reckoning.

ON THE WAY TO THE WAR.

Enough of introduction. It is not the writer's intention to put out interviews with more or less important persons, but simply to relate a few incidents—straws which show the way the wind is blowing—and to leave the drawing of conclusions to those who read.

In the steerage were a thousand Canadian troops, who, day by day, were exercised in various ways for their souls' and physical good. On the main deck were a number of Canadian officers, unattached to this particular contingent, but on their way to play a part in war. There were finally, I should think many children and there were a number of young men who lounged through the long day rather aimlessly. The uniformed man, whether of steerage or cabin, naturally caught attention, for were they not already sworn to risk their greatest asset, their lives? Still there were some others who were serving, too, although not in uniform. For instance, there was a little lady with a bonny boy. Always cheerful, but twice a day she'd slip away to the companion ladder, and meet a man in uniform, and other people would draw away to leave them as free as possible. The man was her husband, 'listed as a trooper, and at Liverpool they kissed before he marched away, no one knew to where, and she went home to Yorkshire, to wait.

There was a grey-haired matron taking two children home. Their mother was dead, their father at the war. Many a mother on board felt the sympathy of that lady who was never too tired to help, and who when asked if she was not afraid, replied, "No, if my time has come I am ready, and till it comes I will do what I can."

GOING BACK TO LIST.

Of the young man who lounged and smoked, "bridged" and yawned, one was a chartered accountant, who had been working in St. Louis, another a lawyer from British Columbia, another a teacher of mathematics who had been living in Ontario, another a Marconi engineer who was to have helped build wireless stations up to Hudson Bay, yet another an engineer with the biggest electrical firm on the North American continent. What were they going home for? Not for commission, but to 'list.

Could it be wondered that such things made the blood pulse faster?

Here in Britain, the best in the land is going into the Hell of Flanders, and there's not a murmur or a whimper to be heard, although there is many a woman sick at heart, waiting.

There is a welding together of the classes such as never took part even at the time of the South African war, and the man who gets a letter from the front shares the news with his neighbour, whatever may be the difference in rank, and all unite in damning the censor.

THE UNPOPULAR CENSOR.

There is a day of reckoning coming for Mr. Censor, who writes dignified notes to newspapers, asking why extracts from soldiers' letters are being published without his august sanction being first obtained. People are getting weary of only hearing that a point has been lost through the medium of an official statement to the effect that it has been recaptured. They do not understand how it is that when such an outcry is being made as to the need for an increased output of war material it should be publicly stated that Woolwich Arsenal is not working at full capacity, not for the lack of men, but for the lack of orders. They cannot understand why an offer made in the House of Commons for the supply of a large quantity of shells should not have been jumped at, if shells are needed. Why, people ask, should a firm in the city of Coventry, who claims to have erected a most modern plant for the output of a certain class of munitions, who claim they had the necessary skilled labour, go for weeks without a reply when the War Office is approached?

People are asking why these things should be when the burden of war is falling heavily on the country, and they are answering the question in the usual British way, "The responsibility belongs to the government and when the war is over we will find out 'Why.'"

GENEROSITY TO PRISONERS.

The tendency to treat German prisoners of war as honoured guests is another sore point with the ordinary man in the street. In the Times appeared two letters. In one—and an editorial note states that the editorial mind had satisfied itself as to the good faith of the correspondent — it was said, "I have just been released from a German camp and can testify on direct and unimpeachable evidence that the ill-treatment sustained by prisoners in camps and prisons up to the end of February, in any case, was every whit as bad as in the field or in transit. I have talked with many prisoners who endured the abominable punishment of being tied up to posts for many hours. One prisoner, whom I knew well, saw, in February, three men taken down dead from these posts to which they were in all weathers crucified."

An English officer writing says that for four months he had nothing but a hard wooden stool to sit on, was fed pork and sausage twice a day, and as to the sanitary arrangements, the less said the better.

The writer saw fifty German officers on their way to a place of interment. They were travelling in first-class saloon carriages, clothed in mufti of the latest English cut and their outfitting complete in every particular, supplied with cigars, cigarettes and newspapers, and in the pink of condition.

On the station platform a man stood looking at them, and he said, "My two boys were in cattle trucks for three weeks!"

ECZEMA AND SORE EYES.

"My daughter suffered from inflamed eyelids and eczema on her head," writes Mr. E. W. Lear, Port Planford, N.S. "The child was in a bad state and suffered greatly. The doctor failed to help her, and on recommendation of a friend, I used Dr. Chase's Ointment, which made a complete cure. With a grateful heart I write you this letter."

New Salvation Army Hall in North Monaghan Was Formally Opened

The new Salvation Army Hall at Brealley's, North Monaghan, was opened last evening with a very large number of people in attendance. After an opening hymn, prayer was offered by Adjutant McElhiney. The chair was taken by Mr. G. A. Gillespie, M.P.P., who delivered a splendid address on the good work of the Army in Peterborough, their progressive methods being further widened in the erection of this new Sunday School building. The outlook for the sustaining of the work in this district was very promising, and the accomplishment of great things in this section was looked for.

Speeches were also given by Mr. George Leggott, Fire Chief Howard, Mr. Harold Snowden, Harry Webber, T. D. Young, R. C. Braund and Aid. G. Walter Green. Aid. Green also delighted the audience with a cleverly rendered recitation. Several selections were rendered by the band, also a numbr by the saxaphone quartette, and a duet by Misses Brooks and Northcotte.

EVEN A QUIET BURGLAR IS A HELP TO MR. WEISS

SCOTTSDTLE, Pa., May 18.—Every household has its problem and that of the home of Frank F. Weiss, of this town, has, for three and a half months been the introduction of Morpheus to Frank F. Weiss, Jr. The younger Weiss has been something of a snob in the matter, and for that reason there lives to-day a burglar whom the elder Weiss thought seriously of killing for three hours of last night.

Mr. Weiss is a tailor and after the last stitch last night he hurried to his home to take up his usual exercise with his fourteen-months-old son. He ate a hurried dinner and then, with the child in arms and Mrs. Weiss furnishing the slow music he began his customary nine miles walk around the bedroom while the younger Weiss entered the usual hiccoughing irritable and lusty complaint. At ten o'clock the treatment appeared to have been successful and with all the caution that four arms could exercise little Mr. Weiss was placed in his pink bound basket.

Mr. and Mrs. Weiss stood hand in hand and afraid to stir until the young man developed the symptoms of a tenor snore. Then they cautiously left him.

At twelve minutes to one a burglar doing piecework in the dining room below dropped a fork. Mr. Weiss rose, noiselessly crossed to the bureau and with an automatic revolver in hand began the barefoot descent. On the sixth step from the top he paused, for over the transome he could clearly see the burglar at work. Even as he watched the burglar reached into a certain place in a certain drawer and took out the family strong box, which, as Mr. Weiss realized unhappily, was not over strong at best.

When the burglar had reached the stage where he looked all around soberly to make sure that he had forgotten nothing, Mr. Weiss steadied himself, took careful aim and—suddenly thought of the baby. If he fired the shot that would ring around the bedroom there would be no more sleep for mortal eye in that house that night.

The burglar carefully clambered out of the window. Mr. Weiss sneaked back to upstairs and went to bed.

Good-bys Curling Iron! Better Method Found

Don't burn the life out of your hair with that instrument of torture, the curling iron. There is nothing that will so surely dry out and break off the hair, giving it that ragged, unkempt appearance.

You will be glad to learn that you can keep your hair beautifully wavy and curly by using a perfectly harmless liquid known to druggists as "silmerine." You need only apply a little with a clean tooth brush before retiring and in the morning you will be most agreeably surprised with the effect. And this effect lasts for a considerable time, even in damp weather, so a small bottle goes a long way and is quite economical to use. Pure silmerine is really beneficial to the hair and there is no greasiness, stickiness or anything unpleasant about it. It is a good idea to divide the hair into strands and moisten these one at a time, drawing the brush down the full length.

A Settlement Was Effected

A settlement was effected in the Windover-Guthrie case which was to have come before His Honour Judge Huycke in County Court this morning.

Mr. G. N. Gordon acted for Mr. Eliga Windover and Mr. V. E. McElderry for Mr. John Guthrie. The two parties were residents of Harvey township.

SCOTTISH BAGPIPE FACTORIES RUSHED WITH WAR ORDERS.

LONDON, May 18.—For the first time in history Scottish bagpipe factories are working night and day, according to word from Glasgow.

It is not only the Scottish regiments that march to the battlefields behind the pipes. English, Irish, and even the Indian regiments have caught the "pipe craze" until now it is estimated that 10,000 pipes are playing "Johnny Cope" every morning in Britain, at sea, or in France, and the demand for the instrument exceeds the supply.

The instruments cost from £5 to £25 each.

The Business Girls' Club and Hospital Help

The Business Girls' Club of Peterborough deserves its name. It means business and does business. In its hospital work it has been doing a great deal for the equipment of the Toronto Base Hospital, having sent $50 in cash and some 200 sheets, towels, etc.; but its work is at an end there. President Falconer publishes a statement that "the munificent donation of $40,000 made by Mr. A. C. Hardy, Brockville, provides sufficient funds for this purpose till the end of the war."

The proverb says, "you can't keep a good man down." Likewise, you can't keep live girls down. They have now trained their guns on Queen's University, Kingston base hospital. Instead of foraging for supplies as heretofore, they have decided to intern their energies. During the summer months, instead of active propagation of the work, each of the seventy members, will make each month, a personal donation to the Queen's hospital fund, according to her ability. The business girls deserve great credit and set a good example to other citizens in the way of effective work for the soldiers of the king.

A Verdict of Wilful Murder

Special to The Examiner:

RAMSGATE, Eng., May 19.—The coroner's jury to-day returned a verdict of wilful murder against the Kaiser in the case of John Smith, who died as a result of injuries from the explosion of a bomb dropped by one of the raiding Zeppelins Monday.

perous as ever. They seemed to have wintered well.

The minutes of the last annual meeting, read by Secretary Ed. Hawthorne, were adopted.

The financial report showed receipt last year of $41.71; expenditures, $25.35, with a balance of $16.36.

Election of Officers.

Mr. Switzer said he had been President for three years and desired to vacate the chair.

G. W. Mann of Bridgenorth was nominated to the position, but declined it.

R. Duff of Selwyn factory was nominated but in turn suggested that the former officers be returned.

Mr. Switzer remarked that he regarded the proposed division of the Board last March a something of a reflection upon the officers. He felt, in any event, that the Board should change its officers frequently.

On the ensuing vote Mr. Duff was elected.

The officers are as follows:

President—R. Duff of Selwyn.

1st Vice President—J. J. Breckenridge of Westwod.

2nd Vice President—G. W. Mann.

Sec.-Treasurer—Ed. Hawthorne of Warsaw.

Auditors — W. A. Anderson of Keene, J. W. Hunter of Pine Grove.

The buyers secured the addresses and telephone numbers of all the salesmen.

Mr. Cook suggested the idea because of the uncertainty of Atlantic sailings. The information will enable the buyers to easily obtain factories in the event of changes in sailings.

It is a good plan to warm a knife board before using it. A few moments in front of a fire is sufficient.

CITY HALL PARAGRAPHS

What's Doing in Civic Circles—Items of Interest Concerning Municipal Administration

The paving contractors have commenced to tear up the paving on George street. A new surface with a under coat will replace the old surface coat of one layer of asphalt. The manholes will also be raised.

Inspection Postponed.

The annual inspection of the Board of Works which was to have been held to-day has been postponed until to-morrow. Ald. Green, chairman of the Board, has a counter engagement with Mr. W. J. Francis of Montreal.

Looking Over the Ground.

Mr. W. J. Francis, Civil Engineer of Montreal, in company with Mayor Buller and Ald. Green visited the south ward to-day where they spent some time looking over the proposed site for the sewerage pumping station.

New Sidewalk.

A new sidewalk is being laid in front of the customs house. The grade is being changed so as to conform with the street grade. This is an improvement that has long been in prospect.

Oil For the Streets.

Delay in oiling the streets is attributed to the changes that must be made to the watering carts with which the oil will be distributed. A special type of distributor is being secured.

WITH OTHER MUNICIPALITIES.

At a meeting of the Barrie Town Council $300 per month from May to December inclusive was voted to the Red Cross Society. In addition to that the women of Barrie have raised more than $3,000, and the men have recently contributed $1,000.

Wants a Local Industry.

Port Arthur City Council has protested to the Government against the shipping of local alien enemies to the east for internment. Mayor Mooney says a definite understanding for the [illegible] land was made, but the Government had broken faith.

To Erect New Factory.

It is rumoured that a well-known Berlin business man is making arrangements for the erection of a large up-to-date factory building on the corner of Cedar and Elgin Streets.

Registration of Aliens.

The Berlin City Council has passed a resolution requesting that an office be established in that city for the registration of aliens of enemy nationality.

Working Overtime.

Hamilton factories are working overtime turning out shells for the Allies.

"I would exempt every citizen from taxation who is at the front," said Mayor Church of Toronto, when a number of physicians who have been drafted for active service at the front applied for exemption from income taxes.

HAIR CURLING FLUID

If you dampen your hair with a curling fluid before curling it on the iron or before doing it up, it will stay in curl in damp weather. Here is a good curling mixture: Three ounces of quince seed juice, two drams of boric acid, one half ounce of spirits of wine and three ounces of water. Mix and apply a small amount of the mixture to the hair.

MONEY GOES TO PATRIOTIC SOCIETIES

Cheese Board Has Over One Thousand Dollars Which They Will Divide Among Ladies' Patriotic Societies

EXPEND IT AT ONCE

The Cheese Board this morning decided to use immediately for patriotic purposes the $1023.27 which remains from the contribution toward the end of the 1914 season of one day's make of cheese by practically every factory on the Board. Secretary Ed. Hawthorne reported that the cheese brought $1,046.92. By a resolution of the members the fund was intended for the relief of wives and families of county men under arms. Only one application had been received. Mrs. Chas. Stenner of Douro, took advantage of the fund and received $10 a month for four months. In addition she received the government allowance. The balance of $1,006.92 plus bank interest now amounts to $1023.27.

The Board discussed the employment of the money. Mr. Hawthorne referred to the patriotic object of the factory patrons in donating the cheese.

"The work of the Daughters of the Empire appeals to me very strongly," he said. "Col. Birdsall told me yesterday that his son had written from the front that money was of little use. The towns have been vacated and desolate. The soldiers need comforts and other things sent from here made up."

Mr. Gillespie observed there were many ways in which the fund could be used. He advised a generous offering to the Canadian Patriotic Fund and a division of the remainder among Red Cross societies.

[illegible] of Smith; Mr. Switzer of Peterborough, Mr. Anderson of Otonabee and others expressed their opinions. They agreed that the money should not remain idle any longer. In every community the ladies had been working faithfully since last fall. They had banded themselves together everywhere. Their supplies of comforts, bandages, etc., were most wonderful and they deserved assistance. Hence it was moved by Mr. Anderson and seconded by Mr. Coughlin, that the Fund committee, composed of Mr. Hawthorne, Mr. Duff and Mr. Switzer have authority to divide the money among patriotic societies they deemed worthy of assistance.—Carried. It was first suggested that the donations be limited to $25 and $50, but finally it was decided to leave this detail to the discretion of the committee.

This method will enable the women of the country who donated milk for the make of cheese to secure portions of the fund for their local Red Cross work. It is understood that societies in the city will receive consideration also.

Interesting Lecture By Mr. Osborn

Presided over by Mayor Buller, an appreciative audience heard Mr. H. J. Osborn's war lecture last night, charmed with a specially fine set of 120 pictures, brilliantly shown by electric lantern. The attendance was not large, due to a failure in the chief means of publicity, only discovered yesterday, but those who attended had a great treat, and warm appreciation was expressed to the lecturer by Mr. Coulthard, Mr. Aylmer, Mayor Buller and others.

To-morrow (Thursday) night, at 8 o'clock, Mr. Osborn is announced to speak in the Public Library Hall on "English Cathedrals and Abbeys," and again promises 120 fine pictures, with a "Non-Technical Talk" based on personal visit and observation of many historic, beautiful and venerated national monuments, "With Glimpses of Britain, by Eye-Gate and Ear-Gate." A widely experienced traveller, Mr. Osborn has seen everything he presents, and speaks from knowledge.

For the benefit of any who were prevented attending last night, Mr. Osborn announces that to-morrow, in addition to his "English Cathedrals and Abbeys" set, he will show over again his "War" set with a brief exposition of his 120 pictures. # INTERESTING LETTER FROM GUNNER DORRIS

Peterboro' Boy Tells of the Battle of Langemarck—Says Some of the German Prisoners Looked to Be Half Starved.

AN EXCITING EXPERIENCE

An interesting letter has been received from Driver Ambrose Dorris, of the 4th Battery, 1st Brigade, of the First Canadian Contingent, British Expeditionary Force. Driver Dorris, or "Buck" Dorris as he was more familiarly known in civilian life, resided at 232 Wescott Street. He was an employee of the Canadian General Electric Company. In a letter to his brother Bert, Driver Dorris refers to the big battle in which so many Canadians lost their lives. The letter, which is dated April 28th, reads as follows:

Just a line to let you know that I am in the very best of health and hope to be that way for some time. We are head and body right into the fighting. The Canadians are sure doing wonderful fighting. We have lost heavily in wounded and killed. We are gaining ground and also getting about two Germans to every one of ours. We have also taken a number of prisoners. Believe me, the ones I saw looked to be half starved. This fight has been going steadily since Thursday afternoon. The guns all around me are going for all they can right now. It is certainly terrible to see the poor Belgians that are driven from their homes. Really you have no idea how bad it is. If I could tell you just where I am writing this letter you would not believe me.

LOST HEAVILY.

The 48th Highlanders have lost heavily, and a number of them are from Peterborough. There was a shell lit in front of two of our Canadians yesterday, and all there was to be seen of them afterwards was one of their serges. Believe a person in Canada would never realise half of what we are seeing and going through. I suppose you will have all the news of this big battle before you see this. Remember me to all the boys Bert and give them my best regards.

For Sallow, Wrinkled, Freckled, Pimpled Skin

If you have any cutaneous blemish, don't use paint, powder or anything else to cover it up. Too often this only emphasizes the defects. Besides, it's much easier to remove the disfigurement with ordinary mercolized wax. Applied nightly, the wax will gradually remove freckles, pimples, blackheads, moth-patches, sallowness, red or yellow blotches, or any surface eruptions. The affected cuticle is absorbed, a little each day, until the clear, soft, youthful and beautiful skin beneath is brought wholly to view. Ask the druggist for an ounce of mercolized wax and use this like you use cold cream. Remove in morning with soap and water. Many who have tried this simple and harmless treatment report astonishing results.

If bothered with wrinkles or crow's feet, a wash lotion made by dissolving an ounce of powdered saxolite in a half pint witch hazel will prove remarkably effectual.

Willie—"Dad, why is the way of the transgressor hard?" Dad—"Because so many people have trampled on it, my son!"

The Lady—"Now, d'ye really think that marriage is a failure?" The gentleman—"Well the bride never gets the best man!"

"A friend of mine gave a girl an engagement ring of opals." "Ridiculous! Wasn't it unlucky?" "Yes, but it was. She married him."

ARE RECEIVING BETTER TREATMENT

Conditions of British Prisoners Radically Altered By Germany

LONDON, May 19—The Press Bureau issued to-day a communication from Ambassador Gerard enclosing a report from the American Consul at Cologne, Mr. Nicholson, relating a visit he paid to thirteen isolated British officers under arrest. The Consul reports that their conditions have been radically altered for the better, especially in the matter of exercise, the hours of which have been doubled. The prisoners, moreover, are now allowed free converse during exercise and smoking is permitted. The food has been brought up to the standard maintained for interned officers who are held in detention, and the quarters are approximately clean.

The officers in solitary confinement are in Schurzasse, Cologne, a massive old military prison for delinquents of the ranks of commissioned and non-comissioned officers. The Consul had a conversation with one of the arrested officers, who said that conditions had been strikingly improved recently. Other improvements are to be made at the suggestion of the Consul.

DAMAGE REPORTS ARE EXAGGERATED

Leading Western States Give Excellent Promise of Good Crops — Reports From Various Sections

CHICAGO, May 19.— Many of the crop damage reports coming from the winter wheat belt are exaggerated. President Canby of the Chicago Board of Trade received a letter from a leading grain man of Kansas City, saying that an examination of the wheat fields in Ottawa, Saline, McPherson and Reno counties, Kansas, failed to show the damage reported. While it was admitted that there was some deterioration, most of the wheat was found to be far above the average; also that in southeastern Kansas, where many reports are coming from, there is not much wheat raised.

H. A. Halliday of Cairo, Ill., writes that he received a report of Hessian fly damage in that section and of farmers ploughing up wheat. Investigation disclosed that one farmer was ploughing up a small portion of his crop. Mr. Halliday said that the lack of moisture is a more serious element in that section than anything else.

A sample of the growing wheat plant received from Ashland, Ill., was headed out, and contained a few grains forming. The centre advanced the opinion that it would make 30 to 40 bushels to the acre.

A message from Jacksonville, Ill., says that wheat is in magnificent condition there, and that the promise is fully one-quarter better than last year.

A traveller from Kentucky pronounces the country like a green carpet with excellent promise; the wheat is headed in Kentucky and that where it has been unable rain in Southern Illinois there is hardly a break in the splendid of heavy growth.

Local Council of Women's Column

The Matter Published in this column will be supplied by the Local Council of Women and in the interest of their work.

The following appeal has been made by the National Council with which are affiliated practically all women's societies, small and great, in the Dominion:

"The National Council of Women earnestly appeals to those whose dear ones may be killed or who may die in this war to refrain from wearing the conventional mourning, and to wear, instead, a band of royal purple on the arm, to signify that the soldier they mourn died gloriously for his King and country."

It is felt that the depressing effect of a large number of people in the community wearing the usual mourning may possibly discourage enlistment, and it is also realized that the expense involved in the purchase of mourning would be a heavy strain on many persons at this time.

"Several of the Peeresses and others in Great Britain have already adopted a badge of mourning similar to that suggested."

"When will the play-grounds begin, lady?" was the question asked by a very small boy on the evening of Carnation day. He was one of the many little fellows who crowded around the window, attracted by the bright flowers, and so eager to help sell. No one had the heart to tell him that unless some kind friends help there will be no place but the hot, dusty street for them to play in this summer. When given a flower for running an errand he immediately took it home to his mother, though he probably had never heard of Mothers' Day. His surprise that anybody should take the trouble to get a place for him to play in, was pathetic.

Imagine the delight of the "slum" children of the large cities, accustomed to play in the dust, with only bricks, tin cans and broken bottles for toys, hounded from one street to another, like stray cats, scolded for shouting or otherwise using their lungs, imagine their bewilderment when some beneficent fairy not only turns the dirty back yard into a play ground, but actually invites them in to play with a real ball, to swing, to teeter, to build sand castles in the nice clean sand, to learn to sing and march, and in fact, to learn the lesson of play. You may say that such conditions do not prevail in Peterborough. Perhaps not yet, but we will soon have slums and slum-children, too, if we do not now secure spaces for the children to play in.

Through the kindness of the Conservatory of Music the Children's Orchestra gave a concert on Friday evening last for the benefit of the playground fund. The hall was well filled with delighted children, and quite a sum was added to the fund.

Pychologists and the medical profession have agreed that if the aim of education is not learning, but the production of well-balanced men and women, who can bear the burdens, and do the work of their own place in life, then the chief business of the earlier grades must be to promote healty, physical growth. The body of the young girl or boy demands more care and attention than the mind. Fulmonary, rather than cerebral, capacity, is the best promise of future usefulness.

Masked Robbers Hold Up Fifty Men

DETROIT, MICH., May 18.—Seven masked men, five carrying sawed off shotguns, took at least $2,000 and many watches from about fifty men in Vurro & Kessler's poolroom.

George Jones, one of the victims, fell in line with his fellows, but managed to sneak unnoticed to the lavatory, where he placed on a window a roll of bills amounting to $800. One of his fellow victims saw him secret the money, and after the hold-up men had fled, Jones told the police this man turned robber and forced Jones, a bookmaker, to turn over his roll.

The sums of money taken from the other men in the place varied in amount from $5 to $50. The booty included about thirty watches and other articles of jewellery.

After the bandits had fled one of the victims followed them into the street, firing six shots, but none took effect, and they all escaped.

A Lady With Numerous Peterborough Relations

The following from The Globe relates to a lady, Miss FitzGibbons, whose name suggests pleasant memories of pleasant association during the time of her residence in Lakefield and her presence in Peterborough:

Few women in Canada would be more missed than Miss Mary Agnes FitzGibbon, who died Monday in this city. She came of good ancestry, her grandfather having been the Lieutenant FitzGibbon, who, at the head of a few soldiers, secured the surrender, in the war of 1812-15, of a strong American detachment at Beaver Dams, now Thorold. Miss FitzGibbon's strong bias for historical research found expression in a very readable life of her grandfather, and in the organization of the Women's Canadian Historical Society, which has done much useful work. On her mother's side she was closely related to the Strickland family, of which three women rose to literary eminence: Agnes Strickland, author of "Lives of the Queens of England"; Mrs. Susannah Moody, author of "Roughing it in the Bush," and Mrs. Traill, of whose research the flowers of Canada were the subjects. Of late years Miss FitzGibbon devoted much time, in ways at once useful and unostentatious, to the relieving of distress and helping British immigrants to feel at home on their arrival in Canada.

U. S. FLEET OF THE ATLANTIC IN NEW YORK HARBOUR—Winston Churchill made a hit by concentrating the British fleet "in manoeuvres" in the fateful days last July. At this moment the American fleet is "mobilized" in New York Harbour, but it is for review purposes. The President expects to review the fleet.

Britain's Loss of Battleships Has Been Inconsiderable

British Fleet is Stronger To-day Than at the Beginning of the War

"Steadily mounting" is the phrase that naturally goes with the chronicling of the loss of another British battleship, and there is, indeed, something about the disappearance of the heavy mass of steel with its crew that strikes the imagination much more powerfully than the loss of a couple of battalions in routine fighting. Yet the fact is that during nine and a half months of war Great Britain's loss in battleships has been inconsiderable. Of six battleships gone, one—the Audacious—was a Dreadnought less than two years old. The other five were battleships from thirteen to fifteen years old, and ranging from 13,000 to 15,000 tons. Great Britain has thus lost five out of forty pre-Dreadnoughts with which she began the war, and one of thirty-three Dreadnoughts and super-Dreadnoughts and battle cruisers armed with 12-inch guns. Three battleships of the Queen Elizabeth type are under construction, but since the earliest of these was laid down two years ago, the second in the fall of 1913, and the last in the summer of 1914, it is hardly likely that more than one of them can as yet be in commission.

Roughly speaking, then, reat Britain has forty Dreadnoughts to Germany's twenty-five. But whereas of the English Dreadnoughts there are eighteen armed with 13.5-inch guns or heavier, the German fleet has at most one such ship, as we have just seen. That heavier gun-fire counts was shown in the battle of the North Sea, when the German battle cruiser Seydlitz and Derflinger met the British cruisers Tiger and Lion.

In other words, in full-dress battle, [illegible] 13.5 and 15-inch gun, type would be more than a match by themselves for the entire German fleet. This would leave twenty British Dreadnoughts of the 12-inch type as a second line, and behind them thirty-five battleships of the pre-Dreadnought type.

Plainly then, Great Britain can view with equanimity the loss of older battleships around the Dardanelles, provided results are obtained. On the other hand, the recent story of the German high seas fleet cruising the North Sea in search of the British fleet must be received with skepticism, for it would mean that the Kaiser's fleet was out to challenge an enemy probably three times as strong.

It is commonplace to say that the British fleet is stronger to-day than at the beginning of he war, but how much stronger is not often realized. Shortly after the outbreak of hostilities there were added to the fleet two Dreadnoughts of the 13 1-2 inch gun type—the Benlow and Emperor of India. Last March the monster Queen Elizabeth with her eight 15-inch guns, made her debut in the Dardanelles. Three others of her type were launched within four months of the Queen Elizabeth, and these are undoubtedly now in commission—Warspite, Valiant and Berham.

The German fleet in the meantime has been increased by six battleships

Robert Crozier Long Tells of Stricken Center of Eastern War—People Crushed and Country a Waste

LONDON, May 18.—Robert Crozier Long, author and special correspondent, has written for the Associated Press on his return to Stockholm, after an extended tour of the war devastated districts of Poland, the following account of what he saw:

"'Finis Polonaie,' Kosciusko's epitaph on his country, has been released.

"A tour of central and southern Poland and the Polish parts of Galicia convinces me of that.

"I visited all the chief towns and many villages, or ruins of villages, in 10,000 square miles of country lying between the Austro-German lines and the Vistula in a semi-circle from the Baura to the Nida. I visited also the basin of the Dunajec and the Wisloka, the theatre of sanguinary Mayday battle. The country is a desert, the home of nomads. I got my first glimpse of it on the Baura, west of Warsaw, where, during a four months' artillery duel, every habitation has disappeared.

"I reached this battle front first after dusk, and from an observation tower saw against the red background formed by a blazing forest the remnants of a dozen villages. These remnants were gaunt, erect pillars. This is typical of burned out Poland.

BLACK BRICK CHIMNEYS.

"Everywhere except east of the road from Warsaw to Sandomir, blackened brick chimneys represent Polish homes.

"The governor of Radom assured me that in his province 500 villages had been burned. In the country held by Russia's foes conditions are worst, for here the fighting was more prolonged. The worst devastation is in the theatre of the November fight for the possession of Lods. Refugees assure me that in a circle extending thirty miles around Dods only five villages were spared.

EVERY SECOND MAN REFUGEE.

"Poland's population is suffering as no Europeans have suffered since the Thirty Years' war. Every second man is a refugee. Warsaw has 60,000 refugees, a third of them Jews. In Radom I found 15,000 refugees; in Kielce 20,000.

"A Warsaw rabbi assured me that 100,000 Jews from the towns of Lods, Piotrkow, and Lowics are without homes. Many refugees still tramp the roads begging despairingly from people themselves beggars.

"Such is Poland's present. The future will be even worse. The country, ravaged and irreclaimable, begins to resemble the primeval Sarmatian waste. Roads, forests, and even fields have vanished.

"This devastation means for Poland generations of beggary."

Y. M. C. A. NOTES

Thursday afternoon the members of the Y.M.C.A. will visit the Peterborough Canoe Co., and witness the making of canoes, motor boats and all kinds of boat supplies. This should prove very interesting as most boys enjoy boating. The boys will meet at the factory on Water Street at 4.15.

Preparations are now being made for the annual boys' camp, which will be held June 29th to July 10th. The camp this year promises to be one of the best held in the history of the association. Members who intend to go to camp are requested to hand their names in as soon as possible. The camp is for all members of the boys' department seventeen years of age and under.

Your six lucky teeth and why they seldom decay

DENTISTS' records show that the front six teeth on your lower jaw rarely decay. And physiology points out this reason for it:

These six teeth are more constantly in contact with saliva than any other teeth you own. For they are the lowest in your mouth. And behind them are the two principal salivary ducts.

Your own saliva is the best preserver of your teeth.

For healthy saliva is alkaline, neutralising the decay-promoting acid of food particles and rendering it harmless.

When you chew clean gum like Sterling you bring all of your teeth for the time in contact with saliva. You make them share in the "luck" which Nature has given to the front six.

Sterling Gum you'll want—for its delicious flavor goes through and through and stays and stays.

And all the time you're enjoying the delicious Sterling flavor—the gum itself is doing your teeth a good turn.

Espionage Trial Has Commenced

LONDON, May 19.—The trial of Anton Kepferle, who claims to be a naturalized American citizen residing at one time in Brooklyn, N.Y., charged with spying, opened at the Old Bailey Police Court before Lord Reading, Lord Chief Justice, and Justices Avory and Lush.

Although it had been announced earlier that the hearings would be in camera the authorities decided at the last moment on a public trial, and the court room was crowded with spectators. Admission by ticket was insisted upon. The charge alleges that the prisoner with the intention of assisting the enemy of Great Britain, feloniously attempted to communicate information respecting warships and military forces and material calculated to be useful to the enemy. The prosecution was conducted by the Attorney-General.

Kepferle pleaded not guilty. In opening the case the Attorney-General remarked that the prisoner had claimed to be an American, but the prosecution insisted he is a German.

He is a German who had written a letter to an address in a neutral country in Europe, giving information concerning British warships and their positions in the Irish Channel and the disposition of the King's forces. The letter appeared to be an innocent commercial communication until it was closely examined. It was then found to be interlined with the above information in the German language, written in invisible ink.

HAD INDIGESTION FOR OVER 10 YEARS.

ALMOST DESPAIRED OF EVER GETTING WELL.

Indigestion is one of the worst forms of stomach trouble. The stomach becomes upset and you have a raw, debilitating feeling in it. After a meal you feel that you must get rid of that nasty, bilious, burning sensation. It is not necessary for you to be troubled with indigestion if you will only try that old and well-known remedy, Burdock Blood Bitters, which is a combination of nature's best known roots, herbs and barks for the cure of all stomach and blood troubles.

Mrs. Mary MacKay, Hunter's Mountain, N.B., writes: "I was troubled with indigestion for more than ten years. I tried several doctors' medicines claiming the power to cure, but all without success. Having heard of the many cures effected by Burdock Blood Bitters, I decided to give it a trial. After taking two bottles I was completely cured. My appetite which was very poor is now good, and I can eat most everything without any disagreeable feelings.

I can strongly recommend B.B.B. to anyone suffering from indigestion."

B.B.B. is manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

Roycroft Shop to Continue Says Elbert Hubbard, Number Two

EAST AURORA, May 18. — The Roycroft shop will continue. This much was definitely decided yesterday in an announcement made public by Elbert Hubbard 2nd. There will be no retrenchment, and no curtailing of labor, and each department will be conducted as it has been.

The Philistine and The Fra, the monthly magazines, will be published as in the past, as Mr. Hubbard left copy enough to run each a year.

The statement of young Mr. Hubbard's announcement brought joy to many hundreds hearts, in that it declared the continuance of the Roycroft pay-roll that runs close to $8,000 a week. There has been some fear since the death of Elbert Hubbard on the Lusitania, that the shop would be wiped out of existence; that the Inn would be closed, and the 300-acre farm cut into building lots.

The announcement published yesterday was made over the names of John D. Larkin of Buffalo (brother-in-law of the late Elbert Hubbard) and former Senator Henry H. Persons.

Elbert Hubbard 2d in his statement says in part: "I am confronted with a big problem, a burden that would seem staggering. You have heard my father say many times that The Roycroft would not be possible at all were it not for the many very excellent workers who did things for him, that he with his two hands could not do. It seems eminently fitting here for me to say that I cannot meet the problem without some excellent help.

"Of necessity, as you can all realize, this business wil have to undergo some reorganizing within the next few months. There will be changes in policy, some things will be drastic, and I will be forced to do many things perhaps which I don't like to do. You will not criticise me harshly I know when you realize that I have but one big interest, and that is to continue the business of The Roycrofters successfully. I want the institution to be a fitting monument to the founder.

"I regret that I have had to close the bank. This, however, is only temporary, I am sure. There is no cause for any person to have the least fear as to the safety of their money, for the estate of Elbert Hubbard is ample to discharge all liabilities, the assets being several times as much. The financial status of the institution was never betteer. Our magazines are to be continued. Mr. Hubbard left much unpublished manuscript, and this branch will go on just as it always has. Within a few months we will be fully reorganized.

"So, I can say to you all, good freinds sit tight! Have faith in us; cut out the gossip and give me every ounce of loyalty and moral support you have. We will make it go, surely."

The condition and financial soundness of the bank is vouched for by Mr. Larkin, Mr. Heath and Senator Persons, who further state that the only reason for the closing of the institution is the legal status of the affair, and that as soon as it is adjusted through the courts, every depositor will be paid in full.

Life Insurance In a Crisis

Every time a great Crisis occurs LIFE INSURANCE has an opportunity to show what a giant of trength it is. Tremendous burdens are placed upon its shoulders, but it never shirks, never hesitates or groans.

When the Titanic took its awful plunge, carrying 1500 human souls into the deep, thousands of widows and orphans were left throughout the world. LIFE INSURANCE accepted the burden without the quiver of a muscle, and spread its protection around the Globe.

When seven years ago the financial world was labouring under an attack of indigestion due to undigested securities, and people could not get even their own money out of the Savings Banks, LIFE INSURANCE furnished spot cash to its policy holders upon application.

To-day when a gigantic struggle wages across the Seas and it is difficult to get loans from banks or money lenders, they find the solution again in LIFE INSURANCE.

It is to-day saving thousands of men all over the world, not only embarrassment but actual failure.

Stand of Giants Brings Confidence to the 'Fans'

By Winning Four Straight Games Followers Convinced McGraw is in Race Again—Meyers Relates "Inside" Incident at Ebbets Field—Yankees Popular

Having accomplished the downfall of Cincinnati and Chicago and won four straight games the Giants once more have assumed a dangerous attitude as far as the National League is concerned. Also the winning streak of the New York club has erased a lot of worry from the minds of the promoters of the game, who were beginning to think that they would have to meet expenses without the support of New York, a feat that most followers of the game say is impossible.

The belated victorious march of McGraw's pennant seekers is all the more welcome to New York patrons of the game because it revives an interest that was waning. The Giants have about gained that physical condition where they can be counted upon to reach the position in the league standing which every one concedes belongs to them. There is a reason for the better display of the club, and that is, the pitchers have rounded to form after a most inauspicious start.

When McGraw got back from Marlin with his team not one of the twirlers was in any kind of condition to begin a hard race for the flag. The other players were in fair shape, but none was as fit as should be, and the poor weather that the club encountered can be blamed for this. After a month of playing the men have become hardened to the daily test and now are near that physical fitness necessary for a season's campaign.

Will be in Race.

From this time until next October McGraw predicts that the team will be fighting for the honours. He says that Tesreau, Marquard, Perritt and Matheweson will be able to hold off the opposition and that Lobart, Burns Doyle, Fletched and Robertson will drive across enough runs to win the games.

The early setback of the Giants has not disheartened the men; on the contrary, it has instilled a fighting spirit that is showing in the daily struggles. Each of the players realises that to win ball games it is necessary to play at top speed until the last man is out in the ninth inning, and not one of the men is shirking any work now. Every player attends morning practice and all are out early in the afternoon for batting, throwing and fielding workouts prior to the game. The spirit is fast rounding the club into another formidable aggregation that promises to wreck the cocksureness of the Boston Braves, and the hopes of the Phillies.

John Meyers is still a bit over weight, but he is not worrying to any extent about this. He is spending his spare time collecting humorous stories about the game, and with his permission the following anecdote, the latest, is appended:

"Cut Out Them Grammar"

During one of the games in Brooklyn the Dodgers were "riding" Meyers from the bench, making remarks that are too personal to be printed. William Byron, the umpire, was in charge of the game and told Meyers he would stop the "baiting". Meyers smiled and said it was not necessary, as such remarks only made him hit the ball harder every time he came to bat. Byron, however, observed that the rules of the game forbid such remarks as were coming in volumes from the Dodger bench, and he turned toward the shouting players and commanded: "Cut out them personalities!" and the answer flashed back: "Cut out them grammar!"

"Pat" Moran's Phillies still refuse to weaken, as all the experts agree they should. The Philadelphia clan is getting good pitching, expert fielding and timely hitting, and with these attributes any ball club can win games. Until the other pitchers of the league are able to check Cravath, Becker, Luderus, Byrne and the other sluggers on Moran's team, the club will remain in its present position. However, few "fans" are wagering that the Phillies will win the pennant.

The absence of "Johnny" Evers from the Braves' lineup is showing in the results of their games. Twice last week they were beaten out of the honours by a visiting team making a spirited finish and each time infield errors gave the winners the start. Had the steady Evers been playing it is almost certain he would have been able to calm down the fiery men ranged alongside of him, and by this put the team on a firmer footing and in a position to stop an advance.

Cubs Fall in East.

The Cubs are not doing so well against the Eastern teams as they did in their sectional struggles. Brooklyn broke even with Bresnehan's outfit, and the Giants overwhelmed the "Bruins" in their first combat. The Cubs played so poorly against McGraw's team that most critics are withholding their opinion of the team as all figure that they just got rid of a bad game, and from now on will make fight that will bring out the real worth of the aggregation.

Pittsburg is making a determined stand that is fast bringing Clarke's Corsairs into the first division. By winning six straight games and continuing strongly against the Phillies Clarke proved to other managers that the Pirates is a team to be feared. Hans Wagner is playing the game of his career, according to all reports, defying Father Time and all other kinks that come with age in his display of fielding and hitting.

"Smiling Bill" Donovan is laughing boisterously now, and there is none who objects to his laughter unless it is the seven other managers of the American League. Donovan has a club that is the sensation of the younger organization. It is showing speed in every department, and is going along so surprisingly confident that already arrangements are being made to welcome the October classic, with Colonel Jacob Rupert and Captain T. L. Huston the host.

Detroit Series Crucial.

The series that the Yankees started with Detroit yesterday will go far in determining the strength of Donovan's "dreadnought." The Tigers and Yanks are fighting for the lead just at present, and if Donovan's pitchers can take the majority of the games followers of the sport must concede that he has a team in the race at least.

Ray Fisher by winning six straight games without defeat since the season opened, is credited with being the star of the Yankee staff, but Caldwell Keating, McHale and Warhop are in great form and all powerful right now. If Maisel, Hartzell, Pipp and Boone can continue to drive in such good runs behind such pitching as the Yankees will continue to receive Donovan may win the pennant.

The Red Sox have struck a stride that will bring them to the top in a hurry unless the other teams brace up. "Bill" Carrigan has a club that on paper is far and away ahead of any organization in the country, but paper and baseball facts have not jibed for some time. If the Red Sox pitchers come through as they are expected to do Carrigan will make a merry row before he is beaten.

With the warm weather coming on the attendance, except in the Federal League, where the "fans" are still disappointing the new organization, is picking up. Saturday, at the Polo Ground the largest crowd of the year attended, and in all the other cities large crowds were reported. This seems to prove false the prediction that baseball, because of its court entanglements, is losing its popularity.

YESTERDAY'S BASEBALL GAMES

NEW YORK, May 18.—Chicago opened its series with New York, winning the second game to-day by a score of 1 to 0. It was a tight pitchers' battle between Humphries and Tesreau, in which both pitchers received perfect support. It was Suffrage Day at the Polo Grounds, though showers and a cold dismal day held down the crowd. The equal suffrage campaign committee received a percentage of the receipts. Each player scoring a run was promised $5, but Schulte was the only player able to take advantage of the offer. Score:

TAKING SPOTLIGHT OFF WILLARD IN NEW YORK

NEW YORK, May 19.— As far as New York is concerned Jess Willard has disappeared from the spotlight. Rarely is his name mentioned by the general public and even the fight fans have many other topics to argue about than the man who humbled the giant black man at Havana.

Nowhere, in fight circles, is heard the heated discussions over his merits and defects as was the situation some years back when champions of other days held the limelight. Willard is even creating less discussion than did Johnson when he won the title from Jeffries. Local ring stars are furnishing more excitement than the heavyweight champion.

How much Jess' stage work has dampened his popularity is impossible to calculate, but not a few fight bugs would rather see the giant cowboy in the ring than behind the footlights. Comparatively few people have seen Jess in action and that is what the followers of the fistic sport desire above everything else. Even if they cannot see him in action they like to read about him.

There is not much meat in the dispatches about Willard for the ringside followers. No one would deny the champ his just share of the little iron men, for his feat in defeating Johnson is worthy of a substantial reward. But between one night stands the big white champ might take a night off now and then and display his abilities to a fight-hungry public.

And perhaps the unpopularity of Willard as a stage favourite will force him into the ring again sooner than he expected. There is little doubt that Willard is not making a howling success of his circus stunt on the footboards. He is not as well adapted to that kind of pastime as some former boxer-actors were. And if press reports can be credited Jess himself cares little for the glare of the footlights. He wants the limelight, but the reflection from the little lamps bore him.

A return to the ring would hardly endanger Jess' newly won title. No one is within several years of besting him in a fistic argument. At least, not from surface appearance. Some one may develop as rapidly as did Jess himself, and humble the Western fight king, but the chance of this occurring is remote. Jess had been plugging at the boxing game for four or five years before he accomplished the "white hope" dream of the ringside sports.

The champion is expected to fight about every second week. The public thinks of him as a fighting man and to hold the affection of the fight fans he must fulfil their expectations. That attitude accounted for Jeffries' great popularity. Jeffries wanted to fight every man big enough to stand up to him. Steady work should be a by-product of a champion's real work.

BASEBALL

CHICAGO, May 18.—Canadian soldiers in France, who want to spend the intermissions between battles in playing baseball will be supplied by American leaders of the game with the paraphernalia which they cannot obtain readily abroad it was learned to-day. The soldiers complained to their friends and relatives in Canada that baseballs, bats and gloves were scarce in France and official attention was called, with the result that President B. B. Johnson, of the American League, and others, were appealed to. President Johnson has promised to contribute several boxes of new baseballs.

BRUSH SISTERS BACK IN ASYLUM

KING'S PARK, L. I., May 18. — None the worse for their long cross country jaunt, the Misses Phoebe and Ada Madison Brush, sisters, who belong to one of the most prominent Long Island families, were captured this morning in a room in the Echo Hotel, at Port Jefferson, L.I., and returned to the New York State Hospital for the Insane, from which they escaped Friday night.

The capture of the sisters gave relief to many persons living in Huntington, L.I., and surrounding towns, where the Misses Brush once were prominent in society, and who had been greatly excited from the moment the announcement was made of the women's escape from the institution. In several instances special guards had been employed by Huntington families to watch their premises for the approach of the fugitive sisters, the excitements having been intensified by reason of threats which it has been alleged, the sisters have made from time to time against persons they believed were partly responsible for their commitment to the hospital for the insane.

The capture of the Misses Brush was due to William Underwood, a barber, employed at the hospital, whose home is in Port Jefferson. Yesterday was Underwood's day off, but he kept in mind the instructions of Dr. William Austin Macy, superintendent of the hospital, that all of the employees aid in the search for the escaped patients. Underwood dropped in at the Echo Hotel and made inquiries which resulted in identifying two women in the hotel with the persons sought.

Dr. William Sandy of the Hospital staff, with several attendants and nurses, went to Port Jefferson and took the two patients back to the hospital. They berated their captors orally, but did not struggle against being led to the automobiles.

Clearing Hospital At Valcartier

OTTAWA, May 19.—Establishment of a clearing hospital at Quebec, possibly at Valcartier, for the classification of wounded members of the Canadian Expeditionary Force who may be sent home as incapacitated is being projected. As the numbers of badly wounded or nerve shattered victims of Langemarck arrive they will be examined by a medical staff. Those who are not in a condition to be moved will be kept in the hospital. Others will be sent to convalescent homes in various parts of the Dominion, while all possible will go to their own homes. Men who have been incapacitated from earning a living by reason of their wounds will be at once pensioned, while the less seriously wounded will receive active service pay until ready to resume their occupations, when they will cease to be soldiers. Those who go home to convalesce will be stricken from the payroll, but will be provided for by the Canadian Patriotic Fund.

Local Delegate To Barbers' Convention In Hamilton

The International Barbers' Union of America (Ontario District) is holding its annual convention on Monday. ## Peterboro' Boy A Prisoner

Bugler Allan Kingscote is in the Hands of the Germans

Bugler Allan Kingscote, of "E" Company of the 48th Highlanders, son of Mr. Alfred Kingscote of Mount Dennis, is a prisoner in the hands of the Germans, and is well. This is the substance of a message received by his father from friends in England, to whom the young man had written from his present domicile.

Bugler Allen Kingscote is a son of Mr. Alfred Kingscote, formerly of this city. Bugler Kingscote and his father were for seven years members of the choir of St. John's church.

MEANS ADOPTED TO FINANCE WAR

LONDON, May 19—Some inquiries have been made as to the means we shall adopt for financing the war in the near future.

First, there is the outstanding fact that the war costs this country alone from £1,700,000 to £2,000,000 per day. Secondly, you must remember that, as against a normal Treasury balance of some few millions, our present balance stands at more like £130,000,000. Thus, even in the balance itself, we have sufficient cash in hand to make the financing of the war a matter of no anxiety for some weeks to come.

But not only this. Under the new system of issuing Treasury bills daily, it may be said that, even allowing for the covering of maturing bills the Exchequer is probably gaining on balance about £10,000,000 a week, so that you will see that the weekly cost of the war is very nearly met by the Treasury bills themselves, quite apart from the large Exchequer balances. Sooner or later, no doubt the enormous funds at present available for these Treasury bills will no doubt be gradually curtailed; then there will arise the necessity for another large public loan. But so far as may be judged at the moment, the Government will be able to raise at least other thousand millions through the Treasury bills system.

ENGINEERS VISIT PROPOSED SITE OF PUMPING STATION

Another Step in Peterboro's Quarter of a Million Dollar Project—Engineering Expert From Montreal

Mr. W. J. Francis, C.E., of Montreal, has arrived in the city and while here will confer with the city officials regarding the location of the pumping station which will be erected in connection with the sewage disposal plant, either at the end of Lock Street or at the end of Park Street. Mr. Francis is here at the request of the Board of Works. His mission is to collaborate with City Engineer Parsons in the selection of a suitable site. This morning Mr. Francis, accompanied by Mayor Butler, Ald. Green, chairman of the Board of Works, City Engineer Parsons, and City Clerk Armstrong, visited the two sites named and discussed a number of difficulties that would have to be overcome in connection with the work. This afternoon Mr. Francis went over the plans with the City Engineer and by to-morrow evening may be in a position to report to the Board of Works committee One or two of the Aldermen intimated they would like to be present, but the suggestion was not received very enthusiastically to the Committee appointed by the Board of Works went "unhampered" as one of them put it.

Stock Markets

New York Stocks

A. H. Stratton & Co., Brokers, report the following:

NEW YORK, May 19.—Two causes combined to impart increased strength to market towards the end of the second hour, and at noon the tone was good, although trading was still small. Moderate increase of strength was due in part to belief that rupture of diplomatic relations between Italy and Teutonic nations was imminent and partly to the announcement that German reply to United States' note would be delayed, from which it was inferred that modifications would be made since the feelers thrown out must have brought home to the German mind a conviction that U. S. government is determined to obtain protection for lives of its citizens at sea.

NEW YORK, May 19.—A decline in MOP 10¼ caused temporary recession in the general list in the last half of first hour, but at 11 o'clock stocks in general had again become firm, although the volume of trade was light. In regard to MOP it was said that if the Gould's did not accept the extension of notes they would have to consider whether they were willing to take responsibility of suing for payment.

CHICAGO, May 19.—Wheat was dull and heavy. Crop news is not so apprehensive and price current report makes condition in Kansas 89. Reports from other sections are favourable.

Corn—Quiet and easier. Selling was influenced by favourable Iowa reports and dull cash trade.

Oats—Steady with reports of further export business from the West direct.

Crop news very satisfactory.

Austro-German Forces Are Pressing Assault on Peremysl

Strong Positions Still Bar the Allies' Way to Dardanelles Narrows

Fresh Troops Have Disembarked and Will Prevent the Sending of Turkish Troops From the Asiatic Side

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, May 20.—Steady progress by the allied troops on the Gallipoli Peninsula is reported, although they apparently have not yet captured the Turkish positions which bar their way to the Narrows of the Dardanelles. A roundabout message by a news agency stating that the fortifications at Kilid Bahr at the end of the Narrows nearest Constantinople have been silenced is not given credence.

An unofficial despatch reports the landing of fresh troops on the Asiatic side of the straits—a move designed, doubtless, to prevent the Turks from sending any more reinforcements from the eastern to the western side. The despatch reads: "The allies disembarked fresh troops Monday night near Kum Kale, on the Asiatic coast of the Dardanelles. It also has been learned there that the Turks on the Gallipoli Peninsula, who for weeks have lacked artillery ammunition, have obtained an abundant supply of shells in the past few days.

Correspondents of Italian newspapers are arriving at Athens with the intention of following the operations of Italian expeditionary corps in the Dardanelles.

The Cairo correspondent of the Times says he is informed that General Weber Pasha, the German commander of the forts in the Dardanelles, has died of wounds.

All reserve officers in the Bulgarian army have been called to the colours for a month's training, says a Times despatch from Sofia. The Turks are hurrying troops, provisions and munitions from Lule-Burgas and Keshan to the Gallipoli Peninsula.. All siege guns and modern artillery have been removed from Adrianople and sent to the Aegean coast. Keshan and Malgara are being hastily fortified.

PRZEMYSL IS ABOUT TO FALL TO GERMANS

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, May 20—Przemysl is about to fall before the Austro-German armies under Gen. Mackensen.

Crushed by successive defeats the Russians must either abandon the Galician fortress they captured two months ago or risk danger of being surrounded and captured.

Only arrival of large bodies of slav reinforcements can save the day.

This was the opinion of military critics here to-day, following admission by the Russian war office that the enemy had crossed the San in large force.

Semi-official advices received here to-day confirmed the report that the Austro-German enveloping movement is sweeping forward.

To offset the admitted defeat in Jaroslau district, the Russian War Office to-day announced successes in southeastern Poland.

"An intense battle continues in the region of Opatow," said an official statement. "We have defeated considerable columns of the enemy, pursuing them beyond Ivanisko."

"Along the entire Galician front fighting continues."

Russians Rushing Up Reinforcements For the Defence of the San

Army in Bessarabia Working Its Way Towards the Centre of Galicia---Fighting Continues at Peremysl

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, May 20.—The only reassuring word from the eastern theatre of war is that Russia is rushing more men and more men to the front to check the Austro-German avalanche crashing through Galacia.

It is conservatively estimated that the Austrians have now 24 army corps, or 960,000 men, while the Germans have ten army corps, or 400,000 men, making 1,360,000 men in all, sweeping forward on a front running from the Carpathians north to Peremysl, over the San to the Vistula at Sandomierz, covering a territory once held by Russia after the hardest kind of fighting.

There is no doubt that the Teutonic allies are again at the gates of Peremysl, and that a bombardment of the outer ring of forts, 10 miles from the city, has been begun. It is also apparent that the Tarnow-Peremysl railway has been cut by them; that the Galician oilfields are once again in their hands, and in all likelihood the copper mining district, which will give them, if they hold it, gasoline and copper, two things most needed by Berlin and Vienna. The Russians are back against the Vistula. They may be across it, and Vienna despatches say they lack ammunition and other supplies.

If the word from the North and Western Galicia line is pessimistic, there is some solace to be found from the other two drives. The army of Gen. Linsingen, which was to go through Tukholka Pass and up the Stry valley, has been checked, while the force of the Archduke Eugene, which was to swing north through Bukowina, has been utterly defeated.. They are now across the Pruth, with the Russians in Czernowitz according to unofficial despatches.

ARMY WORKING WESTWARD.

A telegram from Innsbruck states that a strong new Russian army coming from Bessarabia is flinging back the Austra-Hungarian forces in Bukowina, and is marching toward Central Galicia, with the object of joining the principal Russian army in Galicia.

Operations along the San may be considered as in three sections—the first, from Peremysl south to the Carpathian foothills; the second, from Peremysl north to the mouth of the Fisloka; the third, from the Wisloka to Sandomir, in Russian Poland, 57 miles southeast of Radom.

In the first section the German advance has not developed beyond the stage of patrols and scouting parties. In the second section there are large opposing forces, which are prevented from engaging in hand-to-hand encounters by the wide sweep of the San, over which sharp artillery duels are occurring. The heaviest German forces evidently have been concentrated in the third section, in an attempt to reach the right bank of the San. Such a move is considered extremely hazardous by Russian critics as long as the Russians control the most important fortifications and bridges across the San, at Peremysl, Jaroslau and Sieniawa, enabling them to throw troops across to the left bank for the purpose of cutting off advancing Germans. On the other side of the Vistula considerable military activity is reported in the districts of Kielce and Radom. The Germans are making an effort to establish a connection between this movement and the Galacian advance.

ALLIES PROVIDE HELP.

It was said by one expert yesterday that the increasing force and strength of the allies in the western theatre proves the salvation of the Russians in the east. So long as they continue their offensive no more German corps can be detached to drive home the thrust so skilfully started.

Throngs of Polish refugees, says a Lemberg despatch, are moving eastward from Western Galicia, the greater part of them stopping in the vicinity of the River San to await the outcome of the fighting now in progress. The refugees are receiving sympathetic treatment from the Russian military authorities, between whom and the populace friendly relations have developed during the months of Russian occupation of West Galicia.

Large parties of captured Austrian officers and soldiers are passing through Lemberg. Most of them are men from the Landsturm, of classes which hitherto have been exempted from military service. As a rule they are comfortably clothed. Prisoners from South Galacia say the Austrians lost heavily in their recent advances. It is said nearly the whole command-ing staff at present consists of German officers, many of them brought in from Belgium, Berlin and Leipsig. A large number of the Austrian officers, according to these reports, have been removed to the Austrian borders, outside the sphere of military artivities.

KAISER WATCHES BATTLE.

An official statement issued in Berlin says Emperor William was present Sunday while fighting was in progress on the eastern front, first with the general staff and later with a division which was struggling to force a crossing of the San River.

General Kornilieff, commander of the 48th Russian division which cut its way through overwhelming German forces in the Galician retreat, has been captured, according to a Petrograd despatch to Reuter's.. He continued to command rearguard actions, leading bayonet charges, although severely wounded.

At a critical point in the fighting near Jaslo, Galicia, according to a despatch to the Daily Mail from Petrograd, Grand Duke Nicholas in person rushed to the scene with ammunition, making the last fifty miles at top speed in an automobile. His car was followed by a string of thirteen other automobiles loaded to capacity with ammunition. The arrival of the commander-in-chief is said to have turned the tide, inspiring the Cossacks to retake Jaslo, which the Germans had occupied. During their brief occupation the Germans are reported to have hanged the Mayor for displaying a Russian flag.

ITALY IS ALL READY FOR THE CALL TO WAR

Special to The Examiner.

ROME, May 20—The statement of the Imperial German Chancellor before the Reichstag yesterday shows that Germany is still hoping against hope that Italy may not join in the war against Austria. At the same time the overwhelming evidence here is that the whole country is united and calling for war on its traditional foe.

Dr. von Bethmann-Hollweg's official announcement of the actual concessions offered by Austria has not tended to improve the situation, as no mention was made of either Gorizia or the Dalmatian Islands, promising allusions to which were made in the semi-official statements published from time to time in the newspapers and presumed to come from Prince von Buelow, the German Amabassador.

The days of Italy's regeneration are recalled by the events of the present. Apparently there are no factions in Italy now, all differences having been laid aside for the time being. Those who have been advocating intervention in the war and those who have been working in the interest of peace have ceased to express their views, and are awaiting the action of the Government. Seemingly there exist no longer Monarchicals or Republicans, Clericals or Radicals, Socialists or Conservatives, but only Italians, determined to fight to the last man, if that should be necessary to maintain and develop in Europe the world position won by their forefathers.

GERMAN SPY COMMITTED SUICIDE

LONDON, Eng., May 20.—Anton Kuptoris, a former resident of Brooklyn, N.Y., on trial here as a German spy, committed suicide by hanging early to-day in the cell in Bristol Prison.

MUST BE LEFT OUT OF CHICAGO SCHOOL BOOKS

Special to The Examiner.

CHICAGO, May 20—Mass meetings and public appeals to the Board of Education to eliminate the eulogy of the German Kaiser from the Public School speller are being planned. With the exception of the German newspapers the various other foreign language newspapers of the city are uniting in a demand that the Board of Education either cause the page in the speller containing the eulogistic text on the Kaiser be cut out, or to have the entire edition of the speller destroyed.

"There will be meetings, resolutions and communications upon the subject, and the Board of Education will be asked to undo the wrong that has been done," said Vladimir Gering, editor of the Daily Svornotst. "It is not a foreign language question. It is purely an American proposition. Mrs. Ella Flagg Young, in the interview, points out that the Board of Education is the place to appeal to, and that is where we will go. We will also ask Mrs. Young to explain why no other ruler is eulogized. Further, in the next few days we will issue the facts regarding the gymnasium and school life of the Kaiser, which will show up something more."

AUTOISTS FINED IN HAVELOCK

HAVELOCK, May 20.—W. Row of Campbellford was fined $10 and costs on Saturday for driving an automobile, owned by Alf. Jackson of Marmora, without a 1915 license. The fine was paid forthwith.

Mr. G. A. Payne, barrister, of Campbellford, who was in town on Friday, attending Division Court, in an endeavour to enable Judge Huycke to catch the afternoon express, is said to have exceeded the speed limit fro mthe town hall to the station, and an information was laid against him by the constable. It is understood that Mr. Payne settled the charge by paying $5 and costs.

Frye Case To A Prize Court

WASHINGTON, May 20. — Germany has sent to a prize court the case of the American sailing ship William P. Frye, sunk in the South Atlantic last January by the German auxiliary cruiser Prinz Eitel Friedrich, but it is understood that the German Admiralty took that action before it had received the American note insisting that the damages be adjusted directly through diplomatic negotiations in Washington.

It is said by officials here that the reference of the case to a prize court will not necessarily prevent diplomatic adjustment.

The German Government, it is said, probably finds it necessary under its legal methods to develop certain facts through a prize court, even while negotiations may be in progress. As Germany has admitted in principle liability for the sinking of the Frye, the State Department here probably will not feel concerned at this latest development.

EMPEROR LEFT AUTOS TRIFLE TOO SOON

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

GENEVA, May 20—The German Emperor and his staff had a narrow escape on Sunday while watching the operations in a village near the River San, in Galicia. According to a despatch from Budapest, a heavy shell burst 500 yards away. It fell among some automobiles, destroying several machines, including the Emperor's, and killing his chauffeur. The Emperor had left his car only 15 minutes before.

As more Russian shells were falling in the neighbourhood, the Emperor and his staff left hastily in machines which they commandeered.

Happy Hawkins in the Panhandle

Jim had promised top wages and the closer we drew to Dodge City, the more angelic our reformed riff-raff became. I told 'em we wouldn't sell until we had time to get the hang of things, but would make camp about ten miles out, and that they could go to town in pairs; so, as was customary, they played poker to see in what order they'd go.

Monody and I had got to be purty good pals on the way in and it added a lot to the sleep I got. No healthy man is free from prejudices, but no sensible man lets 'em weigh too heavy on him. Monody was just as much aware as any one else was that he wasn't white on the outside and so took care never to throw himself open to a callin' down. He never did hunt for trouble, nor he never ran from it, and so he suited me exactly.

He told me that the scoundrels in our outfit nor cut up none in Kansas, but saved that for a retreat when things began to get crowded down along Mexico way; so I treated 'em as free as though they'd been a team o' tired mules, and we didn't have as much ill feelin' in our bunch as I've often seen in an outfit that didn't have a single outlaw to bless itself with.

We loafed along the Cimarron Crick, and up that to where it turned off to the west, havin' the herd spread out like molasses and every steer brute in it was as fat and contented as the picture of a food-fed baby. We made camp on Mulberry Crick and then turned the outfit over to Red again and me and Jim went in to learn our own business.

That was a mighty interestin' time for me, and I like to think about it yet. A lot of the high moguls of the cattle business were at the hotel waitin' for their herds to come up from below, a lot o' new men with money and contracts had just broke into the game and were beginnin' to notice a chilly feelin' in their boots, the boom was on with a crash, and all in all it was excitin' to a degree; but it hasn't anything to do with my story, so I'll try to cut around it.

Grass-cattle were six-sixty on the Chicago market, and when Jim figgered out what his herd was worth, he nearly had a fit. He had bought his stuff four years before when cattle were down, and it seemed about like findin' the money. We sold the herd to a feller havin' an army contract to deliver up in Dakota, and as it was a stiff contract and he didn't savvy the way to handle army contracts, he swore we had saved his life. Truth to tell the prairie claimed more than one feller that year who had contracted for cows he didn't own, and after givin' bond, found he couldn't buy.

After countin' the herd over to the contractor and payin' off the outfit, Jim hired Monody, Red, and Shorty for a year with Flames, the kid, goin' in as good measure, and moved the camp in closer to town so they could sell off our extra hosses. Then Jim drew a full breath and expanded.

He had started out with that herd feelin' about ready to own up, but the sale of it had more than paid for all his mistakes, gave him all the ready cash he knew how to count, and fixed up his credit at the bank should he ever want to borrow. Fact was, he began to suffer with the idee that he was a self-made man.

"I hardly think I'm as big a fool as they all thought," sez he to me.

"Mebbe they were figgerin' on the rule and you on the exception," sez I to him, and this steadied him down again.

The' wasn't any chance in the world of holdin' him back from Kansas City now that success had picked him out for a target, and so I humored him and went along: and to be perfectly honest, I didn't hate the plan near as bad as I let on.

CHAPTER VI.
TOM SMITH.

Journeyin' together is a mighty good way to get well acquainted—the chances are that if some weddin'-trips were took before the weddin's some weddin's would be spoke of as only another false rumour. Jim had a thick crust to him for a young feller, but he was warm underneath, and I'm sometimes tipped clear out o' balance when I think of what might have happened to me if I hadn't liked him so well.

Jim had a way of lettin' me see into little stylish tricks without makin' me feel that I had been a disgrace to the whole human family by not practisin' 'em before I knew what they were, and this got under my hide and stuck me when a lot o' soapy talk would just have brought the spunk out on me.

Whenever a bunch o' men make a lot o' money by sittin' around in chairs and takin' the wealth that other fellers produce, why, that's a sure sign that the real West has give to the real East, and even at that time, Kansas City was purty well to the east of where it had been only a few years before, and a lot of perfectly healthy men were wearin' white collars and sippin' coffee after the meal was all finished. They had a hotel there with so much style and so many different kinds of unnatural food that I found eatin' a regular soul-test and it even strained my moral courage some to take a full breath; Jim, he steered me through it all and when he had to laugh at me, he allus told me what for, so I could join him.

We turned in about one o'clock the first night, and after I had stretched myself on the clean, white bed as gentle as possible; Jim sauntered in from his room wearin' a suit o' pink pajamers and smokin' a tailor-made cigarette. He had just took a hot bath and he had the look in his eyes I've seen come to tired women after Friar Tuck had got 'em to feelin that, after all, Heaven was for just such weary folks as they were.

He walked over, beamed down on me, slapped me on the shoulder, and sez: "Happy, old man, I was losin' my faith; and you wouldn't believe how it heartens me up to find out that life is still goin' along in a normal way in some part of the world."

Those pajamers he was wearin' were mighty ladylike raiment, low in the neck, and fastenin' off to the side with the kind o' gimcracks that brass-band actors wear, and if he hadn't softened me so with his beamin' eyes, I sure would have rawhided him considerable; but as it was, all I asked was if he had been wearin' that suit the night of the stampede, which he never suspicioned had been a fake, and all he did was to grin and throw a piller at me.

Jim found a couple o' padded saddles at a livery stable, and nothin' would do but I must take a ride with him. Well, horse-hair wasn't much more accustomed to bein' on a hoss's back 'n I was; so I didn't see any come-back to this and entered into it hearty — until I saw those saddles. They didn't have neither horn nor cantle, just a liver-pad with tin stirrups, and when I had mounted into mine, I felt as poorly dressed as Dooley Duffle was that time the boys stole his overalls and he had to ride home in his chaps. Jim had selected a pair o' bob-tailed trotters with action purty much like a section-gang drivin' down spikes and he rose between bumps with a flat-wheel motion that looked like a duck hastening homeward over slick ice. I drew the line at that.

Jim wasn't much of a rider when I'd put him on the drag, and at first he'd look indignant every time a cow 'd start out o' the herd and his pony 'd cut her back in again without givin' him notice. A cow-pony 'at can't whirl on a hat and then jump fifteen feet isn't worth knockin' on the head; but the process seems hasty to a man used to ridin' a circle every time he desired to turn around. I tried a dozen different ways, bit the only way I could fit that hoss was to discard the stirrups and ride clothespin fashion, leanin' back at a fierce angle with my legs stiff and forkin' past the brute's shoulders like the home-made yoke on a breechy milk-cow. If any of my friends had seen me, blood would sure have been shed.

After we had returned to the stable a couple o' hands came forth to take the beasts and I expressed myself without carin' who overheard me. The feller who had taken my road-bruiser sidled up alongside and when I paused for breath, he said: "What part o' the east are you from?"

"What makes you think I'm from the West are you from?"

was then wearin' any real Westerner would have wanted to know what part of the world I hailed from.

"Oh, I just guessed at it," sez he, "from some o' the things you said."

"Then I won't kill ya," sez I; "but if you had made your estimate on the way I look or the way I rode, why I reckon I'd have to plead temporary insanity at the trial."

"Any chance for a job out your way?" sez he.

"Ever do any ridin'?" sez I.

"I've exercised the hosses here at this stable," sez he.

"Did you ever exercise that camel that exercised me this afternoon?" sez I.

"Often," sez he.

"Do you sit down on the saddle or do you dance up and down in your stirrups like a popperful o' corn?" sez I.

"I ride a Western saddle, and try to sit down in it," sez he. "I've allus wanted to go out where it was really West, but never had a good chance."

"What do you want to go West for?" sez I in a discouragin' tone.

"I'm sick and sore on livin' in town," sez he. "I hate it. I want to get clear out in the open and never set eyes on a city again."

"You've got the same disease that I have," sez I; "so for all I know, you need the same cure. Now, you're sure that you have actually ridden that jig-saw that you're now holdin'?"

"Often," sez he.

"Then I think I can get ya a job. A feller who can ride that can ride anything that's got feet. Why, honest there isn't as much spring to the legs o' that brute as there is to the legs of a pool-table. I'll tell you later about that job."

The feller had somethin' in his eyes that reached clear into me, though I couldn't tell why, and his voice was one o' these middle-toned voices taht go either up or down as the occasion seems to demand. All in all, he had made a dent in my interest; so as soon as I was able to forgive Jim for lurin' me on that ride I sez to him: "Jim, the's a deservin' young feller in this town who ought to be looked after."

"What's he done?" sez Jim.

"That's a tol'able lengthy story, Jim," sez I; "but what he's doin' now is chambermaid work around here at the livery stable—and he's had about enough of it to do him for some time."

"How do you know he's deservin'?"

"'Cause he hates a city worse 'n I do," sez I

"Does he know anything about a ranch?"

"No," sez I. "He's about a ranch a good deal like I am about Heaven, short on experience but long on expectation."

"Well, you have to run the place," sez Jim, "so hire him if you want to."

"Jim," I sez, solemn as an elderly owl, "I haven't been able to sleep the last few nights for fear somethin' has gone wrong with the fellers we left at Dodge. The herds 'll be packin' in there by now, and from what I can hear, the officials at Dodge don't enter into the playfulness of the cow-punchers as freely as they might. For all we know, our outfit may be killed off and the stock taken for expenses by this time. You can stay here as long as you please, but those fellers are strangers to me, and I don't want to strain their moral natures too far. Just let me take this boy and go on back. I can be breakin' him in a little until you come along, and I can also be gettin' the rest of the fellers we'll need."

"I can't see anything to worry about," sez Jim. "I've had just as good luck trustin' strangers as old acquaintances, while I wouldn't trust some of my own relations if they were all the people left on earth to trust. The truth is, that you are so everlastin' homesick that your ears are droopin'; so we'll pack up to-morrow and go back together."

Was Troubled With Choking Spells and Shortness of Breath.

When the heart becomes affected, there ensues a feeling of a choking sensation, a shortness of breath, palpitation, throbbing, irregular beating, smothering sensation, and dizziness and a weak, sinking, all-gone feeling of oppression and anxiety.

Many men and women drag along with weary step, and become worn out and haggard, when otherwise they could be strong and healthy if they would only pay some attention to the first signs of heart or nerve trouble. On the first sign of the heart becoming weakened or the nerves unstring Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills should be given a fair trial and you will find that they will soon correct both these organs.

Mr. James Leard, Tryon, P.E.I., writes: "Just a few lines to let you know what Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills have done for me. I had choking spells, and was troubled with weakness of the heart and shortness of breath. I tried three doctors but they all failed. A neighbor recommended me to try your pills, so I got a box and they helped me so much I have taken six boxes. I highly recommend them to all who are troubled with their heart and nerves. I was not able to do any work for over two years; now I can do quite a bit."

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

IN THE WRONG STATE

Story of Moonshiners and Love in the Kentucky-Tennessee Mountains.

By HAROLD CARTER.

John Vincent, federal revenue officer acting in Kentucky, pulled in his mare and coolly surveyed the heights in front of him. On every side arose precipitous mountains, clothed with their perennial garb of spruce and pine. The trail, which wound sluggishly through the defile, disappeared into the heart of the forest, to reappear, a sinuous, winding ribbon, along the flank of the crest. There was no sign of human habitation in that rugged and abandoned land.

Yet somewhere on Bear mountain was the cabin of the Norman men, "moonshiners" and outlaws. And for the arrest of Jim Norman, the youngest, Vincent held a warrant. He had set forth to bring him into Kempville. Others had held warrants too; but Vincent, newly appointed to his post, was more reckless than they, and he had dared to ride alone into the heart of the Norman stronghold.

He reined in suddenly, for his quick eyes had caught a glimmering flash from the peak in front of him. It might have been the sun glancing on some hidden pool. But it looked more like light reflected from a rifle barrel.

After a moment's hesitation he urged his mare into a canter and plunged into the undergrowth. For the next half mile he was safe, until he emerged upon the mountain slopes. And when at last he came into the sunlight again he tethered his beast to a sapling and, drawing his revolver, began to ascend the peak cautiously, keeping out of the range of the hidden marksman of whose existence he was tolerably sure.

He crouched beside the trail, plunged into the scrub pine, emerging, lost again, until at length he saw the bare acclivity of Bear mountain in front of him. And near the summit was a small log cabin, set in the midst of a tiny patch of garden ground. This was the place of which he was in search.

His weapon in his hand, Vincent leaped forward, scaled the boulders on the summit, and appeared before the door. Upon the threshold, a rifle in his hands, stood a young man. His back was turned and he was attempting to eject a stuck cartridge.

"Hands up!" yelled Vincent.

The man started, stared at him for an instant, and then, with a sudden dash, leaped across the cabin, gained the rear entrance, and was away and running like a deer. Vincent followed him. He was certain that this was Jim Norman, whose appearance had been particularly impressed upon him by his superior officer when he started on his mission.

"Looks like his sister," he said. "You've seen that Norman girl down at the store? Her image! Don't go arresting the girl instead of him," he laughed.

Jim Norman had only recently returned from parts unknown, to resume his "moonshining" operations, which had been broken up by the authorities two years before. The rest of the gang was hiding somewhere across the Tennessee boundary. Jim alone had ventured back to his fastness on Bear mountain.

His revolver in his hand, the young officer followed the fugitive. But, though in the pink of condition, he could not lessen the distance between himself and the young mountaineer. His hope, however, was in his superior staying powers.

But just where the crest dipped down into the valley below the fugitive flung himself panting upon the ground, and, as Vincent ran forward, held up a hand and called:

"Stop! You can't come nearer!"

Vincent did stop, from sheer surprise. For this voice was a distinct and clear woman's voice and, as he looked he saw a strand of long, silken dark hair floating freely from below the old slouch hat.

"Miss Lily!" he gasped.

The girl sat up and laughed. "Yes, I'm Miss Lily," she said. "I reckon it's Jim you're after."

"Where is Jim?" he demanded savagely, standing over her. He had often seen her in Kempville, this dark-haired and blue-eyed mountain girl, of that perfection of type which flourishes, as in its native soil, in the Kentucky hills. The sight of her, flushed with her race, her eyes alight with triumph, set his heart furiously beating, and, mingled with this new emotion, was one of anger and shame at having been outwitted.

"Jim?" she drawled. "Oh, Jim was in the woodshed when you came up. I reckon you won't find him now, though. Jim's a swift runner. I reckon Jim's swifter than me, and you couldn't catch me," she mocked.

"Then—then—" he stammered.

"Now, Mr. Vincent," said the girl soothingly, "if it hadn't been for me you'd never have reached Bear mountain. Jim had a bead on you all along the trail. You've got me to thank for saving your life by this here change of parts."

"Well, I've got you, anyway," said Vincent sullenly.

"I reckon not," she drawled.

"Why not?"

"Because," she answered, "this is Tennessee, and I reckon your territory's Kentucky."

Vincent was dumbfounded. He had forgotten the warning, carefully conveyed, that the Norman cabin was designedly perched upon the border line, and that therefore he must take his captive within the cabin itself.

"You stop right where you are," said Lily. "If you lay a finger on me I'll tell the governor of Tennessee."

A light of amusement flickered in Vincent's eyes. Deliberately he stretched out his hand, found the cool, slender fingers of the girl, and held them.

"I guess the law doesn't say anything against amicable visiting between the states, does it?" he asked.

"Well," she admitted, "if you come that way, I—I guess it doesn't."

Vincent stepped forward and planted both feet firmly upon Tennessee soil.

"Nor about—this?" he asked.

And, placing his arm round her, he drew her to him and kissed her upon the lips.

"Lily," he said, "this isn't love at first sight, for I've loved you since I first saw you in Kempville. But it comes mighty near, and if I can't get Jim—why, I reckon I'm going to get you some day."

WOMAN'S WIT TRAPS A MAN

Following the finding of a five-week-old baby boy in Elizabeth, N.J., Monday night, John F. Fitzsimmons, of 74 Pesbine avenue, Newark, was arrested on a charge of abandoning the infant.

Fitzsimmons' undoing was due to Mrs. William Pitman, 98 College Place, Newark, who had been taking care of the baby for about three weeks. He had called at the Pitman home early Monday night and said he was going to take the child to its mother in Jersey City. Mrs. Pitman wrote a note and pinned it under the child's clothing. It read:

If anything happens to this child, notify Mrs. William Pitman, 98 College Place, Newark, N.J.

When the child was found in a hammock on the front porch of a house in Clover street, Elizabeth, the note was discovered. Fitzsimmons was found in a factory in which he was working. The mother of the child is said to be working in a restaurant in Manhattan. Fitzsimmons had been paying Mrs. Pitman $2 a week for the care of the child.

CHRONICLE OF THE SINNER

Being the Story of a Man Mean Enough to Deceive Even His Trusting Wife.

At two o'clock in the morning William Wilberforce succeeded after many efforts in getting his key to serve the purpose for which it had been made. Then he stumbled into the hall and fell over an upturned corner of a rug. This awakened Mrs. Wilberforce, who switched on the electric light.

When she got downstairs her husband was sitting up and staring vacantly at a beautiful picture of Queen Louise of Prussia.

"Why, William!" exclaimed his wife, "what has happened? Where are your glasses? How did you get that cut on your nose? Why are your clothes all covered with mud?"

Mr. Wilberforce put his hands up to his face and sobbed.

"Dearest," Mrs. Wilberforce cried, kneeling beside him, "tell me what is the matter."

"I can't 'm dear," he replied, "it was awful! Horrible!"

"O, William! Is it possible that you have been—"

"No, no, it ain't possible," he interrupted. "Wash assaulted by robberesh. Tha'sh wha' happened."

"Darling! Are you badly hurt? Did they rob you of everything?"

"No, 'm only stunned, that's all—only stunned. I licked 'm both. They didn't get my watch, 'n' they didn' get my money. I'm all ri'—jush stunned, thash all.

"Shan't I phone for the doctor, dear?"

"No, 'm all ri'. Jush a little stunned—tha'sh all."

Then, believing him, she helped him upstairs and assisted him to get into bed.

Yet there are those who refuse to admit that simple faith is better than Norman blood.—Chicago Record Herald.

Again.

"At last, Henry, the question of votes for women is to be submitted to the people."

"So I see."

"Henry, you will admit that women are as intelligent as the men?"

"Freely I admit that."

"And that as women pay taxes, they ought to have a say as to how their money is to be spent."

"That seems reasonable. But let us discuss the question. I care the county we have, don't I?"

"Yes."

"But do I have any voice in how that money is to be spent?"

A few minutes later he put on his hat and coat and left the house, regretting that he had given that twist to the argument.—Detroit Free Press.

Watch on His Wrist Saved His Life

Toronto Soldier's Vivid Story of the Battle of Langemarch

TORONTO, May 18.—An exceptionally vivid story of the 3rd battalion's part in the Battle of Langemarck is told by Pte. Edgar Fetherstonhaugh, of the machine gun section, in a letter to his father, written from a military hospital in Oxford, England. Pte. Fetherstonhaugh was wounded in the wrist. The bullet struck a wrist watch presented to him by his grandmother just before his departure, and was deflected. Otherwise, as he himself points out, he might have been killed.

After stating that he was feeling fit except for his wound and was getting the best of treatment, Pte. Fetherstonhaugh writes:

"On Thursday about 6 p.m. the Germans opened fire on the French and French-Algerians with poisonous gas bombs. Of course, they had to retire, and about 7 they were tearing past us (3 1-2 miles from their position) in one's, two's and any other way, with no rifles or equipment. The peasants were all rushing away with bundles.

A Daring German.

"A very daring Geruan airdlan flew over from behind our lines and dropped 'artillery direction lights.' He deserves a million Iron Crosses, as he was heavily shelled, but kept on and turned straight up the French line giving signals.

"The enemy's long-range guns opened up at once, and even got troops coming up the main road from Poperinghe to Ypres.

"A motorcyclist came with orders to 'stand to.' At 9 we moved off. About 12 we took cover (just the machine gun), in a ditch at the side of the road. The Germans were shelling a British howitzer battery just behind us. Our officer, Ross Binkley — the Argo Rugby star — Deric Broughall and Ed. Bickerstac, were killed, and Don Hammond, who is the only one now with me, was wounded through the chest and arm.

"This was too hot, so we pushed on about 100 yards, and ran into D company which had lost considerably. We pushed on about 200 yards farther and dug ourselves in with our entrenching tools in a ploughed field, just at a cross road. We were now in good range, but not on the firing line. Everyone behaved splendidly.

"At 1.30 a.m. Friday the sun came up on a cloudless sky—that is, cloudless except for puffs of artillery smoke. The fighting had been continuous all night, but we were out of it. Considerable gain had been made, and the English regiments were pouring in to our rescue. Every unit of our division was in the fight already.

"The Buffs opened out on our left and started an advance; their losses were frightfully heavy, as it was level ground and ploughed field all the way. At 5.30 'D' Company moved, as the Third was about to go into action. Captain Ryerson was killed as he stepped from the trench.

"An hour later we were ordered to join them. I was the first hit, after going about a third of a mile, Captain Mason, of the Signallers, helped me to bind the wrist, and before moving I watched the detachment.

Too Hot For Comfort.

"About 500 yards from me the shrapnel started into them and I saw three or four go over. This was too much, and I started off for the Village of St. Jean, about one mile off, keeping to the lowest ground. Melinite, a high explosive, was bursting there, evidently in search of a British battery which had been there the night before. The place is very small, and was battered to pieces. The dressing station was hit at the rear, but no one was hurt. The doctor 'phoned for no motor ambulances to come, but one daring fellow came about 11.30. Four of the stretcher pataients were hustled in and I was put out with the driver.

"It was some drive to Vlamertinghe Stationary Clearing Hospital. Every minute we expected to be hit, particularly as we passed through the outskirts of Ypres. I could write a page about that ride."

Concluding, Pte. Featherstonhaugh says: "I consider a field ambulance stretcher bearer the bravest of all men. They were shot deliberately in dozens, and yet kept taking the chance to get wounded men out."

Meat Markets Continue Very Strong This Week

Live Hogs Advanced to 9 Cents a Pound---Cheese Brings Big Figure on Peterboro' Market---Eggs Have Declined Slightly.

MARKET FEATURES.

Cheese—Very firm.
Live hogs—Advanced to 9c.
Meat—Very firm.
Eggs—Weaker.

The past week has not experienced as many changes as those reported in the previous week, but there have been some interesting variations. The dairy and meat markets continue to hold the limelight in the operations around Peterborough. Last Saturday dairy butter sold firmly at 30c, an increase of two cents over the previous market. Wednesday cheese sold on the local board at 18⅜c, the highest price ever received for cheese by Peterborough factory patrons. At the same time the local price of hogs reached a flat nine cents, and good beef cattle are bringing 8½c. In fact anything in these lines points to strong markets just now, although it is impossible to form any idea of how long the present quotations will hold.

The Dairy Market.

"Them that eats cheese will have to pay for it," remarked a salesman on Wednesday, after the meeting of the Peterborough Board, which he had received the abnormally high price of 18¾c. The farmers assert that cheese is just beginning to reach its proper price level as a food. On the basis of nourishment they state that it has been altogether too low, when compared with meat and other foods. The salesman is willing to admit that possibly cheese has been a little under a fair price, but, say these gentlemen, we do not make the prices. They are made by the supply and demand in the big markets. However, they also declare that the present quotations are too high. An advance of 4 or 5c a pound over winter they say is too high. According to them the trade is in the air, and for the time being it is bringing the farmer an unexpected profit. The new prices have been created by the demands of the British army ration, which includes cheese as an old standby. In additionn there is the curtailed sources of supply. For example, Holland and other European countries have been cut off by recent orders from the Admiralty.

Butter is fairly firm in the fact of teh new spring milk flow. Cheesemakers state that the number of patrons has not materially increased. In other words the ranks of the buttermakers have not suffered serious losses, but the farmers are without the cattle which would enable them to furnish more milk for butter and cheese.

Eggs are noticeably weaker, following the reports that the cold sorage houses were bulging already. Locally the price followed the reports from Toronto and Montreal, and farmers were offered prices showing a reduction under the previous week.

Meats and Hogs.

Imagine paying 35c for choice porterhouse steaks. That's the price if you want them and sorloin round cuts are correspondingly high. A prominent butcher told the Examiner this week that the British Government had practically bought up every cow in Canada. He was commenting upon the reported £10,000,000 order from Britain to United States and Canadian meat packing firms and remarked the Australian mutton supply had also been bought up. His information was that the British authorities had secured all visible meat supplies in this country, and on that account there was only one direction at present for prices to travel. Several weeks ago when the first recent advances in this market were made it was believed that they would continue only for a couple of months, but since then conditions do not appear quite so rosy. In fact there is no one in these parts who will offer a guess at what will be the next movement, and how long the present trend will continue. And as for hogs it can only be remarked that the price has advanced another fifteen cents, making an unbroken succession of increases during the past three weeks or more. All of which suggests the idea that the farmer with cattle and hogs to sell has a valuable asset just now.

STRONG POSITIONS STILL BAR THE ALLIES' WAY TO DARDANELLES

out yesterday by the Official Information Bureau:

"The following has been received from the Mediterranean force:

"General Cox's brigade repulsed with heavy loss an attack on his position made on May 12. The following day a double company of Gurkhas advanced over half a mile. The ground thus won was consilidated during the night in spite of very strong counter-attacks.

"On May 16 the Lancashire territorial devision made considerable progress during the night, and on the following night advanced further. The same day our howitzer battery, with the aid of aeroplanes, blew up the ammunition waggons of the Turkish heavy howitzers, and later made a direct hit on one of the guns in front of the Australian and New Zealand army corps. The enemy trenches and a new gun emplacement were demolished by howitzer fire.

"Every day sees an improvement in the Anglo-French position. The enemy are reported as having lost very heavily."

A telegram from Salonika says the Germans have lost 43 officers and 600 men in fighting at the Dardanelles during the last six days. In the vicinity of Constantinople trains have been stopped owing to the shortage of coal. No food supplies are reaching the city, and distress is increasing.

A Simple Way To Remove Dandruff

There is one sure way that has never failed to remove dandruff at once, and that is to dissolve it, then you destroy it entirely. To do this, just get about four ounces of plain, common liquid arvon from any drug store (this is all you will need), apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the finger tips.

By morning, most of if not all, of your dandruff will be gone, and three or four more applications will completely dissolve and entirely destroy every single sign and trace of it, no matter how much dandruff you may have.

You will find all itching and digging of the scalp will stop instantly, and your hair will be fluffy, lustrous, glossy, silky and soft, and look and feel a hundred times better.

HOW S.S. CAPRIVI WENT DOWN

BELFAST, May 15.—Third officer Sjilberg, of the Norwegian steamer Caprivi, mined off Tory Island, who claims he was a diver who, in 1912, recovered 122 bodies of the crew of the United States warship Maine, which he helped to raise from the bed of Havana Harbour, was interviewed before leaving Londonderry for Glasgow.

Sjilberg states that when the steamer struck the mine the captain was on the bridge, "and I was standing on deck just outside the galley door when, without the slightest warning, there was a terrific and deafening explosion. The covers of No. 1 hatch, and the loose gear on deck, were blown into the air, to the height of the topmast, and the fragments of wood and iron descended in a shower on the deck and all around. A mighty shiver shook the ship's frame from stem to stern. She staggered in her course as an animal dealt a mortal blow, and I felt as if my last hour had come. Captain Evanson promptly gave orders to have the ship's boats swung out and lowered. In 15 minutes three boats left the ship in charge, respectively, of the captain, Second Officer Aminston and myself.

WAITING FOR THE END.

We pulled off to the distance of a cable's length and lay on our oars waiting for the end. Before leaving the ship I had fastened up the cord of the steam whistle so that the syren kept continuously sounding, hoping thus to attract the attention of some passing vessel, as the fog was so thick that the ship was invisible at a distance of two cables' length. The mine had evidently plowed underneath the forehold, as it quickly filled and the vessel began to settle down by the head. The bulkhead between Nos. 1 and 2 holds held out for a considerable time, but at last the pressure of water caused it to give way, and the water entered No. 2 hold through the ruptured bulkhead. The water reached the base of the funnel, and she settled head first by the bow, half of the vessel projecting vertically in the air. Then a strange thing happened. As if making a last desperate effort to escape the fate in store for her, the vessel sprung upwards again, and settled on the water almost on an even keel, but the next moment she plunged forward and downwards, and with one last weird scream of the syren, as of a living thing in mortal agony, she disappeared from view beneath the water, just four hours after the explosion occurred. We lost practically all our belongings.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

SMART FROCK WITH BLOOMERS.

By Anabel Worthington.

For good style as well as usefulness it would be hard to improve on this little frock. The design is exceedingly simple, plain back and merely an inset piece in the front, round collar, and long or short one-piece sleeves. The short sleeve has a pretty turnback cuff, the long sleeve a wristband. The bloomers are cut slightly circular so as to do away with gathers at the waist line. They are not essential to the dress by any means, but most mothers consider them a very valuable adjunct, and certainly they add to the usefulness of this already practical design. They should be made of the dress material and finished with elastic at the knee.

In the six or eight year size this model could be turned out for something like fifty cents, with the belt and collar and cuffs made of the same material, and the material some twelve or fifteen cent variety. Six year size requires 3½ yards of 36 inch material. The pattern, No. 7,123, can be obtained in sizes from four to ten years.

When ordering remember, to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25c.

"Canadians Are the Best Offensive Material Yet" is Tribute Paid Dominion Boys

PARIS, April 30.—"I have just heard—not in any roundabout fashion, but straight from the person to whom it was said—one of the greatest tributes yet been paid to the valor of the Canadian soldier," says a correspondent writing to the Montreal Star. The praise is trebled in value because it came from the lips of a man who knows and never flatters, the commander-in-chief of the British Expeditionary Force, Gen. Sir John French said to my informant:

The Canadians are the finest offensive material I have got."

That the non-commissioned officers and men share their chief's opinion is shown by such statements as that of Sergt. Major Robinson's, of the 1st York and Lancaster Regiment, who said:

"If the Canadians had not held on the Germans might have been masters of Ypres. They held on to a position that was really untenable. Ke know that if any men could hold out the Canadians would. And they did."

Well Known in Paris.

Among the heavy list of casualties which is the price of such magnificent conduct, are names well known in Paris. Capt. Guy Drummond spent a winter here not long ago, studying at the Sorbonne and fitting himself for the political career where he seemed destined to render such services to his country.

News also has been received of Major H. Barre, of the 14th Battalion, 1st Canadian Contingent, who was wounded in the hip, April 24th, north of Ypres. He has been sent to Weymouth House Hospital, London.

Remedy for Gases.

Special commissions in Paris as well as in London, are studying the composition as well as the means of preventing the noxious results of the asphyxiating gas employed by the Germans at Hill 60. The Liberte quotes M. Turpin, the famous chemist and inventor, as saying:

"The gas is either bromine or peroxyde azote. The latter in small quantities in the air is a beneficial stimulant, a true appetiser and a remedy for anaemia, but when dense, it is a very dangerous poison combining with water to make azotic acid.

"As a remedy against bromine and azote I see no other than alkalines. If the troops who find themselves at spots invaded by these gases have have at their disposal liquid ammonia, it would be sufficient for them to squirt large quantities on the ground to obtain a doubly excellent result of diminishing the tonic effect of the gas and absorbing it.

"Ammonia being a gas, it will immediately combine with the noxious gas, and though the resultant will be more dense, it will be perfectly harmless.

For gases inhaled or swallowed the remedy is either bicarbonate of soda or the inhalation of a certain amount of ammonia. A sufficient protection against these gases, if not too dense, is for each soldier to be furnished with a small bottle of ammonia."

An official report sent to the Belgian Government states that the asphyxiating gases used by the Germans in the battle of the Ypres, seem to be of several kinds; chlorine, fumes of formol, nitrous fumes and sulphurous anhydride and some other gases not as yet determined.

German prisoners have admitted that these gases had been prepared for some weeks. The enemy had a large number of carboys in readiness and operators had already been appointed, who were provided with appliances to prevent asphyxiation. All the troops along the front had also been provided with respirators.

French Workmen.

In view of the difficulty in England, over the factory output, the attitude of the French miners is noteworthy and might well be imitated by their British comrades. The first of May has always been the French labour holiday. On that day there is a general cessation of work—a universal strike, so speak—and though of late years the words of the social agitators have ceased to make the representatives of law and order quake in their shoes on that date, I can remember when the Arc de Triomphe used to be filled with pickets of mounted police in anticipation of a riot, and timid people kept away from the opera lest that haunt of capitalism should be blown up by a bomb.

From Carmaux, one of the mining districts, comes the following resolution taken by the miners, which will show a new spirit which is animating France and raising her above the strife and jealousies of the past At a general meeting, the syndicate of miners of Camaux signed this resolution:

"We have decided not to fete the first of May this year and not to leave off work on this occasion. In taking this decision the syndicate wishes to prove that at the present time in the great crisis which France is going through, the working miners united in the same spirit of patriotism, do not wish to suspend even for a single day the mining of coal so useful for the national defence. It also makes a pressing appeal to all its comrades so that no one will be lacking at the mines. In making the sacrifice of our labour holiday, we only do the same duty as our brothers at the front, who take no holiday and fight without ceasing night and day for the defence of their country and the liberation of its territory."

New, Positive Treatment To Remove Hair or Fuzz

(Beauty Notes)

Women are fast learning the value of the use of delatone for removing hair or fuzz from face, neck or arms. A paste is made with some powdered delatone and water and spread on the hairy surface. In 2 or 3 minutes it is rubbed off, the skin washed and every bit of hair has disappeared. No failure will result if you are careful to buy genuine delatone.

Little Pickaninny Used to Pay Debt

WAYNESBORO, GA., May 18.—For the first time in the history of the State a pickaninny has been used here as currency. A Burke county negro who owned a bill to Dr. J. M. Byne called to tell why he couldn't pay it. He had with him the woolly headed boy.

"Can't you pay it anyhow?" asked the doctor.

"Naw, sir."

"Suppose you leave the boy," merrily suggested the doctor.

"Dat debt am settled," said the negro. He placed the child in a chair near the physician's desk and was gone. He hasn't been seen since.

A negro woman on the plantation owned by the doctor is raising the child for a yearly fee.

Canada Has a New Meaning For Londoners Since Langemarck and Ypres

LONDON, May 18.—It is embarrassing these days to walk along any London street with the magic letters "CANADA" on your shoulder strap.

I stood one morning for five minutes in Victoria Street watching some happy Canadian khaki-clad boys up for the day from Shorncliffe, and making their way to the Canadian Government Office. Everyone turned to look at and after them as they passed, just as the man in the street turns when a Minister hurries along Downing Street to one of the Government offices.

Ypres and Langemarck have given new meaning to the word "Canada" for the stay-at-home Englishman. The Canadian khaki-clad boys of whom I have spoken happened to pass a group of navvies laying new telephone pipes, and I heard one swarthy digger resting on his pick-axe say to another:

"Aye, good stuff those Canady lads, stick at nothing, they do; bit too much for the Kayser's lot, they are."

"This London view is all the more noteworthy because it contrasts with the impression made in the early days of the Salisbury Plain encampment—an encampment with discomforts which, as Sir Max Aitken put it in his first "Eye-Witness" story, were "never resented, but always disliked."

A Canadian writing in the London press, noting this contrast, says it must now be admitted that in the beginning of things there was "too much expected of the Canadians." He continues: "The wave of gratitude and congratulation which swept England at Canada's so-called generosity left all matters Canadian tinged with a roseate hue of perfection. The soldiers were regarded as efficient and ready for the fray. It was not understood that a large number of men were recruited after the offer of the troops was made, and that of those who had been in the militia very few had seen active selvice, and the majority were practically untrained according to present war standards. Under the circumstances it is not surprising that some disappointment was manifested when the troops became known."

DISCIPLINE THAT COUNTS.

It is, however, the eternal question of discipline that always comes up when one discusses this question of Canadian troops with an Englishman. He cannot understand why a Canadian private should pass an officer without the salute which no English soldier would dream of omitting. This Canadian writer in the press says:

"It would be idle to pretend that the discipline of the Canadians ever was or is as strict as that of British regulars. The atmosphere in which the men were raised, their class, the length of their service, all forbid that."

But the best and most satisfying word on this subject of discipline comes this week from an Ontario officer invalided from the front. He says:

"The men in my battalion are a fine lot. There is a bond of good-fellowship between officers and men, and the men are encouraged to make suggestions, and I must say that they are mostly right. While there is more familiarity between officers and men among the Canadians than there is in the British army, I do not think discipline really suffers." And he adds:

"As an old soldier myself I cannot help seeing how quickly the Canadians adapt themselves to circumstances. For instance, when we first went into trenches, the men had been there but a very short time before they had drained and boarded up the trenches, which were filled up with mud and slush, and had built dug-outs. The Canadian artillery has been doing magnificent work, and has been repeatedly complimented. Indeed, Canadian troops generally cannot complain of want of appreciation. More than once they have been congratulated by Generals, and Gen. Alderson has expressed great admiration of their work, and confidence in them. The men are eager to go forward."

Before leaving this question of saluting, let me recall a little incident in Parliament Street the other day. A Canadian private may set no need to salute officers—he has not yet realised that it is to the King's commission that the salute is given—but the Canadian officer does set store on the salute as a mark of proud recognition. An ill-dressed English Tommy was limping along with the aid of a stick, and one arm was in a sling. A Canadian officer marched smartly by. No doubt the English Tommy would have saluted if he could, but his wounds forbade. Instead of giving the salute, he received it, an it was no slick-of-the stick sort of salute that the Canadian officer gave, but a really magnificent sweep of the saluting hand.

TAX CANADIAN DIVIDENDS.

Canadian bankers must expect a considerable lessening of their English deposit accounts. The enormous war expenditure of the moment is causing Mr. Lloyd George's officials to look round eagerly for every possible pound of taxes, and they are coming down with all their sharpness upon English money invested outside the United Kingdom.

Under the Finance Act of last year they can collect income tax (which is now as much as 2s 6d in the £) upon income, whether received in the United Kingdom or not, so that in future there is no advantage to be gained by opening accounts in a Canadian bank and having Canadian dividends paid in there instead of bringing them to the United Kingdom.

Under a recent decision, the Treasury is now able to treat the greater part of this distribution of assets as income, and income tax for a back period of three years is being collected from English shareholders. And now, under the Finance Act of 1914, this income tax must be paid for the current and all subsequent years, even though the money is kept in Canada for investment there.

Hair And the Marriage Market

Too many men have been unpleasantly surprised to find that their wife's hair which they had so greatly admired was only a switch or transformation. We now know that poor hair is a confession of either laziness or lack of knowledge and that fair care with sensible means will insure scalp health and hair beauty. In washing the hair it is not advisable to use a makeshift, but always use a preparation made for shampooing only. You can enjoy the best that is known for about three cents a shampoo by getting a package of canthrox from your druggist; dissolve a teaspoonful in a cup of hot water and your shampoo is ready. After its use the hair dries rapidly with uniform colour. Dandruff, excess oil and dirt are dissolved and entirely disappear. Your hair will be so fluffy that it will look much heavier than it is. Its lustre and softness will also delight you, while the stimulated scalp gains the health which insures hair growth.

The Gold Professional (giving a lesson): "You know, sir, you lift your elbow too much to play golf properly." The New Member: "How dare you! I'll report you to the committee! I'm a life-long teetotaller!"

Man Sought Refuge In a Tree

Wounded in Fight Fells Orderly, Leaps From Window and Hides Over Night

NEW YORK, May 18—Surgeons in the Orange Memorial Hospital at Orange, N.J., were sharpening their knives and saws at one o'clock yesterday morning, preparatory to performing an operation on John Holinko, of Rockaway, N.J., who had been injured in a fight, when Holinke called for a drink of water. John Corbey, an orderly, carried the water to the patient in a granite ware dipper.

When Holinko had drunk the water he seized the dipper and, with a blow, knocked Corbey senseless. Then, clad only in a short nightshirt, Holinko jumped through a second story window and before the surgeons and attendants could reach the yard he had clambered into a high elm tree.

The police of Orange, West Orange and East Orange and the hospital attendants searched all the rest of the night for Holinko. The homes of his friends were searched and a watch was kept on trolley cars and trains. But no trace of a wounded man in a short nightshirt was found until yesterday afternoon, when a family living at No. 21 Joy Street, West Orange, reported to the police that such a man had appealed to them for shelter at four o'clock in the morning. He said he had been beaten and robbers had taken even his clothes.

He was put to bed by the family, and was still asleep when policemen went to get him. They had little difficulty in inducing him to return to the hospital. The operation will be performed to-day. He told of hiding in the tree until the searchers had disappeared.

DREAMED OF THE GREAT TRAGEDY

COLUMBUS, O., May 18. — Leah MacEachen, a trained nurse and a sister-in-law of Edward L. Barchard, of this city, who was on the Lusitania had a strange premonition of the Lusitania disaster in a rather disconnected but vivid and troublesome dream the night before the tragedy.

"I am not superstitious and never believed in dreams," Miss MacEachen said when she was informed that the Lusitania had been torpedoed and sunk, "but last night I had a terribly vivid dream in which I saw the Lusitania blown up. I remember even now the terrific crash of the explosion which came to me in the dream. Then for a space of time I don't remember what the dream was, but I do recall that suddenly in the midst of a strange light I saw my brother-in-law. He was fully clad and was smiling. 'Well, they got me,' he said. The next instant I was fully awake and trembling. I could scarcely believe it was a dream, for it appeared so real.

"My sister was greatly worried because of her husband's determination to sail on the Lusitania, and I did not mention the dream to her through fear of increasing her anxiety. I cannot account for the dream unless it was induced by talking of his trip and the possibility of the vessel being attacked. We pleaded with Mr. Barchard not to make the trip because of the danger but he only laughed at our fears and said he did not believe the Germans would attempt to sink any passenger boats."

Mr. Barchard, an Englishman by birth, was 38 years old, and spent many years of his life in mining engineering. He worked for several years with an English firm in South Africa and has spent a number of years in work of the same nature in Mexico. Last October he lost a large amount of money when his mine near Mexico City was destroyed during revolutionary riots. He came to Columbus during the latter part of October and has been staying with his father-in-law He married Miss MacEachen in Mexico, where she was also at work at the time

Italy's Declaration Of War May Come At Any Moment

Amid Great Enthusiasm Italian Parliament This Afternoon Voted Full Power to Premier Salandras' War Cabinet To Act---Officially Stated That Triple Alliance Treaty Was Denounced as Void on May 4th

NEWS WAS CHEERED BY HUGE CROWDS

ROME, May 20.—Amid great enthusiasm, Parliament this afternoon practically unanimously voted full power to Premier Salandra's war cabinet to act immediately in the dispute with Austria. The news was immediately flashed to the great crowd awaiting the deputies' decision, anr massed about the chambers. Roars of cheers sounded throughout the city and the message went rushing on to the Italian frontier towns. Everywhere the people greeted the Parliamenta's action as a certain forerunner of war, The government measure was introduced shortly after parliament went into session. With scarcely any debate it was hurried to a vote Italy charges Austria with responsibility for starting the world's greatest war. Another summary of the Italian green book was made public to-day, just before parliament convened to approve the government's war program. It charges that Austria broke faith with Italy when she sent the ultimatum to Serbia that tumbled Austria into war. Austria's action disturbed the whole Balkan states to the detrimen of Italy, says the statement. "This infringement of the Triple Alliance agreement convinced Italy that she has the right to resume full liberty of action," said the summary; "and on May 4th she denounced the Triple Alliance as void."

THE CABINET CRISIS

LONDON, May 20.—The cabinet crisis, according to the usually well informed correspondent of the Daily News, was precipitated by Lord Kitchener's failure to keep the ministry informed regarding the supplies of ammunition sent to the front. Huge supplies of shells had been sent, but the proportion of shrapnel is reported to have been greater than that of high explosives. Opposition leaders who were in possesion of these facts, says the Daily News, threatened a debate in the House of Commons to prove their accuracy. Such a debate would have undermined gravely the authority of the Government.

900 AUSTRALIAN CASUALTIES

LONDON, May 20.—The British casualty list issued to-day includes the names of 170 officers and 1400 men. Nine hundred casualties in the Australian ranks in the Gallipoli Peninsula are reported as well as naval losses of 150 in the same area. The list of wounded is headed by the name of General Sir William Birdwood, the commander in chief of the Australian forces in the Dardanelles.

TAX RETURNS DISAPPOINTING

OTTAWA, May 20.—The first returns from the new war taxes imposed by Hon. W. T. White, last session are disappointing. Despite the fact that the tariffs had been increased 7 1-2 per cent on general and 5 per cent. on the preferential, there is a decrease of upwards of half a million in customs revenue for April as compared with the corresponding month last year. As it was to the tariff that Hon. Mr. White looked for the greater part of the amount necessary to make up the deficit of thirty millions for the coming year this feature of the new taxation is to say the least disappointing.

From present indications new sources of revenue will have to be resorted to if the government intends to continue its present scale of ordinary expenditure.

LONDON, May 20.—Kuepferle, the alleged German spy who committed suicide, the British authorities charged gave to the German admiralty information about the location of British warships, by interlining letters with invisible ink. The authorities said he was unable to prove he was a naturalized American. When the court reconvened in the Old Bailey to-day, four warders flanked the empty dock, while the crowd waited expectantly for the arrival of the prisoner. The Attorney General then addressed the Lord Chief Justice, dramatically announcing that Kuepferle had committed suicide. "The prisoner occupied a special cell under practically continuous observation," said the Attorney General, "but during a brief interval he seized the opportunity to end his life."

Kuepferle left a note, addressed "To whom it may concern." "I am a soldier, with a rank I don't desire to state," he wrote. "I have had a fair trial, but I am unable to stand the strain any longer, so I take the law into my own hands. Death is my only saviour. I would have preferred to be shot. I don't wish to ascend the scaffold." A masonic sign was interposed here and Kuepferle continued—"I hope the Grand Architect of the universe will lead me to the unknown land in the east. I'm not dying as a spy but as a soldier, who stood his fate as a man. I can't be a lier or a perjurer. What I have done was for my country." It is understood that Kuepferle testified in his own behalf at yesterday's session.

ITALY'S WAR PLANS

ROME, May 20.—Italy's expected entrance into the war will result in a general readjustment of the allies' plans of attack against Germany and Austria, it was stated authoritatively to-day.

The recent tour of General Paul Pau, France's one armed hero, resulted in a perfect understanding as to the part Italy will play in the war. Pau conferred with the Russian Grand Duke Nicholas, with the Serbian military leaders, and finally with General Cadorna, chief of staff of the Italian army. An entirely new marshalling of the forces against the Austro-Germans is said to have been planned.

MILITARY OPERATIONS IMPOSSIBLE

PARIS, May 20.—Heavy rains have converted the trench country in northern France and Flanders into a sea of mud and rendered military operations out of the qeustion. The war office announced this afternoon that because of this fact "there is nothing new to report."

PTE. C. H MULLIN, son of Mrs. Geo. Grant, 1033 Water Street, officially reported missing. He formerly lived here, but enlisted in Messe Jaw. He was a member of the 5th Battalion.

AN OFFICIAL DENIAL

Mr. Gordon, when asked to-day if the Liberal Association had anything to do with the meeting said by the Review to have been called on the Market Square, under the auspices of the Liberals, said, as Secretary of the Liberal Association, that "he had no knowledge of it, but thought it was a little "guff" from the Review. As the Review is now under a new management, and after the hot weather we had in April, we are likely to expect almost anything from that great family journal."

THE WEATHER

The weather still keeps quite cool, and the freezing point is approached almost nightly. Last night the thermometer went down to 33 degrees.

Messrs. Henderson and Company's monthly circular issued from Colombo, Ceylon, states: "A feature of the market was the record prices paid for flavory teas. The oldest members of the tea trade in Ceylon could not remember such high prices being realised before." The Salada Tea Company have determined that no matter to what price tea goes, the public will get exactly the same quality in their packets. They will, of course, be compelled to charge the enhanced prices that take fetch, but they will keep to their standard of quality.

PTE. CHALMER HAS FALLEN

Former Member of Local Bank Staff Who Left With 57th Unit Killed While Fighting With Princess Pats

DETERMINED TO GO

Word has been received in Peterborough of the death at the front of another member of the 57th detachment which left here last August, in the person of Pte. Thos. Chalmers, former accountant and teller of the local branch of the Bank of Nova Scotia. Pte. Chalmers, who came originally from Ayr, Scotland, had been a resident of Peterborough for eight or nine months before war broke up, and his position in the Bank of Nova Scotia had brought him into tolch with very many local people, with whom he was very popular.

When the call for volunteers came, Pte. Chalmers enlisted in No. 3 company of the 57th Regt, in which company Lieut. Tomlins, local manager Bank of Nova Scotia is a subaltern, and left with the detachment under Lt.-Col. Clegg and Major Bennett for Valcartier. Then when the final medical examination was made after some days of training, there was a surprise in store for Pte. Chalmers, inasmuch as he was rejected by the examiners on account of slightly defective eyesight. He was sent home with several other members of the 57th but on the way back from Valcartier he decided to try some other way of getting to the front and was determined to go. Instead of coming to Peterborough he went on through to Toronto, in the hope of getting on there. It happened that an officer from a Nova Scotia unit was in Toronto picking up recruits for his regiment and young Chalmers applied and was accepted. He crossed to England with the Nova Scotians. Then at Salisbury Plain the call came to reinforce the Princess Patricias and still keen to get on the firing line, Pte. Chalmers was one of the first to offer himself, and off to the battlefield of France he went with the crack Canadian regiment. Now comes the sad news that he has been killed in action while fighting with the Pats.

Pte. Chalmers had a brother in the first Canadian contingent who was wounded at Langemarck. Their mother at home in Scotland was prostrated when she heard that one son was killed and the other wounded.

Pte. Chalmers' many friends in Peterborough will learn with deep sorrow that he has fallen.

Indian Motorcycle Delivery

Initiative, perseverance, and all other attributes of business, are but secondary to the attribute of prompt service. Even in these days of economy and high cost of living, who does not appreciate the store with efficient service? Warne Bros., Druggists, have just introduced on the streets, a unique and speedy outfit, consisting of an "Indian" Motor Cycle parcel delivery, for the conveyance of their goods throughout the city. The motor-cycle has a handy parcel car attached at the side, which is both waterproof and dustproof. It is quite a speedy outfit of 15 horse-power, two speed. It is attractively painted in carmine with gilt lettering.

CADETS ARE INSPECTED

The Local Collegiate Battalion Won Warm Praise From the Inspecting Officer, Major Gillespie For Their Fine Work

NO. 4 AWARDED CUP

The annual inspection of the Cadet Battalion of the Peterborough Collegiate Institute on the Central Park ground yesterday was a great success, reflecting the utmost credit upon Mr. C. E. Jamieson, the Cadet instructor, and upon the officers and members of the Cadets themselves. The company and battalion drill was carried out with a soldierly smartness and steadiness that compared most favourably with units of active militia, and the inspecting officer, Major G. H. Gillespie of Kingston, was warm in his praises of the work of the Cadets.

The battalion as mustered for inspection turned out four companies strong and with a splendid bugle band and well drilled signal corps. All the units were closely inspected by Major Gillespie. The march past by the battalion was a feature of the afternoon's work. The four companies swung by in perfect alignment and their marching was most creditable Following this event, each company was drilled in turn, all making a good showing.

A realistic attack by three companies, with the fourth in reserve, following the first line into action as the signallers wig-wagged the messages to the rear. Finally as McDonnel Street was reached the command "charge" was given and the companies jumped to their feet with a loud cheer, and swarming over the road, achieved a bloodless but brilliant capture of the houses on the north side of McDonnel Street.

The cup for the most efficient company donated by Capt. W. H. Cluxton, formerly of the 57th Regiment, was won by No. 4 Comapny, composed of the smallest boys in the battalion under command of Capt. Wilford Adams.

In addressing the battalion Major Gillespie said that when he inspected the local Cadets last year he had been satisfied that they were one of the smartest and best drilled cadet battalion in the division. Since last year their improvement had been so pronounced that they compared most favourably with battalions in larger cities. "And I am not speaking of Cadet battalions now," remarked Major Gillespie. The inspector congratulated the officers and members of the battalion upon their showing. Doubtless the larger boys would join the active militia and prepare themselves for service overseas. "I believe it is the duty of every boy when he reaches the age of eighteen years to join the militia and do something to fit himself for the defence of his country," said Major Gillespie. He regretted that war conditions prevented the annual Cadet camp at Barriefield, but hoped by next year that the camp would be in operation as usual.

Lt.-Col. Miller who accompanied Major Gillespie during the inspection, added hearty words of praise for the work of the battalion, commending the boys on their fine showing. He concurred with Major Gillespie in the opinion that the older boys should join the 57th Regiment, and be ready for overseas service. The speaker referred feelingly to the fact that boys with

What Local Artillery Stood At Langemarck

Thrilling Story of the 4th Battery's Experiences—Sergt. Maclachlan Refers to the Death of Sergt. Dickie Boone of Peterboro

UNDER FIRE FOR DAYS

PTE. H. A. SCOLLIE of the 57th detachment, officially reported missing. Pte. Scollie was one of the Peterborough boys who answered the call at time of the South African war. He was in New York when the present conflict started, but returned immediately to go to the front with his old comrades in the 57th.

The experiences of the 4th Battery of the 1st Brigade, in which are the Peterborough artillerymen, who went to the front with the 24th Field Battery quota, are graphically described in a letter received by Lt.-Col. N. F. McNachton, C.V.O., of Cobourg, from his son, Sergt. E. L. McNachton, of the [illegible] Battery, in which he tells of the death of Sergt. Dickie Boone, the latter probably including Gunners Jos. O'Toole and Wm. King, of Peterborough. Evidently Gunner MacDougall, who has since been reported killed, was all right when Sergt. McNachton wrote. His letter is as follows:

"When the general told us that we would get it very much hotter here than we had previously experienced he was dead right. How it is that any of us are still alive is beyond me. It is nothing short of a miracle.

"We have been under fire, heavy artillery, for eight days. On Tuesday it was terrific, they started at us with what are known as 'Whistling Willies,' they are about a fourteen-pound shell and are used for ranging. After they got us in a 'twenty-five-yard bracket' they started in with high explosives, then things started to happen. The air was simply full of shells, splinters, smoke, and blinding, shocking, stunning fumes. A fuse came through the shield of our gun without touching any one, the same thing happened at No. 3 gun, a shell came through No. 2, but did not burst until it struck the ground at the trail. No one at No. 2 gun was touched, but one of the crew of No. 1 gun was hit in the shoulder by a splinter. I forgot to say that two guns of the 5th Battery got lost so they attached themselves to our battery. They (the 5th) lost one killed and three wounded. We had one killed and six wounded, one of the latter rather seriously. The man killed was Sergeant Boone, of Peterborough, an awful fine fellow. Bert Munn was rather badly wounded in the legs. (He has since died).

"I hope that it will never be my lot to go through another such experience, it lasted nearly all day. The sensation of sitting behind those guns, just waiting for a shell to strike, was terrible. None of us expected to get out, how we came through it all is quite beyond me.

Behaved Like Heroes.

"The men behaved like heroes; every man stuck to his post; there wasn't a quitter among them. We kept on firing as if nothing unusual was happening. Don't get the impression, dad, that we weren't frightened. I am not ashamed to say that I was scared stiff. I think everyone else was, too, but it does not necessarily follow that we were cowards. Probably we will never have another such experience. I hope not; our nerves are pretty well shattered.

"Next morning the 'swine' started at us again. They fired a couple of the same high explosives at us to make sure they had us. Then we heard a rumbling noise coming our way. It sounded like a street-car exactly; that was all that was needed. We got orders to get out, and out we got, and take it from me, we didn't lose any time in the 'getting.' We sat down about a hundred yards away and watched the 'brutes' start in to finish up our poor guns. One of them tremendous shells hit the footboard of our waggon body; the whole waggon shot up into the air, and there was a regular display of fireworks when the ammunition in it started to go. The gun was blown into an unrecognizable mass of twisted steel. A shell exploded very close to every one

A LAST CHANCE TO SAY GOOD-BYE TO BOYS OF 39TH

Peterboro Members Will be at Home to Their Friends on Victoria Day When a Military Field Day Will be Held in Belleville

TO-DAY'S MILITARY NEWS

The 15th Regiment of Belleville are holding a field day on Monday (Victoria Day) in honour of the 39th Battalion, Canadian Expeditionary Force. The Peterborough members of the 39th will be at home all day to their friends and, as this will probably be the last opportunity to say good-bye to the boys who are leaving for overseas service, shortly, it is expected that many Peterborough people will take advantage of the holiday rates to visit Belleville.

LANDED SAFELY.

Cables received by their wives today announced the safe arrival at Plymouth, England, of Capt. Dr. McPherson of the Canadian Army Medical Corps, and Lieut. Dr. Frederick, of the British Army Medical Corps. The two physicians left Peterborough a week ago last Sunday, and sailed from Montreal on the "Cameronian".

KINGSTON, May 19.—The official mobilization order for Barriefield camp was issued this morning. There will be between 3,000 and 4,000 under canvas at the camp of fall overseas volunteers. The advance parties will arrive on Saturday, and by Tuesday the men will be on the ground.

DEATH OF SOLDIER.

KINGSTON, May 19—This morning Private George Smith, about 28 years of age, and one of the members of the 21st Battalion, who was left behind in the military hospital when the Battalion left Kingston, died after a lingering illness. The deceased was stricken with pneumonia, but after complications set in an operation was performed.

The late Private Smith was a resident of Kingston and lived on Johnson Street. On Thursday a military funeral will be given the dead soldier.

The men of the 20th Battery, under the command of Major Hall, have become highly proficient as artillerymen. The Artillery Park is being used for the work and every morning - number are busy on gun drill and signalling. —Kingston Whig.

The relatives and friends gave a hearty farewell to Pte. D. H. Darrah, "B" Squadron, 8th C. M. R., at his home, 339 Chamberlain Street, last evening before he departed for Ottawa. The evening was spent in games and music. A toast was afterwards given, wishing him a "pleasant journey and a safe return."

A CLUMSY SCHEME.

The practical joker who paid out good money for printing "dodgers" announcing a "big meeting" on the Market Square last night, would have shown himself a more patriotic Canadian by saving his money and giving it to the Red Cross Society next Saturday. There was no "big meeting" because the public evidently had no confidence in an unauthorized appeal issued by some scheming dunderhead, signed by nobody—though "nobody" would have been a fitting signature. The chief reason for referring to this absurd claptrap is to emphatically deny the statement made by the Review that the "big meeting" was called under the auspices of the Liberals of the city. There is not a word of truth in such a statement. Some help, however, to guessing who is responsible for the clumsy attempt to make capital, may be got from the fact that the Review had a little too much advance knowledge of the absurdly proposed "big meeting" and its occult object, to be ignorant of the originator or originators of the "fake." It took the trouble to announce in two places in its last night's issue, the "big meeting," which The Examiner did not know about till after printing last night. It is also a co-incidence that the Toronto News, had to thank its party friends in Peterborough for an advance announcement of the "big meeting," for it sent down a reporter to "cover" the occasion. The dodge is a little transparent.

WHAT'S THE EXPLANATION?

In view of the active and creditable part Canada is taking in the war; in view of the draft we are making upon our financial resources, it is not understandable why the offer of a patriotic Canadian to bear the expense of raising and equipping a regiment, was not entertained by the Government. In March last, Mr. A. S. Hardy, of Brockville, wrote to the Minister of Militia, offering to provide $100,000 to equip a regiment for service abroad in this war. According to a letter written by Mr. Hardy, and published in the Brockville Recorder, the offer was without conditions, and subject only to certain formalities in connection with the trustees of the Senator Fulford estate. Not only did the Government not accept the offer, but the communication embodying it did not even secure the courtesy of an acknowledgement. The only reason apparent without other explanation, why this generous and patriotic offer was refused, is one traceable to partisan feeling, which should have little play where the interests of the country and the Empire are involved. Mr. Hardy is a prominent Liberal, son of the late Hon. A. S. Hardy, former Premier of Ontario, and also a son-in-law of the late Senator Fulford, who was elevated to the Senate by a Liberal Government. Mr. Hardy is also the Liberal candidate in Brockville, nominated in view of the possibility of a premature election being brought on. If the political reason does not explain the action of the Minister of Militia and the Government, not only refusing, but contemptuously ignoring the splendidly patriotic offer of Mr. Hardy, then what is the reason? There was no cause to doubt the bona fides of the offer. Mr. Hardy has shown his sincerity and interest in promoting the cause of Canada and the Empire by contributing $40,000 to put the Toronto University base hospital on its feet; and so effectively that President Falconer has issued a statement that no further funds are needed.

SEE CANADA FIRST.

There is no reason why Canadians should, like Lord Lovell of the lackadaisical love song, go abroad "strange countries for to see." We have multitudes of things worth seeing in this country, which the mass of Canadians have never seen, and about which they do not even know anything definite. They go in shoals and moving mobs to see the scenery of Europe, less impressive and grand than our own unrivalled scenic expanses. The late Principal Grant described the Canadian Rockies as "thirteen Switzerlands rolled into one," an expression figuratively and literally expressive of the supreme grandeur of the "sea of mountains" in the Pacific coast region in Western Canada. Canadians should apply Juvenal's injunction, "know thyself," to their great country. Yet thousands of them turn their backs on their own country's scenic treasures and make nomadic rushes to Europe. Fortunately, or unfortunately, there is no place for the tourist in Europe this year. Switzerland, the only country not tramped into sanguinary mire by the feet of contending armies, is girt by an impassable desolation that makes her inaccessible. Canadians who want to travel and see things worth seeing, can find these things at home. Canada at present fills the world's eye because of the achievements of her soldier sons. And no Canadian need feel humiliated, or be considered untravelled, by acknowledging his patriotic fidelity to his country in seeing the glorious scenic panorama, that with changing charm, stretches from the Atlantic on the east, to the Pacific on the west.

Now that Europe is closed to tourist travel, the Canadian west, especially, is more likely to come to its own. The great Canadian Pacific Railway, which has done so much for the material development of Canadian resources, has done, and is doing as much, at least, for the scenic resources of Canada. The Examiner has received, a booklet guide, issued by the Canadian Pacific Railway, entitled modestly, "Resorts in the Canadian Rockies," an edition de luxe, indeed. It is so profusely illustrated with excellent photogravures, that it is a picture gallery of the scenic beauties of the Canadian Rockies; and any one who likes to travel and to see things worth seeing, will find his appetite whetted by a study of the splendid pictures. The text of the booklet, supplies details as to names and characteristics, which the pictures do not definitely indicate. How to reach these enchanting regions by the splendid service of the Canadian Pacific, is set forth in this delicious guide book, which in its beautiful completeness, is a type of the way in which the Canadian Pacific Railway does things. To see Canada first is a duty complementary of the duty of holding "Canada First," in our hearts, and affections, and activities.

CANADIANS AT LANGEMARCK.

Amidst the chorus of praise of the work of the Canadians at Langemarck, is heard the voice of the arm-chair critics. Some say that the Canadian men blundered into the danger zone because they were "raw" or "green." Others say that their impetuosity led them into unnecessary danger. But there is evidence that the Canadians bore themselves with the coolness of veterans, and showed a calculated courage and promptitude of resource which few veterans, bound down to the rules of the game, would have practiced with such great success as attended the work of the Canadians. There is evidence that the Canadians at Langemarck were neither raw nor rash. The following from the London Observer, forwarded by the correspondent of the Toronto News, shows that a competent critics sees that the Canadians aquitted themselves with infinite credit, and with a good judgment under the circumstances, which combined with their dogged courage and hang-on, contributed to a most important military achievement—they showed that they were the right men in the right place, at the right time. The Observer says:

> Foremost in saving the situation were the Canadians. We can add nothing to what we said in their praise last week, but their deeds were even more heroic than we then knew, as their losses were more grievous. Attached on two sides and at one point threatened in the rear, they had to throw back their left flank to form a wedge. Thrusting thus into the midst of the enemy and enormously outnumbered they fought through two days and two nights and were never broken. Since the British army was threatened with destruction in the retreat from Mons there had been nothing like it. In spite of asphyxiating gases the Canadian brigades stood firm. In spite of a tempest of shot and shell, in which it seemed that nothing human could live, they charged and carried German trenches. They only retired under imperative orders when it would have been madness to stay, and as they fell sullenly back they sold dearly every yard of ground. Some units were reduced to a quarter of their original strength, but the Canadians had not lost a gun and they had saved a battle. When they were finally relieved last Wednesday their iron-hearted courage and tenacity had won a place second to none since fighting power was known amongst men.
> But we can say no more even for Canadian, than that they are worthy of the British army, and we cannot say less for the battalions, regular and territorials, of the Mother Country, than that they were equal to [illegible] of the Dominion.

The men of the Mother Country will be scanted of their due until their regimental records are partly published and we are allowed to learn as much of their deeds as we would know if they came from the younger nations overseas. A British brigade paused to cheer the Canadians to the echo before itself sweeping on into the face of death.

Here we have evidence that the terrible losses sustained by Canadians were not the result of fool-hardiness, nor of losing their heads; but of the heroic discharge of duty, which the occasion demanded. We can honour our Canadians, as men of level heads, as of sound hearts. Many of them are languishing in hospitals; sore wounded; and they have not only earned the gratitude of Canada and the Empire; but have also earned our best offices in contributing to their healing. Let us remember them, and our duty under the appeal of the Red Cross work on Saturday next.

Official Appeal on Behalf of The Red Cross Society Work

The record of the deeds of the Sailors and Soldiers of the Empire during the present war has aroused in us all a just pride and admiration of their courage and endurance, sorrow at their sufferings and hardships, and also heartfelt sympathy for the friends and relations of those who have been wounded or have given their lives for our security and freedom.

We all feel that they have nobly played their part and fully deserve our unstinted gratitude and praise. We, who have stayed at home, and taken no place in the battle line, have also a part to play and a duty to perform which may be set forth in a few words. First of all to honour the dead, then to succor the sick and the wounded, and lastly to care for those who are, by reason of wounds or disease, rendered incapable of earning their daily bread. Nor is this all, for those who were dependent on them in times of peace—the mother, the widowed wife and the orphan children—can justly claim their share of our gratitude and help, and not in vain. Much has already been done in these directions by the people of Canada through the Patriotic League and Red Cross Society, and we cannot fear that the springs of generosity will dry up before we have fulfilled our duty.

The recent list of casualties, more especially of the Canadian Expeditionary Force, clearly indicate to those who administer the funds and supplies of the Red Cross Society, that the available resources at hand will speedily disappear, and can only be maintained in the future by a steady flow both of money and supplies; and not by spasmodic appeals made too late to be really effective.

To secure the supply of funds so much needed, there seems to be only one way, namely, that EVERY ONE should be called upon to practice some self-denial and set aside a monthly contribution of money or material as may be reuired.

Where branches of the Red Cross are established such contributions should be forwarded by the executive of such branches at least monthly to the headquarters at 77 King Street East, Toronto, and in the absence of such branches they may be sent direct—bearing in mind that no contribution is too small to be gratefully received and recorded.

Any other method than the above causes a loss of power to do good, and this has been clearly established by past experience. Surely, no one who realizes his debt to the men who are defending his liberty, and has a heart and conscience, will fail in such a duty, a duty in which even children may share.

It is estimated that if each head of a family throughout the Dominion contributed but five cents a month during the duration of the war sufficient money for all purposes would be obtained, and few are too poor to be unable to do so.

It is therefore to secure a wider publicity of the needs of this deserving work that you are asked to publish this appeal in your paper, and to draw attention to it editorially; and further to call upon the clergy of all denominations as to their privileges and duty in helping the Red Cross in its work of mercy and charity.

It needs but such action on the part of the church and the press to point the way in which everyone may play his part in this great crisis of Canada's history.

Signed on behalf of the General Council C.R.C.S.

NOEL MARSHALL,
Chairman.

New York Stocks

A. H. Stratton & Co., Brokers, report the following:

NEW YORK, May 20.—Improving tendency which manifested itself immediately after opening was well maintained to end of first hour, and activity increased as prices advanced. At 10:30 a.m. initial losses were recovered and moderate advances substituted, and market showed considerable breadth as well as a satisfactory degree of activity. Notwithstanding unfavourable forecasts of the German reply, the large interests were of the belief that the worst has been discounted, and action of stocks indicated that the floating supply was small.

Would Strengthen Position.

NEW YORK, May 20.—Advancing movement in general market was checked by weakness in C.O., and at end of first hour stocks in general were off good sized fractions from the best.

Commission houses advised customers who were long of stocks that they should get out so as to be able to take advantage of a re-action to reduce cost of their holdings.

In conservative quarters it was argued that discontinuance of dividends of C. and O. would tend to strengthen financial position of the property and improve market for the notes which have been selling on a 7¼ per cent. basis.

Traders felt around for weak spots as they had done on Wednesday, and they discovered one in R.I. That issue yielded to pressure and sold off over two points to a level under twenty.

The Grain Market.

CHICAGO, May 20.—Wheat market showed surprising firmness at opening. Shorts were free buyers, and there were fears of rust damage in Kansas. Corn was steadier than expected. There was covering of shorts based on strength in wheat. Oats were firm with other markets.

CHICAGO, May 20.—Wheat re-acted on profit-taking sales. Snow's report from Indiana indicated considerable insect damage.

Corn—Barely steady. Claims that corn had been washed out in Kansas and Missouri by heavy rains attracted great deal of attention.

Oats—Quiet and fluctuated with other grain.

NEW YORK, May 20.—During early afternoon market was at standstill, and the street seemed to have about made up its mind that no news in regard to Italy's attitude would be received in the course of the day.

That subject of paramount interest having temporarily superceded the difficulty between this country and Germany, as no reply to the American note was expected for some time to come.

In well-informed quarters it was asserted war orders already received by Westinghouse would in themselves, and without any surplus from regular business of the company, be sufficient to realize earnings for three years at an average rate equal to the 4.68 per cent. shown in the annual report just published. It is rumoured that the M.O.P. note expansion has been arranged. The market closed strong with fractional gains by many of the leading stocks.

OPENING GAMES IN THE CANADIAN LEAGUE

London Beat Brantford, Hamilton Outscored St. Thomas and Guelph Too Much For Ottawa—Rooney Formerly of the Petes Played For the Senators

London, Ont., May 19.—London won the first game of the Canadian League series from Brantford to-day in a battle which was introduced by the customary street parade and march past to the park. The players led by a motor truck load of bandsmen, were carried through the streets in citizens automobiles and performed afterwards in weather that was better suited for Rugby.

"Rube" Deneau, whose ambition it has been since his departure from London to trim the home folks, did some real fencing with "Doc" Reisling, and there was some fine sport.

OTTAWA LOST.

GUELPH, May 19.—The Canadian League was opened here to-day under the most favourable auspices that have ever greeted the baseball game in this city. The day was all that could be desired, and several thousand took advantage of the opportunity to size up the qualities of the rival teams. Ottawa, though always dangerous, did not shine up well to-day, probably because the local Leafs played better ball, and pitcher, and he had Shaughnessy's squad at his mercy. The Ottawa team were rather nervous, and several costly misplays made the going hard for Peterson, the twirler. The result was a shutout in a game full of interest. The score was 4 to 0 in Guelph's favour. Score:

SEVEN CLUBS DROP $100,000

The hostile public who condemned the playing of football last season while the country was at war, declaring that soccer was played for the sake of money and profits, have this week received a rude shock to their ignorance by reading the balance sheets of seven league clubs, who among them have lost just over $100,000 on the year's working. With the country drained day after day of men, of football supporters in hundreds of thousands, it was recognised that the game would suffer, that the gates would decline, that profits would vanish, that losses would be entailed and that the financial strain would be disastrous for all concerned—clubs and players alike.

The idea of profit was never entertained. One or two clubs have exceeded their most sanguine expectations, but the majority have realised their worst fears.

SOME LOSSES

Seven league clubs have made their statements, showing a total loss of just over $100,000 on the season's playing. Aston Villa, of the first division of the Association league, and Plymouth Argyle, of the Southern League, show the biggest loss of $20,000 each. The famous Blackburn Rover's club with one of the biggest drawing teams in the country, who made a profit of $11,545 the previous season, return a loss of $17,200 for the season just concluded. Norwich City and Crystal Palace, both Southern League Clubs, lost $15,000 and $11,000 respectively. Derby County and Barnsley, of the second division of the league, both lost $10,000. So far none of the big London clubs have issued their balance sheets but all have suffered by the big drop of 50 per cent. in their gate receipts compared with the previous season.

LONDON IS BLANK

When the next football season opens it is problematical whether it will in the autumn or not, much depends what happens on the battlefields of Europe, London will be minus a First League Club. It is somewhat remarkable that Chelsea and Tottenham Hotspur shoul both fail to keep their places in the upper circle of the English League.

There was abroad an idea that neither Chelsea nor Tottenham Hotspur would greatly repine if they did "go down" as long as they went together, and one shrewd club manager found a very good reason for this alleged complacence. It was that the whole of the clubs in the Metropolitan area would then be in the second division, namely, Chelsea, Tottenham, The Arsenal, Clapton Orient and Fulham, with Bristol City as another Southern attraction. This would mean no fewer than ten "Derby" days. It is difficult to believe that any club would view with indifference relegation to an inferior combination, but it is quite plain to see that it is possible there may be something in the idea.

BIG LACROSSE PRACTICE AT RIVERSIDE TO-NIGHT

To-night's lacrosse workout should put the locals in good shape for Monday's game with Riverdales of Toronto. Two full teams will be lined up at 6.30 at Riverside Park and lacrosse fans will be able to get a line on the local's new material. On Monday it is intended to give as many of the players as possible a chance. Among the novices who have been coming fast is Elmer Brown, a youngster who turned out with the "Y" and has been learning steadily at every workout. He is a tireless worker, covers the ground easily and likes the game. He is almost assured of a place on the intermediate team according to some reports.

YESTERDAY'S BASEBALL GAMES

AMERICAN.

Detroit, May 19—Cobb's daring on the bases helped Detroit defeat New York 3 to 1 to-day, is single in the third inning sent Covaleski home with the run that tied the score. The fleet Georgian stole second and third, but Peckinpaugh's fine stop of Veach's bounder over second stopped the rally. In the eighth Cobb walked, stole second, advanced on a wild pitch and came home on Young's single. Tyrus had four stolen bases to his credit. Score:

| | A. | H. | E. |
|---|---|---|---|
| New York | 010000000 | 1 | 6 |
| Detroit | 00100009x | 3 | 6 |

Batteries—Keating, Caldwell and Nunamaker; Covaleski and Stanage.

At Cleveland — Cleveland evened the series with Boston to-day, winning 5 to 3. Foster was knocked out of the box. Joe Jackson made his debut as a first baseman and did well. Score:

| | A. | H. | E. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Cleveland | 10031002x | 5 | 10 |
| Boston | 000000003 | 2 | 6 |

Batteries—Hagerman and O'Neill; Foster, Ruth and Thomas, Carrigan.

At Chicago—The wildness of the Philadelphia pitchers paved the way for a nine to seven victory for Chicago to-day in the final game of the series. After giving his eighth base on balls in the eighth base on balls in the eighth Wyckoff was succeeded by Pennock, who allowed three more this, coupled with opportune hitting, including a safe bunt by Eddie Collins, and a double by Schalk, gave the locals the game. Score:

NATIONAL.

PHILADELPHIA, May 19—Grimer performed the remarkable feat in today's game, in which St. Louis shut out Philadelphia 3 to 0, of pitching to only 27 batsmen in nine innings. Grimer was touched up for only two singles; and he did not give a pass, while he was given perfect support. In trying to reach second when Becker fanned in the first inning, Byrne was touched out by Butler, whose foot struck the runner on the head. Byrne suffered a slight concussion of the brain, and Stock took his place. Score:

ACTION DISMISSED WITHOUT COSTS

His Honour Judge Huycke Gave Judgment This Morning in the Campbellford Case—An Action For $1,500.00 Damages

His Honour Judge Huycke gave judgment in the County Court this morning in the William White and Wesley White versus Thomas Sampson, William Jordan and Luman Jordan case, which was tried before him some time ago, dismissing the action without costs.

The action was one for $1,500 as compensation for injuries to Master Wesley White, of Campbellford, who had his hand and face injured on May 17, 1914, by a cap exploding which, it was alleged, was found in a post hole on the property where he was playing, and for which, it was alleged, the defendants were responsible. The boy was brought to Nicholls Hospital and treated.

The evidence as to where the boy found the cap was very contradictory, and witnesses for the defendants swore that he had gone into the kitchen of Mr. Sampson, where he found it, and not in the post hole as the boy himself swore.

His Honour Judge Huycke found that the onus was upon the plaintiff to show that the defendants were negligibly responsible, and he found that this had not been satisfactorily shown. There was also so much doubt as to the surrounding circumstances.

Mr. G. N. Gordon conducted the case for the plaintiffs, and Mr. I. Humphries, of Campbellford, for the defendants.

Peterborough Trapshooters Are Fifth

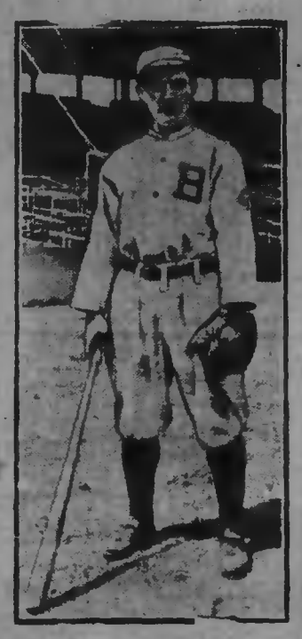
[illegible] meet of the clubs of the Trent Valley Trapshooters' League, Cobourg won the large silk challenge pennant previously held by Belleville. The following competed: Cobourg, Stirling Campbellford, Peterborough, and Belleville.

Gordon Crowther won the silver spoon awarded for high gun, T. J. York, also of Cobourg, being high man, but handicapped by five birds. Chas. McCollum won the second prize—a watch fob.

The five best scores in the competing teams were as follows: Cobourg, 199; Peterborough, 128; Stirling, 175; Belleville, 187.



"Eddie" Fitzpatrick—Late of the Toronto Internationals, who is playing second base for the Boston World Champions in place of Johnny Evers.

BASEBALL

On Central School Grounds in the Junior Series of the Public School Baseball League, the Queen Mary team defeated the Centrals by a score of 10-1. The latter art of the game was much better than the former, as no score whatever was made after the third inning. Cavanah and Bergoine were the battery for the Centrals during the most of the game, while Patterson and Pogue represented the Queen Mary team. Mr. Fred. McNeely made a very satisfactory umpire.

PUBLIC SCHOOL BASEBALL.

South Central defeated Queen Alexandria on the former's grounds by a score of 16-1. Good fielding was the feature of the game.

The batteries were: Queen Alexandria, Graham, Armstrong and Ecobichon; South Central, Fuller and Montgomery.

B. Taylor, the usual umpire, gave satisfaction.

LACROSSE

The Campbellford News says: In addition to the 24 certificates that have already been forwarded to the association, Secretary Roe has sent certificates for the following: Frank Smith, Frank Bork and J. A. Jacobs.

Campbellford opens the season at Millbrook on Monday.

Will Have to Appear in Court

Sanitary Inspector Spence Will Prosecute Those Who Fail to Keep Back Yards In Sanitary Condition

A female diplomat is said to be a woman who can keep a hired girl for six consecutive weeks, while to Sanitary Inspector Spence is given credit for being a diplomat of municipal origin. Upon him devolves the responsibility of seeing that between four and five thousand backyards are kept in a respectable condition, and that due respect is paid to sanitary arrangements so far as the milk and food supply of the city is concerned. All of this cannot be accomplished without some internal difficulties. Just when Sanitary Inspector Spence thought that the spring clean-up campaign would conclude without any friction a few obstinate cases turn up and blur the vision of peace and harmony. As a direct result of these obstinate cases, it will be necessary to institute judicial action. Those who do not respond to the Inspector's demands and have their yards put in a sanitary condition at a very early date are assured of an interview with Police Magistrate Dumble.

POTATOES HELD BACK BY RECENT FROSTS

Several market gardeners with land near the city report backward conditions during the past two weeks. The last half of April gave the gardeners a considerable spurt, but since the first week of this months growth has been greatly retarded. Frosts have been frequent. Tomatoes that were planted early were wiped out and the potato advance has been twice cut off. One gardener states that his potatoes appeared early, but were severely bitten. When they sprouted again they suffered in the same way, especially those planted in exposed places. The result is that early potatoes have made but little progress above ground during the past fortnight.

A FORMER LOCAL MAN TELLS OF LANGEMARCK FIGHT

The following letter has been received by Mrs. Shaw, of Toronto, from her husband, Staff Sergeant R. A. Shaw, of the Divisional Ammunition Park. The latter is well known in Peterborough, where he resided for some time. He was a member of the George St. Methodist Church choir:

"I was called out to supply ammunition and was on the jump for four days and nights without a wink of sleep. I got back on Sunday at 11:30 a.m., and at 2 p.m. was sent up to our advance base to take charge of the trucks sent up with ammunition for the limbers of the guns. We had an awful time and the horses and men who were supposed to take the ammunition from us to the brigade column were so done up that we had to do their work with the trucks, and although we were under shell fire at different times for four days and nights without sleep, and with very little to eat but hardtack, I did not see one sign of yellow in any of our officers or men. (They are mostly boys in reality, but have done a man's share). Personally I was scared stiff, but I don't think I showed it, and anyway I stuck out for four days and nights until the lull came, when I was relieved and am now back in my billet for a few hours' rest, which I feel I have earned.

"I am dazed with what I have seen and heard, and it would take me a week to tell it all, but no one who has not been in it can appreciate what this awful war is. It is murder in its most awful form. The Huns kill their prisoners and even brain the wounded. Out of our friend's company only one man is left, and he saw our friend on his knees leaning up against the parapet, stone dead, fortunately, as they crucified a wounded sergeant that same night and cut crosses all over his body with their bayonets, but mercifully put him out of his misery before they were driven out. When found he had seventeen bayonet wounds in his throat. Some people seem to think that it is the military party in Hunland that is keeping this thing alive, but the common soldier is worse in his frightfulness than the officer, and heaven knows they are bad enough. We have moved back since the fight, stopped, and are taking a well-earned rest. To-night everything is perfectly quiet, not a gun booming, but to-morrow the war starts in earnest and we are going to show them what war really is.

"May 1st.—I did not get a chance to finish this yesterday, but I have many duties to perform, and some of them keep me up all night. My heart is sore when I think of the boys I knew whose lives have been snuffed out at almost the commencement by unfair means. All Toronto must be in mourning."

An Appeal to Citizens On Behalf of Y.M.C.A.

Funds Are Urgently Needed to Carry on Grand Work of the Institution—$8,000 Must be Raised This Year—Large and Well Managed Association Must be Supported

The directors of the Young Men's Christian Association desire to lay before the citizens of Peterborough information which they believe effects the best interest of the city, and of the Association.

The Y.M.C.A. is a public institution. Its benefits to a community are so great as to be universally admitted. Peterborough is fortunate to have as large and well managed an association as our city possesses. There are thousands of men to-day whose lives have been influenced for good by our local Association. They are willing to bear testimony to the value of the work it accomplishes.

Like other institutions, our local Association has felt the effect of the war. Because our Association is doing a big work, having a daily attendance during the winter season of over 300 young men and boys, and conducting from 75 to 100 class sessions and meetings each week, the expense of maintaining such an institution at its best efficiency is large. Naturally also, an institution which is conducted for the benefit of the public can hardly be expected to be self sustaining. Each year public-spirited citizens who have realised the value of the work done by this organization have subscribed sums sufficient to enable us to continue the work. For some years the money contributed in this way has averaged about $3,500 a year. It speaks well for the liberality and public spirit of our private citizens who have each year contributed this amount.

For several years previous to 1912 our local Association was handicapped by a debt. In 1912 the officers put forth a special effort and succeeded in wiping out this debt and completed the year free from all liabilities.

During 1913 a small deficit was incurred. The directors planned to wipe this out during the annual canvass which it was proposed to hold early in June, 1914. It was intended by means of this canvass also to raise whatever sum would be necessary to provide for the needs of the Association for last year. Unfortunately, the Ontario provincial election interfered with this canvass. The directors, therefore, thought it advisable under the circumstances to continue the canvass in the Fall. On the first of August the European war commenced, when it became apparent that owing to the conditions created by the war many families of soldiers and others might suffer want, the directors of the Association decided to forego their proposed canvass giving way thereby, to the Patriotic Fund Campaign. The result was that the Association commenced this year with a debt of $3,000. This year the Board of Directors are confronted with the necessity of raising not only a sufficient sum to meet this deficit, but to provide for the proper conduct of the work of the Association during the current year. A number of improvements to the buildings are absolutely necessary. These include repairs to the roof, to the boiler, and the provision of necessary equipment. In order that the Association may take proper care of its work and provide for the funds it is necessary that a sum of approximately $8,000 shall be raised this year.

A Comparison with Other Cities.

The citizens of Peterborough have been asked to contribute less to their Y.M.C.A. than have the citizens of most other cities in Canada. While citizens of other cities have contributed the funds with which to erect their Y.M.C.A. buildings, the Peterborough Association building came as a gift. The building and the adjoining piece of ground was given to the city free by the late Mrs. Nicholls. The only expense the citizens of Peterborough have incurred has been to assist in its maintenance. This work hitherto has fallen on the shoulders of a comparatively few citizens. The value of the investment in the building and ground is approximately $41,000. Orillia, which has a population of only 7,660, has invested in its Y.M.C.A. and lot, $58,000; Port Arthur, with a population of 14,000, has invested $50000; Guelph with a population of 18,000, has invested $68,000; Galt, with a population of only 12,000 has invested $70,000; Sault Ste. Marie, with a population of 13,800, has an investment of $80,000; Fort William, with a population of 25,000, has an investment of $125,000, while Brantford with a population only a little in excess of that of Peterborough, has an investment in its Association of $162,000. This shows that the citizens of Peterborough have been asked to do practically nothing for our local Y.M.C.A. compared with the nvestment made in similar work in other cities of approximately the same population. It will be noted that the figures given show that Peterborough falls far behind most of the other Associations mentioned.

Economically Managed.

The directors of the Association have made every possible effort to conduct our local Association on an economical, basis without impairing its efficiency. That this is the case may be gathered from the following figures:

To conduct the work of our Association has cost us of late years approximately $7,000 a year. Orillia, with approximately one-third the population of Peterborough, spends $7,500 a year on its Association; Galt spends $8,253; Cobalt, with a population of 6,000, spends $10,731; Port Arthur with a population of 14,000, spends $9,026; Sault Ste Marie, $12,-00; Fort William $19,229, and Brantford, in 1913, spent $22,000. Had we had the funds we might have greatly increased the efficiency and usefulness of our local Association to the community. The possibility of making the local Association more nearly self-sustaining, as well as the practicability of rearranging the space in the building so as to increase the efficiency of the different departments of the Association, have recently been given careful consideration. The present building was erected many years ago. There is much waste space in connection with it. Various plans for utilising more of this space and thereby increasing the usefulness of the Association have been examined.

At present the boys' department has to be conducted on the second floor, the game rooms and parlour with the Secretary's office are on the main floor, and the bowling alleys, locker room, plunge and bath are in the basement. With the small staff available it has been found impossible to give the building, under these conditions, proper supervision. The need, therefore, of consolidating the work to better advantage so that more of the activities can be supervised from the Secretary's office, has been apparent for some time. The recreation rooms of the Association are not nearly sufficient for the requirements. There is great need also for more dormitories, dressing rooms and lockers. The baths and plunge need to be renovated.

More Dormitories Required.

The Association is constantly in receipt of applications from young men for dormitory accommodation. Could this be provided it would do much to increase the revenue of the Association and thereby help to make it more nearly self sustaining. Our Association has twelve dormitories. Inquiries we have made reveal the fact that the Galt Association has 27 dormitories; Guelph 36, Orillia 27, Port Arthur and Sault Ste Marie 45 each, Brantford 75, and Fort William 30. After several weeks' consideration the directors have decided unanimously in favour of a plan which it is believed would go far to meet the needs of the Association. By building a small addition to the south of the building and carrying it up two stories, it would enable us to increase the dormitory accommodation also for the caretaker and his wife in the building. It would bring the boys' department to the main floor, where they could be easily supervised from the Secretary's office; it would bring the large recreation room on the ground floor in touch with the bowling alleys where one attendant during the winter months could supervise the game rooms, bowling alleys, locker room and plunge. This plan also would give increased locker space for the boys and for the men, and it has been estimated, would increase the receipts of the Association by approximately $2,000 a year.

Three Alternatives.

The directors of the Association, therefore, are faced with the following alternatives:

First.—Of greatly reducing the efficiency of the Association by making further cuts in its expenditures so that the Association may be made more nearly self-sustaining. This would necessitate our Association being conducted in a manner which would not reflect credit on Peterborough.

Second.—Of asking the citizens of Peterborough to cooperate in raising $8,000 to meet absolutely necessary expenditures. This would enable us to conduct the work of the Association much as at present, but needed improvements could not be made, nor would the efficiency and earning powers of the Association be increased.

Third.—Of asking the citizens to raise an additional $6,000 or $7,000, which would enable us to make the many improvements mentioned and, at the same time, increase the earning powers of the Association by $2,-000 a year, as well as increase its efficiency in every department. This, after all, is the most important consideration.

We have confidence in the citizens of Peterborough. We feel that our fellow-citizens do not desire the work of our Association to be handicapped. While it is true that these are war times these conditions have greatly increased the possibilities for good of our Association which has been the headquarters for many members of the expeditionary forces who have mobilized here, and which is the centre where men out of work congregate and receive help and encouragement while looking for new positions.

We lay these facts before the citizens of Peterborough, anticipating that we will not count in vain on receiving the public's support and co-operation for which we now appeal. We leave these matters, therefore, with the citizens of Peterborough. (Signed)

G. A. Gillespie, President.
John J. Hewden, Vice-President.
J. J. Turner, Treasurer.
Thos. Barrie, Chairman Finance Committee.

HOW TO GET RID OF DANDRUFF

This Home Made Mixture Removes Dandruff And Stops The Hair From Falling Out.

The following simple recipe which can be mixed at home, or put up by any druggist will quickly remove dandruff and stop the hair from falling out.

To a half pint of water add 1 oz. of bay rum, 1 small box of Orlex Compound, and ¼ oz. of glycerine. These are all simple ingredients that you can buy from any druggist at very little cost, and mix them yourself. Apply to the scalp once a day for two weeks, then once every other week until the mixture is used. A half pint should be enough to rid the hair of dandruff and kill the dandruff germs. It stops the hair from falling out, and relieves itching and scalp disease.

Although it is not a dye, it acts upon the hair roots and will darken streaked, faded, gray hair in ten or fifteen days. It promotes the growth of the hair and makes harsh hair soft and glossy.

SINKING OF THE CHRISTINE

Special to The Examiner:

QUEBEC, May 20.—Rammed under the floating line by an unknown vessel at 8 o'clock Tuesday night some twenty-five miles below Quebec, the Canadian Government steamer Christine, doing post duty at the naval station of Maheux River, Island of Orleans, foundered five minutes after the collision in about sixty feet of water, close to the navigation channel. Eight of her crew were drowned.

The Christine was 126 feet long, 20 feet beam, and had a draught of 9.6 feet. She belonged to Mr. John S. Thom, and was formerly a private yacht owned by Lord Strathcona. Her owner valued her at $80,000. An enquiry will be held shortly.

When she was rammed Tuesday night she was at the naval station together with the steamer Bartlett, belonging to the Montreal Transportation Co.

Versions of Accident.

There are two varying versions of the accident. One says that the boat that rammed the Christine had passed the station without answering the summons to report and submit to examination, and that she only returned to the station when signals, exchanged between the Maheux station and the Martiniere fort showed that she was to be fired on if she did not submit to examination. This story, however, cannot be confirmed. Another story says that the Christine got in the other vessel's way before the latter had reached the station, and that its headway bore it into the station boat.

The commander of the Christine, Capt. Kennedy, an old seafarer, was on the deck when the shadow of the oncoming boat loomed out of the night. He was knocked to the deck, and in a semi-conscious condition was rescued after his ship had gone to the bottom.

Men Missing.

At six Wednesday morning, the tug Spray, of the J. S. Thom Company, left for the scene of the disaster, and was expected here Wednesday afternoon at 2:30 with the survivors, and what of the dead that have been recovered.

Among those known drowned in the loss of the Christine, is Gunner F. Fletcher. The following are known safe: Lieut. Brander, of the Royal Canadian Naval Reserve; Chief Engineer and his assistant, with a fireman named Caron from Levis.

Plaintiff Was Awarded Judgment

Runaway Results in Litigation—Division Court in Havelock

HAVELOCK, May 20—Max Post won his suit against J. C. Buchanan, Jr., in the Division Court, when he was awarded judgment for $20 and costs, as damages caused by his horse running away and damaging his cutter, due to the negligence of Mr. Buchanan. Mr. C. A. Ghent of town appeared for Post, and G. A. Payne of Campbellford for Buchanan.

War Revenue Act Yields Big Return

Special Cable to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, May 20.—A further indication of the successful working of the war measures of the Government is found in the already heavy collections under the War Revenue Act by the Department of Inland Revenue. The receipts since the war tax became effective in March to May 18 have been $171,063. This by no means represents all the new revenue from the stamp taxes, as in many cases postage stamps have been and are being used. The war stamp revenue in the Inland Revenue Department alone was $46,570 in March and $45,692 in April. The total inland revenue in March was $1,828,794, and in April $1,438,-598, a decline of about $420,000.

TIRED-OUT KIDNEYS

Kidney troubles are so frightfully common because the kidneys are so easily upset by overwork or excesses of eating and drinking. Cure is effected not by whipping them on to renewed effort, but by awakening the action of liver and bowels by the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. This rests the kidneys and makes them well. Backache and urinary disorders then disappear.

The headquarters of the new regiment, which has yet to be named, will be at Barriefield, near Kingston. —Toronto Star.

Renovating The Civic Laboratory

Room Which is Used As a Detention Camp For Germs Serves As An Office For Sanitary Inspector Spence

The civic laboratory is being renovated in readiness for the convention of medical officers of health, which opens in this city next week. It is possible that a number, if not all, will want to have a peek at what is locally known as a laboratory which at the present time serves a dual purpose in that it is used as an office by Sanitary Inspector Spence. In the mystic chamber is to be found appliances for testing milk, water and other commodities that adorn the family mahogany. Germs are sought out and means taken to discourage any activity they might manifest. The equipment includes a milk tester, in which small glass tubes filled with milk are revolved at a high rate of speed and then heated to the boiling point. The final result indicates the percentage of butter fat in the milk. It is these tests that the Property Committee decided to have published every three months in order that the public might learn of the quality of milk that is being supplied.

The Strawberries Were Damaged

ST. CATHARINES, May 20.—The [illegible] trict was seriously damaged by the frost of Tuesday night. Early tomato plants and beans also suffered. The loss will be quite heavy. So far as known the grapes escaped.

Jailbreaker Has Been Apprehended

LINDSAY, May 20.—After three weeks of life as a fugitive from justice Frank York, of Fenelon Falls, was placed in the county jail at Lindsay by Constable Jones. The crime for which York was placed under arrest was for breaking the lock-up at Fenelon Falls, and escaping with another companion named Wm. Millar, after they had been sentenced to a term at the prison farm by County Magistrate F. D. Moore, K.C., of Lindsay, for breaking into the G.T.R. station at Fenelon Falls and stealing a suit case with some new boots. York was captured at or near Uxbridge at the home of an uncle, to whose home he had gone for food and shelter. He was in a half starved condition, with his clothes and general apparel in a dilapidated and sad-looking state, when he arrived at the uncle's place.

The prisoner hoofed it from Fenelon Falls to Uxbridge, remaining in the shade of the forests during the day, pursuing his journey at night. He was for several days without food, being fearful to enter a farm home lest the minions of the law would get him and once more deal out stern justice by way of an additional touch to his present sentence. But hunger and hardships experienced fired within his breast a disregard for his safety and he essayed going to a friend's house three miles from Uxbridge, where he was located by the police of that town, they having received a postal from Constable Jones of the Falls describing the fugitive. His arrest followed and will come up before Magistrate Moore for another sentence in a few days' time.

It is supposed that his partner in crime is still hovering around the cataract village and it is only a matter of time until Constable Jones gathers him in. It is supposed that Frank York's brother furnished the crowbar to break open the lockup.

It will be remembered by many of the jail officials and others that Mr. York celebrated his marriage ceremony in the county jail over one year ago and spent a two-month's honeymoon there after the wedding bells had been rung.

According to forecasts the Cabinet will retain all the strongest personalities of the past with the addition of Unionist Leaders Bonar Law, Austen Chamberlain and F. E. Smith. In addition A. J. Balfour, former Unionist Premier, and Lord Reading, who as Sir Rufus Isaacs, was a former Liberal Minister, are expected to re-enter the Cabinet, the former as First Lord of the Admiralty and the latter as Lord Chancellor. Labour is to be represented by Arthur Henderson. He will serve side by side with two leading Peers, the Earl of Derby, an enthusiastic recruiter, and Lord Curzon, foremost Imperialist.

FOR HUMANITY'S SAKE HELP THE RED CROSS WORK

The great offensive of the Allies is only just beginning and the movement will necessarily be an expensive one, not only as regards the loss of life, but we may also expect a continuous stream of wounded who will be carried to the hospitals flying the Red Cross Flag.

It is only right that we should look things in the face and be prepared for heavy losses before the great cause for which our soldiers and our Empire are fighting is finally accomplished.

Lives can only be saved when these wounded men are attended to promptly, and when the doctors and nurses have every medical appliance at their disposal.

Every letter that has come from a wounded soldier has warmly sounded the praises of doctors and nurses for their unceasing and skilful care of those in their charge.

Peterborough has done well in the past, and will continue to do so until the roar of cannon and the clash of arms is stilled. Our men "saved the situation"; how those three words thrill us, and make us resolve that when Canadians can play their part so nobly and unselfishly on the battle line, that we at home will also play our part to the limit of our ability.

Men cannot content themselves waiting for the news from the front, women will not fold their hands and weep. Men must be up and doing, and women must go on making bandages and other supplies even though the tears may sometimes drop while they work.

So in the name of humanity, we ask every man and woman in Peterborough and the vicinity, who understand and can appreciate the true meaning of honour, justice and freedom, to give generously and ungrudgingly to that noble organization, the Red Cross Society, which knows no other aim or object than the relief of suffering, when given the opportunity on Saturday.—On behalf of the Local Committee.

How To Address Prisoners In Germany

In regard to correspondence for prisoners of war in Germany the Post Office Department, Ottawa, has issued the following:

1.—Letters (letters should be open) postcards and postal parcels should be addressed as follows:
1. Rank, initials, name.
2. Regiment, or other unit.
3. British (or Canadian, French, Belgian or Russian) prisoner of war.
4. Place of internment.
5. Germany.

Place of internment should be stated always if possible, and parcels cannot be accepted unless place of internment is stated. All addresses must be in ink.

2. Communications should be limited to private and family news and to necessary business communications, and should not be sent too frequently.

No references to the naval, military or political situation or to naval or military movements and organizations are allowed. Letters or postcards containing such references will not be delivered.

3. Friends of prisoners of war are advised to send postcards in preference to letters as postcards are less likely to be delayed. If letters are sent, they should not exceed in length two sides of a sheet of note paper and should contain nothing but the sheet of note paper. On no account should the writing be crossed.

4. Letters cannot for the present be accepted for registration.

5. Postage need not be paid either on letters or parcels addressed to prisoners of war.

6. No letters should be enclosed in parcels, and newspapers must not on any account be sent. So far as is known there is no restriction on the contents of parcels; tobacco may be sent and will be admitted duty free, but foodstuffs of a perishable character should not be sent. Parcels should not exceed 11 lbs. in weight.

7. Remittances can be made by money order to prisoners of war. Instructions as to how to proceed can be obtained from Postmasters of Accounting Post Offices. The transmission of coin, either in letters or parcels, is expressly prohibited. Postal notes and Bank notes should not be sent.

8. It must be understood that no guarantee of the delivery of either parcels or letters can be given, and that the Post Office accepts no responsibility. In any case, considerable delay may take place and failure to receive an acknowledgment should not necessarily be taken as an indication that letters and parcels sent have not been delivered.

9. So far as is known, prisoners of war in Germany are allowed to write letters or postcards from time to time; but they may not always have facilities for doing so and the fact that no communication os received from them need not give rise to anxiety.

PILL IN A PAINT.

Mrs. Edwin Martin, Ayer's Cliff, Que., writes: "Before using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I was in a terrible condition. Dizzy spells would come over me and I would fall to the floor. I could not sleep and felt fagusting. Dr. Chase's Nerve Food has so built up my system that I can work and do my housework. Your medicine cured me when doctors had failed."

CANADIAN MILITARY HOSPITALS GET SUPPLIES FROM RED CROSS

Information of Interest to Those Engaged in the Work Here — How the Supplies Are Fowarded to Hospitals in France and England

The local Secretary of the Canadian Red Cross Society, in reply to the many questions of those interested, publishes the following:

Dear Miss Davidson,—I am glad to be able to answer your inquiries. The Canadian Red Cross Society exists to look after the sick and wounded Canadian soldiers. If the Canadian Red Cross Society did not do this, the British Red Cross Society relieves the British Red Cross Society of this bit of its work.

The Red Cross supplies the needs of all Canadian Military Hospitals at the front, including those whose names you probably know such as Le Treport and the others doing no less useful work, but moving with the army and so having no special name or address.

These are all supplied from the depots of the Canadien Red Cross Society in France, where we have motor lorries on purpose to distribute goods to all the Canadian Hospitals.

Shorncliffe Hospital is a little different from the others, because it was started by the Canadians resident in England. It is a piece of Red Cross work, but they started doing it, and have always worked most amicably in relation to the Canadian Red Cross Society. We are constantly forwarding supplies to them, and have given them a donation of $5,000.00, and a motor ambulance, so that you can certainly send to us any supplies for Shorncliffe, as we are glad to forward them at any time.

We can forward supplies to Shorncliffe and to Clivedon Hospital in England but we cannot forward designated supplies to any Canadian Hospital in France, or outside England, as the difficulties of transportation are so great that Colonel Hodgetts has cabled this morning to say that he cannot undertake delivery of any more addressed parcels.

This simply means that the Canadian Hospitals in France will all be put on an equal footing, and able to draw supplies from our depots at Boulogne, Le Treport and elsewhere.

The Montreal Red Cross is a branch of the Canadian Red Cross Society. We are the headquarters for Canada, and Montreal is the headquarters of the Quebec Provincial branch. No Ontario branch could affiliate with Montreal, otherwise their things are reckoned as Quebec supplies, and, moreover, they do not reach England any quicker as we have a headquarters' warehouse in Montreal, (besides the Montreal branch), and our supplies go by every ship that will take them.

Yours sincerely,
Adelaide Plumtree,
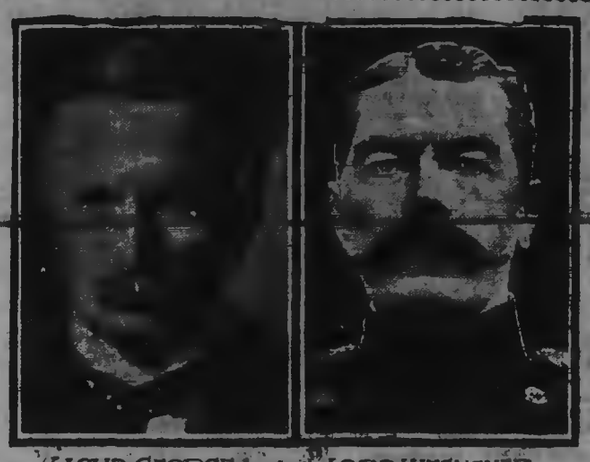
Corresponding Secretary, 77 King Street, East, Toronto.
May 20th, 1915.



LLOYD GEORGE ✦ LORD KITCHENER

LLOYD GEORGE TO SUCCEED KITCHENER?—Perhaps the most interesting of all the Cabinet rumours is that Lloyd George will become Minister of War if Lord Kitchener goes to the front as General issimo in supreme command of the allies, or in association with General Joffre. Another rumour is that Lloyd George's work will deal with munition supplies only, a new post being created for the purpose.

ROME, May 20.—The Italian foreign office issued a summary of a green book explaining Italy's position. The summary confirms the report that Italy on May fourth denounced the treaty with Austria, thus paving the way for the war. The summary declares the concessions Austria offered are entirely inadequate. General Cadorna, the chief of the general staff, arrived at Vincenza, near the Austrain frontier, and is awaiting the signal to open hostilities. Pro-war newspapers announced that a canvass of the deputies showed an overwhelming majority in favour of war.

LOST SEVENTEEN SUBS.

COPENHAGEN, May 20.—Couriers from Germany say it is generally believed there that the Kaiser has lost 17 submarines all told in the British blockade since Feb. 18th.

MINISTERS TO RESIGN

LONDON, May 20.—It is believed here this afternoon that Kitchener and all the other cabinet ministers have handed in their resignations to Asquith to permit of the thorough reconstruction.

TRAWLER IS SUNK

HULL, Eng., May 20.—The trawler Chrysolite of 222 tons was torpedoed by a German submarine off Kinnaird head yesterday.

OTTAWA, May 20.—A summary of the total Canadian casualties announced at noon to-day is as follows: Killed 714, wounded 3351, and missing 1116.

GERMAN TURFMAN WILL NOT RACE IN ONTARIO THIS YEAR

LOUISVILLE, Ky., May 19—Because of the hostile feeling in Canada against Germans, due to the European war, John W. Schorr, of Memphis, Tenn., has decided not to campaign his string of thoroughbreds on the Canadian tracks this summer. Mr. Schorr won $30,000 in stakes and purses in Canada last year, his David Craig capturing the rich Dorval Derby. The Schorr stable includes, among others, David Craig, Luke McLuke and Leochares, said to be three of the best horses in training.

Former Local Nurse Home From Front

Miss Code Thompson, who, previous to the war, conducted a private hospital in this city, has returned from France, where she was engaged in a Field Hospital, and is to-day visiting her cousin, Dr. F. L. Robinson.

Miss Thompson arrived home from the front last Friday on a leave of absence.

THAW TAKEN FROM TOMBS

NEW YORK, May 19.—Supreme Court Justice Hendrick signed an order transferring Harry K. Thaw from his cell in the Tombs to the custody of the sheriff in Ludlow Street Jail.

This was done in response to a request from Thaw's counsel who had complained that Thaw was suffering from rheumatism and throat trouble, and did not receive sufficient exercise in the Tombs. This request of Thaw's counsel was made in the event that there should be further delay of the jury trial to test Thaw's sanity. As the State Attorney-General has now secured a stay of the trial, until Friday, at least, Justice Hendrick gave the order for Thaw's transfer to a more comfortable imprisonment.

In signing the order, Justice Hendrick said that inasmuch as Thaw is not a prisoner charged with any crime and the State does not wish to punish him, it would be better for Thaw's health for him to be in Ludlow Street Jail.

Justice Hendrick then adjourned the hearing on Thaw's mental status until June 7 to give the Attorney-General sufficient time to test the legality of the order for a trial by jury.

CITY HALL PARAGRAPHS

What's Doing in Civic Circles—Items of Interest Concerning Municipal Administration

The annual inspection of the Board of Works materialized this morning, the committee of which Ald. Green is charman started out on a tour of inspection covering each ward in the city.

Will Note Requirements.

All requirements in the way of new sidewalks, sewers, repairs to roads, etc., will be recorded by the Board and a list made for future reference. The work that will actually be accomplished altogether depends upon the elasticity of the appropriation.

Clean Up Campaign.

Sanitary Inspector Spence's clean-campaign has produced more than average results. There are a few obstinate cases which will probably be aired in police court some of these days.

A New Pavement.

The paving contractors started to tear up the paving on Hunter Street this morning. This will be relaid to a new grade so as to provide better drainage facilities.

Building Permits.

Miss D. Archambault has taken out a building permit for a house to be erected on Cedar Street at an estimated cost of $1200. Wm. James will construct a verandah at 421 Sheridan Street, at a cost of $40.

COULD RAISE BIG ARMY

LONDON, May 20.—Admiral Sir Cyprian A. G. Bridge, retired, in an interview said: "It is freely and jeeringly stated in Germany that by intervening in the present great conflict the United States could not throw any considerable weight into the scale of the strength of the entente.

"The population of the United States now is 100,000,000. If we deduct from this ample allowance for people of German and Magyar origin and connection, we shall find there is left something like 13,000,000 or 14,000,000 adult males between the ages of eighteen and thirty-five.

"It is not necessary to emphasize the expectation that of these at least 2,000,000 would promptly come forward as volunteers if their services were required.

"To send troops from the Atlantic seaboard of the Republic to a French port would need a voyage of only two and a half days longer than that made by the Canadian troops."

Barnes-Roosevelt Case Concluded

SYRACUSE, May 20.—It was "all over but the shouting" when the William Barnes - Theodore Roosevelt $50,000 libel suit was resumed yesterday. The shooting came with the summing up by Wm. M. Ivins for Barnes and John M. Bowers for Colonel Roosevelt.

When court adjourned late on Tuesday, both sides had rested and the attorneys told Justice William S. Andrews that they had no further testimony. The court announced that the day would be devoted wholly to summing up, after the usual routine motions were filed. Both sides had many motions to strike out testimony.

of our guns, but only ours (No. 4) was damaged. We shifted that night!

"There has been a terrific struggle going on in front of us for a week. Our poor Canadians have made an undying name, but at what a cost! Our infantry has been very badly cut up, and there have been many casualties among our artillery.

High Praise From Regulars.

"The British troops can't say enough that is good about our infantry; they tell us nothing stops them; they do not know what fear is.

"I saw Major Beattie (chaplain of 1st Brigade, Infantry), yesterday. He held a burial service at poor Dickey Boone's burial. The major looks and seems very well, but his nerves are pretty well shaken, like the rest of us. The strain is beginning to tell.

"The din about us cannot be imagined; it is like Bedlam, dozens of [illegible] can load and fire, with hundreds of the shells from the Germans contributing to kick up an ear-splitting row all day long.

"Our battery (4th, 1st Brigade) has been doing wonderful work. Our shooting is very accurate. On Monday last we fired nearly twelve hundred rounds in two hours. Isn't that 'going some?'

"I do not know of anything else to tell you. The situation seems to change very little out in front of us. One day we make a gain and the next the Germans. This promises to be the biggest battle of the war."

The rumbling noise referred to is caused by the Jack Johnsons.

CADETS ARE INSPECTED

whom the older lads among the Cadets had drilled, had been prominent in the Canadians' stand at Langemarck. As a member of the Board of Education, Lt.-Col. Miller promised to do everything in his power to see that the Cadets should be provided with better uniforms. The garb they were wearing had been an experiment, but now they had done so well something better should be provided.

The presentation of Capt. Cluxton's cup to Capt. Adams and No. 4 company was greeted with cheers.

The event was brought to a close with enthusiastic cheers for the King and for Major Gillespie:

The officers of the local Cadets are as follows:

Pictures of the 21st Battalion

Have Been Received by Trebilcock Bros.—Peterboro' Soldiers Clearly Shown

Something new and artistic in the way of war pictures has been received by Trebilcock Bros., in the form of a stock of coloured photographs depicting the 21st Battalion of the Second Canadian Expeditionary Force, which was stationed in Kingston for several months. These pictures, which are of a convenient size for framing, will prove of particular interest to this city on account of the large complement of Peterborough men that enlisted in the 21st Battalion, which is now in England, and in a short time will move over to France. It is a far cry from the battlefields of Europe to the peaceful parade ground that was used by the 21st Battalion while in Kingston, and which is so graphically portrayed in the pictures that have been put on sale by Trebilcock Bros. The pictures show the men in different formations and the whole is as clear and accurate as only an actual photograph can be.

Ladies Are Busy Making Supplies

The regular meeting of the Canadian Kitchener League, Tuesday evening, Y.M.C.A., was most successful. A large crowd of ladies turned out, which showed they were keenly interested in the work done by the League. Dr. Cameron gave a very interesting and useful talk to the ladies on surgical work. The doctor also explained and showed how the proper bandages were prepared for the military hospitals.

The League is hard at work already making supplies.

HIS STATEMENTS NOT SATISFACTORY

Austrian Arrested Last Night Has Been Remanded For a Week—Police Court News

Wasyl Gawryliuk, an Austrian, was arrested when he got off the C. P. R. train, here, last night. He could not give a satisfactory account of himself and was brought before Magistrate Dumble this morning on a charge of vagrancy and remanded for a week.

Chief Thompson will make some inquiries from the Registrar of Aliens. Gawryliuk did not have any papers on him to show that he had permission to travel.

Kept on Walking.

Wm McKewen was on his way from Kenora to Montreal and visited about the streets of Peterborough en route. He was arrested and charged in the Police Court this morning with being a vagrant.

"I will walk right out of town, sir, if you will let me out," said McKewen. "I have friends in Montreal. I just got out of the hospital at Kenora and am a cripple. I will go inside the hour."

McKewen was accused of begging from the citizens whom he met. Chief Thompson was satisfied to have him let off on condition that he "kept on walking."

"And thank you very much, sir," came from the prisoner, when he was told to get out.

Two Inmates Have Been Located

The two old gentlemen who left the County House of Refuge some days ago, and about whose safety some fears were expressed, have been located and brought back by the authorities.

Mr. Page was located at the home of his daughter in Otonabee where he wandered. He was to stay there a few days, but left rather suddenly and went to Springville. He was brought back to the House of Refuge from there.

Mr. Breene was found sitting beside the pavilion at the wharf at Lakefield. It is not known where he spent the several days he was absent from the House of Refuge. Fortunately neither one of the old men is any worse for the outing.

BANK CLEARINGS

WEDDING BELLS

SMYTH—THOMPSON.

A very quiet but pretty wedding took place at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. James Thompson of Bailieboro, in the Township of South Monaghan, on Wednesday, May 12th, 1915, when their eldest daughter, Clara E., was united in marriage to Mr. Thomas L. Smyth, of South Monaghan.

To the strains of a very pretty wedding march, played by Miss Tressa Thompson, the bride entered the spacious drawing room leaning upon the arm of her father, and was attended by Miss Daisy Thistlewaite of Peterborough, while the groom was ably supported.

The nuptial knot was tied by Rev. W. L. Wickett of Fraserville, in the presence of a few of the immediate relatives and friends.

After all had partaken of sumptuous repast the happy couple left amid showers of best wishes for Toronto, Owen Sound and points west, and on their return they will reside in the Township of South Monaghan.

We wish them every happiness and prosperity.

CAPT. TURNER AND TITANIC

NEW YORK, May 18.—A deposition made by Capt. Turner two days before he took the Lusitania out on her trial trip from this port was introduced as evidence before Judge Julius M. Mayer in the United States District Court in the proceeding started by the White Star Line to limit its liability for the sinking of the Titanic to approximately $97,000.

The deposition was taken in the office of Hunt, Hill & Betts, attorneys for some of the Titanic claimants, who are trying to prove that the Titanic was sunk through negligence both in the construction and navigation of the giant ship on her maiden voyage and that in consequence the White Star Line is not entitled to a limitation of liability but should be forced to pay the full amount of the claimants' demands which total about $18,000,000.

Should Change Course.

In support of their theory that those in command of the Titanic should have changed the ship's course after hearing of the presence of icebergs the attorneys for the claimants point especially to one part of the deposition of Capt. Turner, who at the time was in command of the Mauretania and left Liverpool two days behind the Titanic.

The witness said he received the same wireless messages concerning the presence of icebergs that the Titanic must have received, and immediately changed his course so he passed 70 miles south of where the Titanic struck.

His Replies Humorous.

The attorneys for the claimants then endeavoured to show through Capt. Turner that the speed the Titanic made through the ice fields was much too fast. The witness was asked if it were prudent for a big ship to proceed at the rate of 20 knots an hour when icebergs were reported in the vicinity, even on a calm, starlight night.

"Certainly not," he replied, "not if the ice is close. If it is 200 or 1,000 miles off, why then you can go ahead. Under other conditions it would be foolish to do so."

Again in reply to a hypothetical question as to whether it would be reasonably safe for a ship under the conditions prevailing in the Titanic accident to go 20 knots an hour, the captain replied:

"Twenty knots through the ice! My conscience, no!"

Canadian Trade Shows Increase

OTTAWA, May 20.—An increase of $10,000,000 in Canadian trade during April over the corresponding month last year is shown by figures issued last night. The total trade last month was $65,000,000. Exports of manufactured articles were valued at $18,000,000 compared with $4,000,000 for the same month in 1914, while exports of animals and their produce totalled $31,000 as against $17,751,000 for April of last year.

While exports increased, imports decreased considerably, totalling $28,891,000 as against $36,937,000 for April, 1914, the duty realized being $5,986,000 compared with $6,458,000 for April of last year. Of the exports that of animals and their produce bulked largest, being $3,312,000 compared with $1,860,000 in 1914.

War History In Picture

German Government Has Thousands of Photographs Covering All Phases

BERLIN, May 1.—(By mail) — No history that ever will be written about the great world war now raging will be quite as complete and striking as the huge collection of photographs, bearing on every conceivable phase of the conflict, that is being made by the general staff of the German Army.

Already more than 20,000 reproductions that range from soldiers in the trenches to wounded men in the hospitals have been gathered together and filed away for reference. The collection is constantly growing, and requires a staff of men to keep in order and supervise.

This pictorial record of the war is the finer because the Government is able, through the rules which it lays down for all photographers who go to the front, to secure a copy of every picture that is made by amateurs or professionals.

The general staff, therefore, has been able to pick and choose for its own gallery the cream of everything pictorial that concerns the war, and has acquired, not only accurate and interesting representations, but photographs that in a great many cases are artistic.

GERMANS ARE ON THE OFFENSIVE IN GALICIA

RUSSIANS' WEAK SPOT IS IN GALICIA WHERE GERMANS ARE ATTACKING

Enemy's Forces There Number 1,600,000 Men in Final Drive---Guns Bombarding Peremysl Forts.

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

PETROGRAD, May 21.—Russian troops are continuing their successes at both extremities of the 800-mile front extending from the Baltic Sea to Bukowina, but their situation in Galicia is still critical. It was admitted at the War Office yesterday that the German forces had effected a crossing of the San River, between Paroslau and Leszajsk, and had captured positions on the east bank of the river which they have strongly fortified.

The bombardment of Przemysl is increasing in violence. Shells are falling ten miles from the centre of the town. This shows that the Germans have advanced seven miles toward the main fortifications in forty-eight hours.

The arrival of Emperor Nicholas at the front has restored confidence that was rapidly disappearing, however. The Bourse Gazette epitomizes the general feeling as regards the Galacian situation by saying:

"Steel will bend, but never break. The Russians will prove worthy and valiant defenders."

The continual attacks by the Austro-German forces in Galicia have prevented the Russians, though heavily reinforced, from taking the offensive.

On the two hundred mile front, from Opatow to Kolomea, the Teutonic commanders have concentrated about forty army corps or 1,600,000 men. These include five corps of veterans from the army of Von Hindenburg, and five from the western theatre.

RUSSIAN STATEMENT.

PETROGRAD, via London, May 20.—An official statement issued from the headquarters of the general staff last night is as follows:

"In the Shavli region on the 17th and 18th engagements occurred on the Rossijeny-Kurszany front. We captured several enemy points of support, hundred of prisoners and some machine guns. German counter-attacks, southeast of Rossijeny were repulsed with heavy losses to the enemy. On the left bank of the Niemen there have been only skirmishes.

"On the Narew front and north of the Pllica calm has prevailed.

"The battle in the region of the left bank of the Upper Vistula and along the entire Galician front continued, attaining, on the 17th, extreme intensity in many regions. In the region of Opatow we repulsed strong enemy columns, which, on the 17th, retreated rapidly behind Iwaniska, pursued energetically by our troops.

ONE DEFEAT AT SAN.

"On the front of Tarnow-Brzegli-Rzszwadow and also on the Lower San we continue to engage the enemy with success. In the sector of Jaroslau and Leszysko the enemy succeeded in consolidating himself on the right bank of the San. South of Jaroslau we continue to hold both banks of the San.

"The bombardment of Przemysl continues. In the sector between Przemysl and the great marsh of the Dneister we successfully repulsed fresh desperate attacks of the enemy, who is striving for success there at all costs.

"On Monday, after a desperate fight, we dislodged the Germans from trenches of two of our battalions near Gousskow, which they captured the previous day.

"In the region of Drohobyez-Stry-Dolina the enemy, in spite of his immense losses, is continually hurling fresh masses of troops against our positions. At several points we successfully counter-attacked, taking several hundred prisoners.

"On the upper Bystroa and near the towns of Delatyn and Kolomea our opponent, exhausted by his efforts the previous days, remained passive on the 17th. On this front we made fresh progress. The number of prisoners taken and the amount of booty captured is increasing constantly."

Allies Made Some Progress On the Western Front

LONDON, May 21.—The French and British armies have passed another uneventful night and day on the western front. Some progress by the French was made near Beausejour by sapping and mining, and several German trenches were taken in the wood of Ailly, where the captured positions were held and consolidated.

Two German aeroplanes were brought down by artillery fire.

Between Nieuport and Arras the ground remains so badly soaked by the heavy rains that action has been practically impossible.

Official despatches received to-day from Field Marshal Sir John French state that the British made a further gain between Neuve Chapelle and La Bassee last night and that they are consolidating their new positions at Festubert and Quinque.

Has Power to Declare War Immediately

Special Cable to The Examiner:

Rome, May 21.—Armed with power to declare war immediately, the Italian cabinet was summoned into session at an unusually early hour to-day, while the nation rested on a volcano of excitement.

Wild rumours that hostilities already have begun kept Rome feverishly expectant throughout the night.

Until daybreak a crowd of two hundred thousand, aflame with the war spirit, surged through the streets, bearing aloft the flags of Italy, Britain, Russia, Serbia, Montenegro and Japan.

Baron Sonnino, the Foreign Minister, was the first to arrive at the government offices. Before the night the decision of the Government may be known. Military circles were expecting an order to begin hostilities within 24 hours.

LAST NIGHT'S WAR DESPATCHES

ROME, May 20.—It is rumoured that Austrian mountain batteries are already shelling Italian positions in the mountain passes. There were wild demonstrations throughout Italy to-night, all favouring war.

ATHENS, May 20.—A declaration of war will likely precipitate an immediate pitched battle between Austrian and Italian fleets which are both lined up in the Adriatic.

LONDON, May 20. — Official despatches from Paris to-night say there is no change on the battle line. Petrograd reports that the German offensive in the neighbourhood of Peremysl has ceased.

Takes Heavy Toll Of British Officers

Fortnight's Fighting Costs 285 Killed, 649 Wounded, and 24 Missing.

LONDON, May 10 (by mail)—Officers' casualty lists for the fortnight ended yesterday show how fierce the recent fighting around Ypres has been. This was equally true at the Dardanelles and in the Persian Gulf, the figures for the two weeks showing that 285 officers had ben killed, 649 wounded while 24 were missing—a total of 958.

Since the beginning of the war the British Army has had 2,246 officers killed, 4,177 wounded and 702 missing. This is a total of 7,185.

A feature of the casualties during the fornight is the loss among officers of high rank, three Brigadier Generals and twelve Lieutenant-Colonels having been killed outright or died of wounds.

In some regiments the recent casualties were very heavy, the Canadian contingent suffering most, losing 30 officers killed and 94 wounded. The Indian contingent has 31 killed and 51 wounded, mostly in the Persian Gulf, while the Australians had 8 killed and 36 wounded.

ITALY'S DECLARATION OF WAR ANTICIPATED TROOPS ARE ALL READY

Troops on the Frontier and the Navies in the Adriatic Have Not Waited for Diplomatic Action---Austrian Fleet Waiting Outbreak to Bombard Venice.

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

LONDON, May 21.—The Italian Chamber conferred upon the Government yesterday extraordinary powers in the event of the outbreak of war. This is considered a vote in favour of war, for which the Government has made all preparations and the prospects of which have aroused the greatest enthusiasm throughout Italy.

The German and Austrian Ambassadors were still in Rome last night, but according to despatches from Berlin, their one care now is to arrange for the safety of their nationals remaining in Italy.

A formal declaration of war, or perhaps action without a formal declaration, is momentarily expected. At any rate, all preparations for naval and military action have been made on both sides, and it is quite possible that while the Italian Premier, Signor Salandra, was explaining to the Chamber and the world the policy of his Government, the troops on the frontier and the navies in the Adriatic had anticipated diplomatic action.

Italy naturally will have to look first to her frontier, but it is expected that her entrance into the war will compel Austria, and perhaps Germany also, to withdraw some troops from the Russian frontier, where they are hammering at the Russian lines, particularly to the northwest and south of Peremysl, in middle Galicia. This hammering, according to the Austrian and German reports, is having its effect, for they claim that the Russians are being driven back from the River San in the region of Paroslau and that the circle around Peremysl is tightening.

At other parts of the front the Russians appear to be withstanding the attacks, and in the Opatow region in Southern Poland they have themselves taken the offensive. This, however, will be useless to them unless they can prevent the Austrians and Germans from making a further advance in Galicia.

In the west the bad weather has brought the operations almost to a standstill, and this has enabled the French and British to consolidate the ground they gained last week and early this week. While these gains were not excessive, military experts, on the whole, are satisfied with them, having proved to their own minds that when men and ammunition are concentrated in sufficient numbers and quantity the Germans can be driven back.

Over Sixty Thousand Already Gone Ten Thousand a Month To Go

OTTAWA, May 21.—Since the outbreak of the war Canada has sent 61,000 troops to fight the battles of the Empire. Of these 1,000 are in Bermuda, 500 in St. Lucia and the remainder in Britain, France and Flanders. The first contingent numbered 33,000 men. Since the departure of these last autumn, 8,000 reinforcements went forward. From the first of April to the present 20,000 men have been transported to Britain.

There is now across the Atlantic after allowing for casualties two complete army divisions or the number that the British authorities wish Canada to keep in the field.

TEN THOUSAND MONTHLY TO GO FORWARD.

From now on reinforcements at the rate of 10,000 men of all arms of the service will be sent forward each month to fill the gaps made by death, disease or capture. Enlistment is proceeding at as rapid a rate as equipment and competent instructors can be provided. In Canada in training and on home defence there are 49,000 men, or allowing 9,000 for home defence, reinforcements for four months. It is expected that there will be enlisted, armed and equipped an additional 10,000 men a month, so that we shall always have four months' reinforcements ready, or if the War Office will accept it, an additional army division for immediate service with two months' reinforcements ready.

TWO ARMY DIVISIONS THERE.

Some criticism has been made regarding opportunities provided for enlistment. In every centre in Canada if men wish to enlist the opportunity is offered, but in some places the number offering is much greater than in others. Competent instructors and equipment are difficult to procure. The two army divisions in the field have drained our militia forces of the greater number of competent officers and instructors, and this loss is being particularly felt at present. The question of equipment is a serious one. Men on active service, and there are 61,000 of them, must have the first call and the loss and destruction in equipment on active service is enormous.

NO UNNECESSARY DELAY.

Newly enlisted men can only hope to obtain equipment after men at the front are kept adequately provided. It will be seen that Canada's overseas army has assumed proportions that reflect credit on our patriotism and energy. There has been no unnecessary delay; every request of the War Office has been immediately filled and further offers made. Any delay or seeming delay has been due to conditions over which the Ottawa authorities had no control. But within nine months after the outbreak of war to raise, equip and transport 61,000 men to the front, and have in reserve nearly an equal number are results that do not give much room for criticism of the Government's work.

Major Gault Twice Wounded But Still Encouraged the Men

LONDON, May 21.—That Major Hamilton Gault continued to encourage and inspire his men after being twice wounded on May 8th, was the statement made by Pte. J. Shields, North Bay, a member of the Princess Patricas, who was wounded by shrapnel about the face on the same day on which Major Gault was disabled for the second time since going to the trenches. "I saw him lying down" said Pte. Shields, "fixing up what appeared to be a rather serious wound, but he looked up from time to time, giving all sorts of encouragement to his men."

On the day named, the Germans tried to advance under cover of their artillery, and gave the Patricias a heavy shelling near Ypres. Major Gault had taken command of the Patricias after Col. Buller was hit.

Pte. W. E. Owen, of the 13th battalion, Montreal, said that Major McCuaig and Capt. McCuaig, sons of Mr. J. C. McCuaig of Montreal, although both wounded, put up a stiff resistance against the efforts of the Germans to take their trench, and refused to retire. He also referred to Capt. Clark Kennedy's determined and perilous efforts in conveying the wounded to a place of safety.

Shields and Owen, together with Pte. W. Baker, 14th Montreal battalion, Corp. H. T. Ellins, of the 18th battalion (48th Highlands of Toronto), and other wounded Canadians, are in the hospital at Richmond.

FALABA INQUIRY HAS COMMENCED

LONDON, May 21.—Lord Mersey, president of the Board of Marine Arbitration, opened in London yesterday on inquiry into the sinking of the British steamer Falaba by a German submarine off St. George's Channel March 28. On this occasion over 100 persons lost their lives.

Solicitor-General Buckmaster, opening the case for the Board of Trade, outlined the story of the loss of the Falaba as already published and, continuing, said:

"A defenseless, unarmed, unoffending vessel carrying passengers, the Falaba, was torpedoed in broad daylight by a German submarine at a distance of not more than 100 yards. There are some deeds which speak louder than words, and the circumstances in which the Falaba was destroyed speak more strongly than any words I could use of the shame and disgrace of the people responsible for it."

Flew White Ensign.

Mr. Buckmaster declared that the submarine, when first sighted, was flying a white ensign and that she subsequently hoisted the German flag.

Referring to the attempts to launch boats from the Falaba, and the overturning of the first two boats which put out, Mr. Buckmaster declared:

"The submarine sent a torpedo through the struggling already in the sea, and the resultant shock caused the occupants of other boats to be thrown into the water. Not the least effort to save lives was made by the crew of the submarine, the members of which stood jeering at the struggling people in the sea."

Officers of the Falaba gave testimony corroborating the statements made by the Solicitor-General.

Happy Hawkins in the Panhandle

Our new recruit gave out his name as bein' Tom Smith, and seemed to be about Jim's age. He wore a thin built moustache clipped as stubby as he could get it, and a week's growth on the rest of his face. His clothes and all seemed careless and sloppy, especially his shoes which were an insult to any feet and his hat which was a black shell-back.

"Are you out o' money, or out o' taste?" sez I to him.

"I've got a few dollars," sez he; "but I don't want to buy anything till I get a month's pay."

"Let me stake ya to a decent hat and a pair o' ridin' boots, anyway," sez I. "The boys'll rawhide the life out of you with those trimmin's."

I was wearin' my regular clothes again; but had the suit Jim had bought me rolled up in a package, meanin' to amuse the boys with it some time. Tom Smith refused to let me get him the new stuff and then I noticed him closer, and saw the' was more to him 'n I had supposed. He had a nose, a mouth, and a chin, while his eyes were clear out o' common, though he wore 'em veiled as much as possible. His chin was square but not heavy and the angle of his jaw was clean-cut and strong, accordin' to my notion.

The general idea is that one o' these rock-bound, chopin-bowl chins is the sign a strong will hangs out to show it's ready for business inside; but that isn't the way it's proved out for me. My experience is, that one o' these heavy chins is able to weather a waggonload of either argument or clubbing; but that they mighty seldom belong to the fellers who can handle other men. I hadn't sat opposite our new hand very long on the train before it occurred to me that he was full competent to tell one hat from another, and that he probably knew better 'n anybody else why he chose to go slovenly.

About the first feller we saw when we lighted down off the train at Dodge was Albert Gingley, his scarlet whiskers waftin' about in the breeze about as promiscuous as a Fourth o' July celebration. He was wearin' a broad grin and pilotin' a little stranger who was about as much out o' place as a fish 'd be on stilts. He wore big, bull's eye glasses with black rims and hooks over his ear, a linen duster, a scraggy bunch o' full whiskers, and an umbrella.

"Hah-raya?" yelled Red, that bein' his way o' speakin' howdy. "Let me introduce you-all to Mister Foster, who is out here to see how the West is goin' to agree with him. Mister Foster, this is the boss and this is the owner. I'll tell you who the gentleman with the hard-boiled hat is as soon as I learn his name."

"His name is Tom Smith," sez I, "and he is part of our outfit from now on."

Red tilted back his head and eyed Smith the way a rooster looks at a kernel o'corn he's found in a strange place. "He's a gambler," sez Red, shakin' his head doleful.

"How can you tell?" sez I.

"'Cause that's the only excuse for a ridin' man wearin' such shoes and hat."

"He's goin' to get new ones here," sez I, speakin' more to Smith than to Red.

"Well, it'll help the appearance of the outfit just that much," sez Red. "We've got about forty ponies left, the mules spend most o' their time walkin' on their front legs, and the rest o' the stock is in good order, but hard to handle. Monody's got the waggon in town to-day, so if you choose to go out, you can ride in style."

Jim decided he wouldn't get much joy out of a Dodge City hotel after the way he'd been speeding up at Kansas City, so he said if Red would lend him his mount, he'd go out to camp himself, and as soon as Monody had been found and fussed over a little we said farewell to Mister Foster and started for camp. The mules sure were feelin' fine and runnin' away was the only gait they remembered; but Monody just let 'em have their head and chuckled at every bump.

Red was in gala mood and as Smith had wedged himself back in a corner I had to listen to all the high times Red had been havin' since our departure. He never did care much for what any one else had to say.

"Boss," he sez to me finally, "we can get Mr. Foster to come along with us for just nothin' at all but his board."

"Mister Foster?" sez I. "Well, what on earth can he do on a ranch to make him worth that amount?"

"He-huh-he-he!" squealed Red. "You wait till you see him and Shorty together. Ho-ha-hahah! He thinks 'at Shorty's some kind of a rep-tile, and Shorty thinks he's the worst pest ever invented. I've had him out to camp a time or two, and as soon as he arrives, Shorty leaves."

"Well, Shorty's worth a dozen of him," sez I, "and I'm not goin' to risk losin' Shorty on his account."

"Never you fear," sez Red. "Shorty saved my life once, and he'll stick to me no matter what happens. From what I hear about this Lion Head ranch, it's a slow proposition and we need somethin' to amuse ourselves with. Shorty's the best little guy in the world and I'd split my last bean with him; but the only way to have any fun with him is to keep proddin' him up. Then again, it would be an act of charity to give Mister Foster a berth through the winter."

"I can't see it," sez I.

"You don't know him," sez Red. "He's perfectly innocent! Why, he hadn't spoke ten words to me before I sez to myself, 'Red,' sez I, 'this here speciment is worth savin' '; and he sure is. He's got a little money and if you don't want to do an act of charity, why charge him his board. I'm puttin' it up to you because I don't savvy how Jim 'd feel towards a boarder."

"I don't think much o' boarders myself," sez I. "Have you met up with any other cow-punchers who'd like a winter's job? We're goin' to have plenty to do down there."

"Yep," sez Red, "I know three good ones and the' may be a new batch by now. A lot o' the boys trail up stuff clear from the Rio Grande, and then they deposit their earnin's at one o' the gamblin' hells, and begin to look for grub stakes through the winter. Phil McLaughlin, he decided he wouldn't neither drink nor gamble this time; so they knocked him on the head and robbed him. He's an Al man. Then there's a feller they call Mex and his pal Missourie; they're both good hands, and broke enough to jump at anything. How many do you want?"

"That ought to be enough," sez I, "if they are as good as you claim."

"This man Foster," sez Red, "isn't part o' the drag, and don't ya ever think it. He's edicated, can answer any question you can think up—that is, any uncommon question—and we could use him a lot durin' the winter."

"Red," sez I, "you seem to have made some mistake. If we were runnin' a finishing school for young ladies, why [illegible] the chance o' gettin' your [illegible] Foster at even a higher figger; but I want fellers who can ride out a blizzard and build corrals and sheds, and I don't want to be pestered by anybody 'at totes an umbrella. I simply can't abide umbrellas!"

"Do you know the difference between cows and buffalos?" sez Red. He was as obstinate as the only son of wealthy parents

"'Course I do," sez I, scornful.

"Tell the story, then," sez Red.

"Fiddle!" sez I. "A cow balances up like a regular, natural, animal, while the front quarters of a buffalo don't fit his hind ones. A buffalo allus looks to me as if he'd just plunged through a hay-cock and it had stuck to him. Their trail is mightily alike, I own up; but a cow leaves hair on her bed and a buffalo never does. The shape o' their skulls is different altogether, a buffalo's is broader and rounder 'n a cow's and their horns aren't a bit alike."

"Which has got the most bones?" sez Red.

I looked at him but he was the most in earnest I'd ever seen him. "Well, I reckon they've got the same number o' bones," sez I.

"That's where Mr. Foster's got the advantage of ya," sez Red; "he don't reckon, he knows. A buffalo's got more front teeth, more nose bones, and more ribs than a cow, and that hump thing isn't just to stick a few extra choice cuts of meat on; the bones in his back stick up that a-way so as his muscles can get leverage to hold up his head."

"Where did this here Foster get to know so much about buffalo" sez I.

"He don't know any more about buffalo than he knows about everything else. He's a book, I tell ya. Why, if that bunch o' coast cattle you can see kickin' up the dust down yonder happened to be elephants, he could tell ya offhand whether they were African or Asiatic. You can't fool him on nothin'."

"Is he a hunter?" sez I.

"Nn-oo," sez Red, who allus did hate to own up to anything he didn't want to admit, "you couldn't rightly call him a hunter. Fact is, the only weapon he knows how to handle is that blame umbrella—and you can't pry him loose from it."

"Then," sez I, "he don't go with us."

Red wouldn't speak all the way in. He had a lot o' kid ways about him no amount o' whiskers could hide.

The First Victim.

Chief Justice Doherty used to relate an experience which befell him during a visit to a country house in Ireland. His friend, the host, sent a car to the railway station to bring him to the place. He had not gone far when the horse became restless and finally upset the car into a ditch. The judge asked the driver how long the animal had been in harness.

"Half an hour, sur."

"I mean how long since he was first put in harness?"

"Shure, I've tould you—half an hour, sur," answered the driver. "An' the masther said if he carried ye safe he'd buy him."—Pittsburgh Chronicle-Telegraph.

Life Amid Deathlike Stillness.

In the faintless interior of Australia there is a "silence of the grave." This deathlike silence has a peculiarly depressing effect. If two men are camped and one of them goes to a distant township to get provisions while the other remains behind to look after the camp, the man who is to remain says to his friend in forcible, gold fields language: "Now, Bill, don't be long away. You know what kind of a place this is to live in by yourself," or words to that effect. If his mate is away for two or three days the silence gets on the man's nerves and in the end he shouts to make a noise. And often he is afraid of the sound of his own voice.—Exchange.

Called His Papa Down.

Little Willy is a bright boy and a saucy boy. His apt answers have often turned away wrath and often turned it upon him strongly. The other day his father was reprimanding him for some misdeed, and Willy was answering very saucily. The father became very angry and, seizing the youngster by the collar, said: "See here, young man, you must not talk like that to me. I never gave my father impudence when I was a boy." Willy was not fazed at all. With a cherubic smile he looked into papa's eyes and said, "But, papa, maybe your father didn't need it." 'Twas all off. Willy escaped punishment, while papa retired to another room.

A Test of Friendship.

Just before Artemus Ward's death Robertson poured out some medicine and offered it to the sick man, who said, "My dear Tom, I won't take any more of that horrible stuff."

Robertson urged him to swallow the mixture, saying, "Do, now—there's a dear fellow—for my sake. You know I would do anything for you."

"Would you?" said Ward feebly, grasping his friend's hand for the last time.

"I would indeed," said Robertson.

"Then you take it."

Ward passed away a few hours afterward.—"Recollections of the Bar-rooms."

CHAPTER XI.

Sing Wah and His Wiles.

JOHN DORR stood stupidly staring at the papers which he had found in the locked drawer of the dresser. His brief inquiries at the desk had only served to make the matter darker, so he had come back to the room to puzzle things out.

Painfully he set the facts in order before him. The first was that Ruth had gone to New York to deal with Everett about money for improvements to the "Master Key." The second was that she had evidently not been able to find Everett and had started west again. The third was that she had been in this very room. There lay the papers that represented the mine and its value. But how—where—how could it be?

His businesslike senses returned, and he proceeded to wire Everett's office in New York, with the result that he was soon in possession of his address in San Francisco.

"So Everett's here, too," he muttered. "That is stranger yet. I guess it was time I dropped in. Now to find Ruth!"

He thrust the packet of papers in his pocket and then withdrew them and locked them again into the dresser drawer. He had a dim notion that Ruth might come back for them. Then he telephoned to the St. Francis hotel and left word for Everett, who was reported to be out.

Still following what his common sense told him was the logical method of unraveling the tangle he went down to the desk and entered into conversation with the clerk. Meanwhile his eye ran down the register. Opposite the number of the room he now occupied he saw a heavily scrawled "Mrs. J. Darnell and daughter."

He frowned, and the clerk said sympathetically, "You must have a nasty headache?"

"I have," John returned. "Met with an accident in an auto that rather upset me." He laid his finger on the register and, controlling his voice, went on as if casually, "I see Mrs. Darnell stops here."

To Dorr's secret amazement the clerk became mysterious, leaning across the desk to whisper, "Ah, you know her?"

"I wanted specially to see her," John equivocated. "Is she here?"

"She is not, and she left in a very strange way," the clerk explained quietly. "She came here last evening with her daughter. I gave them the room you have now. Along in the late hours she suddenly came down with the girl unconscious and told me that she had been taken very ill and she was hurrying her to a hospital. There were a couple of men with her, and the house detective didn't like the looks of the whole affair, so he followed them."

"Was the girl very fair haired and—and beautiful?" Dorr managed to ask in an unnatural tone.

"Precisely," responded the clerk, suddenly matching his guest's manner. "If you want to find Mrs. Darnell maybe the house detective got her address—or the address of the hospital they took the girl to."

Presently, in response to a summons, appeared the detective, who scanned John's somewhat bruised face thoughtfully, saying nothing until the clerk explained that Mr. Dorr wished, if possible, to get into communication with Mrs. Darnell.

"The best I can do is to find the taxi driver for you," he said slowly, still studying John's stalwart figure. "He may be out on the stand now. Let's see."

As they passed out the detective continued hesitatingly, "Do you know Mrs. Darnell very well?"

There was that in the man's tone that made John pause before answering. He glanced at the cool, impassive face and caught the glint of the steady eyes. He took a sudden resolution.

"I believe you're really interested in this matter," Dorr said briefly. "Suppose we talk this over before hunting the taxi chauffeur."

"I was merely curious, that's all," was the noncommittal murmur.

"That girl is not her daughter," John continued. "I have reason to believe that it is Miss Ruth Gallon, the heiress to the 'Master Key' mine, whom she is abducting." His passion blazed forth in spite of his self restraint. "I must find her and save her."

"Might I ask what relation you are to the young lady?" asked the detective mildly.

"Do you know Mrs. Darnell very well?"

John stared at him and then realised the oddity of his actions and words. He briefly explained his position at the mine and his wardship of the heiress. He also went into detail as to what he suspected Wilkerson of, describing him carefully.

"He was one of them, sure enough," agreed the detective. "But young heiresses ain't being kidnaped days like these out of hotels like this."

"I may be mistaken," John assented wearily. "All I know of Mrs. Darnell is from occasional words dropped by Wilkerson. But I suppose we might get a clew as to where they went anyway."

After some search of the long line of taxis they came to one which the detective identified as the one Mrs. Darnell had taken the night before.

"Driver, take us where you did those fares who were in such a hurry last night," the detective ordered.

The chauffeur shook his head. "You can search me for the address," he returned. "There wasn't any."

The driver leaned out from his seat and went on earnestly: "You know how they jumped in and we rolled off. Well, it seemed it was a case of life and death, according to the woman, and I stepped on the machine and hastened some toward the North Pacific hospital. But when we got into Chinatown one of the men hailed me and told me to drive just as he said. He got out here in front with me, and when we reached a certain spot they all beat it."

"Can you take us to that spot?"

"I was just wondering to myself whether I could find it," was the response. "But I'll try."

He threw in his clutch and the car left the line and started up the hill toward California street. John Dorr leaned back against the cushions with a strange sense of at last being on his way toward his goal. He barely heard his companion's murmur, "Evidently they took her into the lower part of Chinatown."

We usually credit the oriental with little or no imagination, pointing to his art, his clothes and his language as evidences. As the fact runs, even the Chinese coolie uses the faculty of imagination more frequently than his white brother on an equal social plane.

Sing Wah, or Wah Sing, as he was indifferently called, was outwardly a stolid, dull eyed Chinese of uncertain middle age. His picture—it was in the gallery of every secret service office from Singapore to Philadelphia—was not less changeless of expression, nor more taciturn than he. Yet in spite of his somber clothes and general air of blank stupidity, Sing Wah was a man of mark, a man with a history replete with adventure and not too seldom with crime.

If the ordinary criminal could have an office or a store he would quadruple his profits. But the common run of rascals must steal and fly. Their post-office address is a figment. They are not at home when opportunity knocks. Sing Wah knew this, and it was his boast that for thirty years any one who wanted him, either day or night, could find him.

So he sat at the back of his little store night after night, blinking through the wooden screen at the various customers who came in to trade or barter. And year after year they came to his door, the pirate and the thief, the smuggler and the robber, and he took his toll of them and passed them on. Whither? Sing Wah never told. And because he did not tell they came back with greater loot and richer booty, and he again passed them through his store to vanish utterly from the haunts of men and the purview of the police.

Among the many hundreds who had availed themselves of Sing Wah's aid was Wilkerson, who, during dark periods of his career, had several times run athwart the barriers of the law and been compelled to seek refuge where he could.

Harry Wilkerson was not a fool. In some ways he was brilliantly endowed. He recognized Sing Wah's superiority to all others in the great game of outwitting the law. He perceived beneath the stolid mask the alert, active, studious mind which was ever vigilant, never forgetful, always intelligently watching the world that passed before his filmed eyes. The Chinese had, as well, acknowledged Wilkerson's adeptness and persistency. In several deals they had been partners to their mutual profit.

"You are a very good fellow, Harry," Sing Wah had told him once as they drank tea in a little room in the rear. "You are a smart man—almost as smart as I am. But you are too hungry. You cannot resist your appetites. Now, I"—he made a slight gesture of distaste with his lean brown hand—"I have no appetites."

Wilkerson nodded. "I guess you're right, Sing Wah. You even haven't any pride. You talk pidgin English to the tourists and the rest, instead of spanking the perfect English you know."

The dull eyes lit for a moment humorously. "I have always felt that I owed it to Oxford not to flaunt my education in a small tradesman's shop, don't you know?"

The imitation of the Oxonian drawl had been so natural that Wilkerson had slapped his thighs in delight. Thereafter he took a peculiar pleasure in watching Sing Wah's assumed silent stupidity and comparing it with what he knew to be the real person behind the dull features.

It was to Wilkerson that the Chinese had explained his reason for never changing his address, no matter how brisk the police might be. "And I have thought out a scheme which you will like," he went on. "Come with me."

It was then that he showed Wilkerson the cylindrical room which had a single door and revolved at a touch on a lever.

"Dangerous stuff!" commented Wilkerson. "If the police find that they'll sure land you."

Sing Wah's pallid lips opened in faint smile. "I built it for them. And the Chinatown guides know about it and will charge $10 extra for a trip through the horrors of the underground, as they call it." The Chinese sneered. "Let them play with such things while I use the brains heaven gave me. And yet, sometime that trick room may serve a purpose."

Thus it came about that Harry Wilkerson, driven to his wits' end to accomplish his designs, bethought him of Sing Wah and fairly drove Jean Darnell and Drake before him.

To Mrs. Darnell's credit it must be said that she rebelled strongly. But the stake was too great to risk, and she bitterly consented to Wilkerson's hastily outlined plan of hiding Ruth away somewhere in Sing Wah's precincts until they could once more get their plans into working order.

"You've got to do the trick."

Before she would leave the place she must indeed see Sing Wah himself.

"Will the girl be safe here?" she demanded.

The Chinese looked at her flushed and passionate beauty in silence until she repeated her question. Then he said quietly and in his own exquisitely modulated English: "You need have little fear. The servants are honest and discreet. And"—he let his eyes meet hers fully—"I think it is possible that she is safer now than she has been for some time. Good night, madam!"

While Wilkerson and Mrs. Darnell had been hurriedly arranging matters with Sing Wah, Drake had gone in search of lodgings nearby. He found them in what had once been a noted hotel, which had fallen into sad decay. It was in the faded rooms he engaged here that the three met to consult on the future.

"The first thing to do is to get hold of those deeds and papers she has in her grip," said Wilkerson. "I wonder you didn't think to get them before, Jean."

The woman's eyes lit with full hatred, but she made no answer. She watched him fuss with the locks of the hand satchel which she had indicated as the one in which Ruth carried her valuables. When it opened and Wilkerson thrust his clutching fingers downward into it Mrs. Darnell leaned forward as if in protest. He paid no attention to her, but continued his search with ever increasing haste. At last he straightened up with an oath so venomous and deadly that even Drake shrank back.

"The deeds aren't here," Wilkerson said thickly. "She's hidden them!"

"But where?"

This question seemed to break Wilkerson's almost steely intensity of purpose. The question put his whole problem before him in two words—lost where? He shifted his eyes from the emptied satchel to the curtained window. Instantly there leaped before him the picture of the truck turning slowly over in the gulch, of the huge billow of smoke, of the little lances of fire that charged through the dry undergrowth as if to pounce on the flames their prey. Was it for this that he was a murderer? The curtain blew inward before some vagrant wind from the bay, and Wilkerson drew back in Outflanks all others.

"What is it, Harry?" demanded Mrs Darnell, instantly taking alarm.

"Nothing," he said sullenly. "I was just thinking of something." He turned on Drake. "You've got to do the trick," he went on.

"How's that?" demanded the young

Wilkerson eagerly formulated his his plan, ticking off the points on the tips of his quivering fingers.

"First you're Everett, turned up at last. You find her"—

"In Chinatown!" sneered Drake.

"You can easily gain her confidence and get hold of the papers, and maybe"—

Drake laughed uglily. "I look like the kind of joker who would dress up as a banker and then proceed to renew my client's acquaintance in a Chinese joint. How am I supposed to know she's there? I tell you, Wilkerson, that you can't travel straight, even when it pays you. Why in God's name you ever took that girl to that place of Sing Wah's is beyond my comprehension. Any place would have been better. Now you have put the heads of all of us in a noose. You know what people will say when"—

"They'll say nothing," said Wilkerson furiously, and he proceeded once more to argue that Drake could easily continue to impersonate Everett and in that guise carry their scheme to its profitable conclusion. In spite of his eagerness and sophistry he was unable to move either Drake or Mrs. Darnell from their attitude of frightened contempt. At last Drake agreed to do his best to make Ruth trust him.

"But I don't like this impersonation business," he said firmly. "I might go to a hotel and hand in my broker's card and ask for an interview, but I haven't lost my senses."

"Well," growled Wilkerson, "just see to it that you worm out of her where those papers are."

BROOK FISH.

Why They Do Not Get Carried Away Out Into Deep Waters.

If you watch a school of minnows in some stream that has a strong and swift current you will see that they always head upstream. The reason is plain. Only by constantly swimming against the current can the brook fish remain a brook fish and not finally be carried out to sea, as the brook empties into a river, and the river empties into the ocean. But we cannot suppose that the brook fish knows that this will happen if it weakly allows the stream to carry it along. The young minnow is born with the instinct to resist the flow of the brook.

The most natural supposition would be that the instinct amounts to a tendency to push against the pressure of the water, but experiments have shown that it is not the sense of touch, but the sense of sight that plays the important part. The instinct of the brook fish is not to swim against the current, but to keep near the same "scenery" on the banks or bottom of the stream.

The experiments that proved this were performed some years ago by Professor E. P. Lyon. He put some little fish into a bottle filled with water and corked the bottle, which he then placed in an aquarium, whose sides had seaweed upon them. When he moved the bottle along by the wall all the fish crowded to the hinder end of the bottle. Of course there was no current in the bottle. The fish were trying to keep alongside that part of the seaweed covered wall that was opposite them before the bottle was moved.

In another experiment the professor reversed the conditions. He made a wooden box with wire netting at each end. Its bottom he covered with sand and its inner sides with seaweed. Then he put the fish into this box and placed it in a stream. As long as the box was kept still the fish headed against the current, but as soon as the box was allowed to float away in the stream the fish inside it swam in any direction. While the box was still the fish, unless they made head against the stream, were carried along past their landmarks on the sides and bottom of the box. But when the box floated along with them they carried their landmarks with them, and so they made no opposition to being swept along by the stream.—Youth's Companion.

BURDOCK BLOOD BITTERS.

When the blood becomes impure the first symptoms which manifest themselves are a breaking out of the various forms of skin trouble such as boils, pimples, abscesses, ulcers, etc., and the only treatment you can use is some sort of a good blood cleansing remedy which will put the blood into a perfect condition, and thus eliminate all the different poisons from the system which cause these different eruptions to occur.

The best blood cleansing remedy on the market to-day is Burdock Blood Bitters. All we ask you is to try it and be convinced. Thousands have used it during the past forty years, and have nothing but praise for its curative powers.

Mrs. John Fitzgerald, Plantagenet, Ont., writes: "I am one woman who cannot speak too highly of Burdock Blood Bitters. I was covered with boils, and could not get rid of them. I was advised by a friend to try B.B.B. which I did, and I can truthfully say that it completely cured me. I have never had a sign of a boil since."

See that our name appears on both the label and wrapper as there are many imitations placed on the market which are said to be "just as good."

United States Experiment With New Chemical Bomb

CHICAGO, May 21.—Beginning this week, a series of exhaustive experiments are being conducted at Fort Sheridan, under the supervision of United States army officers, with the chemical bomb recently invented by Dr. L. R. Fowzer. Condemned cattle are the subjects. Dr. Fowzer declares their death will be instantaneous.

A representative of the War Department arrived in Chicago yesterday and conferred with Dr. Fowzer for five hours. It developed that Government chemists have been working for a year to perfect a bomb almost identical with Dr. Fowzer's.

"I would not be afraid to tell any one everything used in the bomb," said Dr. Fowzer, "and defy production of the bomb. The manufacturing process is the secret. I am glad the United States Government is investigating my bomb. This country can have it for a tithe of what it would cost any foreign nation.

"My bomb will accomplish more toward eliminating war than your pleas for peace. When science proceeds in making war so deadly that men will recoil from it in horror, then peace will have made gigantic strides."

While Dr. Fowzer's claim pertains only to the chemical properties of the bomb, the method of loading and shooting it from a cannon is something which he expects will require considerable experiments. This problem, however, seems to have already been solved by the Government. The containers and a thin steel casing have been perfected.

THE BATTLE FRONT

Petrograd, Russia, May 21, via London.

The number of head and arm wounds of the men at the front is enormous, for men in trenches expose only their heads and arms. Many hundreds are hit in the head and death does not result from the wound. Occasionally one may see the slightly wounded walk back with heads bound up or arms in slings. Motor trucks loaded with wounded tear along the roads leading back from the extreme front. Perhaps forty per cent of the wounded are back on the firing line after three months' care and rest in a hospital. It all depends on a man's health and blood. If the blood is pure and good, the soldier gets the first aid, proper treatment and his wounds heal by first intention.

Good blood is everything to every man. It means fresh strong nerves, good digestion, good circulation, [illegible] Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery marvel at the way it checks blood diseases. See a man to-day with skin all broken out; see him a few weeks later after using the "Discovery," his skin is all cleared up, eyes bright, and he is contented with himself.

The formation of good health is good blood! Are you pale? Are you weak? Are you no longer ambitious or energetic? Have you pimples or boils? Do you suffer from headaches, low spirits? Then you are anaemic—your blood is thin, lacking in healthy, strength-giving red corpuscles. Then your blood is impure—and your liver is not up to its task of clearing the blood from the poisons accumulated.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is a temperance remedy that will restore to you rich, health-giving blood—a remedy proved by experience (in tablet or liquid form). It is a glyceric extract of roots from our forests, known to science as those which will best give the stomach, liver and bowels needed help.

Dr. Pierce's medicines are manufactured in Canada, at the World's Dispensary, Bridgeburg, Ont.

Providence Journal: "The minute Italy's army crosses or attempts to cross the Austrian border it will create a third Teutonic battle front to which an immense amount of military attention must be given by the Kaiser and his friends."

"With the Allies."

Philadelphia Record: "Italian sympathies are undoubtedly with the Allies, but she has no sufficient cause for grasping the sword."

"Anxious to Get In."

Atlanta Constitution: "There is a deep-rooted impression that Italy is anxious to get into the struggle in the hope that at the end of the rainbow there is even a bigger pot of gold than the provinces whose complete restoration she is asking."

"Shouting for War."

New York Tribune: "Garibaldi's Italy seems reappearing under our eyes. The people in the streets are shouting for war, for a war of libration, as they did when there was Venice to be redeemed and Austrian intruders still dominated the land from the Po to the Alps."

"Political Intrigue."

New York Evening Post: "The sudden Cabinet change in Italy has all the marks of being the result of political intrigue. To expose and confound this was, apparently, the purpose of the Prime Minister is placing his resignation in the hands of the King."

Woman Defies Lawless Band of Cattlemen

OMAHA, NEB., May 18.—Mrs. Bertha Green Connell, of Omaha, widow of Ralph Connell, is fighting a battle for her home, her children and her good name in Tularosa, N. M., where her husband was assassinated several months ago as the twentieth victim in a feud which has been waged for forty-nine years between cattlemen and farmers of that section. Mrs. Connell, whose husband was on the side of the farmers, had been warned to leave the country on penalty of death.

"But I am not going to be driven from my home," says Mrs. Connell. "My husband built the house and brought me to it. He purchased the land and paid for it. They may kill me just as they did my husband, but they will not scare me. I have got beyond the state of fright. Right here I remain until my husband's murderers are brought to justice."

Connell's father, W. J. Connell, is one of the most prominent lawyers in Nebraska. Some years ago the young man went to New Mexico, liked the country around Tularosa, and settled in that town, after buying a large tract of land which was irrigated with water from Tularosa Creek. He took sides with the farmers in the irrigation ditch against their enemies further up stream, and last summer, while driving a bunch of cattle along the public highway, was shot from ambush and killed. The murder occurred in front of the ranch of J. V. Porter, and Porter, as well as O. M. Talley, his hired man, are being held for the crime.

JURORS THREATENED.

Three Grand Juries failed to return an indictment against the two men, but a fourth was called and Porter was indicted. It is said warning had been issued to all grand jurymen that if an indictment was voted against any one for the Connel murder there would be an increase in the number of men who have been killed in war between the factions.

"They sent gunmen into town to pick a quarrel with my husband and shoot him down when he would defend himself, but their schemes all failed," says Mrs. Connell. "My husband did not drink, never carried a pistol, and was always law abiding. He would not get into a fight with their hired thugs, so they watched their chance and assassinated him outright.

"But I am going to remain right here. They may kill me as they threaten to do, but they can't run me out."

The feud between the two interests had its beginning in 1866. Several years prior farmers settled at the mouth of Tularosa canyon and built an irrigation system. The Legislature granted the community all the water in Tularosa Creek, and that act yet remains on the statute books of New Mexico.

The colony was very successful and soon others, attracted by their prosperity, came to the place. The cattle men settled on the creek above Tularosa and began draining all the water for their own use, in disregard of the allotment to the farmers downstream. The farmers complained, but without result. The cattle men were determined and so were the farmers. It was one of the first clashes between the cattle and farming interests, and it was waged with fierceness.

The fighting was of the real wild west sort. There was shooting from hip, roping, hanging long-distance shooting with rifles, and one or two slashed throat. "Billy the Kid," "Cherokee Bill" and other noted outlaws of the south-west took part, always being on the side of the cattle men. In fact, the farmers charge that the cattle men paid gunmen of this class to assist them in their war for the extermination of the farmers. The law was ignored and defied because the county seat was five days' travel over the mountains, and sheriffs and their deputies never came that way.

The war has been waged for forty-nine years now, and Ralph Connell was the twentieth man to be killed. To date no woman has suffered death, but Mrs. Connell is expecting, every time she leaves her house, to be murdered.

Her enemies have made cruel attacks upon her reputation since they failed to run her out of the country. The report that she had done away with her husband was circulated by the cattlemen, and when a trusted guardian of the children died of heart failure one night, an autopsy was necessary to prove baseless the reports that she was responsible for the guardian's death. But the farmer-friends of her husband are standing by the wife and in Tularosa no attention is paid the calumnies pronounced against her.

But so far from abandoning the fight after the threats made against her, Mrs. Connell has entered into the affray with redoubled vigor. Having been an active business partner of her husband, she now knows just exactly what to do to keep going what her husband had begun.

"I will win, and I won't be killed either," she writes her husband's parents in this city.

ECZEMA WAS CURED TWELVE YEARS AGO

Dr. Chase's Ointment Proved to be a Permanent Cure

The old idea of eczema being a disease of the blood has been pretty well exploded by the record of cures made by Dr. Chase's Ointment.

Some doctors still advise internal treatment, but the results are slow and uncertain, and too often a lamentable failure. With Dr. Chase's Ointment it is different. You apply the ointment to the sore parts. It cleanses the sores, and soon sets up the healing process. In a few days you can see with your own eyes the wonderful change that is taking place and are encouraged to keep up the treatment until the cure is complete and the sores replaced by smooth, natural skin.

It is wise to look after your general health, keep the bowels regular and the blood rich but you can depend on Dr. Chase's Ointment to cure the eczema if you will do your part and apply it regularly.

Mr. W. H. Roberts, Charlottetown, P.E.I., writes: "I can recommend Dr. Chase's Ointment to anyone suffering from itching skin disease. I had eczema on my leg and suffered terribly from the itching. I had a doctor treat me for four months without relief, and I was getting worse all the time. A second doctor gave some relief for a time, but made no cure. I tried several advertised treatments, but without relief until I used Dr. Chase's Ointment. This ointment cured me in a month. That was twelve years ago, and I have never had a sign of the old trouble since.

'Since then we have always kept Dr. Chase's Ointment in the house, and find it invaluable for chafing, chilblains, insect stings and burns. I would not be without it if it cost $5 a box."

"This is to certify that I am personally acquainted with Mr. W. H. Roberts, and believe his statement regarding the use of Dr. Chase's Ointment to be true and correct." —(Signed) Alex. Horne, Justice of the Peace.

AN EASY WAY TO GET FAT AND BE STRONG

The trouble with most thin folks who wish to gain weight is that they insist on dragging their stomach or stuffing it with greasy foods; rubbing on useless "flesh creams," or following some foolish physical culture stunt, while the real cause of thinness goes untouched. You cannot get fat until your digestive tract assimilates the food you eat.

Thanks to the remarkable new scientific discovery, it is now possible to combine into simple form the very elements needed by the digestive organs to help them convert food into rich, fat-laden blood. This master-stroke of modern chemistry is called Sargol and has been termed the greatest of flesh-builders. Sargol aims through its re-generative, re-constructive powers to coax the stomach and intestines to literally soak up the fattening elements of your food and pass them into the blood, where they are carried to every starved, broken-down cell and tissue of your body. You can readily picture the result when this amazing transformation has taken place and you notice how your cheeks fill out, hollows about your neck, shoulders and bust disappear and you take on from 10 to 20 pounds of solid, healthy flesh. Sargol is absolutely harmless, inexpensive, efficient. Leading druggists of Peterborough and vicinity have it and will refund your money if you are not satisfied, as per the guarantee found in every package.

Caution!—While Sargol has given excellent results in overcoming nervous dyspepsia and general stomach troubles it should not be taken by those who do not wish to gain ten pounds or more.

Slayer of Stepmother Gets Life Term

ST. LOUIS, May 18.—The first thing Jesse Coggins, 16, did after a jury in Judge Cave's court had found him guilty of struggling his stepmother, Mrs. Olive Coggins, and had fixed his punishment of imprisonment for life, was to roll a cigarette.

The jury reached its verdict after forty-five minutes of deliberation. The boy manifested no emotion or concern when the verdict was read. None of his relatives was at his side. His father, Alfred J. Coggins, who was the principal witness against him at the trial, was in the court room.

Young Coggins was immediately taken to the cage behind the court-room. He was rolling a cigarette when a reporter asked him what he had to say about the verdict. "Well, I'll tell you," he said, "it is just as I expected."

He was asked if he thought he was insane, as his attorneys had undertaken to establish in the trial. "Oh, no," he said, as he lighted his cigarette.

Coggins' father came to the cage "Do you blame me for this?" he asked.

"Well, you drove me away from home," said young Coggins.

"You stole my clothes and ran away from home," said his father.

Deputy Sheriffs, to prevent a quarrel, told the elder Coggins to go away. He left the court room and the building.

Circuit Attorney Harvey, in his argument to the jury, did not, on account of the defendant's youth, ask the death sentence.

The crime was committed January 5, at the home of Mrs. Coggins. Her body was found about five hours after her death by her husband, on his return home. A handkerchief had been drawn tightly around her neck. A second handkerchief had served as a gag and a third was tied around her face. One of the handkerchiefs bore the initials "J. E. C."

Coggins' father vowed vengeance and assisted the police in their search for the boy. He was traced to a lodging house on Walnut street, where he had been staying. It was learned that he had been there several hours after killing the woman. In his suit case was found a number of articles that had been stolen from the stepmother's house. The motive for the crime appeared to have been robbery.

Three days later young Coggins was arrested at Argenta, Ark. He made a confession. He said he killed his stepmother in a quarrel and then robbed the place. In the trial an attempt was made to show that his act was due to pre-natal causes.

SOAP IS BAD FOR THE HAIR

Soap should be used very sparingly, if at all, if you want to keep your hair looking at its best. Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali. This dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle, and ruins it.

The best thing for steady use is just ordinary mulsified cocoanut oil (which is pure and greaseless), it's cheaper and better than soap or anything else you can use.

One or two teaspoonfuls will cleanse the hair and scalp thoroughly. Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in. It makes an abundance of rich, creamy lather, which rinses out easily, removing every particle of dust, dirt, dandruff and excessive oil. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and it leaves the scalp soft, and the hair fine and silky, bright, lustrous, fluffy and easy to manage.

You can get mulsified cocoanut oil at any pharmacy, and a few ounces will supply every member of the family for months.

BOYS WILL BE BOYS

and want their clothes as all healthy boys do. It is a worry to mothers to keep their little ones decently dressed. The wear and tear on their clothes is prodigious. The best way for mothers to do is to have the clothes looking make dyed. This we can do for them at small cost. Also the garments of adults. In fact, we do a general business of Cleaning and Dyeing, and our work is praised for its thoroughness and promptness of delivery.

TO-NIGHT MAY SEE WAR DECLARED

ITALY'S WAR CABINET IN SESSION TO-DAY

THE ULTIMATUM TO AUSTRIA MAY COME BEFORE NIGHT

War Cabinet of Italian Government Held Brief Session This Morning and Will Meet Again This Afternoon---British Drive Towards Lille is Under Way Again---Germans Make Temporary Gains But Counter Attacks Drive Them Out.

ALLIES ON OFFENSIVE GAIN NEW GROUND

Special Cable to The Examiner:

DECISIVE ACTION EXPECTED

ROME, May 21.—An utimatum may be on its way to Austria before night. The cabinet took a recess until late this afternoon after holding a brief morning session. The Senate met this afternoon to ratify the action of the Chamber of Deputies in approving the government's programme. It was understood that the ministry would take decisive action immediately after the Senate adjourned. The German and Austrian ambassadors had not left Rome early this afternoon.

PARIS, May 21.—French official.—The great battle around Ypres and Arras, halted by the three days rain storm, has now resumed with desperate fighting along the Yser Canal.

The Germans braved a heavy machine gun fire and drove the allied troops out of their advanced trenches north of Ypres. The war office admitted this temporary set back in an official statement this afternoon, but declared that the allies counter attacked and drove the enemy out of the captured ground. Toward night the allies took the offensive in the same region and won new ground.

The British have resumed their forward movement toward Lille. In a hot engagement near Neuve Chapelle they advanced slightly in the direction of Aubers.

WILL RETURN TO ITALY

NEW YORK, May 21.—Saying, "My country wants me—I must go," William Marconi, the wireless inventor, abruptly left the United States district court to-day to sail for England. At noon to-day he received a message from the ambassador and the King to return to his fatherland to take charge of the entire wireless system there. He will sail to-morrow morning.

HEAVY LOSSES OF THE ENEMY

PETROGRAD, May 21.—An official statement says: "In the fighting of the past three weeks, since the beginning of the operations of the enemy in the Carpathians, their losses on May 10, May 11 and May 12 and May 13, during which the fighting lost some of its intensity, averaged ten thousand a day. On the other seventeen days they were much heavier, especially during the period between May 16 and May 19, when they amounted to several tens of thousands daily. Certain regiments of the enemy have been reduced to a single company. Their total losses during this period, including forty thousand prisoners captured by us, have undoubtedly reached to one-fourth or perhaps one-third of their total strength."

"THE GREATEST PERIL"

LONDON, May 21.—Commenting to-day on the criticism given by Lord Northcliffe's papers against Lord Kitchener, the Daily News says: "Lord Northcliffe is to-day the greatest peril which threatens the British Empire, more sinister than even the enemy in the field."

OTTAWA, May 21.—The Canadian casualties reported up to ten o'clock this morning totalled 5255. The killed number 741, the wounded 3386, and the missing 1128.

The Princess Patricia's Canadian light infantry as constituted when it left Ottawa, has practically ceased to exist. Some reinforcements shipped to the Pats have been drawn from the third contingent. The recent action in which the regiment was engaged must have been a heavy one. Eighteen names were included in the list of yesterday's killed in action, and 34 to-day, making a total of 52 killed in one day's fight.

LONDON, May 21.—In a despatch from the Rome correspondent of the Exchange Telegraph Co., it says: "Premier Salandra this morning obtained the royal signature to a decree suspending the diplomatic immunity of the Austrain and German ambassadors to the Vatican, who leave to-morrow."

LONDON, May 21.—French war ships have appeared off Smyrna and are again hurling shells at the harbour forts. Despatches from Chios to-day reported the bombardment of other Turkish towns along the Asia Minor coast. Reinforced by French Detachments the British expeditionary forces are engaged in a new battle with the Turks at the southern end of the Gallipoli Peninsula.

EPIDEMIC AT BELLEVILLE SEEMS TO BE AT END

No New Cases of Spinal Meningitis Recently and no Carriers Have Been Discovered in Past Ten Days.

FIVE HAVE RECOVERED

BELLEVILLE, May 21.—Very encouraging news was received this morning from the spinal meningitis cases. For some time there have been seven cases in the local hospital and for the last couple of days five of these patients have been able to be walking about and to-day they will be allowed passes and leave. Some of them have been given a month's leave of absence. All are apparently eager to get back into their respective companies. The physical condition of these men is excellent, considering the illness they have just passed through. These men are Privates McDinnick, Beard, Milberry, Scruver and Murray.

There have been no outbreak of any new cases for some time, and no carriers have been discovered for the last ten days. Apparently this epidemic is completely obliterated.

Out of the 80 carriers, who were at one time at the exhibition camp, the number has dwindled down to 30.

There has not been one case of spinal meningitis amongst those who were found to be carriers.

PTE. ADAMS IS KILLED

Son of Well Known G. T. R. Conductor Who Resides Here, Gives His Life For Empire in Recent Fighting

IN THE 10th BATTALION

A private telegram from Ottawa this morning brought the news that Pte. Charles H. Adams of the machine gun section of the 10th Battalion, son of Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Adams, 315 Pearl Avenue, had been killed in action. There were no particulars as to the engagement in which he was taking part when he was killed or as to the date.

Pte. Adams was an electrical engineer. He has been in Winnipeg for five years and enlisted there with the Engineering Corp. He was later transferred to the machine gun section of the 10th Battalion. He was born at Lindsay 24 years ago and received his earlier education in the Public and High schools of that town. After taking his matriculation he attended Woodstock College and was a graduate of that institution.

His father, who is Conductor C. H. Adams of the Grand Trunk Railway, having charge at the present time of a train on the Toronto-Port Hope run, is well known in Peterborough and this district, and Mr. and Mrs. Adams and family will have the sympathy of their many friends in their bereavement.

Besides his parents, Pte. Adams has two sisters, Miss Evelyn and Elsie, residing here, also one brother, Mr. William H. Adams, of Victoria, B.C.

EVIDENCE IN MANITOBA CASE

Witness Says Still For Which Government Paid $230,100 Was Worth $92,312

WINNIPEG, Man., May 21—At the Royal Commission of inquiry re the parliament buildings, T. B. Lyll of the Manitoba Bridge and Iron Works, whose firm supplied most of the steel for the north and south wings and underneath the dome, presented significant estimates of the costs. These admitted that $92,312 would have been a fair price for steel for which Kelly and Sons got $230,100 from the Government.

Another significant exhibit was numbered 57, the bond for half a million dollars of Kelly and Sons, signed by Thos. Kelly and his four sons, the same parties that were a party to the contract. The bond was signed by not one of these.

Chief Justice Mathers remarked: "That doesn't seem to be much curity."

STREET CAR BUMPED A BAKERY WAGGON

Wm. Nesbitt, driver for Gilgour's Bakery, received a shaking up this morning when a street car tilted him off the seat of his delivery waggon near McDonald's mill on George street. It was stated that in some way the outfit found its way on to the track and in front of the car. No serious damage resulted.

Fate of Przemysl is at Stake in Terrific Battle

Three Hundred Thousand Troops Locked in Fight That Threatens Fortress Won by Russians After the Most Noted Siege of the War

ENEMY'S BIG LOSSES

Special Cable to The Examiner:

PETROGRAD, May 21. — Three hundred thousand troops are locked in a great battle north of Perasiau that may decide the fate of the fortress of Przemysl, won by the Russians after the most noted siege of the war.

In the face of terrific artillery fire, the Austro-German left wing has thrown a small body of troops across the River Lubaczowka, north of Jaroslau. The crossing was forced near Radava, the enemy suffering enormous losses.

Russian counter-attacks have hurled the enemy back to the bank of the river, where they face the danger of annihilation or capture.

Official despatches describe the artillery fighting north of Jaroslau as the most violent since the enemy's drive on Przemysl began. The Germans swept the plain south of Stepiavi with continuous fire that forced the Russians to abandon their positions north of the Lubaczowka and retire to the south bank, where they are successfully resisting all attempts by the Austro-German forces to make further advance.

General Mackensen has almost ceased his attacks on the forts guarding Przemysl from the west. Apparently the German commander is awaiting the outcome of his attempted enveloping movement on the east bank of the San.

"Fighting in Southeastern Poland, in Southeastern Galicia, and in the Courland continues to our advantage," the War Office stated to-day.

IN AMBULANCE CORPS

Word has been received of the death in action of a former Peterborough boy in the person of Pte. Chas. L. Pitts of the 2nd Field Ambulance, C.E.F., who was killed at Langemarck while engaged in attending wounded Canadian soldiers. Pte. Pitts lived in Peterborough for about eighteen months, residing at 548 Aylmer Street, and was a member of St. Peter's Total Abstinence Society. He was a staff sergeant, but reverted to the rank in order to enlist. A brother, Mr. Wm. J. Pitts, resides at 268 Havelock Street, Toronto. The dead soldier had many friends here, who will be sorry to learn of his death.

LOCAL RECRUITS GO TO BARRIEFIELD ON TUESDAY NEXT

Surplus Overseas Men to be Formed into New Battalion at Kingston Camp—8th C.M.R. and 26th Battery Will Be There Too.

TO-DAY'S MILITARY NEWS

The local overseas recruits who have enlisted in the past few days will go to Barriefield Camp, Kingston, on Tuesday, according to orders received by Lt.-Col. Walker yesterday. The surplus recruits from the division now number 700, and it is the intention to organize them into a new overseas battalion, which will be recruited up to strength during the camp. Immediately after recruiting will commence for another new battalion in this division, as announced yesterday.

A Kingston despatch says:

KINGSTON, May 20.—Barriefield military camp will open on Tuesday next, May 25th, with about 3,000 men under canvas, and for a period of training covering nearly five months. The advance party will go into camp on Saturday next, with the entire administrative staff under Colonel Hemming.

At last all the details in connection with the camp have found their way to publicity, and Barriefield commons will be occupied by a large force of troops under training for overseas. No volunteer units will go into camp this year, and all training will be under active service conditions.

"BILLIE RITCHIE'S MAKE-UP IS ALL HIS OWN."

Records show conclusively that he was the originator of his own and of Chaplin's costume and style of acting.
Just a word about our universal comedian. See him at the Tis-It Monday, May 24th.

Billie Ritchie first used his present make-up in 1907, three years before Charles Chaplin, of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Co., was born. This statement is not made with advertisement, but merely to meet statements which have credited Chaplin with being original, and to restore to Billie Ritchie, who has always been acclaimed by both the American and English press and public, as the originator of his own peculiar style of comedy, who has made millions laugh, and who to-day stands alone in this unique class of fun-makers. Billie will be seen at the Tis-It Theatre Monday, May 24th. Come and meet him.

Death of a Former Resident In Rochester

Special to The Examiner:

BUFFALO, N.Y., May 21. — Miss Emma Stone, aged fifty, for nine years a resident of Peterborough, and afterward of Cobourg, died last midnight following a brief illness, at her home in Rochester, N.Y. She leaves three brothers, one Percy Stone, of Cobourg, and three sisters, including Mrs. Charles Tinslin of Smith's Falls. Interment will take place Saturday in Buffalo.

The Medical Convention

From what can be learned of the important medical convention which opens in this city on Tuesday next, it is safe to say that all indications, so far, point to its being one of the largest, if not the largest, convocation of the kind ever been held in Canada. The registration indicates representation from most influential centres, and altogether a spirit of the most optimistic character seems to pervade the active members of the local committees. Where unforseen engagements will prevent the attendance of some of the bright lights of the profession, the most cordial expressions of good wishes for the success of the convention is invariably sent.

DO YOUR DUTY TO-MORROW.

Our Canadian soldier-heroes, in "saving the situation" created a situation for us to save, and to help save, to-morrow, especially.

These who did not lay down their lives in the death mists and shrapnel showers on the Langemarck battlefield suffered wounds that are now calling for healing and dressing.

That is the situation their courage and self-sacrifice have created; and that is the situation we are called upon to-morrow to help deal with.

The wounds of the soldiers in the hospitals, where the Red Cross "ministering angels" do their work of healing and mercy, with bandages and other soothing agencies, cry out for relief. The Red Cross is the most effective and powerful agency of this form of relief.

To be of the greatest good to the greatest number it must have money; means to purchase the urgently demanded agencies of relief.

You are enjoined and urged, and entreated especially to-morrow, to put yourselves in their places. Think how you would feel if lying helpless in a hospital bed, you knew that those you know at home were thinking of you and resolved to make some little sacrifice of some petty personal pleasure to help you, who had sacrificed so much more.

And think how you would feel if those you know at home should turn the cold shoulder; should not think of you in fact of the special appeal made in your behalf—to-morrow, Red Cross Tag Day.

Think of these things; think of the easy bit of duty you are called upon to do, and then of the stiff bit of duty done by our soldier lads, laid on their back with broken limbs or other wounds that call out for help—for the help you are asked to give to-morrow in contributing to the funds of the Red Cross Society.

GERMANY'S DISAPPOINTMENTS.

Germany's mad ambition of world "domination," has collapsed most ingloriously. One of her chief ambitions—the motive influence that led to the expenditure of billions to build a big navy—was that of establishing a great colonial German outer empire. Germany had made a good beginning. When the war that was to bring the world under German domination began, Germany had colonial possessions in various parts of Asia, and Africa, and the Southern Seas, with an aggregate area of nearly 1,400,000 square miles. Among the first results of the war, has been the wresting of about nine-tenths of Germany's colonial area from her hands by the allied forces. Early in the war, little brown Japan, blinded the apple of Germany's eye, by seizing Kaio Chow, the centre of the expected radius of Germany's sphere of influence in the Far East. Then followed the loss of the Congo region, East and West South Africa—Togoland, the Cameroons; and Australia seized a group of German islands in the Indian ocean. Germany's colonial empire is practically a thing of the past. What has not been seized by force of arms already, will be seized, if not by conquering, then as satisfaction in part of the immense indemnity that will be exacted from Germany when her subjugation is completed.

The virtual loss of her colonial possessions is not all of Germany's disappointed ambitions. She has been trusted to perpetually progressive distintegration; she dreamed of Italy being one of her most powerful allies; she dreamed of Ireland, India, and the Dominions beyond the seas becoming hostile to Britain, or at least, being neutral, instead of being bulwarks of Great Britain, and immensely important auxiliaries in waging war for Germany's downfall. Germany's militarist madmen had foreshadowed a programme of triumphant march upon Paris, Petrograd and London. Instead of world domination, Germany is now battling desperately for her sweet life; waging a defensive, though still strongly offensive, struggle for her own soil. Instead of her world domination campaign being a triumphal progress, it has become a humiliating retreat, a desperate struggle to protect her own life—save her own skin. Instead of gaining territorial addition to her empire in Europe, she will lose a large area of what she now controls, and besides she will have to be bled white to pay the immense indemnities her policy of rapine and ruin, fire and sword, has made justifiable to exact.

We think that we of the Empire are in one sense in a bad way. All our resources in men and means, and material, are laid under tributs to the cause of humanity and freedom. We are making sacrifices, but we are making them in a just cause with the light of ultimate victory—inevitable as the day—streaking the region of the dawn. We in Canada, in disappointing Germany's hope of our hostility or neutrality, are paying a big price for our loyalty to the Empire; for holding our place in the Empire. One of the saddest elements in that price is the loss of lives and the suffering from wounds by our soldier boys. But while we regret, we do not grudge the price. We are all in this war either in the area of the field of war, or the area of the fireside. We are all doing our share; and of late the call has become louder, more distinct. Our brave soldiers have answered the call and paid the price, some with life, some with shattered limbs and lacerated bodies. Now the call comes to us at home. The Red Cross cause calls across the seas from the battle line, from the hospital wards, for help for our wounded soldiers.

To-morrow we shall have a chance to meet the call. Shall we not meet it as bravely and nobly as the gallant soldier boys of Canada met it on the bloody field of Langemarck, and suffered the wounds we are called upon to-morrow to help heal?

A PITIFUL ATTEMPT.

It is not astonishing that small minds, should take a good deal of trouble to gain party capital by trying to discredit their opponents. The attempt of the Review ,or those for whom it is acting, to discredit Liberals, by emphasizing the failure of a bogus meeting called by nobody that dares take the responsibility, and therefore attended by nobody, is a "stern rebuke" to such pitiful methods. The whole petty affair, one can safely assert, was concocted in the Review office, which lent itself and its printing presses to some crank; and the Review knew all about the "dodgers" calling the bogus meeting, before they were circulated. The Toronto News was taken into its confidence, and received a lying despatch dated Peterborough, which contained the falsehood, that The Examiner had "noted the meeting editorially, stating that there was a persistent and general rumour that the meeting was called by the Liberal Association of West Peterborough 'to protest against any political move during war time.'" This is pure fabrication. The Examiner knew nothing of the "meeting" being called till after its edition was issued on Wednesday evening. The sneak circulation of the "dodgers" was so timed as to avoid publicity of any value to secure public attendance, in order that the meeting might be declared a failure, as it was declared by the Review and the "reptile" press acting with it. The "big meeting" was announced in two places in the Review; a good explanation of the apparent fact that only "exactly nine" heard of the meeting. If it had "been noted in The Examiner," as the News falsely states was done, there would have been some public knowledge of the meeting. If we can get no other satisfaction out of our contemporary's feat, we can emphasize the value of The Examiner as an advertising medium. An apology is due its thousands of readers for taking so much space with so much attention to piffle.

We might have better occupied so much space with an appeal to the public not to forget the appeal of the Red Cross to-morrow.

Striking Success of Secondary Or Outer Circle War Operations

General Botha's fine achievement in German Southwest Africa, directs attention once more to the progress of operations in what may be termed the secondary theatres of war. If gigantic armies are not employed, and no "Eyewitnesses" record the events as they fall like hot metal from the anvil of destiny, yet there are not wanting the colour and thrilling episodes inseparable from engagements in which the traditions of British arms are so worthily maintained.

The secondary operatons are in West and East Africa and Mesopotamia, where British and German frontiers meet. Only one of these campaigns—the Mesopotamian—interacts upon the main operations in Europe. The situation in Egypt, the Dardanelles, and the Caucasus is influenced to some degree by the progress of events in Mesopotamia. The possibility of another serious attempt upon the Suez Canal is apparently no longer entertained in official circles, as troops have been sent from Egypt to Mesopotamia and the Dardanelles. Indian troops have also been despatched to the scene of operations in Mesopotamia. The campaign in Mesopotamia has achieved its main purpose—the security of the position at the head of the Persian Gulf, and the protection of the valuable Admiralty oilfields and pipe-line in this region. Basra, the key to the whole sphere of British occupation, has been successfully defended against twenty thousand Turks and Arabs, who attempted a formidable flank attack. Our troops now hold Basra, on the Shat-el-Arab; Kurna, at the junction of the Tigris and Euphrates, and Ahwaz and the line of the Karun River in Persian territory. The relations between the Turks and their Arab allies are far from cordial, and it is anticipated by Lord Crewe that the Arabs may be encouraged to throw off the Ottoman yoke. The capture of the Baghdad Railway, the overthrow of German's costly and elaborate plans for the "pacific penetration" of Turkish territories, and the failure of German intrigue in Persia follow rapidly on the heels of British success in the Mesopotamian campaign.

It was in 1884 that Britain viewed with friendly eye the modest colonial essays of the German Imperialists in Africa. To-day German colonial hopes are buried on that continent—in the Congo, Togoland, the Cameroons, East and Southwest Africa. In German East Africa, where the small British force met with a serious reverse towards the end of last year, the coast is blockaded and land operations mainly offensive. At the other side of the continent British and French forces are steadily reducing the German fortified positions in the Cameroons, Botha has penetrated to the capital of German Southwest Africa, no mean feat of arms, considering the difficulties of transport. Three forces converged on the junction of the main railway with the Luderits Bay line, and from thence commenced their long march up the railway to Windhoek, over which the British flag now flies.

The world-empire which was the dream of the Kaiser, and for which he built his fleet, has vanished in a night. Through the friendship of Britain, Germany acquired her overseas possessions To that same Britain Germany must render a full account for her treachery and barbaric conduct before the flag of the Fatherland is again hoisted beyond the seas.—The Globe.

Stock Markets

New York Stocks

A. E. Stratton & Co., Brokers, report the following:

NEW YORK, May 21—Toward the end of the first hour the market improved substantially both in activity and strength and trading became fairly broad, although the war stocks were relatively more active than some of the more conservative interests. Commission House business was light there being a disclination to take on stocks on margin pending the German reply to the American note. Baldwin Loco advanced 2 1-3 points to 48 3-4. B.S. advanced 2 1-8, and Lacakawanna Steel made gain of 1 1-2 to 43. War business was the cause of the rise in all those stocks.

NEW YORK, May 21. During the second hour the market was quiet, and prices eased off a little from the best. This looked like repition of the action on earlier days of the week, when a whole price movement was made, prior to 11 o'clock, and little was done, afterwards. Comparative strength of the U. S. Steel was said to be largely due to war order business, and it was asserted that the steel products company which handles the export end of the business, had received important orders for shells and that these were being turned out in rough form at U. S. plants, but sent for finishing to Empire concerns. It was also asserted that the new order for shells spoken of in connection with Westinghouse, was of that kind; the Westinghouse Co. to complete shells made at the Stell Co. plant.

Chicago, May 21.—Wheat advanced sharply, Miller reports claiming material deterioration in winter wheat.

Chicago, May 21 — Wheat did not hold the early advance. Damage reports, except from Indiana and Missouri by Snow and Inglis, did not cause much outside buying.

Corn was not actively supported. There was little country selling. Replanting will be necessary in parts of the South on account of excessive rains.

Oats moved with the other markets.

FOR THE LAWN AND GARDEN

In our complete Harab-Davies fertilizers, we offer you various combinations of plant food put up in a very convenient form to supply the actual requirements of your garden, lawn or flowers. They are guaranteed as to the Nitrogen, Phosphoric Acid and Potash content and by actual analysis it has been shown that a single bag of these highly concentrated fertilizers contains more plant food than a good sized load of stable manure. Moreover, they are very easy to apply and have none of the objectionable features of manure, such as obnoxious weed seeds and offensiveness to handle, etc.

Boy In Dream Reveals How He Killed a Man

CHICAGO, May 19.—Shortly after midnight Michael Haddon, night guard at the House of Correction, was aroused by an agonising scream which rang through the corridors of the institution.

Haddon unlocked the door and slipped noiselessly into Room 43 with "billy" drawn. He darted his searchlight about. All was quiet and in order, except that Vernon Brown, a youthful prisoner asleep on the bunk, had kicked the covers on the floor.

Suddenly the right hand shot out full length toward the guard; the forefinger worked rapidly back and forth four times. The youth's face convulsed in agony and another scream came from the gaping mouth.

"My God, I've shot him!" the boy cried. "He's dead; he's dead!"

Haddon strode over to the bunk and shook Brown. He awoke with a violent start, and sitting upright in bed blinked into the flashlight's eye.

ASKS IF HE TOLD ANYTHING.

"Did I talk in my sleep?" he inquired, anxiously. "Did I tell anything?"

Haddon told Brown to go back to sleep and left the room. From the office he called the police of the stock yards station.

"I believe I've solved a murder mystery," he told Lieutenant McGreean. "One of the strangest things I ever heard of just happened."

After a consultation between Haddon and the police, Brown was awakened and taken to the police station, where he was permitted to finish his sleep in a cell. An examination of the records of Chicago's many unsolved murder mysteries was made. In one of them, it was shown, the boy had been connected as a suspect, but not detained.

This crime was the murder of Henry Pfoertner, an aged candy store proprietor, who was shot to death in his store on January 3.

ARRESTED AS SUSPECTS.

Brown and Louis Kasper, another youth were arrested. They declared they had been to a moving picture show with two girls when the murder was committed. The girls, May Joyce and Mary Molloy, corroborated their story. The youths were released.

A week after his release, Brown was again arrested in Austin and sent to the House of Correction for an indefinite term for carrying a revolver. Kasper, too, was arrested a short time later for larceny. He was sent to the reformatory.

When Brown awoke in his cell at the police station he was questioned by Lieutenant McGreean about the Pfoertner shooting. The boy bravely presented his previous alibi.

"But you talked in your sleep last night," the lieutenant remarked casually; "you told us all about shooting that old man."

"I thought so," Brown muttered; "I knew I would some time. It had to come out."

Then the youth confessed he and Kasper had planned the robbery of Pfoertner in a poolroom dive. The old man resisted them, and Brown shot him to death. The girls, he said, had agreed to corroborate their lie about the moving picture show to shield them.

Kasper was questioned and substantially corroborated Brown's story. Neither could give the addresses of the two girls, but the police are searching for them.

SAYS STARS CAUSED WAR

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 17. — Peace and the end of all wars must be brought about by a war—a spiritual war against the influences of the stars which brought the present European conflict about. So declared Miss Fedora I. Wilbur of the faculty of the National Cathedral School for Girls, in delivering an address at the luncheon of the Elmira College Alumni Association of Washington.

The fight must begin at once, according to Miss Wilbur, for the solar eclipse has a strong influence toward war. It involves the United States, and "we must fight all influences tending to prejudice us against our fellow men or to make us hate them.' If the influence is too strong and the United States becomes involved in war before July 1st,' our fate 'may yet be a repetition of the woes that Belgium and Mexico have experienced in the last year, for we are governed by the same sign of the zodiac. Fortunately, their main troubles should end after May 12th and before July 1st."

Even the giving of women a voice in public affairs does not necessarily mean the ending of wars, according to Miss Wilbur's deductions. She said that in many cases women have brought on wars. Men fight to shield their women and their homes, and, she said, women should hold the men to highest ideals and 'make them cease to act as "puppets to do evil at the impulses coming from the stars."

"This is not the time or place to discuss the principles or the details of the successes or failures of astrological predictions. I can only say that after six months of hard study and comparison of statistical data I am convinced that the stars do influence the ordinary affairs of life and its cycle of disasters, especially wars.

"The trouble with past predictions has been that men did not know all of the [illegible] Uranus and Neptune, and may still not know them all. Uranus was first officially revealed to the world in 1781, at the close of the American revolution. Neptune was revealed in 1866, the year of the Mexican war, and there are reasons for thinking it highly probable that a new planet or planets will be discovered at the close of the present struggle, if not before.'

Miss Wilbur has delved into astronomical data as far back as 650 years and there finds predictions by the astronomer Moult of a great conflict about this period.

"Coming down to details" she continued, it may be said that in the last year there have been over 50 astronomical combinations of influence that were responsible for the war and its various disasters, and the coincidence of their positions in time and place with the time-honoured interpretations assigned to them and the actual occurrence of the predicted disasters is too striking to be ignored.

From a physical viewpoint the war was as unavoidable as the seasons of the year or the succession of daylight and darkness, which are due to the movement of the heavenly bodies.

"But man has it in the power of his spirit to fight the stars by faith and prayer and his will power, and that is what we all ought to do at present.

"The war predictions from the solar eclipse of last August were terribly sinister and far-reaching. The severest fighting in Europe now seems to be raging along or near the path of its totality. It included part of [illegible] Europe, part of the United States and Canada. All of the United States and Canada. All of the United States, east of Chicago and north of Washington, is in its area. As wars from an eclipse last as many years as the eclipse lasted hours, the world will need to fight the eclipse war spirit for many years to come."

Declaring that she had regretted many times that she could not have given her life for her country as her relatives did in the Revolution, Miss Wilbur continued: "But now that I find that the light of the stars can so poison the air as to make men crazy to fight and kill one another with or without cause and can make women as crazy also, I want to see the women of our country and of the world light their torches at the light of the stars, and that is, the sacred fire of divine love for all mankind.

"Most of the evil astral influences causing this war have already expended their force or will do so with in a few months. The solar eclipse influence is an exception, and as that involves our country we must fight all influences tending to prejudice us against our fellow men and to make us hate them."

Suspenders or Belt, Subject of Violent Debate

It is a far cry from war and politics to "galluses" but a change may be good for writer and reader alike. Dr. Mayo, the specialist, started the discussion when he made the assertion that belts cause appendicitis and that suspenders (the "braces" of our younger days) are physiologically preferable. The debate will now proceed.

From a social point of view, the status of either belt or suspenders is ambiguous. East of the Mississippi suspenders are the badge of democracy, of sound-hearted allegiance with the class of people who are producers. Our fields are tilled with the aid and co-operation of suspenders, our forests are felled, our ores are mined—in fact most of the heavy lifting is done through the instrumentality of those plain, manly webs that attached fore and aft to the chief male garment, maintain that garment in its proper situation.

In the west the belt encircles the midriff of rugged toil. A cowpuncher must gear a belt for his gun or his fence pliers, as case may be.

Regarded separately and without prejudice either of pantology or style, we find much to be said for either. For the belt it may be pleaded, as an offset to the charge of undue pressure on the vital mechanism that it is utterly lacking in that treachery which is sometimes revealed by suspenders in conjunction with their affiliated buttons. A belt, once buckled, does its work with unobtrusive fidelity, upholding the self respect and pants of its wearer to the end. Suspenders have been known to fail; to quit the job without warning.

Of course Dr. Mayo's dictum will not settle the question forever, except perhaps for those curious beings ultra cautious, who wear both belts and suspenders.

OLD PLAINFIELD EGG HAS HAD A NOTABLE CAREER

PLAINFIELD, Conn., May 18—How an egg may nestle in a henroop, joggle to market, rest in peace in storage, sail the high seas and reach a ripe old age before it ever encounters an appetite or loses its identify in a separated omelet was shown when Mrs. Frederick Briggs of this town received a remarkable letter.

Seven years ago Mrs. Briggs was Miss Elsie Lathrup. Her father, Jason P. Lathrup, as right principled a poultry dealer as ever slammed an egg into a crate, was hitching up Bess, the family delivery camel, when Miss Lathrup happened to trip into the yard. She kept her balance, and with fountain pen poised on high lifted a young egg out of the waggon. Thereon she placed her name and address in brunet ink.

Well, years elapsed. Some passed, some rolled, and in time Miss Lathrup graduated from high school, helped to plant the graduation ivy, and listened to the class orator tell briefly in 300,000 words that life was what one makes it. Then she settled down to devoting her life to tolerating Plainfield. Three years later she met him who was destined to be her husband. Two years later he was. For two years they have lived happily in Plainfield, which is more of a feat than would at first sight appear to a nearsighted or utterly careless reader.

To get back to the egg, which by this time needs attention as only an age worn, cynical Plainfield egg can, it had met with a long and varied career. It had been here and there, sometimes briefly at the later, until one day late in April when the foreign situation became threatening it was taken aboard the battleship New Hampshire.

The cook of the New Hampshire can both read and write, which it is said, helps the menu in no wise whatever. He saw the mystic writing on the egg, read it and wrote to Miss Lathrup, now Mrs. Briggs, to inform her that the egg was extant, but ill.

HENS MAY LOWER PRICE OF EGGS

SEDALIA, MO., May 18.—That a hen may swallow a news item, even an article from a country newspaper, and live to immortalize the digested information in an egg memoranda, was shown, when Mrs. J. A. Jared, wife of a clergyman, who corroborated their sensational breakfast, wrecked a boiled one and read the truth, or at least read the truth as near as a county newspaper ever gets it.

The fragment of newspaper, about a yoke and a half wide, was wrapped around the egg under the shell instead of the usual thin white shawl that protects the white of the egg in most instances. Mrs. Jared carefully removed the newspaper and found that every letter on it was readable and in fairly good English.

It is assumed that the innovation marks a new step in the reduction of

ECZEMA ON THE HEAD.

Mr. Peterson, South Bay, Ont., writes: "For years I suffered a sort of eczema on the head. I tried four different doctors, giving each a fair trial, but the disease grew worse and spread to my arm. I got Dr. Chase's Ointment, and it has entirely cured me. I give you my name because I want other sufferers to know about this splendid Ointment."

City Now Has 56,461.9 Sq. Yds. Of Paving at Cost of $138,000

Second Contract Has Been Completed by Foley and Gleason and Council is Preparing to Let New Tenders.

If anyone asks you what street paving Peterborough has done, you may make a rough guess as to the number of miles of street covered, or if you prefer exactness, may reply that 56,461.9 square yards of bitulithic pavement with binder and concrete base, have been constructed.

Just to remind you of what the council has done in this direction the following figures were obtained from City Engineer Parsons, giving the paving in the details of streets:

| | Sq. Yards |
|---|---|
| George street | 17,273.8 |
| Charlotte street | 10,791.0 |
| Aylmer street | 8,987.1 |
| Water street | 6,414.0 |
| Simcoe street | 4,677.9 |
| Hunter street | 4,735.8 |
| Brock street | 3,602.3 |
| | 56,461.9 |

A near estimate of the cost of this work is $138,000.00; this, however, does not include the surface drainage. In regard to who pays the piper, ratepayers doubtless know that 60 per cent. of the cost is charged to property, and the remaining 40 per cent is obtained from the entire city. Out of the general tax is also paid the cost of surface drainage. It will be remembered that the first contract was financed by a bank loan; the second by the city's sale of short term debentures. For the paving already done the city will have to pay the interest each year and also set aside an annual sum which at the end of ten years will redeem the loans, the one from the bank, the other from the people.

Plans are now being prepared to extend the street paving area. The council has expressed the intention of proceeding with new work this summer. They have indicated the next streets to be paved and it only remains to let the contract after the plans have been submitted and accepted.

To Place A Valuation On Senator's Will

$1,500,000 is Involved in Case in Assize Court in Toronto

The Toronto Star says: That from 1905 to 1914 the late Senator George A. Cox had "written off" his investments approximately $1,500,000, was the statement made by Mr. Robert Schiell, auditor, to Mr. Justice Middleton in the Assize Court. His Lordship, sitting as a commission appointed by the Provincial Treasurer, commenced to take evidence in order to determine what valuation shall be placed upon the stock and real estate holdings of the late Senator Cox. The proceedings have been commenced following the admission of the Senator's will to probate. Then the estate showed assets amounting to $870,071. The stocks totalled $305,053. From 1909 to the time of his death Senator Cox made seven settlements and trusts upon the members of his family. These were:

April 5, 1909, marriage settlement upon Miss A. G. Sterling, later Mrs. Cox; April 23, 1910, a settlement to his daughter, Emma Jane Davis, which transferred 1,000 shares of Toronto Savings and Loan stock and a property on the Kingston road; April 22, to his daughter, Mrs. Mary Ames; July 4, 1911, to his wife; February 6, 1912, a settlement was made upon his two daughters and Mrs. Cox; and on January 7, 1913, to the National Trust Company.

Purpose of the Investigation.

Appearing for the Provincial Treasurer, Mr. J. W. Bain, K.C., said that the probe was for the purpose of investigating the huge stock holdings of the late Senator in the Canadian Bank of Commerce, Imperial Life Insurance Co., Imperial Guarantee and Accident Co., British-America Insurance Co., Provincial Investment Co., Canada Central Savings Co., and Toronto Loan and Savings Co. Mr. Bain explained that the books of some of these companies had been examined, but that there were matters in which no information could be obtained. This applied to several companies in which Senator Cox was a director.

Before taking any evidence, Mr. Justice Middleton suggested that the proceedings take the form of a legal action, that a writ be issued, and pleadings entered. As the matter now stood, he was only to report to the Government, and there was no moral or legal obligation on the part of those interested to accept his findings.

Not a Warlike Action.

"We are not approaching this in a fighting manner," replied Mr. L. McCarthy, K.C., who appeared for the executors. "If we go on for three or four days we can eliminate many matters. We thought all we should pay succession duty on was the estate that came into the hands of the executors."

Justice Middleton: "If there is any difference of opinion, it is an honest one."

Continuing, Mr. Justice Middleton said he had been requested by the Hon. I. B. Lucas to act in his judicial capacity and not as an agent of the Government.

Principal Stock Items.

The principal items in the stocks listed in the inventory of assets were: 1,000 shares of stock in the Toronto Savings and Loan Co., valued at $190,272, less the interest of the testator's widow; 1,300 shares of Provident Investment Co., less the share of the testator's widow, $94,500; and 180 shares Central Canada Loan Co. stock, $1,500. An examination of the Senator's books showed that he owned 4,840 shares of Toronto Loan stock and the balance had been transferred to sundry beneficiaries.

In reviewing the stocks that he believed to be dutiable under the Succession Duty Act, Mr. Bain mentioned 4,200 shares of Provident Investment stock; 1,200 shares had been given away by the Senator under deeds of trust, and 3,000 shares given away shortly before his death; 4,884 shares in the Canadian Bank of Commerce; 280 shares Imperial Life; 600 shares British America Insurance Co.; 4,201 shares Central Canada and Savings Co.

In the inventory of assets filed in the Surrogate Court book debts amounted to $14,600. Mr. Bain maintained that they should have been about $150,000.

"They were all written off in 1914 and we want an explanation," said the lawyer.

Justice Middleton: "As gifts or bad debts?"

Mr. McCarthy: "Every gift made by Senator Cox was debited against the person given."

Mr. Shiell, when examined by Mr. Bain, said up to 1908 Senator Cox held 643 shares in the Canada Life Assurance Co. These were recorded in the late Senator's books, but subsequently were sold to the Canada Central Co.

Captain of Lost Survey Ship Tells of Collision With Mystery Ship —Inquest to be Held.

QUEBEC, May 21—The six survivors of the lost Canadian survey ship Christine, sunk on Tuesday evening off the naval station of the Island of Orleans, reached Quebec harbour on the tug Spray. All had tales of narrow escapes.

It is now ascertained that the Christine lies under sixty feet of water, just outside the navigation channel, and hopes for her floating are meagre. Attempts, however, will be made to recover the bodies of the seven victims, not one of whom has yet been recovered. It is supposed they are all caught below and are trapped in the ship, where it will be hard to locate them.

Inquest to be Held.

Captain Kennedy, of the Christine, who was taken with a fractured leg to the Military Hospital after the collision, is doing well, and is expected to testify at the enquiry that is expected to open shortly on the disaster. The date of enquiry has not yet been settled, but news from Ottawa is expected to-day.

A coroner's inquest will also be held, but Coroner Jolicoeur awaits the recovery of some of the bodies before proceeding.

Ship of Mystery.

Capt. Kennedy, relating the circumstances of the sinking, said that the Christine was heading towards an incoming ship when suddenly a dark and low object loomed out of the night, with regular lights glowing. "The strange ships," he says, "seemed heading to pass between my ship and the incoming steamer. I tried to dodge her, but it was too late, and the shock of the impact was something terrific.

"The Christine was struck in the starboard steam, and was ripped open in her entire length. I gave orders that boats be lowered, but we did not even have time to launch one boat when she went under."

What's Doing in Civic Circles—Items of Interest Concerning Municipal Administration

Mr. W. J. Francis, C.E., of Montreal, has completed the work that he was asked to undertake in connection with the city's sewerage disposal scheme. He will likely have a report ready for the next meeting of the City Council. He returned to Montreal yesterday.

Use of Meters.

The compulsory use of meters by the Utilities Commission is having a good effect in that it tends to prevent undue waste of current. People who were accustomed to burn lights in the garret and other out of the way places are content to burn only those that are actually required.

Overload Reduced.

The result of this is that there is not the same tendency to overload the power lines. There is more current available and better service. Meters are being installed on all new contracts.

WITH OTHER MUNICIPALITIES.

Bernard Cooper is suing the New York Board of Health for $25,000 for the death of his son, after vaccination.

New Waterworks.

The building of the new city water works at Point Edward is to be investigated by Judge MacWatt.

Increases in Building.

In 67 American cities during April 29 showed increases in building permits over March, but a decrease over 1914.

Bullion was Changed.

San Francisco saw $121,000,000 in bullion moved on its streets when the Government Treasury location was changed.

Will Cut off Supply.

The Brantford City Council has given the Gas Company until May 31st to supply pure gas. If it does not do so by that time the Brewster Act, cutting off the supply will be enforced if possible.

Municipal Swimming Pool.

Recent drownings in Chatham prompted the Council to take action in the way of investigating the possibilities of establishing a municipal swimming pool.

Dernberg Will Take a Chance

WASHINGTON, May 21. — When Dr. Dernberg, Germany's unofficial spokesman in this country, leaves the United States he probably will not carry any safe-conduct from the British Government.

The State Department has not officially requested the British Embassy to grant such a safe-conduct for Dr. Dernburg, and it now seems to be likely that the request never will be made. Action by the State Department was conditional upon assurances that the request would be favourably received, and information now at hand indicates that the British Government is not disposed to entertain any request for a safe-conduct. It is probable, therefore, that the matter will never be taken up, and the German representative will be left to his own devices as to where he will go and how he will get there.

GRAVES OF SOLDIERS TO BE DECORATED

The 57th chapter of the Daughters of the Empire will decorate the graves of Peterborough soldiers in the local cemeteries to-morrow. Some seventy-five graves in all will be decorated with flags, including the last resting place of Pte. Lightfoot and Nicholls, members of the overseas forces who died while in training to go to the front.

HER 106th BIRTHDAY

NEW YORK, May 21 — The 106th birthday of Mrs. Jeanette Schwartz—a dwarf, three feet in height, weighing only 20 pounds, was celebrated to-day in the Brooklyn Hebrew Home for the aged. Mrs. Schwartz received her guests in bed, where she has been since coming to the home a year ago. Her great age and diminutive size have made her the wonder of the home.

She replied with intelligence to the many questions put to her, but her memory could not recall anything that happened beyond ten years ago.

NEW LOADING PLATFORM ERECTED

Industrial Activity at the Local C.P.R. Freight Yards.

A new loading platform has been erected at the rear of the C.P.R. freight sheds. This will be used to unload automobiles, heavy machinery, etc., and in case of an emergency could be used to load and unload fire-fighting apparatus. Back of the freight sheds is the main spring of the paving industry. Here a number of men are employed in operating the plant which provides the finished product for the streets. The raw material is brought in over the C.P.R. Company's tracks and hauled alongside the plant. The big tank cars are filled with Trinidad Lake asphalt, which is claimed by the contractors to be the best on the market. Other materials such as sand, gravel and crushed stone are required. The whole is mechanically operated and is capable of turning out a large quantity of material each day.

Board of Works Complete Inspection

Trip Lasted All Day—Civic Worthies Dined at the Oriental.

The annual inspection of the Board of Works is now a matter of history. Whether all that was promised or suggested yesterday by the Committee will be acted upon is a matter that time alone will tell. Past municipal history tells us that it is seldom that the Council undertake all that is unearthed by the Board of Works on the annual Ward inspection. For one thing the fixed appropriation would not begin to meet the requirements. By cutting off a little here and adding a little there, a compromise is usually possible that will tion lasted from 9 o'clock in the morning until 5 in the evening with an intermission for lunch. The latter was partaken at the Oriental Hotel and the following names adorned the register: Aldermen G. W. Green, (chairman), J. J. Duffus, Wm. Langford, Jr., A. Weir, G. Evans, J. Saunders, J. Edgar, A. H. Stratton, F. H. Dobbin. His Worship Mayor Buller, City Engineer Parsons, City Clerk Armstrong and Street Commissioner Evans.

A large livery 'bus was used as a means of conveyance. When ever an Alderman travelling in his own Ward would come across a depression in the road, the "high sign" would find its way to the driver and the civic worthies would disembark and make a microscopical examination of the indentation. After registering a promise to have the spot repaired, the Committee would climb aboard and proceed to some other storm centre. By five o'clock the trip was completed and an impromptu meeting was held in the city hall, where a number of items were put through in rapid fire order.

May Extend Paving On Charlotte Street

The City Council, as a body is of the opinion that it would be a good thing to continue the street paving on Charlotte Street from Park Street to the boundary road. This may be definitely decided upon at the next meeting of the Council. Should the paving be continued it is likely that the street railway company will extend their tracks to the boundary and run them south, completing a belt line of that section of the city. This extension has been talked of for some time, and the fact of the city deciding to pave Charlotte Street to the boundary may hasten the street railway extension.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES

Thursday afternoon fifty members of enjoyed the privilege of being shown through the Peterborough Canoe Co. and witnessing the making to canoes, row boats, motor boats and sailing yachts. The boys are especially interested in the fine show room of the factory, where the different boats manufactured by the company were to be seen.

Next Thursday afternoon the boys will visit the De Laval Co.

Saturday morning the boys will hike to Lily Lake, leaving the building at 9.30 sharp. A treasure hunt will be the feature of the trip when a Y.M.C.A. pin will be hidden and the boy who finds it will keep it.

On Monday morning, May 24th, a baseball match will be played between the Employed Boys and the Senior School boys, at 9 o'clock sharp, on the Central Park.

Tragic End of Man Charged With Espionage

Anton Kuepferle Was on Trail in London Charged With Giving Naval and Military Secrets to Enemies—Dread Death by Hanging—Precautions Were Taken

LONDON, May 21.— Anton Kuepferle, the alleged German spy, who was charged with communicating naval and military secrets to England's enemies, committed suicide in his cell in Brixton jail by hanging early yesterday, thus bringing his trial to a tragic and sudden close. The body was found when a warden entered Kuepferle's cell to deliver his breakfast.

Kuepferle gave no intimation of this plan to end his life, but seemed cheerful and satisfied with the course of his trial at the Old Bailey. His death may have some bearing upon the cases of two other men who were arrested with him in February, and who are in prison awaiting separate trials.

They are Herr Muller and Herr Hahn, both Germans.

The Kuepferle trial began on Tuesday, and the hearings have been held in secret. The prisoner, who claimed to be a citizen of the United States and a resident of Brooklyn, was accused of writing letters with invisible ink, giving the location of British warships and the dates of departure of British troops for the front. He pleaded not guilty, and made elaborate arrangements to prove his innocence by retaining excellent legal talent.

Kuepferle left the following message upon a slate provided for the use of prisoners:

"To whom it may concern:

"I am a soldier with a rank which I do not desire to mention. I can say that I have had a fair trial in the United Kingdom, but I am unable to stand the strain any longer and so have decided to take the law into my own hands.

"I have fought in many battles, but death is alone my salvation now. I would perfer a death by shooting at the hands of soldiers as it has been my wish that I should never ascend the scaffold as a ——."

At this point in the letter Kuepferle had drawn a Masonic sign upon the slate. The letter continues:

Not Dying as Spy.

"I hope the Almighty Architect of this universe will lead me into the unknown land. I am not dying as a spy, but as a soldier. I stood as a man, but I cannot be a liar and perjure myself. Kindly notify my uncle, Ambrose Droll of Sollingen, Germany, of my death. All my estate belongs to him. What I have done I have done for my country. I shall express my thanks and may the Lord bless you all and yours.

"Kuepferle.

On the other side of the slate was written

"I was born on June 11, 1883."

The trials of Muller and Hahn, who were indicted with Kuepferle will be held at Old Bailey on June 1.

Kuepferle left a message written on a slate bearing testimony to the fairness of his trial. He confessed he was a soldier, and declared he could not bear to mount the scaffold as a spy.

Incriminating Letters.

In court to-day, the Attorney-General (Sir John A. Simon) added that three letters produced is yesterday's session all contained information calculated to be of use to Great Britain's enemies.

The session was closed with an expression of satisfaction by Lord Reading, the Lord Chief Justice, at the swiftness with which the letters had been detected and their author traced and arrested.

"There is no doubt as to the character of the communications," he said. It was quite clear the prisoner had been at the front and was longing to get there again."

Passport From Bryan.

Kuepferle arrived in London on February 14 He showed a passport signed by Secretary of State William J. Bryan, issued ten days prior to his sailing from New York. In writing the letter which resulted in his arrest he gave his home address as 1685 De Kalk avenue, Brooklyn, N.Y. He represented himself to be a woollen merchant. From Liverpool he went to Dublin, and then to London, where he was arrested on Feb. 16.

Dreaded Death by Hanging.

Kuepferle inflicted upon himself a form of death he dreaded most. He had protested most vigorously against being tried in a civil court, where a sentence of guilty meant death by hanging, and he tried in every way to secure a trial by military court, where the death sentence in the event of a verdict of guilty, would be execution by shooting.

At the hour for the convening of the court, Sir John Simon, the Attorney-General, made official announcement of Kuepferle's death, saying that the accused man had used a silk scarf in taking his life.

Precautions Taken.

The alleged spy had tied one end of the scarf to a ventilator and the other about his neck.

Kuepferle had been detained in a special cell since his trial started, so that he could be under constant observation, but despite this precaution he had managed to make preparations for his death unseen.

This sum will be augmented by another hundred dollars contributed by the Peterborough Cheese Board. A similar grant was made to the 21st Battalion some time ago. A travelling kitchen costs in the nighbourhood of five thousand dollars and is usually purchased with money raised by public subscription.

Liberal Ladies Get The Right Blend of Patriotism and Politics

Special to The Examiner:

Toronto, May 21. — An important mile post in the history of the provincial Women's Liberal Association, was reached to-day when following a successful annual business meeting, Sir Wilfrid Laurier addressed the members. Ladies were present from Hamilton, Brantford, Stratford, Wiarton and Cornwall.

Mrs. N. W. Rowell, President, presided, and the reports of the year's work were presented by Mrs. John A. Tory, secretary-treasurer.

The activities of the association this year have been exclusively directed to supplying necessities, comforts and luxuries for the Canadian soldiers on active service, both at the camps and at the front. For example, the Provincial Women's Association had charge of the hospitals at the Exhibition ground, Toronto. They have also co-operated in the work of securing the necessary supplies for the University Base Hspital.

It was decided to-day to continue this policy and this line of work during the duration of the war.

The visiting ladies were entertained at luncheon.

FAMILY PHOTOGRAPHS ON ALL PASSPORTS

LONDON, May 20.—The British government has decided that the photograph of every person mentioned in a passport must appear on the document. Under the American regulations when a man is travelling with a family passport it is made out in his name, with an addenda stating that he is accompanied by "wife and son" or other members of his family. Hereafter, however, under the new British order a photograph of each member of a family travelling in this country must be attached to the passport.

Last Saturday several Americans with their families had considerable difficulty owing to the fact that the passports did not have the photographs of all members of the party attached to them.

A Letter From Pte. M. Wood

Peterboro' Boy Refers to the Work of 4th Battalion at Langemarck.

Mrs. J. C. Wood, 777 Water Street, received a very interesting letter yesterday from her son, Pte. Maitland Wood, from the front. Pte. Wood, a former Peterborough boy, enlisted in Brantford with his Regiment there when war was declared. He is well-known, locally, and his letter which appears below, will be of interest to his many friends in Peterborough. A Field Post Card, on Monday, informed Mrs. Wood that her son was safe after the Battle of Langemarck, and the letter yesterday was, needless to say, a very welcome supplement:

"I suppose that you will have all heard about our battle by the time you receive this.

I do not feel like giving any details just now. It did not seem so very terrible while we were in it, but the next few days when we found out our losses we saw that it was quite a big affair.

There were men killed and wounded on either side, but they hit me only in the heel of my boot and knocked the iron plate off. We had bullets coming (it seemed to me) from all directions. They used all kinds of artillery on us. They had shrapnel, "Jack Johnsons," "Coal Boxes," "Whistling Willies," etc. They used gas at first, but we didn't get very much of it.

The night after the battle, as we were leaving the field, (reinforcements had taken our places), I ran into Hawley Grant. His Ambulance Section was right near us, and he had been watching us all day. He was very glad to see me and I was glad to see him.

I have not had a chance to visit the Peterborough boys, so I don't know how they are.

I was suprised to see how well our fellows behaved. It was certainly grand to see them going ahead never faltering. I don't suppose we will have another battle like that. I hope not. I am quite well."

An Explanation In Regard To The Red Cross

To the Editor of the Examiner.

Sir,—The officers of the Peterborough Branch, Canadian Red Cross Society, hope that there will be a general and generous response to their appeal for funds to-morrow.

In reference to certain misconceptions which seem to exist in the minds of some people, a few considerations may be put forward.

In the first place, there need be no conflict between this society and others that have been formed for similar objects. Why should not each society, while dealing with its own constituency, unite its efforts with the Official Society for this work?

How?

By appointing one or more representatives on the Executive, and by sending supplies through this appointed channel. In this way, free transport will be obtained, which is the privilege of our Society and Peterborough will get the credit for the great amount of work it is doing.

While the official fee is $2, entitling the member to vote on the Executive, this need be no stumbling block for one can either be an associate member (for $1, for few desire to vote), or an ordinary worker for the Society, without any fee.

From Mrs. Plumptree's letter, published in yesterday's paper, it will be seen that our work is primarily for Canadian soldiers; that it supplies all Canadian military hospitals at the front. That Shorncliffe Hospital, though not a Red Cross Hospital, is "a piece of Red Cross work" and supplies can be sent through Red Cross channels.

Trusting this may help make the position clear.

Yours truly,
F. M. Davidson.

Visitors Will Leave the City

Three Defendants to Charges of Vagrancy Will Get Out at Once —Other Police Court News

To-day was "Vags" day at Police Court. No less than three visitors to the city came before the Cadi on that charge. One, Arthur Quigley, who claimed that he hailed from Toronto, and was looking for work, had only been in the city one hour when he was arrested. He was hanging around the C.P.R. station. He pleaded not guilty this morning and said it would not take him an hour to get out of the city again if he were let go. He was discharged.

Will Also Get Out.

Wm. Nicholls, of Montreal, was in conversation with Quigley when the officer of the law came along, and he was also taken to the Police Station. He was also allowed to go if he would get out of town.

Another representative of Toronto, George Scott, was dealt with in the same manner as his two fellow-prisoners. He has only one hand, and was wandering about and could not give a satisfactory account of himself. He will be on his way to make a call upon some other city by this time.

Non-Supporter.

Albert Frederick would not work though he had been offered a job it was alleged. He was this morning charged with non-support. He was remanded for a week.

Had Liquor in Room.

Leonard Walsh, a farm labourer, went to the Montreal House last night and rented a room. When he was called this morning, it is said, he used some insulting language and wanted to start a rough-house. A policeman was called and it was found that Walsh had taken liquor to his room and was this morning drunk. He paid a fine of $3.00 this morning.

George Sidey, who was drunk in a public place, was also assessed $2.00.

In the absence of Magistrate Dumble this morning, ex-Mayor H. Rush occupied the Magisterial Chair.

Business Men Meet To Discuss The Affairs of Y.M.C.A.

In response to the article published by the officers of the Y.M.C.A. which appeared in the Examiner last evening, a number of business men met in the office of Mr. E. A. Peck to consider the needs of the Association and how they might best be made.

President G. A. Gillespie, and Treasurer J. J. Turner and several other members of the Y.M.C.A. Board of Directors were present to confer with representative business men who are not directors of the Association. Mayor Buller and Mr. Basil Hall, President of the Board of Trade, were present in their official capacities, and in short, earnest addresses emphasized the fact that no local institution must be allowed to suffer because of the war or dull times, and that in view of the good work done by the local Young Men's Christian Association and the fact that that dull times made it possible for this institution to even better serve the young men of the community, something should be done immediately to put the Y.M.C.A. on a footing where it may do its most efficient work.

Mr. Peck called attention to the fact that as the financial efforts on behalf of the Association last year were not carried to a conclusion owing to the war, that this year's budget must not only be provided for but the deficit of $3,000 be paid. This means that at least $8,000 must be raised this year.

Mr. H. B. Cowan on behalf of the Association stated that at the expenditure of about $7,000 in readjusting the space in the building that the Association could be made self-sustaining to at least 75 p.c.

As business men, those present felt that such an investment was most desirable for it would better fortify the Association against possible business depression in the future and make its work more permanent and also insure the Association against future deficit.

It was reported that Mr. E. R. Wood, President of the Toronto Association, and a former resident of Peterborough, was available for a conference Tuesday evening, May 25th. This being the case the men present unanimously agreed that Mr. Wood should be invited to visit Peterborough to address the largest possible gathering of business men at a supper to be held in the Y.M.C.A. building at 6.30 p.m. on the evening of May 25th. This invitation has been carried to Toronto to-day by Mr. G. A. Gillespie, and we are pleased to state that Mr. Wood will be present on the occasion mentioned. One or two other speakers are expected to be present from Toronto, so a very inspiring meeting is in prospect.

As a result of this gathering it is hoped to get a concensus of the opinion of the citizens of Peterborough regarding raising $15,000 this year for Y.M.C.A. purposes.

A plate at the banquet will be provided every man who will accept this general invitation previous to Tuesday noon.

LOCAL RECRUITS GO TO BARRIEFIELD ON TUESDAY NEXT

Corps, No. 2 Company, C.P.A.S.C., No. 5 Company Queen's Engineers, the local staff of the C.O.C. under Major Prideaux, 8th Mounted Rifles, Ottawa; 7th Artillery Brigade composed of the 25th and 26th Batteries, and Ammunition Column, Ottawa; 39th Battalion, Ottawa, and about 700 surplus men that will be formed into a new battalion.

The surplus men have been enlisted for overseas service from the 14th, 15th, 16th, 20th, 42nd, 43rd, 45th, 46th, 47th, 48th, 49th, 57th, 59th regiments, including the G.G.F.G., and these will be organized into a new overseas battalion, with sufficient men recruited during camp to complete the strength of the new unit. It is said that a local officer is being appointed commander of the new battalion, and that several Kingston officers will find a place in its position.

The Advance Guard.

The recruits from the 41st and 56th Regiments will act as advance party, which will enter camp on Saturday. The 45th recruits will not enter camp until later.

The 39th Battalion, Belleville, will remain in their present location until further orders. All transportation arrangements are being made by Major Hamilton, A.D.T.S.

Each unit entering camp will have its own canteen and will be in charge of a competent non-commissioned officer. All profits from the canteens will be turned over to regimental funds. A number of private canteens will be opened on private property, and as long as these comply with the wishes of the camp commandant and with regulations, they will not be interfered with. Any improper conduct of these canteens will cause them to be put out of bounds, which will mean that no soldier dare patronize them. No canteen in camp will be allowed to sell any beer, liquor or intoxicating beverage.

PTE. KENDALL SAFE.

Word has been received in the city that Pte. A. Kendall, 336 Mark Street who was a member of the late Major Bennett's Company came through the battle of Langemarck safely. His sister, Mrs. Bohn, 413 London Street, received a letter from her mother at Charles Hill, London, England, yesterday, stating that she had received a card from her son, stating that he was safe and well.

A Mix Up In Barnes Case

Special to The Examiner:

SYRACUSE, N.Y., May 21.—An unparalleled court mix-up resulted to-day in an illegal verdict being returned in favour of Theodore Roosevelt in William Barnes' $50,000 libel suit against the former president. The foreman reported that an unanimous verdict had been reported in favour of Roosevelt, but that the jury wanted the expenses of the trial divided.

Court clerk then called the roll. One juryman, Edward Burns, a Democrat, voted against former president. The other eleven voted for him.

Justice Andrews ruled then that the request of the jury that the expenses be divided, and division in vote made the verdict illegal.

He sent the twelve men back to deliberate further.

Dummer Men Are In Police Court

Defense on Breaking, Entering and Theft Charge to be Heard Here.

There were two cases before Magistrate Langley at the County Police Court, held in the Warsaw Village Hall yesterday. The first was one in which Mr. James Sampson was the complainant, and Messrs. Leamon Garnsey, R. David Hill and William Hill, were the defendants in a charge "That they did enter the premises of the complainant and use threatening language." The case occupied all the afternoon and was dismissed.

Was Adjourned.

The second promised to be a little more serious. James Garnsey was the complainant and Messrs. William Hill and R. David Hill the defendants. The charge was "That they did break the lock and enter the premises of the complainant and remove certain goods."

The case for the prosecution was in when an adjournment was ordered until Thursday, May 27th, at 10:30 a.m., in Peterborough.

All the parties concerned in both cases were from Dummer Township.

Mr. G. W. Hatton acted for the prosecution, and Mr. J. A. New, of Messrs. Gordon and Widdifield, for the defendants.

How The War Is Affecting The Local Fruit Market

Higher Import Duties Holds Prices at Firm Basis—Italian Lemon Shipments May Be More or Less Cut Off—Another Car of Pines To-morrow.

A war duty of 87½ per cent. on onions, cabbage and other imported vegtables and fruits, will stand between the citizens and the usually low prices. There is a customs tax on all these goods except bananas. It was not that this fruit escaped, but efforts on the part of importers succeeded in having the 7½ per cent. import removed. To explain the situation it is understood that before the war there was a 20 per cent import duty on Texas onions, on cabbage, sweet potatoes and other lines. The war tax of 7½ per cent was imposed od all vegetables and fruits. Hence, oranges, lemons, etc., which used to enter free are now taxed, and the vegetables taxed 20 per cent. have to pay a 87½ per cent. tax now. The extent of this tax is illustrated by the fact that the duty on a car of oranges received here amounts to $80.

Lemon Possibilities.

The finest lemons on the market are the Italian Messinas. In the event of Italy becoming embroiled in war it is felt that shipments may be affected by merchant vessels being withdrawn from regular service. While the British navy rules the seas, however, it is not likely that supplies will be entirely withdrawn.

Another car of pineapples is due in Peterborough to-morrow. During the past week they have been about as cheap as may be expected here. The new arrivals should bear the market, but to counterbalance this influence is the increased demand that has been created. Prices may become firmer by reason of the heavier purchases, many housekeepers being in the market now for preserving supplies. Strawberries are still coming form Leamington. The rest of the fruit market shows no change during the week.

THE WORLD OF SPORT

Lacrosse Game Will Be The Big Event of Victoria Day Doings

The only local holiday feature will be the lacrosse game between the fast Riverdales of Toronto and the local intermediate team. The Paterborough team is shaping up well this season, and the officers promise a fast game on Monday. On June 2nd they will play their first league fixture in Hastings and the Monday game will afford a good workout and should get the men working together well.

Old Country Football News

The days when Preston North End and Aston Villa could win both Cup and League have long been passed, and Chelsea's only consolation or their relegation lies in a big fat purse out of the Cup, and also in the fact that Tottenham Hotspur,, another London club will go into the second division with them. There is now no club from the Metropolic in the upper circle.

The promotion of Preston North End once again gives Lancashire nine representatives in the first division, or nearly half the league. It has been a great triumph of the County Palatine in the league this season, for, in addition to North End's promotion, the other five places in the first division are occupied by clubs from the same shire. At the same time, of course, one must not forget that Manchester United and Bolton Wanderers have had a very lucky escape.

Wanted Too Much.

Chelsea were first promoted to the first division of the league at the close of season 1906-7. In 1909-10 they were relegated to the second division, but regained their place in the upper circle at the close of 1911-12, and with the end of the historic campaign of 1914-15 they are once again in the unfortunate position of having to go down.

Theirs has been a remarkable record of inconsistency, and there can be no doubt that their failing has been brought about by the extra labour which success in the English Cup competition has put upon them. The English Cup is not all sweetmeat,' and after their big disappointment in the final tie at Old Trafford probably the Londoners wish they had never seen it.

Still, you cannot have your cake and eat it, and it has once more been proved that the strenuousness of Cup-tie football makes a big hole in League form. If Everton had beaten Chelsea in the semi-final at Birmingham one doubts that the Goodison Park men would have lifted the championship, and it should be a warning to all clubs to build up a good position in the league before attempting anything serious in the national competition.

Lacrosse Game On Monday, 24th

Locals Will Play the Riverdales of Toronto.

All the old lacrosse fans and others who would like to see the game revived should journey over to Riverside Park Monday, May 24th, as this will be the first game of the season, and the lacrosse executive have been fortunate in securing such a good team. The Riverdales are a strong aggregation, and the home boys will have to extend themselves to the limit if they win, but they have been putting in some hard and consistent practice and will go on to the field to give the fans the

In preparation for Monday's game a practice game was played at Riverside Park last night, and the way the boys worked proved that the old timers have not lost any of their cunning, and the youngsters are showing wonderful ability in catching on, so that the team that goes on to the field Monday will be the best that has represented Peterborough in some time. Many of the old familiar faces will be found holding down their respective position, with as much pep as they showed in the older days. It would be hard to pick out any stars in last night's game as the best men were divided, so as to get results. The defence on both teams proved very strong, the score being 4 to 3. Line-up:

Must Be Specific Performance of The Contract

Mr. A. G. Shearer Must Convey Property to Mr. Foster Lytle Before June 30th, 1915—Judgement in County Court Case This Morning.

His Honour Judge Huycke in his judgment this morning ordered the specific performance of the contract or agreement of sale between Messrs. Foster Lytle and A. G. Shearer of Harvey township after reserving judgment since Tuesday last.

The case was one in which Foster Lytle was suing for specific performance of a contract he made with A. G. Shearer for the purchase of a certain piece of land, described as the east half of lot 12, on the 5th concession of the township of Harvey. Both parties were agreed that a contract was made for the transfer of the land at a price of $250.00, Mr. Shearer to retain the timber. The interest was to be at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, and according to the plaintiff he was to have as long as he wanted to pay the principal. The defendant contended that the principal was to be paid in five years or less and in the event of the plaintiff not performing his part of the bargain the property was to revert back to the defendant.

On May 14, 1914, Mr. Lytle received a notice from Mr. Shearer not to trespass further. Mr. Shearer resold the land to Mr. Reeves and the latter took possession. There was no agreement signed between Shearer and Lytle.

His Honour Judge Huycke in his judgment found that an order must go for specific performance, the defendant to convey the property to the plaintiff, less the timber, and this must be done on or before June 30, 1915. There must be no interest charged on the $250.00 from August last. The defendant will have to pay the costs of the action.

plaintiff and Mr. V. E. McElderry for the defendant.

BASEBALL

Ottawa Free Press: A member of The Free Press mechanical staff recently received a letter from Joe Byrne, the last year's third sacker of the Peterborough club. The letter is written from Roxborough, Pa., where the former Canadian leaguer has been living all winter.

He says: "Baseball looks very bad down here as far as league ball is concerned, but independent ball is good. I am playing with the Chester club of the Delaware County League and am going good. In fact, I have been fortunate and am leading the league in batting, with an even .500. I am captain of the team and am playing shortstop. The Chester club plays on Saturdays only and holidays. It is not too bad, but I would prefer playing every day. 'Home Run' Baker is in this league."

Byrne intimates that he would like to rejoin the Canadian league.

A New Main Will Be Laid

On Robinson Street at an Estimated Cost of $266.

Dr. M. A. Morrison and Mr. R. J. Kidd waited upon the Utilities Commission last evening and requested that the main on Hunter Street between Belmont Avenue and Park Street be laid so as not to injure the lawns on the north side of the street. The Superintendent will be instructed to lay an eight inch main on that portion of Hunter Street, and to leave the present four inch main in place.

Mr. H. O. Fiske, manager of the Utilities Commission, was instructed to do the work necessary to separate the electric power and light circuits at an estimated cost of $250.00.

Mr. D. W. Dumble will not be allowed the discount of sixteen dollars that he asked for upon the grounds that he forgot to meet the payment when due.

Mr. C. H. Huffman asked that a new service be laid at number 400 Downie Street. The matter was laid over until the new main is laid on Hunter Street.

The Waterworks Superintendent reported on the following petitions for mains:

Robinson Street, from Rogers Street to No. 115 Robinson Street. Estimated cost, $266. Estimated revenue, $36.35. The Superintendent was instructed to lay the main.

Rogers Street, from Sophia Street to No. 260 Rogers Street. Estimated cost, $217. Estimated revenue, $18.97. Not granted.

Munroe Avenue, 16th Concession Street to Knox Street. Estimated cost, $842. Estimated revenue, $55.16. Not granted.

Windows To Be Shut When The Zeppelins Come

LONDON, May 22—An intimation that German Zeppelin airships probably will use bombs charged with poisonous gases, if they make a raid on London, is contained in a notice issued by Scotland Yard last night.

To the caution previously given that the public should take refuge in houses in order to be out of the way of the fragments of shells when missiles are fired at enemy aircraft is the following added injunction:

"It would be well for persons thus taking refuge to keep all windows and doors on lower floors closed so as to prevent the admission of deleterious gas."

"Is the man your sister is goin' to marry rich?" "Naw; every time the marriage is mentioned paw says 'Poor man!'"

DECLARATION BEFORE NIGHT

King Victor Preparing a Document to be Addressed to His People

COMPELLED TO ARMS

ROME, May 22.—Italy's war declaration will go flashing on its way to Vienna before night, according to a well defined rumour credited in diplomatic circles here to-day.

King Victor Emmanuel called in his private secretary early this morning and begun preparing a document to be addressed to the people of Italy. In Government circles it was said the document will be a proclamation of war, signed by every member of the cabinet. Explaining how Italy was compelled to resort to arms in order to safeguard her national honour and integrity.

The Royal proclamation will invite the people of Italy to perform their dut in the crisis and to make all possible sacrifices to insure victory for Italian arms.

On portion, addressed particularly to the Italian army and navy, will call upon them to uphold Italian traditions and to bring a successful war to a speedy termination.

HAS ABANDONED HOPE.

BERLIN, May 22.—From headquarters of Gen. Mackensen's army before Przemysl, Emperor William to-day sent word that he has abandoned the hope that Italy will remain neutral.

The Kaiser is preparing to return Italian decorations and uniforms of honourary colonels conferred upon him and upon the Crown Prince by King Victor Emmanuel.

"I have been a trained nurse for some fifteen years, and like many nurses, drank strong coffee. About two years ago I had to call a halt. I missed my coffee until some one recommended Postum, which I have used ever since, recommending it to many of my patients."

A Teacher says:

"I have been a coffee drinker ever since I can remember. I have been teaching school for sixteen years, and became more and more nervous. I could not sleep. After reading some of your literature I decided to try Postum. I have been using it about thirty days; my nerve have improved; I have no headache; sleep peacefully, and am able to do my school work better."

A Doctor says:

"I often find it necessary to prohibit the use of coffee for my patients, and have advised the use of Postum with good results to the nervous system and digestive apparatus."

When the time comes that you want to get rid of tea and coffee troubles, change to

POSTUM

Made of wheat, roasted with a bit of wholesome molasses, Postum is entirely free from the drug, caffeine, in tea and coffee, or any other harmful substance.

Both Postum Cereal — which has to be boiled — and Instant Postum—made in the cup instantly—are delicious, nourishing, and cost about the same per cup.

Absolutely Pure

Never Questioned

Royal Baking Powder is absolutely pure and wholesome. It is made from highly refined, pure, cream of tartar, an ingredient of grapes. Not an atom of unwholesomeness goes into it; not an unwholesome influence comes from it. It perfectly leavens the food, makes it finer in appearance, more delicious to the taste, more healthful.

Its superiority in all the qualities that make the perfect baking powder is never questioned.

BRILLIANT SUCCESS HAS BEEN MADE BY THE FRENCH NORTH OF ARRAS

Gen. Joffre's Army Now Occupies All Lorette Hill---Position Seriously Hampered Advance Toward Lens---Progress Made East and West of Neuve Chapelle.

BRITISH TROOPS CONTINUE TO ADVANCE

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

LONDON, May 22.—The weather being improved on the western front, both the British and French troops have resumed the offensive north of Arras. General Joffre's forces made a brilliantly successful assault on the Lorette slopes, capturing the German fortified position known as "the White Way." These works are situated on the only remaining ridge of the hill which was still partially in the possession of the enemy. As a result of the French success their further advance toward Lens cannot now be hampered, the entire Lorette hill and the lesser ridges which the Germans had defended fiercely for more than six months being now held by the French. The enemy was also driven from the section of Ablain St. Nazaire which linked the "White Way" works to the northern end of the village still occupied by them. Several hundred prisoners were taken, including numerous officers.

NUMEROUS LOCAL FIGHTS.

"Since my last communication of the 17th," says Sir John French, the British Commander-in-Chief, in an official communication made public last night, "the operations have been hampered by the weather.

"But in spite of this our troops have made appreciable progress east and south of La Quinque Road (near Neuve Chapelle). The main characteristics of these operations have been numerous local fights for strong points behind the enemy's original line. In capturing several of these points our infantry has again displayed great gallantry.

"On the remainder of the front there is nothing to report except minor artillery engagements.

"Thursday night we brought down a German aeroplane in the neighbourhood of Ypres."

Fighting took place on the right-of-way north of Ypres on the east bank of the Yser Canal, to which the Germans retired some time ago. The Germans first succeeded in gaining a foothold in the French trenches, but counter-attacks were begun immediately by the French, which not only won them their old trenches, but additional ground beyond their original position. The French captured two or three hundred prisoners, including several bomb-throwers, and the ground was strewn with more than 500 German dead.

BRITISH PRISONERS SHOT.

People arriving in Holland from Louvain bring a story of another outrage in that town, this time against British prisoners. Constantly trains full of wounded pass through for Germany. On Saturday there were amongst the passengers ten captive British soldiers. These were seen at the station, but while the backs of the guards were turned all the men in khaki escaped. Six were soon retaken and promptly shot on the spot.

KING OF YPRES FOR A SPELL.

At British headquarters in Northern France is a tale which is well vouched for. When Ypres was first bombarded early in November we withdrew our troops from the town but did not remove the civil population. There was one British private who did not leave with the rest for he was asleep in a cellar. Next morning he awoke to find Ypres without any authority, and disliking that, he set about governing it himself. He kept 11 citizens under iron discipline, had looters shot at sight, and prevented drunkenness. They called him "Le Roi de Ypres." But his kingship lasted only a week. A callous court-martial tried him, found his efforts in the cause of order had been good, and forgave him his other delinquencies.

COLONEL H. M. ELLIOT—Assistant Adjutant General of the Toronto Military division, and probably the most popular officer there, who will take command of the camp of 8,000 soldiers at Sewell, Man. He is an Imperial Officer loaned to the Canadian Government by the British authorities, and has been in Toronto since 1913. He was in charge of the organisation and administration of Toronto Exhibition Camp, where 8,000 soldiers of the second contingent have trained this winter.

London Without Street Cars and City Transit Is Much Hampered

LONDON, May 21.—With the exception of an occasional car London today is without a street car service, virtually all the drivers and conductors of the London County Municipal Railway street car systems, now out on strike, having taken a pledge not to return to work until a permanent increase in pay, and not merely a war bonus, is granted.

While London is not so dependent on street cars as many other large cities in the United Kingdom, the inconvenience is great, especially in the morning and in the evening, as the cars to a large extent served the working class districts.

So many motor omnibuses have been commandeered for war purposes that the strike throws undue strain on the electric and other railroads, which with difficulty are handling the millions of workers who enter and leave London morning and evening.

DESTROYED COAL DOCKS AND STATION

PETROGRAD, May 22. — Russian marines have been landed on the Black Sea coast east of Eregli and about 140 miles from Constantinople.

They made shore under protection of warships' guns and after repulsing a small body of Turkish troops, destroyed coal docks and stations near Eregli.

TWENTY KILLED AND MANY ARE INJURED

CARLISLE, Eng., May 22.—Many passengers are reported killed and three hundred soldiers injured in a collision, to-day, between a special troop train bound for Carlisle and a passenger train. Both trains caught fire.

Later reports said twenty passengers were killed and many injured.

ITALIAN FRONTIER, via Paris, May 22.—The Italian military authorities are guarding with strictest secrecy the movement of troops. Von Buelow Expected.

CHIASSO, Switzerland, May 22. — Prince Von Buelow, the German ambassador to Rome, is expected to reach here from the Italian capital very shortly after the Senate votes on the House bill empowering the Cabinet to act for Parliament in matters pertaining to a declaration of war. The German consul at Leghorn arrived here by automobile last night, and many other Germans are coming in all the time from points in Italy by train and by automobile.

Bonapartes to Aid Italy.

PARIS, May 22.—A news agency despatch from Rome says that Prince Victor, head of the House of Bonaparte; Prince Louis Napoleon, his brother, and Prince Affonso, of Portugal, brother of the late King Carlos, have applied to the Italian War ministry for permission to join the army. Prince Victor and Prince Louis Napoleon are grand-nephews of Napoleon I. Their mother was Marie Clotilda, a princess of Savoy, the reigning house of Italy.

Murdered a Man For $200

NEW YORK, May 20.—Coming from the death house at Sing Sing prison, where he is awaiting execution, William Flack, aged 22, told at the murder trial of Angelo Leggio how he had killed Leggio's rival in love for $200. With no trace of emotion in voice or manner, the witness gave the details of the transaction, showing how the crime had been planned and carried out in cold blood.

Leggio wanted to get even with Guiseppe Marino for "stealing his girl," according to the witness.

"I asked how much was in it, and agreed to do the job," said Flack. "Leggio gave me $200 and told me where Marino could be found. With two companions I went to his home. I did not shoot him then, but went back later. The door was locked, and we broke it in. Marino was lying on the bed, and was shot as he lay. I heard later that the girl had run from the house as I killed Marino. I went around the next day and looked in, and Marino's body was still on the bed. The next day I looked again, and the body was still there. Then on the third day the police were notified, and I was there when they broke into the house."

After testifying, Flack identified the defendant Leggio as the man who bought the murder.

When teas make the enormous advance that they have during the past few months, the general inclination is to lower the quality and put in more dust. The Salada Tea Co. give exactly the same quality and freedom from dust as in the past. They would prefer going out of business to lowering the quality they have served the public with for 25 years, but they must charge the higher prices they are compelled to pay for fine teas.

Road Oil Is Used in Omemee

Oil Can be Applied With a Sprinkler in the Same Manner as Water

The application of oil to keep down the dust on the streets in summer was strongly recommended at the recent convention of Ontario Good Roads Association. The Reeve of Omemee writing in regard to their experience with oil says: "We have been using oil for five years and find it practically dust proof. We use 60 barrels on 1½ miles of street in the season. No. 2 Asphalton oil gives us best satisfaction. We scraped off the dust the first year but not since, as it seems to leave a better and smoother road with it on. We paid 9 cents a gallon for oil and empty the barrels off the cars into the waggon and reload empties as emptied." This is something worth thinking about. Oil can be applied with a sprinkler in the same manner as water and only requires to be done about twice in a season.

Happy Hawkins in the Panhandle

By ROBERT ALEXANDER WASON

CHAPTER VII.
ISAAC FOSTER.

Next day Red took me in and sighted me to the three he had mentioned and after watchin' their style a while, I hired 'em. Phil McLaughlin was about twenty-seven, Mex about thirty, and Missourie about middle-age. The first two were on the quiet order; but Missourie was so everlastin' silent he sort o' echoed like an empty buildin'. Right after noon, Monody came in to get his stores and the boys put their war-bags in the waggon and rode out with him.

"I'll tell ya what let's do!" sez Red as soon as we'd got 'em off our hands. "Let's go around and hunt up Mr. Foster. He's stoppin' at the hotel. You think up some question 'at's been puzzlin' you for a long time and we'll make a bet on it. If Mr. Foster answers it, you take him along: if he don't, I buy cigars and liquor for the crowd."

I thought over my perplexers for some time and chose out one that I was downright curious about. "I don't want to lead no one astray by takin' devilment out to camp," sez I, virtuous; "but if you'll make it that you pay for Smith's hat and boots, why I'm game to run you a whirl."

"Come along," sez Red, grabbin' my arm.

We found Foster sittin' in the hotel office squintin' out at the street, and hanged if I could see anything about him to make me feel covetous.

Some men have full beards, some have frail beards, and some have common-sense; Isaac's was a frail beard. It looked like full beard in a flatterin' light; but when he got between the light and the looker, the outline of his real face loomed up ghastly and dim like a herd in the mist. I own up 'at the outline wasn't a thing to make a vain man boastful, but still, those whiskers didn't add no more beauty to him than choppin' off his nose just 'cause it was crooked would 'a' done.

There ain't a mite o' sense in whiskers anyway ya look at it. Those who have 'em in weavin' quantities shave 'em off as soon as their skin heals from the last shave; while a sallow little cuss with a brisket like a lizard just can't seem to think at all unless he's got a pullible whisp o' hair somewhere on his face. Isaac's were a sort of dead-grass bay and they sprangled out twisted and tossy like a mesquite pasture, out o' which his big red ears poked like a pair o' deer [illegible] at the first queer move.

All in all, he struck me as a feller who had been so anxious to come to earth that he had agreed to take just whatever remnants of features happened to be left over from a rush season; but he did have good eyes, unusual good eyes—eyes 'at even a dog wouldn't have no cause to be ashamed of. He was a wonderful earnest man, too; but it did seem to me 'at the good Lord should have known a reformer.

"Red here tells me 'at the' ain't no question you can't answer, and so I've come up on a sort of a bet to satisfy my curiosity," sez I.

Isaac looked like a yawnin' tom-cat when he gave a pleased smile, and this time he was a little overly tickled, but felt ashamed of showin' it. "Why, heh-heh, really," he giggled. "Mr. Gingley is too good, her-heh."

"Go ahead and give your question," sez Red. "I'm a-backin' him and I don't need no bracin' up yet."

"Well," sez I, slow and gentle, "what I want to know is, why do pajamers button off to one side instead of straight down the middle?"

"What the h—— is a pajamer?" asked Red, while Uncle Isaac took off his eye-crutches and wiped 'em thoughtful. I just looked hopeful and wooden.

"Really," sez Isaac, after windin' up his thinker and lettin' it run down again, "I never expected such a question as that."

"Well," sez I, mild as prune juice, "you tell me the question you was expectin', and I'll ask you that. I wouldn't for the world disappoint anybody."

He put his blinders on with a jerk and looked at me as wicked as a school marm. "I didn't ever claim to be a cyclopedium," he snapped. "I am perfectly willin' to answer any questions I can: but such a question as this is simple frivolous."

"Can you answer it?" sez I.

"No," sez he, "not authoritively. I presume it's merely a matter of fashion, but many fashions which are ridiculous in the extreme to-day, had some reason for their origin; and so I refuse to commit myself at this present."

"Come on, Red," sez I. "I got the size in my pocket."

"Now, wait, gentlemen," sez Isaac. "I do not believe in wagers; but neither do I wish to be the cause of anybody's losin' one: so if you please I should like to take over Mr. Gingley's obligation—or as much of it as I can afford."

"Would you do that?" sez I.

"I shouldn't feel comfortable otherwise," sez he, shakin' his head like an indignant prairie dog.

Now he couldn't 'a' hit me any harder with a club. It never would have occurred to me that a little whisp o' tumble-weed like him would have any sportin' instincts, but accordin' to my way o' figgerin' he was throwin' his lead right smask into the bull's eye. "Aw, this was no regular bet," sez I. "I intended to blow one o' the new hands off to a hat and pair o' shoes, and just turned it over to Red here as a joke. I don't intend to hold him to it."

"I don't care nothin' about that," sez Red. "I'm unusual flush and I'd rather pay for these dry goods twice over than have a feller in the outfit wear such trimmin's as he's got now. I don't think a whole lot o' that feller, anyway. He don't seem much sick to me, and yet he don't want to do a thing but lie around rolled up in a blanket. Who's goin' to get him a saddle?"

"Jim sez he has three extra ones," sez I.

"You're pickin' out the company for all of us this winter," sez Red, meanfully; "but from where I set, a feller without blankets, boots, hat, or saddle don't look to me like even a tin brick."

"By the way," sez Isaac, "would it be possible for me to get board in the neighbourhood of your ranch? Mr. Gingley informs me that the climate is most salubrious."

"You know full as much about the climate and the neighbourhood as I do," sez I, "and then some about the chances for board. I'm not sure sure I never saw the ranch."

IN SUCH PAIN WOMAN CRIED

Suffered Everything Until Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Florence, So. Dakota.—"I used to be very sick every month with bearing down pains and backache, and had headache a good deal of the time and very little appetite. The pains were so bad that I used to sit right down on the floor and cry, because it hurt me so and I could not do any work at those times. An old woman advised me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I got a bottle. I felt better the next month so I took three more bottles of it and got well so I could work all the time. I hope every woman who suffers like I did will try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound." — Mrs. P. W. LANSING, Route No. 1, Florence, South Dakota.

Why will women continue to suffer day in and day out or drag out a sickly, half-hearted existence, missing three-fourths of the joy of living, when they can find health in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound?

For thirty years it has been the standard remedy for female ills, and has restored the health of thousands of women who have been troubled with such ailments as displacements, inflammation, ulceration, tumors, irregularities, etc.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

"Ah yes, I see," sez Isaac. "You see, for many years I was the principal in the High School at Sadine, Pennsylvania, a city of ten thousand, allus taking a deep interest in the prevention of cruelty to dumb animals. When my heath gave out I was given a small inspectorship in the department of New York City, where I found things very lax. In seeking to demonstrate the compelling power of kindness I have been many times bitten by dogs, scratched by cats, and kicked by horses. A horse fell on me last winter while I was endeavouring to assist it from the slippery pavement. While forced to remain indoors on this account I contracted a severe cold which I could not shake off and my Doctor said it was impuritive that I go West and live in the open as much as possible. I cannot afford to go to a resort, I have no acquaintances in the West, and so I am forced to confide in strangers; but believe me, gentlemen, I do not wish to be a burden to you. Would there be any way that I could get transportation with your caravan?"

He had his own way o' talkin', Isaac did, and I found it amusin'. Also the' was something attractive about him like what makes ya fond of an extra homely yallar dog. I was beginnin' to weaken.

"What ya got in the way o' baggage?" sez I.

"I have a large canvas telescope and a small handbag," sez he.

"Is that all?"

"Well," sez he, and the' come a pleadin' into his eyes, "I've got a tiny Yorkshire terrier, just a little, wee mite of a creature; but I can carry him in a basket. You see, I never was married, and I've boarded most of my life so I never kept even a pet until about a year ago. They were going to kill this puppy and I took it. He's a very wise little thing. He isn't a bit of bother, he's up in my room now—won't you come up and see him?"

"None, that settles it," sez I. "I won't be bothered by a dog."

"Aw, come up and see him," sez Red. "He's the cutest thing you ever saw."

"Cute" is one o' the words 'at allus make me feel like spittin' on the carpet, especially when used by a big, red-bearded hulk like Gingley. "I will not," I sez, and this time I sure meant it.

"Wait, I'll go get him," sez Isaac, gettin' up. "He is so small and there are so many, uh, careless men in this town that I fear to take him on the street."

"Let him come along," sez Red, as soon as Isaac had left, but I shook my head.

Purty soon Isaac came back and trottin' after him was the—well blame' if he wasn't cute. His hair was silvery blue and fine as silk. Long, too, and parted down his back as neat as a pin. His eyes were full o' joy and it was plain to see 'at he thought Isaac [illegible] of us live here out of good nature. I hate to see a dog do tricks when he acts as if all his pride had been hammered out when the tricks were hammered in; but this little muff actually begged Isaac for a chance to show out a little and it was fun to watch the fun they both got out of it.

"He won't be a bit of bother," sez Isaac, wishfully.

"A dog is allus bother," sez I. "He'll be fightin' with other dogs and gettin' us into trouble that way; but the worst of it is that you can't break a terrier from chasin' cows. I'm not goin' to have all the fat dogged off a bunch o' cows when I'm in charge of 'em."

"He's such a little thing," sez Isaac.

"So is a bullet," sez I, "so is a glass o' whisky, so is a deck o' cards—so are all the trouble-makers."

Chlorine Easy To Manufacture

That it will not be a difficult matter for the British army to retaliate against Germany in the use of noxious gas, is the opinion of George A. Evans, professor of analytic chemistry at the Ontario College of Pharmacy. The German reputation in chemistry has been achieved, not by brilliance in discovery, but by systematic plodding and the development of the discoveries of others. Chlorine, as used by the Germans was the cheapest gas that they could make. It produces water on the lungs—an effect similar to that of drowning, complicated with blood poisoning. Mild doses result in bronchitis.

Bromine, a much more effective gas, but also much more expensive would smother its victims. "It could," said Prof. Evans, "be put into the shrapnel shells in small bottle and exploded with the bullets. Glass fragments would mingle with the shrapnel, while the bromine, being in liquid form, would fall to the ground and evaporate. The resultant gas would drive every man out of the trench or the neighbourhood, and it would last for some time, much longer than chlorine, which the breeze carries away."

Ammonia is an effective safeguard against the gas of chlorine, which is prepared from common salt and is useful as a bleaching powder.

Bromine is a bi-product in the extraction of potash in the German deposits.

A WEAK HEART.

When the heart is weak or irregular in action, when the blood is thin and watery, remember the blood-former qualities of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and by its use flood the system with rich, red, vitalizing blood. This is Nature's way of curing common and diseases. It is the daily way to secure lasting benefits.

GUNNER ON WARSHIP MUST SEE TARGET

Vast Difference Between Sea and and Land Fighting For That Reason-Effective Range 11 Miles

Perhaps no subject is so little understood as naval gunnery, the general idea being that the effectiveness of a naval gun depends upon its extreme range, says a writer in "Navy and Army." One enquirer asks for the ranges of the 12-inch, 13.5-inch, and 15-inch guns, and adds, "I am asking this question because newspapers of late have quoted the range for 15-inch guns as between 20 and 23 miles."

Suppose this was true, of what use would be a 23-mile range be? The problems that face the naval artillerist are entirely different from those with which the military man has to cope. Military guns are used against fixed objects. The gunner knows exactly where the object is, and, with a map, can fix its distance almost to a yard, and so with his high-angled howitzers can drop shells on to that object, although he cannot see it, and a hill may intervene between it and the gun. His task then is a comparatively simple one.

The naval gunner fires at a moving object, so must see it before he opens fire, and that fact limits the effective range of all guns, no matter what their possible range may be. For example, to see a distance of 23 miles at sea, that is, for the horizon to be 23 miles away, one would need to be 600 feet above sea level. Obviously, no ship in existence has masts that height; 135 feet above sea level gives us an horizon of 12.84 miles; 100 feet an horizon of 11.49 miles. We may take it that the control station of the average ship is not more than 100 feet above sea level, and that, therefore, the extreme effective range of her guns is 11 miles and no more.

At Five Miles Distance

But let us take a ship firing at five miles—roughly, 10,000 yards—(nautical miles), which is the distance it was generally assumed before the war that naval actions would commence. It would take a projectile 12 seconds to travel that distance; if the ship at which the shot was fired was travelling at 20 knots, she would have moved 120 yards in that 12 seconds, which, of course, has to be allowed for when laying the gun. If the ship from which the shot is fired is also traveling at 20 knots or more, that forward movement must also be counteracted on the sights, so that when the gunner fires his gun he does not fire at the ship he desires to hit, but at the spot at which he expects that ship to be when his shot reaches it. Unless he can actually see the ship and judge of her speed he would only throw his projectiles into the sea.

Last year, Mr. Churchill dealt with the 15-inch gun in the House of Commons, and these were the exact words used: "Its power may be measured by the fact that whereas the 13.5-inch gun hurls a projectile of 1,400 pounds, a 15-inch gun fires a projectile of nearly a ton in weight, and can hurl this immense mass of metal ten or twelve miles," which would be from 20,000 to 24,000 yards, and it is probable that the papers have confused the thousands of yards with miles. The real advantage that the 15-inch gun has over a 12-inch, or even 13.5-inch, is that it has a flatter trajectory, which means a tremendous lot in accuracy of shooting. Some time since, Sir Percy Scott dealt with shooting, and said: "In firing at a range of fifteen miles, which is possible, the shot would go to an altitude of 22,500 feet, which, if my geography is correct, is 7,500 feet over the summit of Mont Blanc."

Fall Directly Downwards

Leaving out the question of the different atmospheres it would pass through, it would, in the latter part of its flight, fall almost directly downwards, which very considerably reduces its chance of hitting. The deck of a ship presents a target of, say, 500 feet long by 80 feet wide, tapering off towards each end, and that would be the target that a shot falling from a great height would have to hit. But with a flatter trajectory, the target would be increased immeasurably because the danger zone increases (this really needs a diagram to make it clear). The 12-inch gun can penetrate any armor in existence at possible naval ranges, and can fire a projectile just as far as a 13.5-inch or 15-inch, further, in fact, so our object in increasing the size of the guns was for neither of those purposes, but because we can make much more accurate shooting with the larger guns, and their destructive power is, of course, immensely greater.

Masseenet's Manuscripts.

By his will Masseenet left his manuscript music to the Opera, but it will not be placed in the archives of the National Academy of Music until after the death of Mme. Masseenet. The deceased composer expressed the wish that his wife should remain in charge of the manuscripts because their careful arrangement, classification and preservation had been wholly her work. France has a jealous eye upon Masseenet relics, for the memory of her composer is very dear to her.

Every day some anecdote of the musician appears in the newspapers, of which the following, taken from the Figaro, is typical. A critic was indulging in extravagant praise of Masseenet to his face, and wound up his flattery: "Wagner? What was he? His talent is most absurdly exaggerated. I have to pick and choose among a lot of rubbish in Wagner." "Is that so?" came the composer's suave reply. "I should be quite happy with what you leave."

Burying San Francisco.

He was a wealthy youth, blessed with plenty of money, and a great number of people were ready to take it away from him. He lived in San Francisco, which city, according to reliable report, is as full of speed and action after dark as Ty Cobb is when he steals home with the winning run.

One night the young man, full of check books and ideas, hired a string of 40 cabs and hacks, and, forming them in single file, led the procession down Market street, the principal thoroughfare of San Francisco. His walk was slow, grand and impressive, and the vehicles followed him at a snail's pace. It looked like the funeral of a pet dog or a Mohammedan.

Suddenly a policeman ran out and put about his neck strong but uncaressing fingers.

"What are you trying to do?" asked the officer of the law.

"Why," said the leader of the procession solemnly, "this town is dead, and I'm burying it."—The Popular Magazine.

The Mimosa.

The mimosa, or wattle, which patriotic Australians wore recently in celebration of the anniversary of the landing of the first colony of English draws its name from its supposed mimetic powers. Its leaves were thought to assume the shape of animals. Shelley knew it as the sensitive plant, and other poets have represented the mimosa as curling up when the sound of a horse's hoofs came within a mile or two. Southey imagined the mimosa as a giant tree, and saw men reclining "beneath its shade." But the mimosa Australians know is of moderate dimensions

GALLIPOLI PENINSULA

Gallipoli Peninsula, the Chersonesus Thracica of classical geography, is a fruitful land, whose conditions at one time gave promise of a world-important commercial future. The Turkish occupation of 1357, however, cut off this promise, according to the National Geographical Society, "and the land has remained as obscure to the twentieth century as it was to the Greeks of Pericles' Athens. The wonderful wateravenue which stretches behind it toward the heart of central Asia has remained stagnant of all development.

Gallipoli Peninsula forms the European bank of the Dardanelles. To the north it is inclosed by the deeply indented Gulf of Saros. The soils of this district are exceedingly fertile and well adapted to agriculture. The peninsula is a hilly rib of land fifty-five miles in length and varying between three and thirteen miles in breadth. It supports about 100,000 people. It was the first section of European land to come under the domination of the crescent.

Wheat and maize are grown in considerable quantities there, and are exported to the Aegean Islands and to Turkish ports. Barley, oats and linseed were raised largely for Great Britain, and canary seed was exported to Australia.

Thanks to MILBURN'S Heart and Nerve Pills.

Mrs. J. McLaren, Commanda, Ont., writes us under date of February 9th, 1914. "Sixteen years ago I took bad with my heart and nerves, and was not able to do anything. I tried a good many doctors, but they did me no good; in fact one doctor gave me up to die. I heard about Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills, and I thought I would give them a trial, and after using a couple of boxes I saw that I was improving. I kept on using them for quite a long time. I am eighty-three years old and my heart does not bother me at all.

"I am raising a little girl who was never very strong, and the doctor said that she had palpitation of the heart, so I started to give them to her. She is now twelve years old, and they are doing her more good than I can possibly tell you. I would advise anyone who has a weak heart to try Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills, as they have done wonders for me."

POTATOES WITH MEAT

Potatoes and meat may be a better food combination than bread and meat according to the diet experts of the home economics department of Cornell University, who point out at this time when potatoes are cheap and flour and meat are dear, the average family could profitably dispense with a great many wheat foods and substitute potatoes. They say further that potatoes furnish considerably more energy and valuable mineral matter for the same cost than bread.

The use of potatoes with meat has other justification besides that of being to the taste and of furnishing starch. The authorities of the New York State College of Agriculture say that those who have thought that bread, rice, macaroni, cornmeal or any other of the cereal foods, may take the place of the potato with meat, may perhaps need to readjust their ideas. While it is pointed out that starchy foods should accompany meat, the mere fact that such foods are starchy may not be a sufficient reason for their being introduced as the only acompaniment of roast or steak. These starchy foods are added by the wise housewife to keep the family from being wholly dependent upon protein for their energy, and while all are said to have the same amount of starch in an average helping, they are widely different as to the mineral content.

Minerals are present in foods in very small quanities but their influence on health is important. Some of them yield acids, and others basic substances, which neutralize acids. Meat, eggs and cereals contain mineral elements which give an excess of acid, while vegetables, fruit, and milk have an excess of basis.

IN GREAT DISTRESS FROM ECZEMA

Suffered Over Two Years. Grew Thin and Lost Appetite. Cuticura Soap and Ointment Healed.

233 George St., Sarnia, Ont.—"I suffered for over two years with eczema which first appeared in small pimples and broke into red, inflamed sores. They were very itching and when my clothing rubbed against them I was in great distress. I lost my rest at night and was much disfigured by the eruption. The eczema was so bad that I grew thin and lost my appetite. My hands, arms, face and various parts of my body were covered with an itching, burning eruption of sores and though I took many common and much recommended remedies they failed to do any good.

"I used Cuticura Soap and Ointment and after about three weeks I was healed." (Signed) Miss Bertha Allan, May 23, 1914.

Worth Remembering

If the bright parts of the range turn black from heat, dip a cloth in vinegar, then whiting, and rub the blackened parts.

A few chopped raisins or dates added to an apple salad improves it greatly.

Equal parts of linseed oil and lime water make a soothing application for burns.

Black stockings will always keep a good colour if, after washing, they are rinsed in strong blue water.

A vase which has been flower-stained may be cleaned with tea leaves moistened with vinegar. Try it.

By first scalding the milk and settling it aside to cool, a baked or boiled custard will be perfectly smooth.

HOME HEALTH CLUB

By DR. DAVID H. REEDER

An Early Start.—If you want to help to win the greatest battle for healthy fly that is not allowed to begin grin now. "Swat the fly." One healthy fly that is alolwed to begin operations now and go on through the summer will produce two million descendants before frost comes in the fall. Every fly that you kill now stops the propagation of these disease carriers and helps make the home more comfortable as well as adding to the peace and comfort of the cows, horses and other animals that are compelled to fight the pests.

A determined and united effort on the part of all the people would destroy all the flies in one season. It would also destroy several large manufacturing industries, but we would not cry if every fly screen and fly trap factory in the world was closed tomorrow if the cause was the lack of use for their output.

If you think flies do you and yours no especial harm, just watch your baby as he tries to eat or sleep when unprotected. That reminds me of an article in the little magazine called "Our Tubercular Children." It's worth reading and may help you in caring for your baby this summer.

"Most people consider aviation as an extremely dangerous occupation. So it is, but it is far less dangerous than another that everyone must follow at some period of his or her life. To-day the most dangerous occupation in the world is that of being a baby. Out of all babies in America, 1 in 5 will die before reaching one year of age. Where 3 breast fed babies die, over 20 bottle fed infants perish. If the mothers of America once realize the fact they surely will insist upon nursing their babies unless absolutely physically impossible.

In many cases mothers think even with very young babies they should add some article of food to the milk. This is a mistake. Up to 8 months of age the healthy boby needs only one addition to its diet other than milk, and that is water. After 8 months, simple articles of diet can be added such as cereals, orange juice, etc. At about one year of age the average child can gradually begin to take several articles of diet in addition to the milk, as stale bread or crackers, soft boiled egg, stewed prune juice, beef broth, junket, soft custard. But it is always best to add to the baby's diet only after consulting your doctor.

There are certain other things that are very important for the baby. The baby needs fresh air night and day, just as much as it needs food. The baby should be bathed every day. The baby should be kept warm but not converted into a fireless cooker by clothing that does not permit any of the body heat to escape by radiation. The baby should be trained to sleep at regular intervals day and night. Remember, a new born baby should sleep nearly all the time and a year old baby at least 10 hours out of the 24. Train the baby to regular hours for everything, sleep, baths and bowels.

This can be done in practically all instances. Begin at birth and follow up with good sense and loving firmness. A few or many hours spent in training the baby to regular habits in the first months of the baby's life are a most profitable investment.

Mushroom as a Desirable Food

With the approach of warm weather the wild mushroom is busy gardening, forming its plant, or mycelium, concealed in wood or under soil, ready to bear that luscious fruit you love, or those deadly poisonous caps that have destroyed so much of all life, from humans clear down through the list to insects, since the world began. And the gilled mushroom evolved with the gilled fish in the Paleozoic-Devonian era, and, together, have persisted through more than 25,000,000 of years.

European armies soon will be enjoying the mushrooms which abound in all the present battlefields of Europe. At this moment, right in New York City and environs, to say nothing of the rest of the temperate zone entirely around the globe, the luscious oyster mushroom, one of the Pleurotus genus, has been trying to attract attention on many a log, trunk or stump, in large and meaty clusters, cream-coloured and delicious. Tons of the oyster mushroom annually go to waste because of the many who do not know of its edible qualities. Perhaps some friend of yours has been poisoned by a mushroom not of the market type. Perhaps you have been warned by mushroom death lists in newspapers to shun all but the market type.

The two most feared and deadly poisonous mushrooms the world over are the Death Cap (Amanita phalloides) and the Fly Cap (Amanita muscaria). These two spies in the same genus have destroyed several Emperors, a Pope and probably averaged 500 deaths annually in various parts of the world, to say nothing of innumerable mammals, birds, reptiles and insects, the latter being almost wholly destroyed by poisonous fungi.

Two chemists recently have made their report on their attempts to separate the poisons of these mushrooms, and to define them. They are William W. Ford, of John Hopkins, and Ernest D. Clark, of the Bureau of Chemistry, Department of Agriculture, Washington. They found out absolutely nothing more than have able and great chemists during a century or more past. They announced that for the poison of one of these species, muscaria, an antidote had been defined. The other species, phalloides, baffled all efforts of analysis, and yielded to no serum or antidote.

In other words, the poison of phalloides ranks with that other great mystery, the germ of cancer, unquestionably a bacterium rather than a bacillus, and hence possibly something of the nature of a fungus or alga, too small to be seen by the highest-powered microscope, which measures to one twenty-five-thousandth part of an inch.

NOT DEADLY SPECIES.

Of the two deadly species, muscaria is most easily detectable by the layman. It is a large, showy mushroom, orange yellow in colour, with what looks like warts upon the cap. You see them in dooryards, where evergreens are growing, sometimes thousands of them, standing up, tall and splendid in the grass. Keep your hens in the henyard and your cows in the barn while these fellows are up, with their tempting appearance.

The species Amanita phalloides can readily be avoided. Whatever the colour of the cap—white or gray, the under side of it, the gills, are pure white. The cap may or may not be covered with warty protuberances. The stem terminates in a bulb, usually wholly or partially beneath the soil. If a large, deep chunk of earth is taken out around, the bulb invariably will be found setting in a cup. Handle a poisonous mushroom as you like, but do not experiment with one at the table. There are other species, both in the Amanita genus and that of Lepiota, that closely resemble it, and which may be deliciously edible. You cannot learn these differences from the books. Only an expert, with the several fresh species in hand, can teach you such differences.

There are other poisonous species of mushrooms, which, while they may or may not kill, cause unpleasant symptoms after eating. Their names and appearances are best taught by an expert. So many edible species exist that one can readily learn to know enough of them by sight to have an abundance of good table food for at least nine months in the year. There are thousands of species of mushrooms. Suppose you had 100 acres of land to exploit, part woodland, part meadow, lawn, pasture, cultivation fields and gardens, with barns and barnyard. Almost every day different species would fruit, one after another, during the entire nine months, the most of them late in the autumn, right up to the freezing of the soil. Almost any given 100 acres would keep you busy studying these constantly arising crops and determining their values. And right here comes in the strange feature of the whole situation.

The same 100 acres the following season might not produce so much as six species you gathered the first year. The second season would show other hundreds of species, the third season other species, and so on. You might or might not ever see again the many species gathered during the first six years—always a new lot. This is due to what is called the periodicity of mushrooms, of which little is known and recorded.

EVERY ELEMENT OF FLESH.

That little, delicious mushroom is one of thousands of species that the Creator gave for a self-propagating food for man and lower animal. I believe the mushroom was the first food established on earth, millions of years ago. As a food it contains every element of flesh, vegetables, fish and fruits. Its detractors are ignorant and criminal, vicious and debasing. It is monstrous that text books of the "pure food" type should be allowed to circulate, attacking its nutritious qualities. What its detractors allege is true only of the decaying mushroom. When fresh out of the soil the mushroom has no equal as a food and for nourishment. If a mushroom has ever given you so much as one unfavourable symptom, believe me, it was not fresh when cooked. Nor will it stand for warming over, like hash. It must be cooked fresh and eaten quickly.

The largest number of deaths from mushroom poisoning occur in the autumn, mostly among the poor foreign populations. These populations are supplied all summer by peddlers, who collect wild mushrooms in the fields or woods about cities, and who know the poisonous species, but know only a few of the edible ones. Late in the season, when edible species are scarce, these peddling rascals gather poisonous species and sell them to make a little extra money, regardless of consequences.

"Billy" Sunday to go to Chicago But Not Till 1917

"Billy" Sunday will conduct a revival in Chicago, but not until January, 1917. He so announced in Paterson when a Chicago delegation called on him with a petition a mile, signed by 55,000 persons, and an underwritten pledge of $50,000 for the campaign.

The Chicagoans wanted Sunday sooner, and it was suggested that Trenton give up its date to Chicago and a representative was dispatched to Trenton.

Trenton, however, flatly refused to swap dates with Chicago, saying the money was all pledged and the preliminaries were in such shape that the date could not be altered.

Sunday announced that he had accepted the call to Minneapolis and would conduct a revival there during March and April, 1917, directly following the Chicago meeting. To the call from Bridgeport, Conn., he gave no definite answer.

At the service at the Tabernacle 889 hit the trail. Billy made a direct appeal to a delegation of about 700 Odd Fellows, but not more than ten came forward. Employees of the Eclipse Silk Company presented him with a silk handkerchief, while the Odd Fellows give him a large cake with a Bible worked on top. The collection of $220.46 at the afternoon service was given to the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, while the Salvation Army and Volunteers of America shared in the evening receipts of $452.84.

TO CURE DANDRUFF

Take two tablespoonfuls of sulphur and mix with five cents worth of glycerine. Get a package of sage and pour over it a quart of boiling water; let stay on back of stove for about two hours, and when cool strain into bottle and add sulphur and glycerine. Add a small quantity of alcohol, just enough to keep the tonic from souring. About two tablespoonfuls will be plenty. Even if the sulphur is not all dissolved, it is all right, for the sulphur in the tonic is what stops and cures the dandruff. And dandruff is the cause of hair falling out. Rub the scalp with the finger ends until it feels hot, and then rub the tonic into the scalp.

CHAPTER XII.

Crossed Wires.

THUS it happened that just when Drake entered Sing Wah's unpretentious doorway the taxi with the hotel detective and John Dorr drew up in a side street and stopped.

"It was here they left me," said the chauffeur sulkily.

The detective and John got out and stared about them. They were in the lower part of Chinatown, a single tier of blocks that stretched beyond the bounds toward the bay—not in the quarter, but of it.

"Which way did they take the girl?" said the practical detective.

The driver led them around the corner and up an alleyway. He pointed to Sing Wah's door. "I think they went in there," he muttered.

"Ah!" said the detective thoughtfully. "When I was on the police force I used to know that Chinaman. He's the smoothest rascal in America, bar none."

John gritted his teeth in helpless rage. "And she's in that fiend's foul clutches," he groaned aloud.

At this moment a policeman came along and accosted John's companion familiarly. In a few words the case was explained to him.

"You won't find anything, of course," the officer remarked. "But just for satisfaction let's have a look-see and a chin-chin with Sing Wah."

They entered the shop just as a Chinese was closing a panel door after Drake, who had come to make his promised attempt to win Ruth's confidence. Sing Wah was nowhere to be seen.

After some futile parley with the Chinese, whose ignorance was complete in every detail, the two officers agreed that they were wasting time.

"Old Sing's the boy to see," said the house detective. "Let's wait awhile."

Now, Sing Wah had pondered the affair during the night, and the more he thought over having a lovely white girl in the cylindrical room the less he liked it. It was deadly dangerous. Courts might be lenient with the smuggler and the go-between. Sing Wah knew that if even a suspicion got abroad that a young white woman was imprisoned in his quarters a ravening mob would tear his place stick from stone and hang him without trial. He was determined to get the girl away immediately. So he was unfeignedly glad to see Drake.

Drake attempted to explain what Wilkerson wanted, but the Chinese cut him short.

"Harry is insane," he said quietly. "He is mad over that woman. I have done all I can. You must get her out of here."

"But how?" demanded Drake. "She doesn't know me very well, and she'll scream her head off, and I'll be arrested, and we'll all be in a mess."

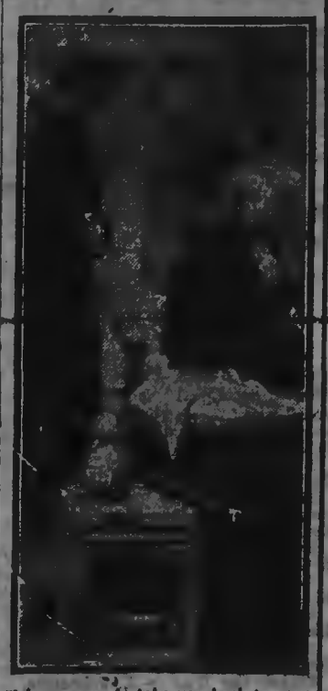
Sing Wah nodded thoughtfully. Then he looked up and listened to the low words of one of his clerks. Dismissing him with a single grunt, he turned to Drake.

"There's not much time," he said softly. "They are on the trail already."

"Who?"

"The police." He motioned Drake to a chair in the little alcove, where they stood and went on: "Stay here a moment. I will see for myself." He pulled a lever, and the room swung around till the door was opposite him. With long, slender fingers he slipped back the panel and vanished.

Ruth lay on a couch, open eyed and white faced. Beside her a richly dressed Chinese woman crouched, whispering soothingly. At sight of Sing Ruth Gallon suddenly sat upright in silent horror.



"I have come to take you back to your friends."

"I beg your pardon, miss," Sing said in his silkiest English. "I have come to take you back to your friends outside."

The girl shrank back. "No, no, no!" she moaned. "They are not my friends."

"Surely Harry Wilkerson"— Sing suggested craftily, to see how the land lay.

"Wilkerson!" she whispered. "Is he—was he here?"

Her tone conveyed all that he wished to know. He motioned to the woman to leave and when she was gone pulled a cord, which let down a light rope ladder.

"I am sorry, madam," he said quietly, "but I shall have to ask you to climb up this. It is the only safe way out." He laid one hand gently on her arm.

Now, Ruth was California bred, with all the prejudices for and against the Chinaman. She screamed. At that instant there was a crash of a shattered door in the distance and the sound of men talking in excited tones.

"You must come," said Sing Wah. "I will take you to a place of safety. All I ask of you is to follow me and be silent."

His earnestness was unmistakable, and Ruth yielded. A moment later they both stood on a small landing place above the cylindrical room. Sing Wah carefully drew up the ladder and coiled it again on the wooden trigger that had released it. Then he led the way down a dark passage to stairs lit by a mere glimmer of gas. Ruth drew back, but he indicated that she must go on. Even as she obeyed his imperious gesture there rang out the muffled clangor of revolver shots. Then again came the sound of doors yielding to violence and the shouts of wrathful men.

Sing Wah hurried her on, down steps, along shadowy passageways and under low arches till she felt a sudden cool, salt breath on her face. At her feet she saw the glimmer of water and a boat riding to a long painter. Quickly and silently Sing Wah drew the little craft alongside and motioned to her to get in.

By this time the tumult had died down to a mere muttering of shots with an occasional yell, muffled by walls and the distance. She stared fearfully about her, at the great arches of dripping brick overhead, at the little landing under foot, at the dark vista of the tunnel through which the water streamed in a swirling tide. She drew back and let her voice out in one long, forlorn scream, the pent up agony of many hours, her final call for help against the dark powers that had seized upon her.

With swift strength Sing Wah reached out his sinewy arms, raised her up and seated her in the stern of the boat. A moment later he had cast off the painter and snapped the oars. The boat slipped silently away on the current into the murk.

* * * * * * *

After some talk between the officers John Dorr was informed that if he liked they would enter Sing Wah's and make a thorough search.

"Not that I think we'll find anything or anybody," said one of the policemen, "but it never does any harm to take a look-see through Sing Wah's, and the lieutenant is coming down now to take charge."

A moment later that officer arrived, and John Dorr made his tale as convincing as possible. The lieutenant seemed dubious.

"It isn't like the old rascal to run his head into danger that way," he insisted. "I think you are on the wrong trail. Who did you say was the man who did all this?"

"Wilkerson—Harry Wilkerson," John answered bitterly.

"Wilkerson?" repeated the lieutenant. "That puts another color on the matter. Wilkerson and Sing Wah used to be pals. This'll bear looking into. Come on, men."

With wonderful quickness the officer disposed his men so that every known exit was guarded. Then he motioned to John to follow him and went boldly up to the shop door and entered.

Followed again a futile parley with a Chinese who professed to know no language but his own. The lieutenant's quick ear caught a sound of something moving directly behind the impassive clerk. Brushing him aside, he smashed in the door in the partition and strode into the hallway beyond. John Dorr was close at his heels.

The next few moments were to live long in John's memory as the strangest of his life.

"Be careful!" warned the officer. "The rascals may start shooting."

Even as he spoke there was a ruddy flash down the dark alleyway, and Dorr staggered back.

"Only my arm," he muttered.

"Come on! Don't give 'em another chance at us here! Rush 'em!"

An instant later they stood in the cylindrical room. John stared about him, but the lieutenant merely remarked, "This room was built merely for tourists' consumption. Let me see that arm of yours!"

Examination proved the wound to be slight. They glanced up from it to see the doorway swing slowly away as the room revolved.

"Trapped, by smoke!" said the lieutenant. He laid a warning hand on Dorr's arm. "Keep quiet. We've lost our directions and we must wait a moment till we discover where that doorway is."

So they stood hesitant for a few seconds. A panel slipped open in the wall and a woman's face appeared for an instant. Swift as the Chinawoman was, the police officer was quicker and he plunged through the shallow panel, with Dorr at his shoulder.

Once through they paused in the semi-darkness to orientate themselves. Finally the lieutenant stepped forward. "This way," he said. "I hear voices."

At that very moment there came up to them an unearthly scream, a shriek of pure terror.

"Ruth!" John yelled, and he and the officer both plunged forward.

Instead of the firm footing they expected empty air received them. Twenty feet below they struck the water.

Spluttering and swearing, the policeman helped Dorr to a little ledge that ran alongside the tunnel.

"The miserable Chink dropped us into the big sewer," he gasped. "It runs into the bay just a little ways on. We'll have to swim for it, partner."

Dorr looked down at his arm and shook his head. "Isn't that a boat over there?" he demanded, pointing into the shadow.

"Blamed if it ain't," said the lieutenant, much relieved. "We'll soon be out of here."

In spite of his wound Dorr insisted on rowing, and the officer philosophically allowed him to, seating himself gingerly in the stern of the little craft and fending it off the brick walls of the tunnel with his hands as the swift current drew them onward.

To John the whole affair seemed like a dream. He saw the great dripping arches sliding past overhead to join the long vista of arches that bridged the glimmering water which splashed gently along to the call of the tide; he saw the dark bulk of the lieutenant in the stern; he felt the pain of his wound; he still heard Ruth's wild call for help. But it was all unrelated, as if each were a fact by itself, isolated. He struggled to gather his senses together.

"Look out!" shouted the policeman suddenly as the great half cylinder curved sharply and a blast of fresh air struck them. "We'll be swept out into the bay! Keep the boat trim!"

Awakened by this warning, John devoted himself to his oars and a half moment later steered their little craft out under the piles of a wharf.

"Where to now?" he demanded daily.

The lieutenant pointed a thick forefinger toward another small boat a few rods away. "There is Sing Wah now, by smoke!" he exclaimed.

John Dorr glanced around. He first saw the impassive visage of the Chinese and then the figure crouched in the stern sheets. It was Ruth! He raised his voice in a triumphant yell. Hearing that call from her mate, the girl roused herself and cried back across the water: "John! John!"

At this point the police officer took part with a stern order to Sing Wah to stop rowing and surrender. He emphasized this command by covering the Chinese with his revolver.

Sing Wah was of no mind to be caught in this way. With a dexterous sweep of the oars he swirled his little skiff around so that Ruth was between him and the other boat, and he never ceased to pull doggedly away.

"You've got to row, son," said the lieutenant grimly. "Mr. Sing Wah doesn't intend to be caught so easily. I daren't shoot for fear of hitting the girl."

"You must come," said Sing Wah.

John saw the reasonableness of this and bent to his oars without regard to his wound. The boat surged through the water after the other.

With a good lead of a hundred yards Sing Wah stood a fair show of gaining his object—a landing under some wharf and a quiet escape. He knew that if he were to fall into the hands of the police under the present circumstances he would be treated mercilessly. He rowed furiously.

But the Chinese had long since ceased active life, and his muscles were soft. John Dorr steadily gained on him. Slowly he crept up, foot by foot, inch by inch, his eyes fixed on the steady figure of the officer in the stern.

At last he caught encouragement from the policeman's face. He heaved the skiff fairly out of the water, grasped the stern of the other boat and before the Chinese could clear himself for a leap overboard was upon him.

Now, Sing Wah was a true oriental. It showed in his swift drawing of a knife and a swifter slash at John Dorr's arm. But he was too late. With an inarticulate roar of rage John flung the knife overboard and then flung its owner after it.

Sing Wah gone and swimming away toward the shelter of a nearby wharf, John strode back to where Ruth lay half inanimate and picked her up in his arms.

"Honey! Honey!" he murmured. "You're safe with me!"

Very slowly she opened her eyes and gazed long and searchingly into his face. It was indeed true that she was safe. She laid her head on his shoulder in perfect confidence that all was well. The police lieutenant stepped into the boat and took the oars.

"It's not like Sing Wah to be doing such tricks," he argued to himself. "I believe that Harry Wilkerson is back of this. I'll just keep an eye out for Mr. Wilkerson."

The lieutenant contemplated his dripping uniform with a frown, which softened when he looked up at the two lovers. He pulled more strongly for the landing.

The story of The Master Key will appear each Friday and Saturday in the Evening Examiner, and will be shown in Photo Play at the Tiz-It Theatre on Monday and Tuesday of each week.

A HOMESTEADER AT 97

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., May 18. — Thomas Brady has gone west, out to Montana, to grow up with the country. Brady is a Civil War veteran. He's just 97. He started a few days ago for Miles City, Mont., and soon after his arrival will be housed in a little pioneer's shack on a government homestead, where he intends to live until he has acquired undisputed title to the land.

Why does he do it Let Brady tell: "I've been used to an active life and plenty of room," explained Brady at his old home in Saint Paul. "Time hangs heavily on my hands and now that I am no longer in business I feel all cooped up among all these houses. I've got nothing to do and I'm lonesome.

"Of course, I may never get to Montana. I'm not so foolish as to think that I have long to live. The priest says that I am good for twenty years more, but I may be gone in a week. I feel fine. For the most part I will have a horse and will make some improvements and if I can get any help will do some farming."

Brady has been a farmhand, a lumberjack, a sawmill hand, a riverman, a merchant, and his old place at Concord and South Robert Streets still is known as Brady's Corner. He smokes every day, not a great deal, but always several pipes each day, and before each meal he takes a drop of the crather.

He comes from County Monaghan, Ireland, where he was born on November 21 ,1819. The old man has grandchildren and great-grandchildren all over the northwest. He will exercise his soldiers' homestead right, but this advantage only permits him to deduct from the term of residence the period he served in the army. The frontier life and the privations of homesteading have no terrors for the aged man.

"I have seen hard times in Ireland, and in Minnesota, too, for that matter, and this trip doesn't worry me at all," he continued. "When I get a shack up for myself and a horse I'll be all right."

"Could you call Zeppelins dogs of war?" interrogated Mr. Bling. "I think you could," I answered, "for they're Skye terriers, I think."

STARVATING OR MERCILESS TORTURE

A choice between starvation or merciless torture is the dismal prospect before all victims of indigestion, for although they are in need of food to nourish the body, they are afraid to eat because of the long periods of pain and discomfort that follow even the lightest meals.

The urgent needs of all who suffer from indigestion is to gain strength so that the stomach can extract nourishment from the food taken. Pain after eating is the way the stomach signifies its protest that it is too weak to do nature's work. To take purgatives is only to aggrevate the trouble. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills give new strength to weak stomachs because they enrich and purify the blood supply thus enabling the stomach to digest food naturally. Almost from the first the appetite revives; then food can be taken without pain and the burden of digestion disappears. The following case proves the truth of these statements. Mr. W. H. Silver, a well known farmer living in the vicinity of Hamford, N. S., says: "For upwards of seven years I was tortured with indigestion; sometimes I was so bad that I would not taste a bit of hearty food, but would have to content myself with a bit of stale bread. At times I suffered excruciating pains in my stomach, and could hardly sleep at night. I tried various prescriptions but got no benefit from them and naturally I was in a very reduced state of health. I had come to believe that I was doomed for the balance of my life to this most constant torture, when I read of a case similar to my own cured through the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. This gave me new courage and I decided to try them. To make a long story short, the use of the Pills for a couple of months completely cured me. This is some two years ago, and I have had no return of the trouble, and am able to eat as hearty a meal as anyone."

You can get Dr. Williams' Pink Pills through your medicine dealer or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

ARGUMENT OVER WAR LEADS TO SCUFFLE

Hungarians and Englishmen Fight in Arms Plant.

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., May 16. — While a rush order for 4,000 cases of ammunition to replace that lost when the Lusitania was torpedoed, was being packed at the plant of the Remington Arms U.M.C. company, in this city, feeling over the sinking of the liner and the war in general precipitated a riot that nearly cost several lives.

Crowbars, shovels and ammunition boxes were used when English-speaking workmen were attacked by giant Hungarian-speaking labourers.

The foreman of the gang, Frank Devitt, was being beaten with a crowbar when he was rescued by Major Louis Herrmann of the Connecticut National Guard. He was taken to the Emergency hospital with a deep dent in his skull and various bruises. He will recover.

Nicholas Neary, another workman, was beaten murderously with a shovel, but was rescued. The foreign-born fighters were repulsed after many minutes terrific fighting and they fled from the plant.

AS OTHERS SEE US

Toronto Newspaper Man Finds Few Signs of War in Peterboro'—Says "Things Are Not All Gloomy Up Around the Big Lift Lock."

A reporter from the Toronto News, who dropped into town to attend the protest meeting on the Market Square (see Review advertisements) took advantage of the opportunity to take a rapid-fire survey of local conditions. His findings, as given below, are interesting:

Peterborough, May 20. — Peterborough shows few signs of the war other than the large numbers of humble and prominent citizens who have gone or are going to the front. She boasts 800 men in active service. She mourns 63 on the lists of casualties. But there is little improvement in the city, and in many lines conditions are better than they have ever been.

Of the three Peterborough active service detachments, the 57th Regiment, the 34th Field Battery and the 3rd Prince of Wales Dragoons, the last is the only one which has had no casualties up to the present. In the 57th Regiment there are reported 16 killed, 12 missing, 1 prisoner and 24 wounded. Of the 34th Field Battery there are 3 killed and 9 wounded. Recruiting has started for the 4th Contingent, and no difficulty is found in securing recruits.

Prominent Men at Front.

Some of Peterborough's prominent sons on active service are: 1st Contingent: Lieut.-Col. E. B. Clegg, in command of the 9th Battalion, in reserve at Shorncliffe; Lieut. Ackerman, 2nd Battalion; Major Joseph Mills, Quartermaster, 2nd Battalion; Captain Garnet Greer, Medical Officer, 2nd Battalion; Lieut. Harold Matthews, 2nd Battery, 1st Brigade; Lieut. Vivian Fessenden, 48th Highlanders; Lieut Gordon Campbell, 48th Highlanders; Captain Cecil Arnott, Strathcona Horse. Of the first contingent Major Bennett, the Superintendent of Colonization Roads, has been killed and Lieut. Bivian Fessenden is a prisoner.

The Peterborough officers of the 2nd and 3rd Contingents are: Capt. C. P. Fee, 22nd Battery; Major G. R. Hall, officer commanding 26th Battery; Lieut. Hilliard, 26th Battery; Major S. T. Medd, commanding "B" Squadron, 8th Canadian Mounted Rifles; Lieut. Harry G. Rogers and Lieut. T. D. Johnston. In the 2nd Divisional Engineers are, Lieut.-Col. T. W. H. Young, M.D., and Lieut. Harry Smith. In the 39th Battalion are Captain A. G. Carruthers, Quartermaster, Lieut. G. R. Cameron, commanding the Machine Gun Section; Lieut. W. Eastwood, and Lieut. Rackham, Signal Officer. Lieut. Clarence Henry is with the Canadian Royal Engineers at Halifax, and Captain Hasen Ritchie is with the Canadian Royal Engineers, at Vancouver. With the Canadian Army Medical Corps, the Canadian Army Medical Corps are Capt. Dr. A. W. MacPherson and Lieut Dr. Kelly. With the British Army Medical Corps is Lieut. Dr. Frederick. Major J. H. Fessenden is with the British Army Service Corps, and Lieut. Blanchard is with the British Army Veterinary Corps. With the Fort Garry Horse are Lieut. Frank Sawyers and Lieut. Cunningham, and with the C. A. S. C. is Lieut. C. H. Rogers.

City Becoming Busy.

Industrial conditions in Peterborough are slowly winning their way back to normal. War orders, of course, account for a good deal of the returning prosperity, but two other possibilities are looming large. Agricultural equipment is in great demand especially inside equipment such as cream separators, which are often considered in the light of luxuries. The De Laval Cream Separator Company, which also manufacturers woden silos and many agricultural machines, is working overtime without the help of war orders. They have been working up to capacity since the first of the year and their activity shows an improvement and stability in Canada's greatest business—agriculture.

"Cutting Out" German Lines.

Another encouraging sign is the development of lines that were considered the exclusive property of Germany. The Colonial Weaving Company is working day and night shifts, not on war orders, but in the making of silk labels, corset laces and novelties in silk and cotton which were formerly "made in Germany." The makers and buyers have found of necessity that these things can be "Made in Canada" as well, and to better advantage.

No Soup Kitchens Needed.

There are no soup kitchens in Peterborough and no parades of the unemployed. There has recently been an advance in wages in one of the largest industries, and the farmers complain that they cannot get help.

The shops which are supplying war contracts are, of course, the most prosperous.

The Canadian General Electric Company has been working overtime—and on Sundays—in some departments. The William Hamilton Company has just received a new order for shells. The Auburn Woollen Mills are working a double shift on khaki suitings, overcoats and military blankets for the Canadian and French Governments.

Saddles for the Cossacks.

The B. F. Ackerman Company is turning out saddle and cartridge belts and has received a large order for the complete equipment for Russian cavalry.

Messrs J. J. Turner and Sons have been busy since the outbreak of the war on orders for tents and kit bags. They are manufacturing the Bell tent for Barriefield. The Bonner-Worth Co. have been working overtime with a double shift on prepared wool for socks, etc., and the Peterborough Lock Co. has been busy with sub-contracts. The Matthews-Blackwell Co. has had a number of meat orders to fill for the different camps.

In short, things are not at all gloomy up around the big lift lock.

TOTALLY DISCOURAGED BY NERVOUS PROSTRATION

After Many Weeks of Doctoring a Friend Recommended ase's Nerve Food and She Was Cured

There is nothing more discouraging than Nervous Prostration. Because of the exhausted condition of the nervous system, weakness and helplessness take possession of the body. The faculties of the mind as well as those of the body are affected and hope and courage disappear.

The patient, often appearing well, gets little sympathy, and few doctors understand diseases of the nerves well enough to treat nervous prostration intelligently. Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is founded on the prescription of a great nerve specialist, and hence its wonderful success in curing ailments of this nature.

Mrs. Edith May Williams,, Tilsonburg, Ont., R. R. 3, writes: "I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. I suffered for years with my nerves, and at one time I was confined to my bed with nervous prostration for several weeks. I cannot just explain my feelings, but I was weak and helpless and so discouraged and despondent that I thought I would lose my mind. I doctored with several doctors and received but little benefit. At last I became very much discouraged and thought I would never get better. A friend advised me to try Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and before I had finished the first box I knew that it was helping me. It took several boxes of the Nerve Food to make me well and I can truly say that it is a wonderful builder-up of the nervous system."

It is only wise to prevent such dreaded diseases as Nervous Prostration, Paralysis and Locomotor Ataxia by keeping the nervous system in good condition at all times. When you cannot sleep well, have headaches and indigestion, be warned of approaching dangers and restore the nervous system by using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. 50 cents a box, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Company, Limited, Toronto.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

FOR WOOL OR WASH FABRICS.

By Anabel Worthington.

This separate skirt of wash material promises to be more popular than ever this season, and here is a particularly good design for it. It might be developed in cotton gabardine, corduroy, ratine, rep or linen. On the other hand, the design is well suited to serge, poplin, wool gabardine and wool mixtures generally, either as a separate skirt or for combination with a coat or matching waist. The closing is at left side front, under the stitched edge of the front gore, the gore extending to the top of the skirt. The side gores, which are laid in rather broad plaits, are attached to the lower edge of the yoke.

For the high waistline, an inside belt of cotton or silk belting should be used, but any one who prefers may finish the skirt at normal waistline with a plain band. For medium size, 3¼ yards of forty-four inch material would be required. The pattern, No. 7,118, comes in sizes from 22 to 32 inches waist measure.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25c.

Russians Say 100,000 of Foe Fell in 8 Days

PETROGRAD, May 18.— Regarding the stupendous battle which for sixteen days has been raging in Galicia, an explanatory statement has been issued, as follows:

"The big battle between the Vistula and the Carpathians continues to develop. The front during the past few days has been changeable, at times extending over forty miles.

"The Teutonic allies concentrated thirteen divisions, and on the main section of Velepole-Novopanets, with an extension of about thirteen miles, they assembled seven.

"The allies' line gradually assumed a convex form, which enabled us to operate on their flanks. In this work our cavalry especially distinguished itself, fighting chiefly dismounted, but also with horse batteries.

'By the invaders' own admission, no fewer than 100,000 of their men dropped out of action during eight days of the battle.

"On the general front of 1,000 miles the greatest number of the Austro-German forces is concentrated between the Carpathians and the Vistula from the mouth of the Nida to Gorlitz. Here they have deployed approximately one-fifth of all the forces with which they are operating against Russian. They have in front of them only one of our armies.

"Thus there are operating against Russia nearly the whole of the Austro-Hungarian army, the entire German cavalry and one-half of the Landwehr and Landsturm. The Germans nearly always can make use of a network of railways, whereas our troops are, for the most part, compelled to operate outside the zone of the Russian lines.

'Inview of the strategic advantages which the Germans derive from the railways, the tactics adopted by us between the Carpathians and the Vistula were to occupy successively fortified zones with the object of delaying them till our reserves could be brought together in full concentration.

"The importance of what is happening now should not be over-estimated. The developments of events can be awaited with absolute calm."

NARROWLY ESCAPED BEING DROWNED

R. W. Marks, With His Little Boy, Saved by His Swimming Ability

PERTH, Ont., May 21.—R. W. Marks, the well known theatrical manager, and his son Robert, aged five years, had a narrow escape from drowning at their summer home at Christy Lake, twelve miles from Perth. Mr. Marks had his launch anchored out some distance from the shore and his son were rowing to the launch in a small boat, which was capsized, and both were thrown into the lake. Although fifty-nine years of age, Mr. Marks can swim some yet, and he succeeded in rescuing the son and reaching the other boat to which they clung until reached by George Farrell, who heard their appeals for help.

The Names of War Prisoners

LONDON, May 21—Colonel McBain sails for Canada with full details and figures as to the strength of the various battalions at the front.

Col. John A. Currie has been granted further leave by the War Office. He looks well, but is much greyer.

The Canadian Red Cross here has now got the names of many prisoners of war, mostly in Saxony. It requests that friends do not send food for transmission, though it is all right to send clothes, etc. If money is sent, or an order, they can be easily purchased here or obtained from the large Red Cross stores on hand.

A Splendid Way to Reduce One's Weight

There is, perhaps, no one thing that shows the passing of our youth so much as the horrible tendency of some of us to put on too much weight after we have reached the age of 25 or 30. However young our face may appear, our figures "give us away."

The cause of this over-stoutness is that our stomachs convert the food we eat into fat, because there is not enough oxygen in the blood to produce a proper combustion to destroy the fatty tissue. To reduce your weight go to a good druggist and get oil of orikeae in capsule form, and take one after each meal. It is sold only in original sealed packages. Oil of orikeae taken at meal-times gives you all the benefit of the food you eat, and at the same time dissolves the fatty tissue from any part of the body where there is excessive fat. In this way many have reduced their weight at the rate of about a lb. a day, and no flabbiness is left.

Any druggist can supply you or a large size box will be sent on receipt of $1.00. Address D. J. Little Drug Co., Box 1240, Montreal, Can.

WARNING ISSUED TO AMERICANS

NEW YORK, May 21.—Writing from Berlin to the World, Karl H. von Wiegand says regarding an interview with a German official on the Wilson note to Berlin:

"I am not permitted to quote this official by name. When I called his attention to the fact that American lives had been lost in this submarine warfare, he replied: 'Then Americans ought to travel on American or other neutral ships.' A part of the brief report of the commander of the submarine that sank the Lusitania was made public. The commander declares that he fired but one torpedo. He says the detonation was followed by a second explosion, which he attributed to the explosion of ammunition carried in the hold of the liner. Up to the present time the number of the submarine and the name of the commander have not been made public. The papers again published long accounts of the rioting and maltreatment of Germans in Great Britain, which is tending to stiffen Germany's backbone still more."

No Woman Need Have Straight, Lank Hair

Instead of burning the life out of your hair with a heated curling iron, you can add to its life by using plain liquid silmerine, and at the same time secure a far better and more lasting result. Your hair will have a delightful curl and natural wavy appearance, no matter in what form it is done up, if you will simply apply a little silmerine at night with a clean tooth brush, drawing this through the hair from root to tip.

As you will not need to repeat the application for a considerable time—even if the weather be unusually damp—a few ounces from the druggist will last you a long while. This will not spot the scalp or streak the hair, and it is neither sticky nor greasy. It is without question the best hair curling method yet found and no doubt will soon be as popular here as it is in England, where it originated.

Victoria Cross Hero Enlists

Blackburn's V.C. hero, Corporal James Pitts, has again joined the colours, after several years of strenuous military life, and is engaged in important work guarding provisions and stores at the front.

The corporal gained his coveted cross during the South African war for a remarkable defence of Cæsar's Camp, and was accorded a civic welcome on his return home.

His patriotic step on the present occasion has influenced his two English brothers, Private Hugh and Private George Pitts, who have both joined the East Lancashire Regiment, while his favourite cousin, Joseph Pitts, has thrown in his lot with the Accrington "Pals."

RUSSIANS DRIVE FOE BACK OVER THE SAN

How Major Bennett's Company Charged at Langemarck

RUSSIANS TAKE THE OFFENSIVE AGAINST THE ENEMY'S LEFT WING

Petrograd Asserts That The Austro-German Force Which Crossed the San Has Been Driven Back Across That River---Fighting Around Przemysl Decreases in Velocity

Special Cable to The Examiner:

PETROGRAD, May 22.—By fierce counter attacks the Russians have forced General Mackensen's left wing to give ground on the east bank of the San, thirty miles north of Przemysl. An Austro-German force that gained the south bank of the [illegible] river. The engagement occurred near Radapa. The Russian artillery mowed down the retreating forces of the enemy whose losses were extremely hapy. The fighting around Prezemysl has been less intense in the last 24 hours. War office despatches received to-day reported a big battle in progress south of Stryj. It is admitted that the Russian offensive towards Bukowina has been checked by the arrival of Austrian reinforcements.

OTTAWA, May 22.—What is to become of the pay of the Canadian soldiers who fall into the hands of the Germans and become prisoners of war?

The official answer is that the regimental paymaster will simply place to the credit of those of the regiment who have been captured the amount of their pay and each man will receive the total when he returns. Separation allowances continue as before. Until such time as the official list of Canadian prisoners is received,, there will be some doubt as to the situation. Many now recorded as missing may really be dead or on "no man's land," or buried by the enemy.

As soon as a man is officially announced dead, his pay and allowances all cease but his dependents if any go on the pension list.

RUMANIA MOBILIZING

ROME, May 22.—Rumania is secretly mobilizing her entire army, according to private despatches from Bucharest received here to-day.

CARLISLE, Scotland, May 22.—The seriousness of the railway catastrophe grows as the afternoon advances. Forty bodies have already been recovered, including those of many soldiers. It seems that there were two collisions, involving two trains, with heavy loss of life on each. The bodies include many soldiers, including four officers, and the injured at least one hundred. Special trains with the Royal Army Medical Corps are on the spot.

IN ACTION AGAIN

OTTAWA, May 22.—Word has been received at the Military Department that two brigades of the Canadian division were in another engagement on Thursday and Friday. The fight between the Canadians and the Germans was in an orchard country. The Canadians it is stated charged, and at the point of the bayonet put the Germans to flight and captured several of their machine guns. No mention is made of the number of casualties, but it is probable that they were considerable. Brigadier General Mercer commanded.

The 2nd Battalion's Share At Langemarck

Officer Writing From the Front Tells How Major Bennett's Company Charged a German Trench in the Darkness and Dug Themselves In

THE TOLL WAS HEAVY

The following description of the work of the 2nd Battalion at Langemarck, written by an officer at the front and appearing in the Quebec Chronicle, is the first clean-cut story of the Eastern Ontario Regiments' sore in the stand of the Canadians. It tells how Major Bennett and the Peterborough and Toronto boys under him by a gallant charge, achieved invaluable results in making it possible to consolidate the Canadian positions. The officer writes as follows:

Like a bolt from the blue came the terrific German artillery fire, starting about 5 o'clock, from a position about west of Boesinghe, down in a southerly direction to Ypres. After about a half hour's bombardment it became evident that some serious defection had taken place on the Allied lines.

Panic Stricken Retreat.

"All sorts of rumours quickly spread about, and towards dusk, these rumours appeared to have confirmation from the enormous numbers of the French Algerian troops, who appeared to be reushing to the rear, in an absolute state of panic. To one unaccustomed to a state of affiars such as this, the position appeared to be truly critical. Transports of all kinds, family wagons filled with terrified people, hand carts loaded with household effects, panic-stricken civilians, and, worst of all, men in uniform of the French Colonial regiments, all madly rushing past in evident frantic efforts to reach safety, somewhere in the rear.

Germans Broke Through.

"Truly it was a terrible sight to our Canadian brigade in reserve in Vlamertinghe, to see this horde go rushing by for hours. The Germans have broken through!' that was all their cry. At about 8 o'clock orders were received to 'Stand by,' everyone knew what that meant, although it had already been anticipated by the battalion commanders. Belts were tightened up, straps adjusted, rifles given a last touch up, and ammunition carefully attended to. Every man knew that the great test had come, and even under the terrible condtions of a fearful panic, every officer and man was at his post. At 9 o'clock orders were received for the 2nd and 3rd Battalions to move forward at once, cross the Canal by the pontoon bridges and move east by the most direct route, right up into the first line, to be attached to the 2nd Brigade under General Turner.

Coalition Plan Is Not Popular

Step That is Being Adopted Does Not Please Any of the Parties Says T. P. O'Connor In Review of the Crisis

AN INTERESTING STUDY

(Copyright, 1915, Central News.)
By T. P. O'CONNOR.

LONDON, May 22.—There is little enthusiasm in any party for the coming coalition Cabinet. The whole history of the British Parliament discloses that coalitions always fail. Andrew Bonar Law, who is mentioned for Chancellor of the Exchequer in the new Ministry, resisted the tendency as stoutly as did Premier Asquith, but events proved too strong for either.

In the meantime the Liberals were practically in revolt because many thought that coalition endangered many Liberal principles, and especially that of Home Rule. Their resentment was increased by the fact that while the Liberals were excluded from the whole transaction, the Pall Mall Gazette, the Tory organ, was privileged to be the first to announce to the world that coalition was already accomplished.

Asquith Called In.

So serious did the situation become th Premier Asquith was summoned ttend the Liberal meeting and had to use all of his splendid powers of persuasion before the dissatisfied Liberals agreed to give their unwilling assent.

The best defence of coalition is that many of the Ministers show the effects of the prolonged strain and of overwork. Lack of co-ordination and control was also apparent in the existing Cabinet. As one man wittingly put it, if you had Cabinet Ministers tired —tired of each other—new blood was necessary. It is evidently impossible to count on a truce. Party feeling and criticism, hitherto honourably distinguishing all parties in the House of Commons, is essential to carrying on the war to a successful issue.

The Irish Nationalists surveyed the situation with commingled anxiety and equanimity. Like all other parties who desired that one of their members join the combination in order to make it more truly symbolic of absolute national concentration, they were especially anxious that the Cabinet have the advantage of the great abilities and the high prestige of John Redmond. An offer was made to Redmond to join the Ministry, but he found it impossible to accept. However, he declared his readiness to promise the same loyal support toward the successful prosecution of the war as he has given since the beginning of hostilities. A further objection to Redmond's entrance into the Cabinet was that it involved Carson's, which thus might nullify any good that Redmond might accomplish.

Nationalists Lament.

The Nationalists join with the Liberals in lamenting conditions that prevent Redmond from forming a part of the British administration in

DRIVER DAVID EVANS, EAST CITY FALLS AT FRONT

Member of 24th Field Battery Detachment Who Was Born in Peterboro' 40 Years Ago is Killed in Action.

WIFE IS INFORMED

Driver David Evans, 4th Battery, 1st Brigade, Peterborough detachment, has been officially reported killed in action. A message to that effect was received this morning by his wife at 236 Woobine Avenue, East City. Prior to enlisting Private Evans was an employee of the Hydro Electric, or what is now known as the Utilities Commission. He was forty years of age, and besides his wife leaves three daughters and one son to mourn his loss. They are Margaret and Maude of Toronto, Audrey and George F. Evans at home. The late Driver Evans was born in Peterborough. Some years ago he was a member of the 57th Regiment, Peterborough Rangers, and at the outbreak of the war enlisted in the artillery. A field card was received from him dated April 27th which stated that he was well.

Private Evans was well known in Peterborough, having resided here all his life. His passing will be regretted by a wide circle of friends and acquaintances.

Local Boys Chased Prussians From Wood

A. Company of the 2nd Battalion Was Nearly Wiped Out However, Writes a Toronto Signaller in Graphic Description of the Langemarck Fight.

PTE. COBB
Peterborough boy with the 21st Battalion, now in England on the way to the front.

BATTALION CUT UP.

That No. 1 Company of the 2nd Battalion, composed principally of the 57th detachment, and the 9th Mississagua Horse of Toronto, suffered the heaviest casualities of the whole Battalion at Langemarck, is Signaller R. L. Warner of Toronto, who is a member of the 2nd Battalion. The writer says that they drove an overwhelming force of Prussians back through a wood, but were nearly wiped out in doing so. Evidently the news that Pte. Heber Rogers is a prisoner in Germany had not reached his comrades when Signaller Warner wrote as he speaks of the Peterborough boy having been killed. Apparently Pte. Rogers dropped wounded beside his gun and was believed to have been killed. The Germans, soon after, were in possession of that point, and picked up the 57th boy.

Signaller Warner writes as follows:

"Looking down on the lowland from the crest of a hill, what a peaceful scene met our gaze! The farmers, and noticeably women, were busy in the fields harrowing or rolling the ground, while the children played on the roadside nearby. But one is reminded that a war is on, for in a cloud of dust the numerous Red Cross motor ambulances go whizzing by on their merciful work, or a huge motor truck thunders over the cobblestones.

But what an altogether different scene was taking place just two weeks ago! At about this time, Mitchell and I had walked out from our billets in Belgium to watch the shells bursting away off in the distance just over a woods which blocked further view. A terrific cannonading was going on, but little did we think of the fierce struggle going on there. Some quaint French transports were slowly moving towards the firing line, and we came back to the billet believing all was well. I went out in a back field to join in a game of cricket that some R.A.M.C. chaps were playing.

The French Retreat.

"About an hour afterwards, to my surprise, I saw the same French transports which had gone so slowly up the road, coming back at a terrific gallop. We all then realized that something was up, so we went over to the road and learned from some of the flying, excited Frenchmen that the Allemandes were coming. It being a flat bit of country, away off in the distance we could see a thin cloud of dust, which gradually grew denser until nothing could be seen. Then an English motor despatch rider came whizzing into view, and slowed up to tell us that the Grmans had broken through the French lines, having used poisonous gas. So we hurried back to our billets and got everything ready in case we had to move.

"Soon down the road and across

CANNOT SPEAK TOO HIGHLY OF CANUCKS' STAND

Peterboro' Boy With the 2nd Field Ambulance Corps Says Hundreds of Brave and Glorious Deeds Were Done at Langemarck

BUT THEY PAID FOR IT

Pte. Wallace Greenwood of Peterborough, who is attached to the 2nd Field Ambulance Corps, writing from the front gives glimpses of the Canadians' brave stand. He writes: "I am still well, but my nerves are a little shaken. I guess by now you will have seen the account in all the papers of our great stand. It was glorious, and hundreds of brave and glorious deeds were done that will never be mentioned. I was driving some distance behind an ammunition column, when four out of six horses and men were killed with a shell. The two living drivers jumped on to the two horses and went back and got four more horses hitched up to the waggon and drove the ammunition through a terrific shell fire to the guns. I know by this time you will have seen all about it. Well I don't think they can speak too well of the way the Canadians stood. Neither poisonous gases or gasoline could drive them out of the trenches, but God knows they paid for it.

We have just had an open air service which touched me very much. Twenty-two of our corps were killed and wounded."

Pte. Greenwood is very well known in Peterborough, coming here about four years ago. He was associated with All Saints' choir and Bible class. He was one of the Toronto ambulance corps which achieved considerable distinction and accompanied the corps to England to take part in the Coronation celebration. He was living in Peterborough at the outbreak of the war and returned to Toronto to enlist with his old corps, going to the front with the first contingent. He is a brother of Mr. Walter Greenwood, Wescott Street, and Mrs. W. H. Barry, Bolivar Street.

COPPER

Messrs. Charles A. Stoneham & Co. of New York and Toronto, Specialists in Copper Securities have prepared for gratuitious distribution a pamphlet edited by Mr. Horace G. Baker. It deals with copper securities, copper statistics and the financial data of thirty-five copper companies. The pamphlet contains a vast amount of information which will be of great value to those who are interested in copper securities. The success of the copper industry is now assured, and the world will at no distant date require all the copper that can be produced on this side of the Atlantic. Messrs. Chas. A. Stoneham & Co., 25 Melinda Street, Toronto, will forward a copy of the pamphlet on application.

Butter at 28 Cents On the Market To-day

Potatoes Were Slow Movers Although There Was a Large Supply at 50 Cents—Eggs Fairly Firm.

Butter was down to 28c on the market this morning, although quite a number of buyers paid 30 cents. The supply was apparently more abundant than on recent market days, but there is room for greater improvement in this direction if the price is to recede to the figures desired by the local consumers. The farmers tried to get 30 and 31 cents for their eggs, but citizens should have known that 18 cents was a fair price. The market has been weak for some time and there is no element of strength apparent now since the demand for cold storage has eased off. The Canadian Grocer says: "Out in Kansas, we understand that the storekeeper is selling his eggs at 18c a dozen. The price across the border is much lower than in Ontario for the reason that the local demand is more nearly on a parity with the supply.

Chickens were in moderate supply at 60 cents each. There was a plethora of potatoes which were stagnant at 50 cents a bag. One the outside market there were only two products, pigs and potatoes. The farmers were asking $8 and $9 a pair for pigs, but they could scarcely give the potatoes away.

CITY HALL PARAGRAPHS

C. Brisbois has been granted a building permit for the erection of a house on Sophia Street. The structure will be of brick veneer and will cost $900.

Paving Operations Suspended.

Yesterday's rain put a temporary stop to paving operations which were resumed to-day. Tenders for additional paving are being received at the city hall.

Three Classes of Paving.

Tenders on three classes of paving are asked for, namely, bithulitic, concrete and asphalt. City Engineer Parsons favours the former, while concrete has many advocates among the members of the City Council, more particularly those who are concerned about the employment of local labour.

Auxiliary Pumping Plant.

Tenders for the construction and installation of a complete pumping unit will be received at the City Clerk's office up until noon of May 31st. The work will probably cost in the neighbourhood of twenty thousand dollars.

NOTICE

A small job of printing for the City Engineer's Department has been wrongly delivered by the Examiner express delivery. Will the party who has received it kindly telephone the Examiner Office and we will send for it.

ITALY AT WAR.

After striving on the brink so long, Italy has at last taken the plunge into the maelstrom of war, and it is probable that she will drag Roumania, if not also Bulgaria in with her. Italy's action cannot fail to have a decisive influence upon the war. Germany will have to revise her battle lines to meet the menace of a million fresh, eager, enthusiastic Italian troops; for war against Austria practically means war with Germany. Germany will have to withdraw troops from either her western front or from the east, and she hasn't any too many to meet the alternating allied and Russian drives. Italy's participation in the war will mean more from her hesitation, which has enabled her to be thoroughly prepared, with well-armed and well-equipped troops, for waging a successful war campaign. The people are enthusiastically behind her war campaign, and it is certain the army shows the popular enthusiasm. With their hearts in the work the Italian armies are sure to give a good account of themselves. Italy's entrance into the war will act as an inspiration. Little Serbia, recovered from the blows of war, is again entering the field, and is advancing against Austria. Roumania will not be long behind, and then Austria and Germany will have every flank threatened, will be girt with a hostile ring of powerful armies. The newer development will greatly tend to shorten this great war, disastrous to even the conquering powers.

"GASOLENE."

We are often reminded that eternal vigilance is the price of liberty. This self-evident truth applies to other things than liberty; it applies to manifestations of the abuse of liberty, and the consequences that come of this abuse. "Gasolene." We see this grotesque spelling of the word, gasoline, flaunted before our eyes in newspaper advertisements, and flaming in front of electric-lighted globes at street gasoline stations. This may be a small matter to speak of but it is a great matter as a specific demonstration of the corruption of English spelling, that comes largely to us from the land of liberty across the line. Gasoline is of the same family of words as magazine, machine, chlorine, vaseline, etc., and should, to be properly spelled, have the same spelling. If we allow illiterate commercialism to corrupt our spelling, in such words as "gasolene" for gasoline, "catsup" for catsup, and other phonetic monstrosities, we open the gates to every other sort of abuse of orthography. With that comes corruptions of language forms, and the use of slang, and the argot of ignorance, always more presumptious than knowledge, illustrating the line of Pope —"For fools rush in where angels fear to tread." When these corrupt forms of spelling and speech get into the newspapers, one of the great educative influences—for good or evil—of the country, the virus has a chance for popular spread. The other day a Lindsay newspaper reporter trying to express the idea that somebody raised an objection or entered a protest, said in plain print that he "raised a holler." This is execrable in itself, but it is important as an indication of the danger of language corruption coming from our public educators, with a tendency to overturn and override all the graces of speech and literary expression, that we aim to practice as outcomes of education and culture. We spend millions on our schools to teach, the proper use of the English language. By encouraging slang and ... modes of speech or writing, ... or tend to undo, all that has been done in education on this line, ... an expense—or waste—of ... money. It becomes the duty ... interest, and educated, to exercise ... vigilance in the preservation ... purity of language, and ... spelling, thus distinguish ... man, woman or child, ... — the refined ...

PASSIONATE APPEAL OF THE RED CROSS SOCIETY

The terrible tragedy of the Lusitania when over one thousand innocent non-combatants were ruthlessly murdered by orders of the German war staff, has brought this war home to the people of Canada as nothing else could have done. Even the battle of Langemarck seems to pale before this monstrous crime enacted by a nation that boasts of its superior culture and civilization. Then our soldiers were killed in action while fighting in the ranks of the British forces, but in the tragedy enacted on the south coast of Ireland, men, women and children were slaughtered without warning ,and when nearly at their journey's end.

If there is a man, woman or child in the Dominion of Canada to-day, who has not in some way assisted in the great work of service, this disaster, if it may so be described, will surely bring them into the swelling rank of the workers. It would be hard to believe that there could be one single person in this country who can sit idle and do nothing for the cause for which we are fighting when he or she reads the terrible news that has been filling the columns of the daily papers for the past two or three weeks.

The Canadian Red Cross Society has never appealed to the people of Canada with a greater fervor and earnestness than it does to-day. The hospitals in England and France, which are equipped and maintained by the Canadian society through the generosity of the people of the Dominion, are filled with sick and wounded Canadian soldiers and as the convalescent soldier departs for further duty and honour at the front, his place is immediately taken by some wounded comrade.

These men are our own sons and brothers and is there anything too great we can do for them in comparison to what they are doing for us? We are living in comfort and enjoying our peaceful pursuits in this land while they are bearing the brunt of battle and taking part in the most inhuman war that the nations of the world have ever engaged in. No doubt in the few quiet moments allowed them at the front their thoughts go back to the peaceful homes and loved ones far across the ocean. Well might they say, "I am giving my life for you. What are you doing for me?"

It is for everyone in this country today to ask himself or herself, "What am I doing for my country at this time?" The blood of the best in the land has been shed that we may remain a nation and an integral part of the great British empire. Many of the best citizens we had lie buried on the once fertile fields of Flanders. They will never return to their homes or their loved ones in Canada, but their example and their fame will be immortal. A great and a glorious thing is it to die for one's country.

The Canadian Red Cross Society is doing all that is humanly possible to look after the comfort and needs of our sick and wounded soldiers.

This can only be done if we receive the support of the people of Canada. There should not be one village, however small, that has not a Red Cross branch working each and every day for the cause. Funds are needed all the time for the purchase of supplies and the upkeep of the hospitals on the continent and in England. Surgical and medical supplies are needed in enormous quantities and money is needed for the purchase of them. Hospital requirements, such as blankets, sheets, pillow cases, towels, wash cloths, etc., etc., are needed and socks are wanted in their thousands.

With the splendid assistance of the Press of Canada our appeals are able to reach every quarter of the land. Those who read these lines will, we feel sure, be stirred to greater energy, self sacrifice and patriotism. All donations or supplies may be sent to the provincial branches or to the head office, 77 King Street, East, Toronto. Do not delay one hour but DO IT NOW.

VICTORIA DAY.

This year of grace, we should celebrate or rather, observe, the birthday anniversary of the gracious queen, the queenly woman, and womanly queen, who was born 76 years ago; and though fourteen years ago, she exchanged her corruptible crown for the heavenly crown after a reign of nearly three-score years, her memory is as green in our hearts as it was when her earthly presence and gracious influence were with us in the flesh. We can think more aptly of Queen Victoria as the embodiment of the highest womanhood, because this crisis of the Empire has brought out our Canadian womenhood, in work worthy of the great example whose memory we are keeping at this time. The Red Cross work, and all the collateral agencies that bring our Canadian women into benign activity, is the life and example of Queen Victoria, put into action. We can honour the memory of the Queen, for the sake of the good monarch she bore to us, and has bequeathed to us, with her noble example of right royal ruling. And contrast shows into high lights the life and reign of Queen Victoria, remembered with gratitude and reverence as the highest type of personal and domestic virtues, and as a ruler as perfect as human imperfection will permit—by the world of great and small. Her life and reign were a benediction; the life and memory of the Emperor of Germany presents a contrast as keen as the contrast between day and night. His life and reign will be remembered as a blight and a curse upon humanity. The memories of Queen Victoria we reawake and revive on Monday will be as "the scenes of a beautiful summer evening when all is tender and grand and beautiful." We can then consistently pray "God save the Queen"—God save all the gracious influences, all the fruits of the noble example of her life, to still inspire, ennoble and bless, the peerless Empire, and the whole world of humanity.

Is Now On Firing Line

Pte. Victor Northcott of 57th Sent Over in the Draft From Shorncliffe

Pte. Victor Northcott, of the 57th detachment of the 2nd Battalion, who was ill at Salisbury, when the battalion crossed over to France, and was left behind in England, is now on the firing line, according to a letter received by his parents in Peterborough. Writing on May 1st, from "somewhere in France or Belgium," Pte. Northcott says:

Dear Mother, Father and All, — I was sent over from Shorncliffe with reinforcement to France, and have been in the firing line four days now. I feel O.K. There is lots of amusement with the rifle and bayonet. I am quite happy and well, so don't worry. Give my love to all friends. The Canadians have been doing some fine work around here (sorry I cannot mention names, etc.) There are lots of Hindoos, Ghurkas, French Belgians and British Tommies around here. We have some lovely weather here now, but cool nights, especially when one has not any blankets. Dear mother and father, I will now close with love to you and all, from

Your loving son,
VICTOR.

The 2nd Battalion's Share At Langemarck

It was a long march, pitch dark, with the constant interruptions of a panicky crowd scrambling back in conditions of wildest alarm. Every here and there, however, from along the road came deep throated voices, with "God bless you, boys, good luck." These were the details of the A. S. C., Field Ambulances and other such units, all along the first part of that night march.

Planning the Attack.

"At about 12.30 (midnight) of the 22nd, the two battalions arrived at the headquarters of General Turner, situated half way between the villages of Wieltje and St. Julien. There in that little darkened room, the details of the evening's work were defined to the two battalion commanders, and incidentally it was shown that the Canadian line still held, though the casualties had been very heavy.

It was splendid to note the coolness that prevailed in that dim headquarters, so near that fateful line, and in such contrast to the panic and fear, so evident at points some miles back. Around the table were General Turner, with Lt.-Col. Garnet Hughes, both these officers, the embodiment of coolness and courage. Quickly discussing the situation, the details of the work for the balance of the night and for the reinforcements to carry out, were carefully considered, and as soon acted upon.

"The second battalion under Col. Watson was instructed to support the 10th and 16th Battalions, who had launched a counter-attack against the enemy to the west of St. Julien, and afterwards to take up a position lying about 500 yards from the St. Julien road." This position was carefully taken up, the flares from the German searchlights, assisting the work of posting the different companies. There was no excitement or confusion, everything being carefully and methodically planned ad executed. In the meantime the 3rd Battalion under Col. Rennie had been detailed as reserve and retained at brigade headquarters.

Captured German Trench.

"After the position had been occupied by the 2nd Battalion, it was found that the Germans had a strong trench running southwest from the woods, which was endangering the entire position, and Col. Leckie of the 16th Battalion requested Col. Watson to clear out this trench, or hold them up, until the positions could be consolidated. Major Bennett with No. 1 company, was directed to make the assault, and right gallantly did they respond, though the toll was heavy. The company charged right up to the trench and under a heavy machine gun fire did well. Comparatively few men were spared, but these dug themselves in securely and for an entire night and day were out in that isolated position.

"The result, however, was magnificent for the remainer of the positions, as these were made tolerably secure and as events subsequently proved, were invaluable not only in stopping the progress of the Germans, but in causing heavy losses in their ranks, and so the day of the 23rd dawned, and the Germans found facing them on the west of St. Julien road, a series of trenches manned by determined men.

Machine Guns' Work.

"On the flanks, machine guns were placed in strong positions inflading the position right and left and every credit is given the gallant crews of these guns for their heroic work in standing off the repeated attacks by overwhelming numbers. About noon on the 23rd orders were received for the 10th and 16th Battalions to retire, to take up a new position, and this left the 2nd Batalion pracically alone in that advanced and fearfully critical position.

"Later on in the day, two companies of the 3rd Battalion, which had been held in reserve at brigade headquarters, were sent up to hold the right of the position, between the right of the 2nd Battalion and the St. Julien road. These companies were under the command of Major Kirkpatrick, and so that fateful 23rd dragged slowly along, attack after attack was repulsed, the Germans suffering fearfully, and numerous prisoners taken and sent back.

"On the morning of Saturday, 24th April, two nights and a day had already gone since the 2nd Battalion had taken up that advanced position with the two companies of the 3rd in their right, and no effort had been taken by the enemy that could dislodge them. Instead they had inflicted heavy losses on the Germans, as the numbers piled up in front of the trenches could testify. How these machine gunners did work, and when a gun jammed for a minute or two, the way they work the rifles in rapid fire showed that they were equally efficient in that respect. About noon a telephone message came from General Turner regarding the situation and when defined instructed Col. Watson to cancel the order that was on the way, instructing him to withdraw his battalion to the headquarters lines. This 'phone instruction was given on the assurance that the line could be held for some further hours and as the assurance that support would shortly be sent up.

More Hard Fighting.

'Another two hours' hard fighting dragged on, and it was seen that the two companies of the 3rd Battalion had been driven from their position on the right of the line. This was a serious loss, and one that involved the whole position. But there was never a budge, a desire to return. That position was such a strong one, and this strength was felt by every officer and man in the line. But it was the flanks that General Turner was troubled about, and no reinforcements having arrived up to 2 o'clock a second order was received by Col. Watson, instructing him to retire the regiments to headquarters lines, about 1,200 to 1,500 yards in the rear.

Difficult to Retire.

Here was the difficult position, and anyone who understands military work can appreciate the terrible difficulties in retiring before an overwhelming force. But it had to be done. Each company was notified of the intended move, and at a given time, shortly after three o'clock, company by company in succession evacuated their trenches, and started quickly and with discipline, to cross the long open spaces between them and safety. But at what a price had this safety to be purchased.

"The battalion situated nearly a mile forward had fulfilled its duty and the lines behind had been strengthened and built up, ready for the hardest attack. But the 2nd Battalion had to pay the price that day.

Patriotic League Concert Was A Great Success

Ladies of Ashburnham Gave Entertainment Last Evening That Was Greeted With Packed House.

The Ashburnham Ladies' Patriotic League achieved a notable success last evening on the occasion of their first concert. A few weeks ago the ladies of Ashburnham formed themselves into a League to work for Red Cross purposes, and in order to raise sufficient funds to carry out their good intentions, it was decided to give an entertainment. Last night's concert was the result, and the fact that the League has the hearty support of the citizens generally was amply evidenced by the immense crowd that filled every available seat in the hall. The auditorium looked very pretty in its patriotic decorations. The programme rendered was of an usually high order of merit, and the thanks of the ladies is due Mrs. Ryerson Ritchie, who arranged it, and also the various artists who contributed numbers. Mr. J. C. Anderson moved, and Mr. R. H. Parsons seconded, at the conclusion of the concert, a hearty vote of thanks to Mrs. Ritchie and the artists, which was heartily concurred in by the large audience.

The chair, on this occasion, was taken by Rev. W. H. White in the unavoidable absence of Rev. Dean McColl.

In his opening remarkes, Rev. Mr. White expressed the delight, he was sure the ladies felt, in the splendid way their efforts were being encouraged, as was especially manifested in "a capacity house." The work the League was undertaking was deserving of the highest support, and while it was not the privilege of all to go to the front, yet everyone could do something in a small way for the Empire in this great national catastrophe.

A detachment from the Collegiate Cadets, in two sections, headed by Miss Ruby Quartermain as "Britannia," and Miss Meta Richardson, as "Canada," marched up the aisles to the platform. Two choruses, "Rule Britannia" and "O Canada" were splendidly sung by them.

The Programme.

The programme rendered was as follows:

'Cello solo—Mr. Smith.
Vocal solo—"My Rosary"—Mrs. A. A. Perrin.
Vocal trio — "I Navaganti"—Mr. and Mrs. Lock and Mrs. Perrin.
Reading—"The Revenge" — Judge Huycke.
Vocal solo—"I will Sing the Songs of Araby"—Mr. J. Locke.
Vocal duet—"Home to our Mountains"—Mrs. Perrin and Mr. Park.

Part II.

Vocal solo—"Valley of Laughter"—Mrs. Locke.
Vocal solo—"Memories' Flowers"—Mr. Douglas Carlisle.
Reading — "The Defence of Lucknow"—Judge Huycke.
Piano solo—Mrs. Locke.
Vocal solo—"Island of Dreams"—Mr. Maurice Park.
Vocal duet, "The Barcarolle"—Mrs. Perrin and Mr. Park.
God Save the King.

Misses Lillian Moore, Jean Anderson, Wilma Nelson and Rosamond Huycke, in the garb of Red Cross nurses, made very capable ushers.

AFTER HOUSECLEANING

Have your piano tuned. Piano makers advise tuning at least once a year, as the change of season affects the instrument. J. W. Fry, tuner for the Peterborough Music Co., holds a certificate for this profession. 'Phone 465 or 963. Residence, 199 Rubidge Street.

Maxwell

"The Wonder Car"

You can own an exact duplicate of "Wild Bill" Turner's or Billy Carlson's record-breaking Maxwells

Think of owning one of these same Maxwells—think of driving it wherever you want to—over any kind of roads—up any kind of hills, wherever four wheels can go, the same car for $925.

Remember, every 1915 Maxwell is an exact duplicate of the regular stock Maxwell Touring Cars in which "Wild Bill" Turner broke the world's record up Mt. Hamilton, 21 1/10 miles in 48½ minutes, beating the world's record by 16½ minutes, and "Billy" Carlson broke the world's record up Mt. Wilson, California, making nine miles (up an elevation of 6,000 feet) in 29 minutes and 1 second, beating the previous world's record by 13 minutes.

That's the kind of hill-climber you get when you get a Maxwell.

Now about speed and endurance—here are some recent Maxwell Racing Car records:—

Barney Oldfield in a Maxwell Racing Car broke the world's non-stop record at Corona, California, for 300 miles, averaging 86.3 miles per hour. Think of it—not a stop made!

Then, right on top of this marvelous motor record, along came "Billy" Carlson in his Maxwell Racer and made still another 300 miles non-stop record in the San Diego race. Again a Maxwell Racer ran 300 miles without a stop!

These Maxwell Racing Cars are built by the same Designers, the same Chief Engineer, that build the regular Maxwell Cars; and the same Maxwell Laboratory Tested Steel is used in them that is used in the regular stock Maxwell Touring Cars.

But, aside from hill-climbing and speed, power and endurance records, here are some of the facts about Maxwell comfort,—Maxwell special features,—Maxwell beauty and Maxwell service.

Read This List of Expensive Features. The 1915 Maxwell Has These Features And Many Others.

Attractive Streamline Body

Pure streamline body; graceful crown fenders, with all rivets concealed. All the grace, style and "snap" that you will find in any of the highest priced cars.

A High-Tension Magneto

Nearly all the high priced cars have high tension magnetos. A high tension magneto gives positive ignition. The Simms magneto, with which the Maxwell is equipped, is recognized as one of the best magnetos made.

Left Side Drive—Central Control

Left side steer with gear shifting levers in center of driving compartment—center control—has been accepted by leading makers of expensive automobiles as the safest and most comfortable for the driver; that is why the Maxwell has it. The Maxwell is so easy to drive and control that a child can handle it.

Three-Speed Sliding Gear Transmission

All high priced cars have a sliding gear transmission. It is costly to make, but it is the best. If the motor has the power, sliding gears will pull the car out of any mud or sand. The Maxwell has a three-speed selective sliding gear transmission because Maxwell engineers do not consider any other type to be worthy of the Maxwell car.

Double-Shell Radiator with Shock Absorbing Device

The Maxwell radiator is of handsome design, gracefully curved, and it is built to be trouble proof. It is the expensive double shell type and has ample cooling capacity. The radiator is mounted to the frame by means of a shock absorbing device on each side, which relieves the radiator of all twists and distortions of the frame, caused by roughness of the road. The shock absorbing device also minimizes the possibility of radiator leaks.

The Roomy Full 5-Passenger Body Adjustable Front Seat

The 1915 Maxwell has a full grown 5-passenger body. The front seat is adjustable, you can move it three inches forward or backward. This makes the car really comfortable for the driver. No cramped legs for tall people or uncomfortable reaching for short people. Most drivers' seats are made to fit anyone—so fit no one.

Low "Up-keep" Carburetor

The carburetor used on the Maxwell was especially designed for it after long and severe tests under every conceivable condition. Economy tours conducted by hundreds of dealers and owners in different sections of the country have proved its efficiency, its quick response to throttle and its extremely low consumption of gasoline. It has been termed the "low up-keep" carburetor.

Irreversible Steering Gear

The greatest margin of safety has been provided in the steering gear of the 1915 Maxwell. The Maxwell irreversible steering mechanism is of the expensive worm-and-gear type and its superiority over every other type lies in its many advantages. At no time is more than a fourth of the bearing surface of the gear which operates the worm in use. When needed, a new bearing surface may be had by adjusting the gear a quarter of a turn. In short, the Maxwell steering gear has four times the adjustment of any other kind.

Heavy Car Comfort

What impresses most people is the smooth, beautiful riding qualities of the Maxwell. The spring suspension of the 1915 Maxwell is the same spring combination of long semi-elliptical front springs and the three-quarter elliptic rear springs that is used on most heavy weight, high priced cars. The Maxwell offers you every essential of the highest priced machines at a fifth of their cost.

One Size of Tire—Anti-Skids on Rear

The Maxwell car is one of the few cars built in the world on tires. Maxwell owners carry just one spare tire and but one size of spare tube. Standard 30 inch x 3½ inch tires are used all around. A famous make of anti-skid tires are used on rear wheels.

A Dependable Electric Starter

For $70 extra, you can have your Maxwell delivered equipped with the famous Simms-Huff electric starter. This starter is efficient, trouble proof and easily operated.

And the Maxwell is completely equipped from the rear vision, ventilating windshield at the front to the spare tire carrier at the rear. When you buy a Maxwell you have nothing extra to buy.

The Maxwell Company's Guarantee of Service to Maxwell Owners

No other automobile is backed by a more reliable service than that guaranteed every Maxwell owner. Scores of Maxwell dealers in every part of this country are always ready to give expert advice—to make adjustments and to supply new parts at reasonable prices.

This splendid Maxwell Dealers' Service Organization is perfected and completed by the great Maxwell Service Station in Windsor, Ont. The main offices and factories of the Maxwell Motor Company in Detroit, U. S. A., are within comparatively short distance of many points in Canada. This in itself means rapid delivery of replacement parts to Canadian Maxwell dealers and owners. Maxwell Service is one of the great advantages enjoyed by Maxwell owners.

Fine English Wilton Rugs That Rival Costly Oriental Carpets in Richness of Color and Designs

ONE of the most interesting features of our Spring Showing of Rugs is a collection of extra fine Wilton Squares in which the wonderful designs and exquisitely blended colours of old Persian Carpets have been reproduced.

The original of many of these Rugs are preserved in National Museums or in almost equally celebrated private collections and are valued at fabulous sums.

The copies we show rank high among the finest examples of rug making we have ever imported. They are woven of extra fine worsteds, and the details of designs stand out with distinct clearness.

Some of these rugs are in exquisite light colorings suitable for drawing-rooms or reception rooms. In others the darker colors and bolder designs suggest use in the living-rooms, dining-rooms or libraries.

This is your last opportunity to purchase rugs of this class at the low prices which now prevail, the enormously increased cost of raw materials and dyestuffs having forced on the manufacturers a considerable advance in price. Emphatically the time to buy rugs is now. These fine English Wiltons are shown in many sizes at prices that range from..... .....$7.50 to $75.00

EMPIRE DAY WAS FITTINGLY CELEBRATED IN THE CITY SCHOOLS

Children Heard Patriotic Addresses and Contributed to the Programme Themselves—Members of the Ministerial Society, Board of Education and Daughters of the Empire Visited the Schools.

Empire Day was enthusiastically honoured in the Public schools of the City yesterday afternoon by the pupils and teachers, even though the weather spoiled part of the programmes, inasmuch as some parts of it scheduled to take place on the grounds of the respective schools had to be given under cover. Splendid music by the children, who rendered patriotic songs upon which they have spent much time in practicing during the past few months, addresses by local ministers and members of the Board of Education and other prominent citizens and in some instances, recitations and solos by pupils, comprised the programme of each of the different schools.

The commemoration of Empire Day in the Public schools in Ontario is provided for by the Department of Education. During a period immediately before the day set aside for the general participation by the pupils, teachers endeavour to review the history and geography of the Empire with their respective classes, and to convey to the children as much of the knowledge of the Empire as they can grasp, referring particularly to present events.

The speakers at the schools were: Rev. Jas. Rollins, St. Andrews, Presbyterian; Rev. Dougald Brown, Park Street, Baptist; Rev. White, St. Luke's Anglican, Rev. Jas. A. Mackenzie, Knox Presbyterian, Rev. R. G. Peever, George Street Methodist,, Rev. Robert Pogue, St. Paul's Presbyterian, Rev. Canon Davidson, St. John's, Anglican, Rev. J. P. Wilson, Charlotte Street Methodist, Mr. B. F. Ackerman and Lt. Col. J. W. Miller, representing the Board of Education, and Mr. Jos. Wearing, and the principals of the different schools.

The singing of the children was a decided treat. They have been carefully instructed and they united in the singing of such selections as "O Canada," the Russian National Anthem, Le Marseillais, and the National Anthem, very heartily. In several instances some talent of special promise was unearthed in recitations and vocal and instrumental numbers by pupils. The wet weather also kept a number of parents away and several of the members of the Board of Education, who proposed being present were unable to do so, but owing to everything having to be conducted in the buildings, the accommodation at the various halls of learning was almost taxed to capacity with the pupils and those who were in a position to be on hand to unite with the children in the celebration.

South Central.

At the South Central school Rev. Jas. Rollins performed the duties of chairman for the afternoon. He opened with a few remarks and was followed by Rev. Dougald Brown, the new pastor of the Park Street Baptist church in a patriotic address to the children. Rev. Mr. Rollins also gave an address of a similar nature later.

The addresses were interspersed with the singing by the children, a patriotic solo by Master Harry Murdeck and Donnelly.

Mr. L. J. Colling is principal of South Central.

King Edward.

At the King Edward school recitations by little Miss Dorothy Mills, "The Fleet," and Miss Lois Braund, "Britain Hold Your Own," added to a splendid programme of songs and speeches, Rev. aJs. A. MacKenzie and Rev. J. N. Clarry were the speakers. Mrs. Amys and Mrs. Sharpe represented the Daughters of the Empire.

Mr. M. Clarke is principal of the King Edward.

Queen Alexander.

A stirring patriotic address by Mr. Jos. Wearing held the attention of the children at Queen Alexander school for some minutes. As in other schools the children sang several ongs. Mr. H. A. Yenney, the principal, also gave a short address. Mrs. Langford and Mrs. Mason were present as representatives of the Daughters of the Empire.

King George.

Rev. W. H. White, Rector of St. Luke's church, with Mr. Maurice Park, the principal, were the only speakers at the King George school. There were many parents present in the Kindergarten room when the programme was commenced. Mrs. Carruthers and Mrs. Gemmel represented the Daughters of the Empire.

Queen Mary.

Rev. Jas. Wilson, Mr. B. F. Ackerman, chairman of the Board of Education, and Lt.-Col. J. W. Miller, member of the Board of Education, comprised the speakers at the Queen Mary school in the West Ward. The parents of the children were there in quite large numbers. Mrs. McLean and Mrs. Walker represented the Daughters of the Empire.

The principal of the Queen Mary school, which is one of the two last erected in the city, is Mrs. F. J. Vosden.

Central.

Central school had a bevy of splendid speakers in Rev. Canon Davidson, Rev. R. G. Peever and Rev. Robert Pogue. Mrs. J. C. Davidson and Mrs. Eastwood were also present there in behalf of the Daughters of the Empire.

Rev. R. F. Downie is principal of Central school.

Teacher Has the Whip Hand

Under unusual circumstances the Education Committee of the London (England) County Council is proposing to allow a woman school teacher to marry and retain her situation.

The teacher took advantage of the Council's scheme whereby students may borrow money to meet training expenses, repaying the loans by instalments when subsequently appointed as teachers. In this case the teacher borrowed $450, and for the past year has been at work in an elementary school.

Now she wishes to get married, and the committee sugests that in the circumstances permission may be given so that she may continue to teach and thereby earn money to repay the outstanding loan instalments.

No Need Being Old or Wrinkled Before: 75

Lillian Russell says any woman who has wrinkles before she's 75 is herself responsible for them. Sunshine and fresh air she considers more valuable as complexion preservers than nostrums and cosmetics.

The chief objection to cosmetics is that at best they only temporarily cover up defects. There are certain true aids to Nature, which may be applied with directly opposite effect. Ordinary mercolized wax, for instance, actually removes a sad or oldish complexion, by gradually, almost imperceptibly, peeling off the worn-out scarf skin. Just one ounce, procurable at any drugstore, will soon unveil an entirely new and natural complexion, with an exquisite girlish colour. Of course cutaneous blemishes, like pimples, freckles, blotches, moth patches, liver spots, disappear with the discarded skin.

To prevent or remove wrinkles, a face bath, which also produces natural results, is made by dissolving an ounce of powdered saxolite in a half pint witch hazel. This is immediately effective and gives no untoward after-effect.

The Lighting in Victoria Park

It is Suggested That the Park be Illuminated in Time for the Convention.

A prominent citizen has suggested that arrangements be made to illuminate Victoria Park in time for the combined Convention of the Medical Association and the Medical Officers of Health, which opens in this city on Tuesday next. Some five hundred doctors are expected from all quarters of Canada as well as the United States. In the ordinary course of events the Park would not be illuminated until the first week in June, when the band concerts commence. The wiring is all in place, and all that is required is the lights. The Park should prove attractive to the visitors.

Doctor Feared Premature Burial

Directed That His Spinal Cord Be Severed After Decomposition Had Set In.

Dr. Arthur W. Orwin, a famous London physician, who died at Minehead, Somerset, last February, had this clause in his will:

That until it was ascertained that he was in fact dead his nose and mouth were not to be covered nor his body confined in any shell or coffin; that on his apparent death his body should be kept in a well-warmed bed for 36 hours, and then placed in a warm room, with the windows partially opened, and watched for 12 days and nights or until signs of decomposition had set in. During this period the tests given in a pamphlet by Sir Benjamin Ward Richardson, "The Signs and Proof of Death," were to be applied, and a bell was to be attached to his wrist. When decomposition should have set in a surgeon was to sever completely the spinal cord high up in the body, which was then to be cremated.

FORMER PETERBORO' BOY'S STORY OF THE BATTLE OF LANGEMARCK

Was in the Famous Charge Where Canadians Rendered Such Valiant Service by a Surprise Attack—Found Himself Sitting on a Big Strapping Hun

The following letter is from Private Bert Mudge, a former Peterborough boy, to his mother, Mrs. R. Mudge, of Guelph. Private Mudge, who is a member of the 16th Battalion, Canadian Scottish Highlanders, is a cousin of Miss Jessie Swinton, Deputy-Treasurer. His father was formerly employed at the Peterborough Lock Manufacturing Company. The letter reads as follows:

Belgium, April 28, 1915.

Mrs. R. Mudge, 41 Queen Street west, Guelph, Ont.,

Dearest Mother and the rest,—Mother dear, I suppose you are anxiously awaiting the recipt of this letter to know if I am all right. Well, I am as fit as a fiddle, thanks to my good health and God's help and mercy in sparing me. By the time you will have received this letter the papers will have told, as best they know how of the way the Canadians brought honour to the country that sent them here, but the half will never be known of the individual heroism displayed during the charge and the days that followed.

I had gone to an important city near our billets about 5 o'clock, and was in a store, when, suddenly there was an awful roar and all the windows were broken, and the goods on the shelves fell on the floor. About a hundred yards up the street on the other side a "Jack Johnson" (18-inch shell had demolished a house. It is wonderful the damage one shell can do. They have been dropping them into the town steadily for two days,—a case of wanton destruction, as the town was demolished last November, and this just seems like heaping insult on injury.

Our Captain came along just then, a fine man whom we lost in the charge, and who sent us ahead to tell the officers to have the men fall in at once. Shortly afterwards we were ready to march off, after having filled our water bottles and gathered some grub into our haversacks, a wise precaution, not taken by all the companies. On our way to the position we were to attack we met the French on the road coming back, gasping for breath from the effects of the gas bombs that were used by the dastardly Germans in their attack. One cannot blame the French for not being able to face it, as it made our eyes smart when we were half a mile from the trenches, almost an hour after it had been used. The success of our attack depended on it being a complete surprise, which it surely was, as one prisoner we captured said: "We had thousands of men in reserve at this point ready to continue the advance at daybreak, and we never in the least expected a counter attack so soon." Our boys advanced in extended order, with fixed bayonets (as per instructions received on Salisbury Plains). As they came through the hedge 150 yards in front of the trench the enemy had almost completed, they were met by a hail of bullets from rifle and machine guns through which it would seem impossible for a man to pass alive, but some of us did it, other poor fellows only got part way. As we got within a few yards of the trench, the Huns beat it, for they will not stand and face cold steel, when back-for a breath in the trench, I found myself sitting on a big, strapping Hun, who was crouching down in a corner. We took his rifle and ammunition from him and one of the boys stayed with him. We made other prisoners, there, too, who held up their hands pleading not to be bayoneted. Our Colonel Lockie then led us through the wood and out the other side. We lost a number there, and also captured many besides two large French guns, which had been captured.

Dawn broke at 3.30 a.m., and found the Canadians "standing to" ready for a counter attack in trenches that had been dug within the last few hours. We were shelled something fierce all day, and early the next morning were relieved by fresh troops. We went back about a half mile and dug ourselves in for reserves, for the excitement still continued as far as shelling goes. They dropped them all about us all day long, and all night, but we were safe unless a shell happened to drop right in close to our dug out.

There are fresh troops and big guns here now so just watch our "smoke," but remember that it will go down in history, Mother, how the Canadians saved the day. At what cost I cannot say yet until it is official, but the losses later would have been far worse, if we had not checked them that night.

Mother, dear, you would not know me now. I haven't washed for five days, and am covered with mud from head to foot, and am writing this in a hole about three feet in diameter, and four feet deep, with plenty of straw and a horse blanket to cover me, and a couple of green window shutters for a roof. The paper was supplied me by W. Forgie, our Y. M. C. A. secretary, who brought it to us with the shells bursting all about him but he knew we wanted to write home and let our folks know we were safe. Our officers were brick, and there are none better in the British army, when it comes to going right into it, leading the men. Well, mother dear, I will have to close for this time. Let my friends know I am safe, as I cannot write more now. By God's grace I came through thus far safely, and I am leaving to Him the final outcome. Be brave, Mother dear and trust Him to see me safely home. Give my love to all and tell them that Canada has need to be proud of her boys, and to send more like them.

Yours lovingly,

BERT.

EUROPE IN BLACK AND WHITE—Showing all the European nations, and how they are lined up in the great continental struggle.

Great Britain's most perilous hour, which means recognition by the whole British Empire.

While Home Rule is irrevocable, some anxiety still exists in certain quarters, although I think without reason. Some of this anxiety, however, will be removed by the fact that Augustine Birrell remains Chief Secretary. Birrell is a tower of strength for the Irish cause.

As to the general situation, recent events only serve to increase the universal determination to carry the war through. Now, that the elements of weakness in the Ministry are removed, the effective carrying on of the war is assured. Kitchener may be appointed Viceroy of India, while on the other hand Lloyd-George is pointed out as the man with the grit, energy and tenacity necessary to conduct the War Office effectively.

Italy's intervention has been forecasted for months. Intervention on the part of other neutrals will come finally. Germany's challenge to America completes the circle of Germany's enemies. Whether the entrance of America into the war would be desirable from Britain's viewpoint has been privately debated, especially as American intervention might diminish her capacity to supply Britain with ammunition, which is more vital than ever to the successful prosecution of the war. However, there is a remarkable unanimity of opinion that America's gigantic moral, financial, and food assistance on the side of Britain would be the final factor in making Germany's defeat prompt and complete.

DOCTORS' CONVENTION WILL BE BIG FEATURE NEXT EEK

35th Annual Convention of the Ontario Medical Association Will Be Held in Peterboro'—Medical Officers of Health Also Here.

SUMMARY OF PROGRAMME

The thirty-fifth annual meeting of the Ontario Medical Association will bring to Peterborough, next week, probably the most important convention ever held in this city. The estimated attendance is placed at four or five hundred, but it is possible that present conditions may prevent many members of the Association from attending this year's meeting.

Not a few Ontario doctors are on active duty at military hospitals in England and France. Others have increased duties at home. Various causes in their combined effect may keep the attendance lower than usual. However, the local executive have anticipated a large number of visitors and Peterborough's accommodation will undoubtedly be taxed to their limit.

The Provincial Medical Officers of Health are holding their annual meeting in conjunction with the convention and will really have the first two days to themselves.

PRINCESS PATS USE ZAM-BUCK

Nothing More Welcome in the Trenches

Pte. J. R. Smith, of the "Princess Pats," writing to a friend in Ottawa, says: "Tell the friends if they want to help me, such articles as socks, handkerchiefs, cough lozenges and Zam-Buk would be useful indeed."

Scores of other messages from the front are to similar effect. One private writes: "Mrs. —— offered to send me a rug. I have written to tell her to send out some Zam-Buk instead. It will be of more use here than all the blankets in creation."

Another says: "Advise every one of the boys to bring with him a box of Zam-Buk; it is better than a loaf of bread to a starving man out here."

Still another private says: "On the retreat from Mons we had a forced march of 37 miles, and not a man who used Zam-Buk on his feet fell out."

For sore feet, chafed places, scalp sores, barbed wire scratches, cuts, abscesses, painful sores, etc., Zam-Buk is a veritable marvel. It stops the pain and heals so rapidly. Here it costs but fifty cents per box. Out at the front, to your friends in the trenches and engaged on communications, it is priceless. Send a few boxes in your next parcel. Remember also that, for the same kinds of injuries sustained at home, it is just as good.

Borrowing Powers of The Peterboro' Utilities Commission

Are Set Forth in a Statement Prepared by Solicitor E. H. D. Hall—Council May Pass a By-Law Approving of the Installation of An Auxiliary Pumping Unit.

The borrowing powers of the Utilities Commission are set out in the appended letter which has been received by the Commission. It was prepared by Solicitor E. H. D. Hall.

The letter is self-explanatory:

Re Auxiliary Pumping Plant.

The provisions of the Peterborough Act of last session authorize the Council, without the assent of the ratepayers, to pass by-laws authorizing the borrowing of a sum not exceeding $60,000, and to pay the amount to the Utilities Commission to repalce money expended in the completion of the dam and power development of the Water Works System, the erection of the pumping station and the purchase and installation of the pumping units therein, and in the extension of water mains. The money used for these purposes, over and about the amount for which debentures were issued, I presume was paid out of revenue, which if not used in this way would have gone into the contingent fund under the provisions of Chapted 74, Section 17, of the Acts of 1905. Under these Acts the Water Commissioners were authorized to form a contingent fund not exceeding $50,000, and to use such portion of it from time to time as might be necessary for making extensions, repairs, improvements and alterations in the water works and the dam, power house, plant, mains and other appliances and appurtanences of the water works system, provided that any contract, scheme or work involving an expenditure of over $5,000 first requires the approval of the Council. If, therefore, a by-law were passed by the Council providing sufficient money to repay the Commission the amount required to pay the fund of a like amount expended out of it, and with the approval of the Council, if the amount required exceeds $8,000, the Commission it appears to me, could use this for paying for the auxiliary pumping unit.

E. H. D. HALL.

Section of the Act.

The section of the Acts governing this are quoted as follows:

"It shall be lawful for the Commissioners of the Municipal Waterworks to form and maintain a contingent fund not to exceed at any time the sum of $50,000, and to use such portion of such contingent fund from time to time as may be necessary for making extensions, repairs, improvements and alterations in the said waterworks and the dam, power house, plant, mains and other appliances, and appurtanences of the waterworks system, provided, however, that any contract, scheme or work, involving an expenditure of over $5,000 shall first require the approval of the Council of the corporation of the said town—such contingent fund to be invested by the Water Commissioners until it is needed for the purposes aforesaid, and for the purposes of forming such contingent fund it shall be lawful for the said Water Commissioners to retain the surplus annual revenue derived from the said waterworks after providing for all ordinary expenses of management and maintenance and a sum sufficient to meet the interest and sinking fund on the waterworks debentures until the said contingent fund amounts to the sum of $50,000, and while the said contingent fund remains at the said sum of $50,000, the whole of such surplus revenue shall form part of the general funds of, and be paid to, the corporation of the addition sufficient to pay the auxiliary pumping unit, money so received would be a return to the contingent

Trades and Labour Notes

There was a good meeting at the Labour Hall this week, but the scribe has to admit that there is not much to report. Much of the discussion was devoted to matters of a personal nature. For instance, the Musicians' delegate was present, asking a ruling on a technical point; then the advisability of having an official lawyer was provocative of all kinds of eloquence. Then the constitution and by-laws were subjected to cross-fire; also the case of a girl who was injured in a local factory, whether or not the Compensaton Act was in force when the accident occurred, and so forth and so on, till President Hammecott announced that the Labour Day celebrations were to be discussed, but were postponed till next meeting, owing to the late hour.

WAR INFORMATION

The Public has been asking what will be the effect of this war on Life Assurance Companies.

The report to date, May 1st, of one Company, at least will be interesting and reassuring reading to those interested. It deals with the total death claims during the first nine months of the war, to the 1st of May, 1915, as reported by

THE SUN LIFE ASSURANCE CO. OF CANADA

The total death claims for the period mentioned amounted to $1,[illegible]231.16, and of this amount only $33,271.28 was for death claims actually resulting from hostilities or less than two and one half per cent.

When you take into account the accumulated reserves on hand on policies taken out (many of them quite old), before the war, and the extra war premium of $50.00 per thousand per year on those who have been insured since the war began this experience shows must conclusively that the extra risk incurred on account of the war is a negligable quantity at least so far as the Sun Life is concerned.

LOCAL BOYS CHASED PRUSSIANS FROM WOOD

the fields what a sight there was to behold — soldiers, hatless, coatless, without rifles or equipment, men on horses, whose traces had been cut [illegible] men, women, and children all carrying packs—some few precious things they had hastily grabbed up—went flying past And as the evening came on still they came unceasingly, the old people plodding along as best they could, and many carrying babies and children. It was awful to see their distress. Where they all eventually went to heaven only knows. We still stood around, waiting impatiently for orders to move. Then the news came down that the Canadians, 2nd and 3rd Brigades (ours being in reserve), had stopped the German rush at great sacrifice and were holding the horde back unsupported.

2nd Battalion Advances.

"But as soon as it was dark, off we started, 1,017 strong. As we drew nearer the battlefield the noise grew deafening, and we passed groups of staggering wounded making for the rear. Then we could see the flashes from the German guns and the lights and hear the sip-sip of the bullets. Soon we left the road and made for a farm house, and by then were under fire, for the bullets were flying overhead and a few found their mark. Then we realized that there was nothing between us and the enemy, no safe trench to crawl into. The signalers went into the farm courtyard, where headquarters were established, and went to bed as soon as possible as the morrow would be full of hard work for us. I slept, or rather attempted to sleep under a waggon, but the raging inferno outside prevented any sleep. As the grey veil of morning lifted our wounded were already coming in. The gallant chaps of No. 1 Company were nearly wiped out during the night when they drove an overwhelming force of Prussians back through a woods. Other companies were more fortunate, and managed to entrench themselves before morning, but still with a number of casualties.

S. Julien Bombarded.

"The morning broke clear and cold and when the sun was up it was our work to establish communication to the trenches and brigade headquarters (the 3rd, where Garnet Hughes was). This we had to do under direct shrapnel and rifle fire, but we managed to get it done without losing a man—although how we escaped I do not know, for bullets were falling all about us. I went up to the advanced station where Col. Rogers was, behind our hastily dug trenches. From there I witnessed the awful sight of the bombardment of St. Julien. Jack Johnsons were falling four at a time, and pieces of shell fell a distance of 400 yards of where we were working. Houses disappeared as if by magic in a cloud of dust and smoke, and the destruction was awful. A shell hit part of our building where some wounded were, and killed most of them. I assisted the doctor in the disagreeable task of identification, and helped move their mangled remains—some without arms or legs. Then, when not busy, I collected ammunition and carried wounded on an improvised stretcher to the nearest dressing station.

Supports Didn't Come.

"By evening we were holding our own, but the wounded kept coming in and the shells were closer. The ambulances came up in the night, and took away 200 men. I got no sleep, and I guess no one else did, either. All through the longest night I ever passed the battle raged. We had hoped to receive reinforcements, but they did not come. Next morning I was busy repairing broken wires, and had such narrow escapes that it almost makes me believe that the Lord intended I should pull through. A few of us volunteered to carry all the ammunition we could to the advance trench across an open field swept by enfilade fire. We all got through safely by a miracle. Coming back I was the last man, and I fell over a dead Highlander and they turned a machine-gun on me, so I crawled right on my stomach up to a bit of hedge, and made a dash for it. But it gave the others an awful scare. The Germans were using poisonous gas again and my eyes smarted terribly.

"Our Boys Tiring."

"Away on our right near St. Julien we could see our boys retiring, and the Germans charging across the plain. They had also worked around our left, and we were in grave danger of being cut off when the order came to retire. I had to go to headquarters to get a signaling lamp, and then made for Brigade headquarters, where we expected to make a last stand to do or die in the attempt to check the way. Shells were falling all about the place and the machine-guns burring for all they were worth. Many of our chaps were killed. Poor Bill Unwin, the sergeant's brother, has not turned up, so he is either dead or a prisoner. By the way we took a lot of prisoners, including a colonel.

"At hesquarters Col. Hughes ordered us signalers to carry barbed wire down to a new reserve trench to the engineers. This was an awful job, as I had all my equipment, and, with heavy lamp, was all in before I started. Half-way across the fields I had to seek shelter behind a heap of mangles, but the bullets began to come through, and hit one chap, so off I went again. I could not run—in fact, I staggered most of the way. Chaps were falling all about us, but I had to make the trench—and how glad I was to get there safely with the barbed wire! Sergt. Unwin and another chap came in with one of our orderlies, who had been shot in the leg, so Bisnaw and I carried him to a dressing station about half a mile away. I had not had a thing to drink of any description since Thursday, and on my way from the dressing station went into the headquarters of the —— and had some hot tea. How good it tasted!

"When I started back to find the battalion Bisnaw had disappeared, so I went into a trench held by a Highland regiment. Reinforcements were now pouring up and the Germans had been checked. I spent the night with the Kilties, but next morning I heard that the Bisnaolers had gone back to their billet, so I reported to the 3rd Artillery Brigade, as I could be of no assistance, and there watched the progress of the battle. The artillery duel was something terrific, and I witnessed close escapes from bursting shells. Early in the evening a staff officer came along and told me he thought my battalion — what was left of it—was entrenched by a farm on my right, and I found them there all right. The boys all thought I had been killed, and the Colonel shook hands with me.

Casualties Were 720.

"Late that night our battalion was relieved, and we marched back to the billets. Our casualties were 720. Poor Rogers is gone, his machine-gun holding out until all were killed. The fighting was awful, but, thank God, the Canadians upheld their country's name, and I don't think the Huns will be anxious to meet us again.

"The next few days we were in reserve trenches, and were heavily shelled. The Germans were gradually pushed back. They would never have broken through if they hadn't used the gas. We were glad to move here, as our billets were being shelled, and we got no peace at night. Last night was my first good night's sleep. The town we were in was badly damaged and a number of civilians killed. One shell alone killed a family of seven."

Looks For Fairly Good Year at Harwood House

Mr. J. J. Gillman, of Harwood, stated to-day that he was looking forward to a good year at his Rice Lake resort. He is not as optimistic as the Kawartha people in regard to a greater influx of neighbours from across the line this summer. Mr. Gillman has received new enquiries from the Syracuse district, and most of the Rochester and Buffalo regulars have been heard from, but in view of all the conditions Mr. Gillman scarcely expects a year as good as 1914.

EDITORIAL TWADDLE

To the Editor of The Examiner,

Dear Sir,—Some few days ago there was an editorial in the Review headed "The Loyalty That Counts," and again, a few days later, one headed 'Sir Wilfrid Laurier's friendly attitude to Germany."

In both these articles Sir Wilfrid is quoted as saying "Emergency? Who ever speaks of an emergency now?"

The trend of both these articles is to imply that there was a well and widely known emergency, known to every person except Sir Wilfrid (and Great Britain) and that he was insincere and only pretended that there was no danger.

Now, if the emergency was so well known to Sir Robert Borden, the Review, and every other person implied, what kind of a double traitor was the said Borden when he permitted the dismantlement of the 'Niobe'? A "tin pot" you say! Well, it was a tin pot they were very glad to recommission, but they took many weeks in doing so. And what kind of a patriot was the Review that it permitted this outrage to be perpetrated wihout one word of protest?

Just pull that beam out of your own eye and then you will see clearly to take the mote out of others.

I do not believe Sir Robert Borden or any other person knew the imminence of the emergency, and I do not believe he is the diabolical traitor the Review twaddle implies.

If Sir Robert Borden has many such sallow writing friends as the Review Editor he may pray to be delivered from them.

Anti-Twaddle.

A PAIR OF SIXES

If you are a "tired business man" do not fail to see "A Pair of Sixes," which H. H. Frazee presents at the Grand Opera House, Thursday, May 27th. Indeed Mr. Edward Peple, the author of this most successful farce comedy, which has endured Broadway for an entire year of full houses, must have himself been "a tired business man," a great many times, for he was an expert accountant before taking up playwriting, and it was likely for that reason that he wrote "A Pair of Sixes," which vibrates with just the clever satire, and witty lines that would serve to jolt poor and much abused "tired business man" out of his long continued and bad for the soul introspection. In watching the troubles of others it is very easy to forget our own and the ancient saying which suggests that the moat in our own eye appears as a beam in the eye of our brother, is well demonstrated in the plot of "A Pair of Sixes." The story of the two quarrelling [illegible] the every day life of some firm in every city of any size and how ludicrous these constant bickerings really are and of how little importance one's personal advantage is when compared to the success of a great and growing business, is so thoroughly and convincingly worked out that the comedy not only furnishes laughs quite sufficient but teaches a lesson as well. If you have a partnership business that is tottering you must see "A Pair of Sixes," 'and while laughing at the follies of others, you will resolve to profit by their mistakes. If the world looks a little black, just now, go and see "A Pair of Sixes." If you have an office boy, bookkeeper, private secretary, stenographer or shipping clerk who think their lot especially hard, send them to see "A Pair of Sixes," and you will save money and nerve energy as well as bringing your employees back to you in a better and more satisfied frame of mind. An entirely capable cast, well known to Peterborough people, presents the comedy, and is headed by Harry O. Stubbs, an English comedian, last seen in this country with Wilton Lackaye in "The Stranger," and at the 39th Street Theatre, New York City, in "Too Many Cooks." Rita Carlyle plays opposite him in the part of "Coddles," and effectively demonstrated her ability as a character comedy artist. Miss Carlyle was starred for two years in "The Chorus Lady" in England, and was the oringinal "Miss Hazy" in "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" at the Adelphi Theatre, London.

Big Profits On Lambs

A Colorado sheep man was on the Kansas City market recently with 1,055 lambs of his own feeding which netted him, after all expenses, the snug sum of $8,000. He charged up all the alfalfa he fed to the lambs, which he raised himself, at the regular market price. It amounted to $750. He then put down the amount of money he paid out for the corn, which was $3,000. He knew the weight of the lambs when they went on feed and their cost. The sheepman was C. A. Duncan.

"My lambs made a gain of just thirty pounds from Nov. 4 up to the time they were weighed here, which was a little better feeding record than I ever made for others," Mr. Duncan said. "I feed corn twice a day at stated intervals. This was fed in troughs. The alfalfa was furnished in racks of the self-feeding class. In handling them in this systematic way they made large gains from the very start. System in sheep feeding has much to do with success. The weather was favourable. I landed on a first-class market and sold them at much higher price than I expected, so made a good profit on the deal."

ACCUSED WILL BE ALLOWED TO ENLIST

Magistrate Langley found a way to settle a family trouble this morning, when a wife had her husband before him on a charge of unlawful assault, by securing for the husband his wife's consent to enlist.

The couple had been married two years, and in that time they have only lived together eight months. He was at Kingston with the 26th Battery, but was unable to get her to sign the papers, consenting to, his going overborough, and two weeks ago they began housekeeping again.

The assault complained of occurred on May 17 at their home, when there was a dispute as to whether the kitchen door was going to be open or shut. The wife was forcibly ejected from the house, and when she returned to get her clothing another altercation took place, this time over a photo of the wife's sister which they both claimed. The photo and frame landed over the bannister down into the hall below, and frame and glass were broken. Then the husband choked his wife until she was unconscious it is said. She came to her senses on the bed and she was soaked with water, probably thrown upon her in an effort to revive her.

After the evidence of the wife was taken this morning, the accused changed his plea to guilty, when Magistrate Langley secured for him the consent of his wife to enlisting. Sentence was suspended on the understanding that he shall join one of the overseas contingents as soon as possible.

Dying Officer's Last Words

LONDON, May 22.—Canon Abbay, of Norwich, now a chaplain at the front, writes: "When I was waiting at an hospital at Boulogne two Canadian ladies asked me to bury Capt. Sinclair Allen, who had died from gas poisoning. One was his widow, who told me that Capt. Allen's last words were, 'Tell England I have been murdered, not killed in action.'

"I think these words should ring throughout England," pursues Canon Abbay, "and to follow the Archbishop of Canterbury's recent advice would be a crime against brave men. We have no right to deprive them of the means of saving their lives from such enemies as the Germans."

Canon Abbay adds that he met a Canadian Red Cross Doctor who said the Canadians had found a sergeant crucified, and they had a photograph of the scene.

Many a woman's mind is merely something she uses to guess with. If a man's sins don't find him out, his wife will.

Britain Is Preparing to Fight Disease

LONDON, May 21. — The greatest sanitary campaign in the history of Great Britain is on. Hundreds of decomposed bodies are lying just across the channel in Europe. Hot weather is approaching. Henceforth disease threatens to become as great an enemy to the soldiers and civil population as the more material foe.

British health authorities have already declared war on the common fly. Housewives throughout the British Isles will soon receive orders to take every possible precaution against this disease carrier. Every particle of food served in her home must be scrupulously screened. The government will place her on her honour to fight against contagion just as the soldiers are fighting against the enemy in the field.

One of the first English authorities on sanitation to sound the menace of disease for the coming summer was Professor Simpson, King's College, London. He declared that the armies of Europe will be found in a radically different physical, mental and material condition in August and autumn of 1915. Should epidemics then arise they will not be confined to the armies that are stricken, nor will the civil populations in the devastaed areas escape, he asserted.

Blind Woman Had Gold Scattered Through House

Gold in buckets, forty pounds or more, rewarded police officers who went with a search warrant to look through the house of a blind woman on an uptown street yesterday. Constables Colangelo and Carducci carried back to headquarters over $8,000 in gold pieces.

The woman was charged with obtaining money by false pretenses by selling the same lot to two different men. A warrant was sworn out by the man who bought the property last, and the officers went to the house with a search warrant. They began to strike "pay dirt" at once. There were $5 gold pieces most anywhere, and a leather money belt netted several hundred dollars. Treasure trove gleamed in every drawer they opened, and finally the two officers had almost as much as they cared to carry. The woman had $2,000 in the bank, preferring to keep the bulk of her cash in gold.

This morning the woman appeared before one of the magistrates, and paid over $8,000 in gold for the complainant to settle the false pretenses case.

Then she went home, and the police returned to her her lost pounds of gold.

HUMAN CROWD IN A DELIRIUM OF PATRIOTISM

Special Cable to The Examiner:

ROME, May 22—Almost the entire population of Rome, except the aged and invalids gathered last evening on the Capitoline Hill where Prince Colonna, the Mayor, had convoked a solemn sitting of the Municipal Council to consecrate, in the heart of the capital, the war.

After his address, Prince Colonna surrounded by aldermen, and the Municipal Council, and preceded by the standard of Rome, marted for the Quirinal to pay tribute to King Victor Emmanuel as the personification of Italy.

There were cries of "Long live the King" and "Long live the House of Savoy."

Finally the King and Queen and Royal children came out upon the balcony. His Majesty was in the uniform of a general. The Crown Prince, dressed as a sailor boy, waved his cap to the multitude.

The excitement of people arose almost to a delirium. The King then gave orders that the Italian flag be raised to the balcony.

Then, amid the thundering cheers of the multitude his Majesty advanced to the national standard and folding it in his arms, embraced it.

After the demonstration before the Quirinal, a great crowd went to the Deldrago Palace, the residence of the United States Ambassador.

There were loud cheers for America and demands for revenge for the Lusitania victims.

Peterborough Artillery Men in Hot Corner

Mr. J. McDonald, foreman at the C.P.R. freight sheds received an interesting letter from a Peterborough man at the front, Sergt. T. Guerin, who is with the 4th Battery, 1st Brigade. Sergt. Guerin was a member of the detachment from the 24th Field Battery, in which he was Sergt.-Major. He was employed at the C.P.R. freight sheds for a number of years before leaving with the First Canadian Overseas Contingent.

His letter in part, which was written in Belgium on May 4th, is appended. Up to that date he had come through unscathed though he has evidently been in some hot places.

"Your welcome letter of April 12th received this afternoon and am pleased to hear that you and the crowd are all well.

Well, Jack, I dare say that you know what kind of a place we are in at the present time. If there ever was a spot on earth that you would call hell this is it, and believe me our little bunch are doing their share. We thought that we were doing a lot at the last place, but we are sure doing it here. Our battery got into action on the 23rd of April about three o'clock, and by five o'clock the next night we had put three thousand rounds into the German trenches. The next day they started searching for us. The found us on Sunday and believe me they made it hot for us. They put shells through every gun shield but mine, but that did not stop us, but the next day when they started the "coal boxes" and "Jack Johnsons" and "tram cars" at us, we had to leave the guns for a few seconds. While we were away they blew one of our guns and a wagon badly to pieces, and our own shells started to go. We shifted to a new position that night and started in next morning to give them hell again, and have been at it ever since.

I were sick last Sunday. I guess it was the hard work and the strain of the firing that brought it on. Jack, if there ever was a bunch of men that deserve the V.C., and all the medals they can make, it is the artillery division, the drivers for bringing up ammunition under the shell fire they have to come through, and the gunners for sticking to their guns.

Tell Mr. Dodd that I have a helmet for him and that I will write as soon as I can to him and Dave.

Well, Jack, give my regards to all of the boys and tell them that tobacco is scarce here."

GIVES ANTI-SKID ADVICE.

Always Turn Wheels Toward Direction of Slide, Says Dealer.

Advice to prevent accident from skidding was given last week by F. W. Muller, who deals in tire chains.

"First of all, drive slowly over a wet stretch," he said. "Like the Irishman's fall, it isn't the speed that hurts; it's the sudden stop that does the damage. By all means avoid putting on the brakes, as that simply locks the rear wheels and makes it easier for them to slide by preventing their natural tendency to roll ahead.

"The moment the car starts to slide off at the rear, turn the front wheels sharply in the same direction as the rear ones are skidding. Both pair then present an acute angle to the line of slide movement, and the rear wheels will resume rolling and follow the front wheels instead of skidding. Turning the front wheels in the other direction will aggravate the tendency to skid to a dangerous degree.

"The biggest factor in the prevention of skidding and in making possible ordinarily inaccessible roads is the non-skin chain, which is found in most luggage boxes from the smallest runabout to the heaviest limousine."—New York Times.

ITALIANS REPULSE SEA AND AERIAL ATTACKS

THE GERMAN DRIVE THROUGH GALICIA COMES TO GRIEF

ITALIAN DESTROYER DOES MUCH DAMAGE TO ADRIATIC PORT

Hostilities Between Austria and Italy Were Opened at Dawn Yesterday by a Combined Aerial and Naval Attack on Several Italian Ports.

Special Cable to The Examiner:

ROME, May 25.—Hostilities between Austria and Italy were opened at dawn yesterday by a combined aerial and naval attack on several Italian ports on the Adriatic coast, from Venice, as far south as Barletta, north of Bari, a total distance of about 350 miles. The Italians, on their part, made an attack on Porto Buso, a small island at the head of the Adriatic, where the Austrians lost two killed and 47 prisoners. The guns of an [illegible] and sank all the craft in the harbour.

The Italian Government issued the following statement regarding the attack on Porto Buso and the aerial raid on Venice:

"At 3 o'clock yesterday morning an Italian destroyer entered the harbour of Perto Buso, a small island close to the Austrian frontier. The destroyer borbarded the port, destroying the quay, landing stage and military barracks. The destroyer sank a flotilla of motor boats in the harbour. She suffered no damage, and there were no casualties among the crew. The enemy lost two men killed and 47 prisoners. The prisoners include one officer and 15 non-commissioned officers. They were taken to Venice.

"In an air raid on Venice two aeroplanes threw eleven bombs, but no serious damage was caused. The defence of the city was prompt and efficacious, and forced the hostile airmen to put to sea.

"Slight damage caused by hostile aeroplanes and ships at Ancona early yesterday morning has already been repaired. Our fir sank one German ship at anchor."

VISITED MANY PLACES.

All the Austrian aerial attacks were made concurrently during the early hours of the morning. Among other places attacked were Porto Corsini, 60 miles south of Venice; Gesi, 14 miles south of Ancona, as well as Potenza Pecena and the Tremiti Islands, on which shells were dropped. The bombardment of Ancona is said to have lasted about two hours.

The attack upon Barletta, 35 miles north of Bari, was made by an Austrian mosquito fleet, consisting of torpedo boats and a small scout steamer. After a slight naval engagement the Austrians were put to flight by the fire of Ltalian warships and departed northward.

Prince von Buelow the German Ambassador, and Baron Macchio, the Austrian Ambassador, left Rome Yesterday evening. Prince von Buelow's departure is taken to mean that the Kaiser has declared war against Italy, although no official announcement to that effect has been made here.

Baron Rathsemhausen, Bavarian diplomatic representative to Italy, also left Rome. Prince Schoenburg-Hartenstein, Austrian Ambassador to the Holy See; Baron von Ritter von Grauenstein, his Bavarian colleague, and Dr. von Meuhlberg, the Prussian envoy, accompanied Prince von Buelow.

CLASHES ON FRONTIER.

Several frontier clashes between Italian and Austrian troops are reported from the Trentino border. A despatch from Milan says news has been received there that the Austrians are everywhere falling back from the frontier, and assuming the offensive. Dozens of bridges in the border district have been dynamited.

The news of the aerial attacks on Italian seaports and the aggression of Austrian warships on the eastern coast of Italy was received in Rome with a sense of relief, for the reason that it showed hostilities had been opened by Austria-Hungary. It is evident that the Italian people are standing firm, and there are many indications of their discipline and their high spirits. Even those who for reasons of principle are opposed to war have asked to be permitted to serve their country in the ranks of the Red Cross.

Italian refugees from Trieste, to the number of 2,000, who made their way on foot across the eastern frontier, report that all the railroads into Austria have been cut. The refugees further assert that German troops have arrived at Trieste to reinforce the Austrian garrison, and that the Austrian commander has determined to raze the city to prevent its occupation by the Italian troops.

The Austrian authorities in the Crown Lands are arresting all Italians and permitting only women and children to leave. The latter have no food, and in many cases not enough clothing. This news and the fact that 30,000 Italians have been stopped at the frontier has caused widespread indignation, and there is talk in official circles of reprisals.

CALM AND DETERMINED.

Mobilization is proceeding throughout Italy like clockwork. There is absolutely no confusion. The organization of the reservists has been admirably done, and the men are pouring into the depots from early dawn. Most of them are accompanied by women and girls of their families, who say farewell dry-eyed and urging their kin to "redeem" their brethren under the yoke of Austria and mete out full punishment on the oppressor. The calmness and determination are unprecedented. War is regarded by all Italians as a sacred duty.

ITALY HAS DECLARED WAR ON AUSTRIA FORCES MOBOLIZED

Austro-Hungarian Ambassador Was Given His Passport Sunday Afternoon and Has Left Rome---Strict Censorship is Now in Force.

Special Cable to The Examiner:

ROME, May 25.—Italy has formally declared war on Austria. The official announcement was made here late Saturday contemporaneously with an order for a general mobilization of the land and sea forces of the kingdom. The Duke of Avarna, Italian Ambassador in Vienna, presented a declaration of war on Sunday afternoon to Baron Burian von Rajecz, the Austro-Hungarian Foreign Minister, and asked for his passports, the Duke having been instructed to leave Vienna for Rome immediately. War will [illegible] Austria-Hungary [illegible] Italy at daybreak.

Baron von Macchio, the Austro-Hungarian Ambassador to Italy, was handed his passports Sunday afternoon, and will leave Rome during the night or Monday morning. Meanwhile a clash between Austrian and Italian military forces on the frontier already has occurred.

General mobilization, under the terms of the royal decree, began on Sunday. Ordinary passenger and freight services on the railways will not be disturbed. The Ministers of War and Marine have proclaimed a state of war in the Italian provinces bordering on Austria, in the islands and cities along the Adriatic coast, as well as all the fortresses, which will be declared in a state of defence.

CENSORSHIP IN FORCE.

The Italian army authorities have taken control of the railroads and all vehicles, waggons and automobiles, as well as all the horses in the kingdom, have been commandeered. The censorship in Italy is much more strict than that in France and England. It has been announced that nothing will be published regarding the operations beyond the official announcements of the War Office.

Commander-in-Chief Cadorna, Premier Salandra and Foreign Minister Sonnino have agreed that no war correspondents shall be allowed with the Italian army, and that the Italian Press Bureau shall operate in the same manner as do those in France and Great Britain.

The first armed clash of importance was reported Sunday from Brescia. Austrian troops crossed the frontier through the Montozzo Pass, about four miles north of the Lenale Pass, on the western border of Tyrol. The patrol was met by a troop of Alpine chasseurs, and forced to retreat after a short fight It is not known whether there were any casualties.

The Austrians are feverishly strengthening the defences of the Trentino. A railroad bridge near Rovereto, just north of Lake Garda, through which the frontier line runs, has been blown up. Many buildings in the town have been destroyed because they would interfere with the artillery fire across the lake. The buildings which have been razed, include the Convent of the Holy Cross, the Civil Hospital, St. Mary's Church and a large tannery.

CIVILIANS ARE EVICTED.

Riva, the large town at the head of the lake, about 3 miles from the frontier, has been evacuated. The inhabitants were driven out without warning, and were forced to take to the mountains, where they are now without shelter or food. Many prominent Italian residents of Rovereto and Riva have been placed in detention camps, where they will be held as hostages to guard against a revolt to aid the Italian troops.

Notices signed by King Victor Emmahuel, calling to the colors all men belonging to the army classes from 1876 to 1895, in other words, every Italian of military age, were posted in every city and town of Italy Sunday afternoon. The fact caused no excitement, as general mobilisation has been expected since the action of Parliament on Thursday. The reserves, the Alpine guards, the garrison artillery and the Customs' guards will be called out Monday. The carabineers, sharp-shooters, aviation staff, transport and medical corps will be called at once. The infantry of the territorial militia of the five classes from 1877 to 1881 will be called to the colours today. The remainder of the reserve forces will not be called until June 1.

The War Office has announced that all Italians who desire to volunteer will be accepted in all branches of the service. Inhabitants of the "unredeemed provinces" are eligible to serve in the army.

ROUMANIA IS READY TO STRIKE

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, Tuesday, May 25 (2.44 a.m.)—A despatch to the Daily Chronicle from Bucharest says:

"The Roumanian Government is negotiating with the allies. King Ferdinand has reviewed the army. Great enthusiasm prevails."

"The general belief that Roumania is on the brink of war for the fulfilment of her national ideals has been strengthened by Italy's declaration of war against Austria-Hungary," says the Times' correspondent at Bucharest.

"Celebrations of the anniversary of the coronation of the late King Carol were held Sunday and were attended with unusual fervor. King Ferdinand and Queen Marie were present at a great military review. The troops were their new field service uniforms of grey khaki instead of the usual parade dress uniforms."

BULGARIA, TOO.

LONDON, May 25.—A despatch from Milan says the Corriere della Serra of that city publishes a statement by M. Ghenadieff, declaring that Bulgaria has maintained its neutrality in a loyal spirit and has no reason to be suspected by the Triple Entente. M. Ghenadieff says:

"Why do not the allies reopen the negotiations which they dropped six months ago? They have only to assure Bulgaria of the fulfilment of her national ideal to have the country with them. Only one word is necessary, but it must be spoken."

It is reported from Sofia that the Bulgarian Government has lodged a protest at the Porte against the seizure by Turkey of a number of Bulgarian railway cars loaded with goods.

REPULSED A TURKISH ATTACK

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

ATHENS, May 25.—Reinforced by the arrival of fresh transports, the Anglo-French expeditionary forces at the Dardanelles repulsed a Turkish attack yesterday and developed a strong offensive. Mitylene despatches today reported that debarkation of the forces began before daybreak Monday and is continuing. Inside the Straits the allied fleet has resumed a violent bombardment of Turkish forts.

An official statement from Constantinople yesterday reported that the allied land forces at the Dardanelles were being reinforced.

Poison Shells Are Again Effective

British Were Forced to Evacuate Trenches East of Ypres

Special Cable to The Examiner:

PARIS, May 25.—The French and Belgian troops near Nieuport have begun a vigorous artillery attack upon Ravorzyde (about 3 miles south west of Ostend), according to the official communique of yesterday.

Ravorzyde is about 6 miles from Nieuport and the Germans have established shipyards there. The French fire was doing so much damage that the Germans brought up their big guns to drive the French artillery back, and a vigorous artillery duel resulted.

The importance of the success attained by the French on Sunday to the north east of Loretto is emphasized by supplementary reports. In a sanguinary engagement with the bayonet General Joffre's forces annihilated the enemy which opposed them.

East of Ypres the Germans this morning made an infantry attack on the British under cover of a poison gas, their artillery at the same time firing asphyxiating gas shells. Sir John French in his report states that the British troops were forced to evacuate some of their trenches, and the enemy penetrated the line in two or three places, but counter attacks were at once organized, and part of the original line had been retaken when the report was sent, with the battle still progressing. Three of the enemy's batteries were silenced to the north east of Festubert.

THE QUADRUPLE ENTENTE

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

LONDON, May 25.—Italy has given her adhesion to the agreement already signed by the allied powers not to conclude a separate peace. The signature of a formal document to this effect is imminent.

The Rome correspondent of the Daily Chronicle states that as the result of an interview yesterday between Foreign Minister Sonnino and the British French and Russian Ambassadors the hitherto existing Triple Entente has become the Quadruple Entente. The basis of Italy's active co-operation, economic, naval and military, is said to have been settled, signed and sealed at that conference in Rome.

The happy pair spent their honeymoon with friends in Hamilton, after which Gunner Wilson returned to duty at Kingston. They received quite a number of beautiful presents from their numerous Peterborough friends.

Germans Come to a Stop in a Bad Position

Enemy Obliged to Weaken Main Force and Transfer Troops

LONDON, May 25.—"The German phalanx that was to have been driven like a battering ram through the whole of Galicia to Lemberg, has come to a stop on the River San," says the Petrograd correspondent of the Daily Chronicle. "Its head is on the right of the river and its base on the left but the Russians have retaken the village at the apex of the phalanx and while the Germans still hold the centre on the San, the Russians to the northward and southward are on the left bank of the river and threatening the German communications.

"The danger from the Germans is the greatest from the north, where, advancing in an angle between the San and the Vistula, the Russians have taken several villages west of Nisko. General Mackensen, to save his centre, has had to weaken it by detaching reinforcements for Southern Poland. The Germans have been unable to keep up that ring of fire that was to have swept the Russians out of Galicia. They have also begun to concentrate on Stanislau.

"Their plan in brushing down between their lines of stream lay in their speed. Their aim was to win a short, decisive and tremendous battle, but the battle is dragging. Their centre is held, and the big effort is crumbling up into a number of smaller battles. The heroic Russian third army has not belied its reputation by a magnificent stand on the San. It has fooled the German hopes.

"Instead of one vast sweep the Germans are now reduced to a sort of general reconnaissance for possible weak points along the whole front. Their chief aims for the moment are to envelope Peremysl and secure the command of the Dneister south east of Peremysl. They are violently attacking at Hussakow and between Stry and Drohobycz. They are struggling to reach the river that guards the approaches to the Carpathians.

"The first fierce tussle is over. The Russians have not given way, and the battle will now be a long one with a great deal of manoeuvring, but the Russians by gaining time, have already defeated the original German plan."

Germans Lose Seven Men Each Minute of Day

LONDON, May 25.—"We know what it means to hold a forty-mile front in France, and we should endeavour to visualize what it costs the Germans to fight on one front from Switzerland to the North Sea and on the other from Libau to Bukowina.

"This tremendous strain must tell in the long run. No nation can go on losing seven men a minute, day and night as the Germans do, without in the end becoming exhausted," said a high military official to-day.

Improvement In King's Condition

Special Cable to The Examiner:

ATHENS, May 25.—"King Constantine's condition continues to shew improvement. His temperature this morning was 98.2," said the official bulletin from King's physicians to-day.

Massacring The Russian Prisoners

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, Tuesday, May 25—The Petrograd correspondent of the London Chronicle wires: The Germans are displaying in their treatment of Russian prisoners in the San, fiendishness. They drowned one party of Russian prisoners in the San, five Russian prisoners a German officer shot with his revolver and another Cossack has just escaped to the Russian lines after having had his ears snipped and strips of flesh cut off his thighs for refusal to give information as to the Russian positions.

On Narew, on the Prussian front, the Germans have for the first time made use of asphyxiating gases.

8 BOXES CURED PSORIASIS.

Mrs. Hettie Massey, Cooksville, Ont. writes: "Three doctors described my trouble as psoriasis, and one said I could never be cured. The skin-eruption came all over me, even on my face and head, and the itching and burning was hard to bear. I used eight boxes of Dr. Chase's Ointment and am entirely free from all sign of a sore to be seen. Nothing could [illegible] praise this Ointment enough."

Canadians Repulsed Attacks

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, May 25.—The Daily Mail correspondent, writing from Pas de Calais under Sunday's date, says that very vigorous fighting has taken place on both sides of LaBassee with favourable results.

"In front of the British," he continues, "a definite action was begun on Friday near Festubert, when the Canadians, fighting again with splendid dash, took a line of German trenches in the orchard of a farmhouse which was a critical and apt spot.

"On the next day the Germans made four strong attacks on our trenches, especially against the Canadians. The first was in force and in massed formation, but our shrapnel caught the enemy in the open and inflicted very heavy losses. The attacks which followed were not on the same scale, but resulted in heavy loss to the Germans, and they were easily repulsed."

Happy Hawkins in the Panhandle

By ROBERT ALEXANDER WASON

"Aw, let him come," sez Red. "It ain't like as if he was a bloomin' stray: he's trained already."

"How could they get out to camp?" sez I. "The waggon won't be in again."

"I'll walk," sez Isaac, chipper as a jay bird.

"And carry your baggage?" sez I.

"Certainly," sez Isaac.

"All right," sez I, in a grumble; "if you're there before we break camp we'll haul you as far as the ranch, but we ain't runnin' no boardin'-house."

If a feller just shows he's willin' to help himself a little, that's about all I ask, and after we had bought the hat and boots for Tom Smith, I told Red to put Isaac's plunder behind his saddle and we rode back to camp.

It was just all I could do to make Tom Smith even try on his new finery, and he refused pointblank to wear 'em until we got back to the ranch. He hlaimed he had been feelin' aguey for some time, and that it was gettin' the best of him. He didn't look right up to the handle, but still he didn't strike me as bein' so miserable that exercise wouldn't agree with him, and I began to fear he was goin' to need the spurs purty frequent. I can listen patient to their various complaints, but never can get interested in his reasons for not tryin'.

Just as we were finishin' supper, Isaac and the pup came in skippin' and dancin'. Now, if I'd had a hen in good condition, I wouldn't have minded matchin' her again' those two in a fair fight; and yet here they were, not knowin' a thing, and yet ready for anything while Tom Smith, who had led me into believin' that his soul yearned for a dashin' life in the saddle, was whimperin' because I'd made him move a little to try on his new clothes.

Jim had had a relapse after his taste of hotel life at Kansas City, and he sat back inside himself for the most port or else read out of his foreign book. When I introduced Isaac to the crowd and told 'em he was goin' along down with us, Jim he nodded his head mechanical, as though he didn't feel any call to take interest in what wasn't his business anyway. The rest of the boys nodded cordial enough and snapped their fingers at the pup, all except Shorty and Tom Smith.

Shorty threw what was left of his food on the ground and stalked off rumblin' and muterin', while Tom Smith clapped his hand to his jaw and said he'd been took with the neuralgie. Isaac started to recite the various drugs which was certain to lick neuralgie in one round; but Tom Smith mumbled out that nothin' ever did him any good except to tie up his head; which he proceeded to do in a red handkerchief.

Our camp was in a clump of cottonwoods and it was most comfortable—but I wasn't. I'm an animal and I have a lot of animal ways. Its right and healthy for an animal to help himself; but neither Heaven, man, nor the animals pity him who pities himself, and Tom Smith was beginnin' to rest on my nerves.

Phil McLaughlin loved to sit by a fire even when the weather was so hot it made him pant, and he had built up a good one; but Jim had gone off to read his book, Tom Smith had rolled up in his blanket, Shorty lay at some distance jabbin' his knife in the ground and muterin' because Isaac had joined us and Missourie were cautious about gettin 'acquainted and stingy of words even when they were, and even Red was in the dumps.

Our guest, however, Mr. Foster, he was enjoyin' himself fine and it never occurred to him that every one else wasn't happy. I've noticed often in dealin' with East'ners that an open fire out under the stars stripped off their artificial characteristics, and put a new depth and brightness to their eyes, and so I didn't think a mite less of Isaac for feelin' the way he did.

Still, after Red had got him started on tellin' about himself, I began to nod along with the rest. Isaac had a marvellous memory for things without interest, and after I had listened to half a dozen of his adventures in New York, I was ready to follow the others into blankets. Isaac could describe a one-eyed cat or a mangy dog in a way to make ya feel sticky all over; and when I left, Red was the only survivor, and I think he was asleep.

I paused out in the dark and looked back at 'em. Red was stretched out on his back, his beard over his face to shield it from the heat, Isaac sat with his eyes shining bright and his hand strokin' the pup that lay in his lap. It was a queer mixture, sure enough; and the little fire slapped its knees, kicked up its heels, and chuckled gaily to see such a grouchy group in the camp of a cow-outfit goin' home light.

CHAPTER VIII.
MEETIN' UP WITH THE GIRL.

Oxen were the most popular teams in those days 'cause they could do their own rustlin'; but Jim thought 'em too slow, so he used mules and had to take grain along to feed 'em. Grain was so high at Dodge, though 'at he got spunky and decided he'd let the mules loaf on the way back rather 'n pay the price. He was haulin' back a big load of stores and it was foolish to make the whole outfit waste time on the road, but every once in a while, Jim would do something short-sighted like this.

Isaac, he couldn't ride, and Tom Smith wouldn't, so they were hauled in the waggon along with the other inanimate objects. Isaac beamin' like a battered jumpin'-jack, and Smith lookin' twice as useless as nothin' at all. Flames was purt nigh worth his salt now, and he loose-herded the spare ponies with whatever help any one else chose to give him and it was a slow and monotonous journey. The hosses were all unusual quiet except one paint pony who had the spice o' mischief in him. This pinto, though not what you'd call actually mean, was one of the toughest ponies in the world, morally as well as physically, and when he'd be runnin' loose, he'd sometimes toll off the bunch into a little run, but for the most part it was just a drag, and the first forenoon seemed a month long.

In the afternoon, I got desperate, and decided that joltin' along in a covered waggon wouldn't do neuralgie any more benefit than ridin' a hoss would, so I caught a little bay with white feet and put a saddle on him. Tom Smith moaned when I suggested to him what my idy was; but it didn't phase me, and finally he prepared to climb up on to the hurricane deck of his little bay pony. He went about it the same way a woman would climb the side ladder on a box car, and nachely, the pony stepped around a little.

Tom Smith dogged off to one side, and asked if I couldn't get him a gentler one. All of Jim's hosses were so dog-gentle they made a feller forget what real ridin' meant, and we all laughed when Tom Smith asked for something extra. Of course, they'd pitch around a little when they'd start out, but it was only in play, and as soon as they'd warmed up a little, they settled down like a porchful o' rockin' chairs. If you was minded to maltreat the pinto, why, he'd come back with a little vanity; but this was as it should be in a live hoss.

The bay wouldn't cut up even if you lost your temper and jerked him a time or two; so I ordered Tom Smith into the saddle. The bay waited 'till he was all fixed comfortable and cosy, and then he gave a few little stiff-legged jumps just to prove that his tendons were taut and reliable; but Tom Smith went to leather with a wasp. A pony knows, and a pony likes his little joke once in a while; but that pony didn't throw Tom Smith. Smith fell off as sorrey as a sack o' meal and the pony stood and looked at him in surprise.

I caught the bay and brought him to Smith who sat holdin' his face and looked doleful. "I can't ride him," sez he. "Haven't you got a gentle one?"

The other boys were shootin' it into me worse 'n they were to Smith, and I was too disgusted for words; so I hopped on the pony, gave him a loose rein, and he played himself out in five minutes. Then Red held the pony and I helped Smith up. First he complained of his stirrups bein' too short, then too long, and finally we put 'em back right where they were to start with.

He was wearin' his soup-bowl hat and his run-over shoes, and a red handkerchief, and as he sat humped up in his saddle, I couldn't help thinkin' how easy he could get my consent to go on back to the livery stable. He tried to get the pony to trot the way the bobtailed ones in Kansas City had, and when the pony finally took a Spanish shuffle, he proceded to bob in his stirrups accordin' to what Jim called park-ridin'. Well, this pleased the boys a lot and they raw-hided me and hurrahed Tom Smith until finally I sent 'em along about their business while I edged over to the left with Tom Smith.

It must be admitted by every fair-minded, intelligent person, that a medicine could not live and grow in popularity for nearly forty years, and to-day hold a record for thousands upon thousands of actual cures, as has Lydia E. ### WAR SWINDLERS AT WORK

Fortunes Made by Impostors Pretending to be Doing Relief Work

An investigation into a number of so-called "charities" in Paris which have sprung up since the war started led to some astonishing results. One of these concerns was installed in a German hotel in the French capital and was under the control of a secretary who had come within the clutches of the law on no fewer than eleven occasions. Two ladies of mature age who were without a penny at the time of mobilization to-day possess a fine motor car and a private house. They were making something like $200 per day, and this huge profit appears to have geen gained by spurious agencies for tracing missing soldiers.

The most remarkable feature of the whole business lies in the fact that in several cases Austrians and Germans who had somehow succeeded in escaping from concentration camps got themselves elected as presidents of various organizations in order to carry on swindling on a large scale. Some of the concerns which the police investigated were commercial in character, and sold various articles at exorbitant prices, customers being induced to buy in the belief that the profits were devoted to good works.

Legends of National Emblems

Most people are acquainted with the legend of St. Patrick and the shamrock, which has given Irishmen their special decoration. In somewhat similar manner most nations have equipped themselves with a symbolical plant to which is generally attached a legend.

Scotsmen are said to owe their symbol of a thistle to the fact that when a party of invading Danes were approaching the slumbering camp in the darkness, one of them trod on the prickly thistle, and announced his contact with it in rather loud tones, which awakened the Scots, who drove off the enemy.

Patriotic Welshmen decorate their caps with a leek on St. David's Day because that saint is supposed to have advised the Britons on the eve of a battle with the Saxons to wear leeks in their caps so as to distinguish easily, friends from foes.

England has always been famed for her roses, but the adoption of the rose as the national symbol does not seem to have taken place till Edward IV. introduced it on his seal.

The lily of France has been traced to very early times, but probably owes its adoption to the Franks at the battle of Tolbiac, who crowned themselves with lilies after the battle.

Jackson, Miss.—"I shall feel repaid for writing this letter if I can help any tired, worn-out mother or housekeeper to find health and strength as I have.

I did so and now I am well and strong and my old time energy has been restored. Vinol has no superior as a tonic for worn-out, run-down, tired mothers or housekeepers."—Mrs. J. N. ### War Turns Minds of Five Wome

NEW YORK, May 21.—Judge Bell, in the Yonkers City Court yesterday, had before him five women whose actions caused them to be held for observation regarding their sanity. They were of widely varying ages and came from different stations in life, and in most cases, according to Dr. George S. Mooney, expert on mental diseases, who appeared before the court they are victims of the unusual excitement which has resulted from the European war.

Two of the women were but eighteen years of age. They were Miss Emily Kossell, of Hastings on Hudson, and Miss Dorothea McLaughlin, No. 18 Hudson street, Yonkers. Miss Kossell was found wandering in the Yonkers baseball park early on Saturday morning wearing dancing pumps and clad in a filmy gown. She has danced the tango and other new dances almost incessantly since in St. Joseph's Hospital, where she is being held for observation. Miss McLaughlin believes she is an opera singer and sings continually.

The other women who were held for observation were Mrs. Jeannette Hall, of No. 10 Garden street, Yonkers, and Mrs. Mary Branigan, of No. 126 High street, Yonkers, both suffering from religious mania; and Miss Mary Kodar, of No. 36 Herriott street, suffering from delusions.

DEPRESSING NEWS AFFECTED MARKET

Probably every market has suffered considerable setback through the sinking of the Lusitania and the grocery markets were not an exception to this rule. Prices commenced to decline and gave importers a very bearish outlook. The heavy casualties in the recent European fighting have also had a rather depressing effect, despite the consequent victories.

Toward the latter part of the week, news was better and things took on a more hopeful appearance.

There is a firmer appearance to the sugar market but there is otherwise no change in the condition nor price. There is a moderate demand from refineries and a more active business, but this latter was to a very small degree and failed to make much impression on the trade.

Barbadoes molasses is being quoted at 41 to 45 cents, f.o.b. Barbadoes. The shipping difficulty seems to have no solution and it is worrying the trade very considerably. Stocks on wholesalers' hands are small and they can only hope for the best to develop.

There has been no change in the situation as it pertains to coffee and prices and demand have shown but little change.

Wholesalers report that the quotations supplied by British importers on milled rices are not to be considered and that they will not buy at the levels stated. There is little else on offer and no further supplies of Patnas have come forward.

The tea market has been quiet with the same sort of hand to mouth buying. Other firms have followed last week's advance of five to six cents per pound. The tendency seems to be to wait for developments.

Formosas and Japans are being settled at full prices, and the China markets are expected to open higher. The situation in India-Ceylons is unchanged, but the high prices tend to check buying. Stocks are moderate.

In dried fruits, there has been some very free buying and owing to the lower quotations, peaches and apricots have been active. Apricots are quoted at 11½ to 12½ cents and peaches 7½ to 8½ cents. All other items are under a good active demand and their position in the market is good.

ELBERT HUBBARD KNEW NO FEAR

The word Fear was left out of the lexicon of Elbert Hubbard, whose submersion with the Lusitania quenched such a bright light of letters. He did not know the meaning of fear and never did, and whatever else happened, of this his friends are sure, he faced his fate without flinching. He was as regardless of physical fear as he was of fear of what people might think of him.

A particular admirer of the man Hubbard is Leigh Mitchell Hodges, who wrote a tribute to him in the Philadelphia North American.

More than any man I have ever known, says Mr. Hodges, he seemed to have conquered the demon fear, which, in his lexicon, was the one and only devil. He laughed at many things which made most men tremble when he was a boy—and the record has it that he was not a model boy. But he must have been fairly smart, for at 16 he had exhausted his native town's school supply and was nodding assent to the call of the wanderlust.

His father, a big-hearted country doctor, didn't want him to go away from home. He warned of the dangers that awaited a young fellow in the big world outside Bloomington.

"I told him there must be good, too," the Fra said to me one afternoon as we hiked along one of the roads between East Aurora and Buffalo. He was a good hiker and loved the open road. "As nearly as I can recall, I put it this way to father:

"'I am not only a part of this town, but of the world outside, and I want to see what the world is like. I know Bloomington from cellar to garret and I guess Bloomington knows me about as well, so I am going to get out of it and find the part I am to play or the work I am to do before I become as those who are content to stay here. Wish me well, and I'll try to do my work.'"

With that he said good-by and took the train for Chicago, where he got work in a newspaper office.

At 24 he developed into a strong writer, with a style about as individual as they make them. Then his brother-in-law, the Larkin who founded the soap factory of that name, wanted his help in the little Buffalo factory.

Starred in a Soap Factory.

He took charge of the sales department in the small concern and did two unusual things. First, he originated the "premium" system which eventually made the Larkin factory one of the largest of its kind, and second he inaugurated his famous "on suspicion" plan of selling.

"We offer you credit without question because we believe in your honesty," was the way he advertised to prospective customers—and the product was sold from maker to user.

Every one but Hubbard laughed at these ideas, yet Larkin was game. And a few years later Larkin paid this "dreamer" $75,000 for his idea, and Hubbard took the money and moved to East Aurora, a good-looking, sleepy country town a few miles from the city where McKinley was shot.

For a long time Hubbard had wanted to see in print some of his personal views regarding a certain young magazine editor who was making quite a hit in the east, but he knew no magazine would accept them. So he decided to print a magazine of his own, and that is how The Philistine came into existence in 1895.

Twenty-five hundred copies of this "periodical of protest" were printed in June of that year and mailed gratis to a selected list of folks throughout the country. Its curious cover of butcher's paper attracted attention, and some of its insides made readers wonder if the pages were not asbestos!

Piled Up Near a Million.

The original plan to "publish two numbers and quit" never was carried out. The Philistine became prosperous and popular and laid the foundation for a fortune which, by this time, must have mounted well toward a million mark.

Later that same year Hubbard and his printing partner, Harry Taber, decided to get out a book by hand. For the subject matter they chose the Song of Solomon [illegible], and with type set by themselves and hand-made paper of the richest texture, they pulled 600 copies on an old Franklin hand press, which still stands in the corner of the big press-room in the basement of the building in the orchard.

How glad they were when this job was finished, best is told in its end leaf, which reads thus:

"And here, then, is finished this noble book, being a study and a reprint of the Song of Songs, which is Solomon's, taken from the Holy Bible. Printed after the manner of the Venetians, with no power save that of the human muscle, at the Roycroft printing shop that is in East Aurora, N.Y. Begun on September, the third day, 1895, and finished—thank God!—on January, the 20th day, 1896."

Since then many books, some of workmanship entitled them to rank with the best modern product of this kind, have come from the Roycroft shops, where most of the workers are East Aurora boys and girls.

Nothing "Roycroftie" ever has been as interesting as was the Fra himself. He was a man of quiet, charming manner, wholly unlike what his readers who never had seen him would have pictured. His long, curly hair and longfer black crepe de chine tie; his broad-brimmed black felt hat and loose-fitting ordinary sack suit, conspired always to make him a marked figure in any crowd.

Once, when we were walking through Broad street station, he smiled at the staring crowd and in a low voice said to me: "These curls always get 'em. They think God made a mistake when He put hair on a man's head."

A Convert from Socialism.

He was chock full of humour and had one of the sweetest smiles I ever saw on a man's face. When he laughed, as he often did, he crackled his voice mightily and yet, somehow, it never seemed a real laugh. In early life he was a Socialist, an avowed follower of Tolstoy and Marx, but as his business and his bank account grew, he began to sympathize with John D. and the other rich men. Indeed, of late years he had stood out as one of the boldest defenders of "big business."

At East Aurora he built up one of the most unusual and interesting institutions in this or any country. His original intention was to make it a sort of centre for the expression of high thought and the publication of fine literature, a place where anyone with the courage of a conviction might come and be heard patiently and courteously. He loved free speech.

His Itching Palm.

For several years this plan seemed to be prospering. But someone wished an itching palm on him—nearly everyone knows who it was—and while it never seemed to be just to his inner liking, still he worked that hand for all it was worth.

Personally he didn't care for money. His clothes never cost much. He wore $3 shoes and never put up at the gilded palace hotels, save when he was the guest of some organization he was to address. And as a speaker he was one of the best that ever faced the footlights.

From the minute he smiled at the audience—his opening sentence always was a broad smile which begot its kind—until he dropped his last word into the mental poor box of his hearers, therewith enriching them in no small measure, he was, in a certain way, fascinating. No man ever told a story more deftly or with finer effect. He used words as a great painter uses colour, and his tongue was a brush capable of varied strokes.

He was a past master in the art of knowing when to keep still. His pauses were as effective as his best-rounded periods, and his face was as mobile as the late John Bunny's, only in a different way. He never spoke from notes, though always he had a pocketful of notes. For he did most of his writing while travelling on trains, and he travelled most of the time.

As a companion, at work or play—and when he worked you might have thought he was playing—he was as delightful as any man I ever have met. Never shall I forget one rare July evening, when, in a little tent the poet had put up outside the shop at East Aurora, Richard Le Gallienne, the Fra and I sat talking of the place and power of poetry.

All the spun gold of his nature seemed to come to the surface and he glowed with that enthusiasm for the finer things which permeate the souls of those who have overcome the call of goods and chattels. Of Omar, the tent-maker, and Old Walt, of Camden; of Swinburne, Poe and Henley, we talked until the moon began to go down hill and the first cock had crowed.

Then, as we walked back to the Phalansterie — that is Roycroft for Hotel—he turned and said:

"Leigh, life is damn fine when you look at the right side of it."

GUNPOWDER OUT OF DATE

Modern Explosive in Stick, Strip or Cylinder Form

Gunpowder is really powder no longer, except when it is used for the manufacture of fireworks. The explosive used for the modern high-power artillery is in the form of cylinders, sticks, or blocks, some of them of considerable size.

Germans make their "powder" in strips that look like thick tape. They cut it off in lengths and tie it up in bundles which fit into the breeches of their big guns. The British powder is made in long sticks which look like macaroni without the large hole, while the French powder looks like flat pieces of chewing gum.

The bigger the gun the bigger the grain of powder. For the rifles the men carry the grains are half as big as a pinhead; for the largest guns they are three inches long and three-quarters of an inch thick. Every grain is perforated lengthwise. Small grains have a single hole, while the larger sizes have seven.

These holes regulate in a wonderful way the rapidity with which the powder will burn. If you light a scrap of paper all round the edge it will burn towards the centre and the burning surface will steadily decrease. If, however, you make a hole in the centre of the paper and start the conflagration there the flame will steadily grow, and the most rapid burning will take place just before the fire has reached the outer edge. This is the exact principle which governs the arrangement of the perforations in big gun powder. The burning starts along the surface exposed by the perforations and spreads always faster as the hole is enlarged, burning fastest at the instant it is consumed.

It is not intended that the charge in big guns shall exhaust its force instantly. The beginning of the explosion starts the projectile on its way. The explosion continues, and as the projectile gains speed the force behind it continues to push. The powder is burning hardest and pushing hardest at the instant the projectile reaches the mouth of the gun. At that instant it also is burnt out and exhausts itself. Its work is done.

KAISER FEARS DEATH

If He Catches Cold He Goes to Bed Immediately.

Whilst travelling in the rear of his troops the Kaiser has in constant attendance a number of court physicians. He fears the attack of disease almost as much as he dreads the assassin's knife. If Wilhelm catches as much as a cold he immediately retires to bed and cancels all his engagements. Unhappy court officials who suffer from chills have to carefully hide their symptoms from the Kaiser, otherwise they will be at once banished. They have to use their handkerchiefs behind the shelter of a friendly palm or slip through a window to a terrace, where they can sneeze out of the range of his Majesty's observance.

In Berlin the Kaiser used to exercise in a covered tennis court, which was frightfully overheated, according to Wilhelm's orders. In this oppressive atmosphere he played tennis with perspiring officers. Rather than run the risk of developing a chill the Kaiser would disport himself in this building with its hot-house interior. It was the same with his riding school. The Master of the Horse was always finding his charges developing coughs owing to the heated atmosphere in which they were exercised by the Kaiser.

Miss Anne Topham, at one time governess to the Kaiser's daughter, tells in her "Memories of the Kaiser's court" how the Emperor was always making panic-stricken exits from one palace to another to avoid disease. On one occasion the Emperor and his court were comfortably installed at the Belle Vue Palace, when Prince Oscar developed chickenpox. So all the luggage was repacked and a few hours later the Kaiser was scurrying off to another palace. This occurrence happened just prior to the German Emperor's visit to England, so that he spent an apprehensive week in the latter country, always on the alert for symptoms of the disease which he feared had infected him.

Leather Medals

Leather medals were originally conferred as a genuine mark of honor. When King John of France, captured at Agincourt, was forced to pay to Edward III. of England a ransom of 3,000,000 gold crowns to effect his release, he was left without precious metal for coins or decorations. So he found it necessary to pay the palace expenses with leather money. He also used leather medals when he wished to confer honor on some nobleman. The custom quickly arose of presenting "leather medals" as a burlesque distinction.

Why Many Aviators Fall to Death

When an aviator falls to death his machine is usually so badly damaged that it is not always possible to say which part, if any, was not in good working trim.

Dr. Placzek, a well-known German scientist, has long suspected that the fault was not with the machine at all in nine cases out of ten, but that some profound change, either physiological or psychic, causes the aviator to lose control of the motor. Such a change, he thinks, may be due to the extremely high altitude.

He tested his theory with a pneumatic cabinet, so constructed that the atmospheric pressure could be quickly diminished. In this he placed a normal, healthy man. He then reduced the pressure of air to correspond to an altitude of 12,000 feet.

Dr. Placzek found by various tests to which he subjected the man in the cabinet that the power of concentration was materially impaired. In some way also muscular activity was hampered, that is to say the muscles did not respond either with alacrity or precision to the impulses of the will. The entire mechanism of the human machine, through lack of centralised action, was thrown out of gear.

In addition to the diminished atmospheric pressure from which the aviator and the subject in the cabinet alike suffered, the aviator labours under an appreciable excitement. He is subjected, furthermore, to a continual change of atmospheric pressure, the same being now greater, now less, as the aeroplane is swept up or downward by currents of air, which, at a great altitude, are swift and strong, so that the task, both difficult and delicate, of instantaneously adjusting itself to continuous changes, is laid upon his organism.

The aviator also has other difficulties to contend with. The difference in temperature from the earth he has left and the altitude in which he operates is intense, and he cannot escape from the wind, which accentuates the cold, and, at first contracting the blood vessels, later expands them as they become paralysed by the cold. Then, when they are enlarged, more blood rushes to the skin to fill the enlarged vessels, and the internal organs suddenly find themselves with a diminished and insufficient supply of blood.

This is not a wholesome condition for any of the organs, out for the brain and heart it is particularly serious.

SUBMARINES THAT WILL CREEP AND CRAWL

DIAGRAMMATIC VIEW OF WHEELED UNDERWATER CRAFT FEELING ITS WAY UP AN ESTUARY.

The stranding of a British submarine in the Dardanelles has drawn attention to the contrivance of Mr. Simon Lake, an American inventor, for the protection of submarines in shallow water. By means of wheels on the bottom Mr. Lake makes it possible for the craft to advance cautiously in shallow water without showing even her periscope. In a trial one of these submarines entered Libau Harbor, followed the channel on her wheels and up a crooked passage through the fortified entrance.

Mr. Morgan's London Home Used for the War Babies

Converted Into Special Nursery for Infant Children of Professional Persons Whose Incomes Have Been Reduced or Blotted Out by the Great Conflict.

(Special Dispatch)

LONDON, May 15.

Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan's palatial house at Nos. 13 and 14 Princes Gate, which stands in the midst of green and open spaces, Princes Gardens at the back and Hyde Park stretching out in front, is the home of the Professional Classes War Relief Council.

The most interesting part of the house is undoubtedly the upper part, which has been converted into a special nursing home for babies born in war time of professional persons whose incomes have been reduced or blotted out altogether. The plight of these classes—the artist, the musician, the architect especially—suddenly reduced from comparative affluence to poverty, is indeed one of great pitiableness, more especially as the sensitive artistic temperament is not adapted to hold its own in the rough-and-tumble of fierce competition.

And an aristocratic home this is for the little mites cared for there. Every patient availing herself of this beautiful home is paid for either by herself or by the Benevolent Fund of the husband's professional institution. It is given to few little Londoners to open their eyes for the first time in such an exhilarating environment. The big, sunny rooms are furnished in such a manner as to suggest gladness and roses and light and laughter. All these "blithe newcomers" have the most delectable little cradles in white or pink or blue, and fascinating little toilet sets, brushes and mirrors, and all complete. Moreover, if they want any additions to their wardrobe there is a big chest of drawers full of the most exquisite little frocks and baby boots, and coats and caps (all presented by generous donors who have worked the garments themselves), from which these lilliputian autocrats can make a selection.

There is an infinity of baths at this idyllic nursing home. The nursing staff are all highly qualified. Altogether it is permeated by an atmosphere of efficiency, happiness and peace. If, as psychologists say, surroundings in infancy make or mar the boy or girl, man or woman of the future, babies born here are bound to go far. Queen Mary, when she inspected it the other day, expressed her complete approval.

Mrs. A. C. Gotto, the honorary secretary, told a correspondent who called something of the fine work done by the fund since its inception on the outbreak of war.

"Artists, musicians and architects," said Mrs. Gotto, "have been especially affected by the war—particularly architects. We do not make grants of money, but help them to help themselves. For instance, in the case of a professional man with five children, whose income before the war had been $2,500 a year, we got him some recruiting work to do at $9 a week, and made him a loan to help him to pay his rent. Two of the children we placed in a school and for the others we got hospitality. This case is typical of our methods of helping, and we work in close conjunction with the various societies existing specifically for each profession.

"We have obtained posts for some ladies in the censors' department, though such work requires rather special attainments and a good knowledge of languages. Many of them are university women.

"Then we have utilised the services of several musicians in our concerts, which have been held all over the country, in camps, in hospitals and colleges. Up to the present we have made about $1,550 by these means. Girls who, though they have had musical training, have not much talent we try to divert in other directions. Many of them have taken up teaching. Some we have subsidized to give music lessons in working girls' clubs."

But, of course, all this requires a considerable amount of money to support, and an agreeable and profitable means has been found in the Thursday musical teas at the "Arts in War Time" exhibition at the Guildhall, which has been arranged for the benefit of artists adversely affected by the war. The collection includes the work of famous artists, who have generously presented them for the benefit of the fund, and of less well known artists who are directly in need of assistance either for themselves or for their dependents while they are at the front fighting for their country.

Titled English Woman Falls Off Stage Cliff in War Fund Dance

Lady Constance Stewart-Richardson Gives Weird Performance at Empire Theatre, London, Ending in Tumble from Rocky Precipice, Which Causes Audience to Gasp.

(Special Dispatch)

LONDON, May 15.

Lady Constance Stewart-Richardson, whose husband has fallen in battle in Flanders, and who, after an absence of about six years from the footlights, is dancing for the war relief funds at the Empire in Leicester Square, gives a weird, and fascinating performance, ending in a fall from a rocky precipice which causes the audience to gasp. The impression made by the performance upon the mind depends upon the view taken, but there can be no question that Lady Constance takes her art seriously.

The artistic vehicle for Lady Constance is a Greek "Ballad Dance" called "The Wilderness," with the scene laid in some rocky Arcadian retreat. She first appears before the spectators wearing a tense expression, aided in effect by her widely opened eyes and somewhat stealthy movements. A faun, to give the story, who has danced himself to sleep in the presence of the gods of nature and war, has his playground invaded by another faun, the Lady Constance herself. The scenery represents high and jagged rocks, with an overhanging ledge near the summit.

When the first faun is awakened there is a pursuit and a struggle, which ends in the victory of the other faun and the titled dancer is hurled down the slope. The fall is a sensational achievement. The distance is considerable, and the fragile body of Lady Constance Richardson receives several brusque knocks, which at once produce admiration and anxiety on the part of the spectators.

Lady Constance, being asked the secret of the "fall," said:—"I only managed to do the fall after a great deal of practice. I had a rock built at my home, and I began rehearsing about a month ago. Of course, I have been working at the faun dances for years. But it is really an effort to get some of the Greek poses during the fall, and I manage to get four or five of them. The whole dance is taken from the old Greek bronzes and from the faun figures.

"Do I get hurt? Well, to a certain extent. It is a fall of eighteen feet, and I get bruised a good deal as I meet the bare boards of the stage. But I soon feel all right again. No, I don't have to be pushed off the rock. We have a fight at the top, and it is very steep, and as one gets on the slope one has to go over."

Clashes in East Africa Between British and Germans Told by Trooper

(Special Dispatch)

London, May 15.

While dispatches from the seat of war give comprehensive reports of the fighting on the Continent, little has been said of the brushes which take place between the hostile outposts of the dependencies in Africa. Little fights in which a score of men take part assume importance to the agents of the various belligerents there surpassing in their minds even the biggest battles which take place in Europe. Writing to the London Times, a member of the East African Mounted Rifles tells of the border warfare which is being waged.

"We are on top of a mountain about forty miles from the terminus of the Magadi Railway, with which we are in touch by helio," says this writer. "Our camp, which is a very strong position, is about two miles inside German territory and perfectly healthy, being about six thousand feet above sea level and overlooking both Magadi and Natron Lake lakes. We have had two brushes with the Germans, but I don't think there is any likelihood of their coming through here, as the country between us and our railway is very waterless.

"About ten miles from our camp into German territory is a native tribe called the Wa Sonjo, with whom we are fortunately upon very good terms. They extend in a series of villages about thirty miles from our camp into German territory, and have proved invaluable as intelligence agents. They are quite an interesting people and are quite out of touch with the other natives, being isolated by waterless tracts.

"These Wa Sonjo live on rivers and have a wonderful system of irrigation. Their villages are built away from the rivers and have only four or five approaches cut through dense Sansiviera, and each approach is fortified by a double gateway and palisades—the Sansiviera is impenetrable. One gateway is about fifty yards behind the other. Day and night a guard is kept at the first gateway, and no native is allowed to pass after dark.

"During the day guards are placed at intervals between the village and the river. I should think to natives these villages are impregnable. The people are armed with bows and poisoned arrows, knobkerries and sword knives, but don't appear to use spears.

"Our first encounter was really due to them. The Germans sent out a patrol to the far village, and these natives heard that the chief was to be taken away and asked us to help them. Five of us, therefore, left at once, about midday, and got near the village about three o'clock in the following morning, having walked through the night. The patrol consisted of four native troopers and three porters. About daylight we heard a couple of shots, and it appears the Germans had commandeered about thirty Wa Sonjo porters to go to Arusha, six days away, and one of them had said he could not pick up his load, so the one Askan fired two shots at him.

"This was a very thick bush country, and when the patrol came along we called out to them to stand, but they tried to clear, and we had to shoot. We killed two and captured the other two. About two weeks after that a German officer with twelve Askans came along and carried off one of the chiefs after thrashing another.

"Again the Wa Sonjo asked our help, and seven of us went out with two of our native police and, attacked the Germans about daylight after travelling through the night. We killed the officer and eight of the men, but four got away. They fired quite a lot of shots at us and one of our men was hit in the side when next to me. Most of their shots went very high or much too low. We captured all their kit. They are wonderfully well equipped in respect to ammunition, bandoliers, boots and rifles. All the rifles were brand new Mausers, stamped either 1913 or 1915, Deutsch. It is a most absurd policy of the Germans to handle these natives roughly, especially at this time.

"On this last trip we had to pass through the first Wa Sonjo village about sundown and sixty young fighting men came to meet us, headed by their aged chief, who, they say, is one hundred years old and is the man who taught them to make their irrigation ditches. He made us a wonderfully good speech in excellent Swahili to the effect that 'We are going on a dangerous trip and must be very careful.' He added:—

"'When one hunts the rhino, the buffalo and the elephant one only attacks them when one has chosen one's own ground, but if they get into a thick piece of bush one leaves them until a more favorable opportunity.'

"In the same way we must only attack the Germans if the situation was favorable to us; otherwise we were to come back and wait for a better chance. Furthermore, if we came back without firing a shot he would not consider us cowards, he said, but wise men for the above reasons.

"We were also on no account to follow on their tracks, as they would perhaps leave a couple of men to hide behind and wait, and if they saw us we might be led into a trap. This and other sound advice was given to us, after which the chief spat on the shoes of the two guides and sent us off with his blessing. After the affair was over he sent over particularly to congratulate us and inquire after the wounded man. The latter was not seriously hurt and was quite able to travel, and I took him into Magadi a couple of days ago."

British Army Bravely Attacks Mirage

(Special Dispatch)

LONDON, May 15.

Marches through absolute desert—no water for washing purposes, deploying to attack a mirage—these are some of the experiences which face the British forces making a conquest of German Southwest Africa. But in spite of such handicaps the British have made good progress, have taken Swakopmund and are preparing to press on after the Germans. The experience of the troops is told by an officer in the Northern Force, who writes to the London Times:—

"What a world of desolation in there! Not the benign duneland of east England or Flanders, with tussocks of grass and scrub, but a heart numbing ocean of soft white sand billows, rising in places to a height of one thousand feet or more, and always melting and trekking and piling up. There is not a living thing—plant, animal or insect—to be seen.

"Fearsome is the mirage here. At four hundred yards a man looks bulky as a horseman, with fluid legs. At six hundred yards a whole regiment is lost in a shimmering lake or reedy lagoon. While trying to get in touch with the regiment which had landed at the settlement we became aware of lines and streams of fantastic horsemen, infantry and guns overflowing the dunes to our right front and apparently coming to attack us.

"Our companies of Rand Rifles eagerly deployed and ran forward and it was not until we were within five hundred yards that we discovered we were out to fight the South African Irish, who had gone out too far to our left front. There were no guns or horses in the country.

Weary but Necessary Grind.

"Since those days of hourly expectation we have been on one colossal fatigue. First entrenching the bases, then building sea walls, then building a railway from Walfish to Swakopmund along the seashore, guarding the construction, building sandbag blockhouses at short intervals along its course and also, of course, outposts and patrols. A weary, if necessary, grind.

"General Botha landed recently with his well-equipped Burghers and long before you get this we shall have started our advance along the main railway to Windhoek. While standing to arms in the gloomy hour before dawn we heard twenty-seven terrific reports in the direction of Swakopmund, twenty-two miles away. This was an absorbing mystery to all of us.

"It was not until two weeks later, when the Imperial Light Horse made a dash on Swakopmund in the night, that the explanation was forthcoming. The Germans, in an attempt to hinder us, had blown up all the public works, piers, &c.

"It was just dawning on the morning after this same night ride of the Imperial Light Horse that we heard another series of reports. This time the explanation was quicker to come and was more tragic. Men and horses, blown to eternity by mines, the cost of taking Swakopmund. Since then the Germans have been in occupation of a position at Nomidas, within a mile of our outpost line at Swakopmund.

"There have been several little affairs of outposts and patrols and the explosion of newly discovered mines has become so frequent that we hardly remark it now. As our advance posts are withdrawn at night the Germans occupy the position and frequently undermine some tempting spot before morning.

"Two Goals and Three Tries."

"There are some humorists among the Germans. Some little time ago they sent a wireless message from Windhoek to our G. O. C. at Luderitz Bay, and recommended our people not to spend too much time at football there, as there was an excellent football ground at Windhoek, where they would play us.

"That morning a German patrol had been trapped and two were killed and three wounded. So a prompt reply was sent to say:—'Many thanks, and we are doing nicely here. In a game we played against you this morning we scored two goals and three tries.'

"Water has been a pressing question with us ever since we landed. It is a good deal better now, but we still are limited to a gallon a man a day for all purposes. An extract from divisional orders reads:—'It has been observed that water has been used for washing purposes. This practice must cease immediately.'

"There has been a serious leakage of information through our lines which has defied every effort to stop it. The dash on Swakopmund was known to the Germans in plenty of time to allow everybody to clear out of the town the night before. The numbers of big guns, troops, &c., we landed were all known to them within a few hours. It is hardly possible for natives to pass our lines as the country is such a howling desert, with no native population.

"The only explanation that we can give is that we have some traitors in our midst, probably natives, who communicate with the Germans by means of dogs, great numbers of whose spoors we see on the sand dunes every morning. This is the height of the rainy season here, and in seven weeks I believe we have had almost one-tenth of an inch of rain, nearly half the total annual rainfall.

"A little further inland they have had an abnormal fall of rain, which has just brought the Swakop River down in flood, the first time surface water has shown in twelve years. This our people call Botha's luck, as it will simplify our troublesome water question greatly. In this sand country every one has given up wearing boots, and we have turned into a barefooted, barelegged, bareheaded and bewhiskered army."

EXTRACTED BULLET'S OWNERSHIP A PUZZLE

(Special Dispatch)

BERLIN, May 15.

The question regarding the ownership of an extracted bullet at present is being debated with considerable vehemence in German newspapers, and in some law periodicals as well. As a rule, a patient likes to retain the bullet extracted from his body as a curiosity. On the other hand, the surgeon likes to keep it as an illustration of his successful operation, especially in lecturing before medical students or writing in his medical journal on the subject.

Movements for a Speedy Peace Afoot in Germany

Several Million Marks Said to Have Been Already Collected for Invasion of England—Signatures Obtained to Petition the Kaiser to Stop the War.

(Special Dispatch)

BERLIN, May 15.

Two movements, apparently diverse in character but in reality correlated, recently sprang into existence in Germany. These movements seem to have the same aim in view—namely, to bring about a speedy close of the war. Both parties are working silently; no documents referring to their projects are allowed out of the hands of their trusted agents; everybody is approached personally, so that no information may leak out either through treachery or by an incautious act. No official name is attached to either of the movements.

The first movement refers to the collection of funds, already said to have reached several million marks, to be presented as a special reward to the army which has been assembled and is now ready to invade Great Britain. This event is to take place when the British fleet has been substantially reduced by means of submarine attacks and losses which the forcing of the Dardanelles—an impossibility in the opinion of the German authorities—must entail.

The invasion plan is reported to have been worked out in such detail that German railway officials have been appointed to take charge of the railway stations in the particular district where a landing is contemplated, and every one of these new station masters knows exactly where to go. The invasion scheme is a strong favorite with a large percentage of the German public, who have still not a shadow of doubt about the empire's final victory.

The contributions to the fund vary from the groschen—about one and a half cents—which the school children bring to the schoolmaster, up to the more substantial amounts collected by women by organised house to house canvassing. Children, schoolmasters and women, of course, play a prominent part in the many war propaganda which still are very much to the front in all grades of society in Germany.

The other movement is patronised by the more serious part of the German nation. The promoters' endeavor is concentrated upon obtaining signatures to a petition which it is intended to present to the Kaiser, having for its object the stopping of the war at the earliest possible moment.

Admiration of the glorious victories achieved by the army is expressed in no measured phrasing, and while the signatories have not the slightest doubt of Germany's ability to crush the countries' enemies, they nevertheless venture to suggest to the Kaiser's advisers that peace on reasonable terms would be exceedingly welcome to them.

In well-informed circles it is said that the Kaiser is behind this stop-the-war movement; indeed, that he has even expressed guarded approval of the scheme. In any case, however, it will be interesting to watch developments in connection with this matter.

War Likely to Knock the Corners Off Edges of Cubist, Says Artist

(Special Dispatch)

LONDON, May 15.

It may be no news to say that no profession has been hit so badly by the war as the artists. In London now you can have your portrait painted at about half the cost of normal times. And the main question in the studios is what effect the war is likely to have on art. Will artists quietly go on painting the same old peaceful subjects—the little streams running through meadows, the sun setting over the sea, the child playing with his toys—or will they be so affected by the horror and heroism of the war that they will find it necessary to paint stirring battle pictures, or, at any rate, pictures that hint in some way at the new world that has appeared since last July? Writers and publishers of books seem to be pretty well unanimous in thinking that the war will produce a new type of novel. Will there be a new type of picture as well?

In the opinion of Mr. Alfred Praga, the well known artist, who has just finished a portrait of Father Bernard Vaughan, the war will kill extreme modern movements, such as the cubist and futurist movements, and will tend to revive the subject picture of healthy sentiment. Art will become more sane, and there will be an end of affectation and impatience. The matter of pictures will be simpler and more sentimental, and probably more religious. The manner will be more academic, but leavened with a touch of impressionism.

"We shall hear no more," said Mr. Praga, "of futurism and cubism and other artistic eccentricity. There was never anything really English in these movements. They were all of foreign origin, and several of the greatest absurdities came from Germany. At one time it looked as if they might possibly succeed in taking the English art world by storm, but the war has saved the situation and effectually knocked the corners off the edges of the cubist. There is, however, something good in every new development, and the extreme art movements of the last few years will not die without having some legacy behind them. Moderately impressionistic treatment is likely to become more general.

"It is inconceivable to think that battle pictures will be a feature in the near future. In a quarter of a century or so, when it is possible to see the war in the right perspective and the tragedy of it is sufficiently removed, there may be a good many battle pictures, but not before. Now, when so many are mourning for the dead, it would be cruel for artists to paint realistic pictures of fighting. In 1918, The Char the Scottish Rifles at Neuve Chapelle will very likely be on the line at the Royal Academy, but who would want to see it there before? There is usually a battle picture, or maybe more in the Academy every year; but it is always a picture of the ago, usually of the Napoleonic wars. Such pictures can hurt no one now.

"There will be little tendency to study abroad, especially in Germany. In the past a good many students have gone to the schools at Munich as well as at Paris. For a few years the tendency will be to study at home more, and a more national art may result. The foreign movements that have lately threatened British art have done a good deal of harm. The attention attracted by the extremists made students restless and impatient. They saw how easily notoriety was achieved by the grotesque and eccentric, and they found it difficult to work in obscurity on the old sound lines. They began to think that the purpose of art was to attract immediate and amazed attention. But the war has changed all that. We have returned to sanity and sincerity. The madness of the extremists has ceased to attract and the sound and sincere workers are coming into their own again. We shall have more pictures of healthy sentiment and with a religious note—pictures that for some years have been condemned as old fashioned. The war will purge the sensation out of the artist, as well as out of the novelist."

TWO PENTECOSTS TWO SALVATIONS

Holy Spirit to be Poured Out Upon All Flesh.

The Divine Plan Provides Two Distinct Salvations — The First Pentecost—Its Blessings For the Church Exclusively — Its Work Nearly Completed—The Second Pentecost—Its Blessings For the World In General — Coming Through the Messianic Kingdom —Operating Through Israel Restored—A Thousand Years of Blessing.

[The matter under this heading is supplied by the Pastor Russell Lecture Bureau, who conduct the Brooklyn Tabernacle (unsectarian) Bible Studies, and who have arranged for its publication.]

San Antonio Texas, May 23.—Pastor Russell spoke here to-day on the text: "And it shall come to pass afterward that I will pour out My Spirit upon all flesh." (Joel 2:28.) He said in part:

The Prophet Joel mentions two distinct outpourings of the Holy Spirit. One of these upon the servants and the handmaidens, found its fulfilment at Pentecost; and during the more than eighteen centuries since then, God's spiritual blessing has been with all the footstep followers of Jesus—all of God's servants and handmaidens. If we see this feature of the prophecy fulfilled it becomes a guarantee to believers that the remainder of the same prophecy will have fulfilment in God's due time. The remainder of the prophecy declares that afterward—after those days during which the Holy Spirit has been outpoured upon the Church, upon the "servants and handmaidens" — will come God's time for pouring out His Spirit upon all the world of mankind.

St. Peter's explanation of the Pentecostal blessing. "This is that which was spoken by the Prophet Joel," should not be taken to mean that what was witnessed in the upper room on the Day of Pentecost, nearly nineteen centuries ago, completely fulfilled the Prophet Joel's predictions. (Acts 2:14-40.) No Bible student would dispute that the fulfilment of the prophecy began at Pentecost, with the early Church, and has been in process of fulfilment during all the centuries since. It is as true to-day as it was then, that the blessing of the Holy Spirit is granted to all of God's servants and handmaidens; and the remainder of the prophecy will be fulfilled with equal accuracy in due time.

After these days of the Gospel Age—after these days of the outpouring of the Spirit upon God's servants and handmaidens—will come the glorious epoch of Messiah's Kingdom, in and through which God will pour out upon the world of mankind a great blessing of enlightenment and uplift from the sin and death conditions which now prevail. It will be to the accomplishment of this end that Satan shall be bound for a thousand years; and the darkness which now covers the earth, and the gross darkness which now blinds the heathen, will be chased away by the glorious "Sun of Righteousness with healing in His Beams."—Malachi 4:2.

Thus will be inaugurated the glorious Day of Messiah, a thousand years long. Thus the knowledge of the glory of the Lord will fill the whole earth. Thus every tongue shall be brought to confess and every knee to bow to Messiah as the great Representative of Jehovah and His righteousness. — Isaiah 11:9; Philippians, 2:9-11.

Abraham of old typified Jehovah and Isaac typified Messiah, born not after the flesh, but after the Spirit—by a special Divine interposition—according to the promise of God. Of this antitypical Isaac class Jesus is the Head, the Forerunner of the Church, as well as the world's Redeemer. The Body of Messiah is composed of a saintly few, according to the Scriptures, gathered primarily from the Jews, but being completed by additions from every people, nation, kindred and tongue. These all, St. Paul tells us, will be character-copies of God's dear Son, our Redeemer and Head. The Apostle declares in divine prevision, Romans 8:29, 30; Galatians 4:28; 3:8, 16, 29.

This Church class, or Messiah class, is variously referred to in the prophecies, as well as in the New Testament, as the brethren of Jesus and as sons of God. Of them the Prophet David writes, "I have said, Ye are gods; and all of you are children of the Most High; but ye shall all die like men, and fall like One of the princes." (Psalm 82:6, 7.) These all die like men in the estimation of the world; for, as St. John declares, the world knoweth them not, even as it knew not their Master. (1 John 3:1.) As the world did not recognise that the life of Jesus was laid down sacrificially, neither is it aware that the followers of Jesus, a little handful, down through the Gospel Age, have likewise through His merit presented their bodies a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable to God.—Romans 12:1.

This Spiritual Seed of Abraham, all saintly, will constitute the Church of the First-borns, the antitype of the Priests and the Levites of the Jewish Dispensation. With the completion of this Church, gathered out of all nations, sects and denominations, Divine favor will again return to the natural seed of Abraham. As the Jew was granted the first opportunity or privilege of becoming the Spiritual Seed of Abraham, he will likewise have the first opportunity to participate in the blessing which will then come to the whole world of mankind. "To the Jew first" is the Divine order in respect to both of these blessings.

To this agree the words of the Apostle Paul. After telling of the Divine election of the Church, the saintly few of both Jews and Gentiles, the Apostle adds, "I would not, brethren, that ye should be ignorant concerning this mystery, lest ye should be wise in your own conceits, that blindness in part (only, not perpetual) is happened in Israel, until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in." When the full, elect Spiritual Seed shall have been gathered, shall have been completed from amongst the Gentiles, then all Natural Israel shall be saved from their blindness and their outcast condition.—Romans 11:25-29.

St. Paul points out that as Israel's stumbling was directly foretold through the Prophet (Psalm 69:22), so also through the Prophets God has foretold their blessing later on—that they shall be the first to be blessed under the glorious Spiritual Messiah of many members. Thus it is written, "There shall come out of Zion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob." Here Zion is picturred as a mother whose offspring is The Messiah. Looking again at the type, we see that Abraham represented Jehovah, and that his wife Sarah represented the great Covenant through which Messiah was to be developed. "In thy Seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed"; "If ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's Seed, and heirs according to the Promise."—Romans 11:25-11; Genesis 22:17, 18; Galatians 3:8, 16, 29.

It has required more than eighteen centuries to give birth to this great Deliverer. Jesus was the Head; and the Church, developed during this Gospel Age, will be the Body. Jesus was "the First-born from the dead"; and the Church, His members, will be His brethren, sufferers in His rule on the Heavenly plane; for is He not declared to be "the First-born among many brethren"? (Romans 8:29.) The First or Chief Resurrection will bring all these sons of God to the plane of glory, honor and immortality—both from the dead. Then the great Deliverer will be fully born, and ready to begin His great work of blessing all the nations—Israel being the first of these.

St. Peter declares that it was the glorified Jesus who received the Holy Spirit of the Father and poured it out upon the Church at Pentecost. (Acts 2:22.) That blessing came to the Church because of their coming into harmony with the Father's arrangement through the Son. The receiving of the Spirit there marked the footsteps as Jesus of Nazareth, unrecognized, so far as the Holy Spirit is concerned.

Indeed, after Pentecost the Apostle John went still further and declared, "The whole world lieth in the Wicked One." The only action of the Holy Spirit has been, as in the case of Felix, to "reprove the world of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment." (John 16:7-11; Acts 24:25.) Our text declares, however, that a time is coming when the world will receive a share of the great Divine blessing which was fully assured by the death of Christ. But its time of favor will be "after those days"—after this Gospel Age shall have come to an end; after the New Dispensation shall have begun.

Only Jews received the first Pentecostal blessing. For three and one-half years thereafter the Gentiles were excluded, in harmony with a Divine promise made to the Jewish nation. Then came the time for a similar privilege to be extended to the Gentiles.

I rejoice with you to-day, fellow-students of the Word of God, that this great gift of God is still obtainable, that the time has not yet fully come when the door of opportunity to this High Calling must close. Close it will, so soon as the full number of the Elect shall have been completed. Thank God that another door will then open! the door of Restitution to human perfection and earthly life, grand beyond the power of description.

Then God's Holy Spirit—holy power—will through Christ be outpoured upon all flesh — upon all mankind. Messiah will inaugurate the New Dispensation by sealing with Israel the New Covenant in His blood; as through the Apostle Paul the Lord declares, "This is My Covenant with them when I shall take away their sins. As concerning the Gospel, they are enemies for your sakes; but as touching the Election, they are beloved for the fathers' sakes."—Romans 11:27, 28.

This outpouring of the Holy Spirit is not merely for Israel, nor is God's blessing merely upon Abraham's natural seed outside of the Church class. It will include all of every nation desirous of coming into accord with God after they shall have come to a clear knowledge of the Truth. All nations shall be privileged to enter into and enjoy Israel's great Covenant, by becoming children of Abraham through faith. After all rejecters of God's grace shall have been destroyed in the Second Death, the world of mankind will constitute the promised "seed of Abraham," whose number shall be as the sands of the seashore, even as the spirit-begotten ones of this Gospel Age are likened to the stars of heaven. Thenceforth every creature in Heaven and on earth will acclaim honor to Him that sitteth upon the Throne and unto the Lord forever.

His Messianic Kingdom—to be theirs forever. It is in this sense that He will be the Everlasting Father— the Father who gives everlasting life, which Adam failed to give. Messiah Himself will have no need for the earthly life which He laid down; for as a reward for His obedience the Heavenly Father has given Him the higher life—the Divine nature.

From of old Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, David, etc., were called the fathers, not only because of their relationship to the Jewish nation, but particularly because Messiah was to come as their offspring—"the Seed of Abraham," "of the stem of Jesse," "the Offspring of David"; and so Jesus was born of this very lineage. But His exaltation by the Father to the spirit plane, and the fact that His earthly rights laid down in sacrifice are to go to Adam and all of his race who will accept the same on the Divine terms, puts Jesus in the position of Father, Life-giver, to the world, including Abraham, David, etc. They must all obtain everlasting life through Him, and hence will be His children.

Thus the Prophet David wrote of the future, "Instead of Thy fathers shall be Thy children, whom Thou mayest make princes in all the earth." (Psalm 45:16.) Those fathers who are to be princes are already declared to have been pleasing to God. They attested their loyalty by a faith which worked in harmony with His will through the limitations of a fallen nature.

On account of this the fathers are already declared to be worthy of a "better resurrection" than the remainder of mankind—but not so glorious a resurrection as will be granted to the Church. Their resurrection will be to the perfection of human nature—mental, moral and physical. Thus they will stand before mankind as samples of human perfection, to which standard, all the race may attain by obedience, if they will, during the thousand years of Messiah's Reign.

Those Ancient Worthies (Hebrews 11) will not only be illustrations of human perfection, but princes, or rulers, in all the earth. They will be the outward and visible representatives of the invisible Messiah—the agents through whom the Word of the Lord will go forth. As it is written, "Out of Zion (the Spiritual Kingdom) shall go forth the Law, and the Word of the Lord from Jerusalem"—the earthly manifestation of the Kingdom amongst men. —Isaiah 2:3.

As a result of the second outpouring of the Holy Spirit, the Prophet Joel declares, according to our Common Version, "Your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, your old men shall dream dreams, your young men shall see visions." A preferred translation of this heretofore obscure passage reads, "Your young men (in that New Dispensation) will see with clear vision what your Ancients dreamed of and related in parables." This vision of glory will be the Reign of Righteousness and the Pentecostal blessing accompanying it, upon the willing and obedient, every one of whom shall be brought to clear knowledge and full opportunity for salvation.

The order of the blessing is stated. It will come upon all flesh after those days, but upon the servants and handmaidens in those days. The days mentioned evidently refer to this Gospel Age—from Pentecost to the Second Coming of Christ. During this period, now nearly nineteen centuries, God's Holy Spirit has been granted to His faithful ones, and to these alone. Only the fully consecrated have been accepted of the Lord as living sacrifices; and only such have been begotten of the Holy Spirit, that they may be New Creatures in Christ. (2 Corinthians 5:17.) During all this time the world has been unrecognized, so far as the Holy Spirit is concerned.

The later Pentecostal blessing upon the world will have points of similarity as well as points of difference. The blessing will come through the great Messiah as a result of the satisfaction which He will make for the sins of the whole world by applying to the race the merits of His sacrifice. Thus He will seal the New Law Covenant with Israel, and then with the world through Israel. (Jeremiah 31:31-34.) The great Messiah of glory will be the Mediator of that New Covenant; and the foundation of that New Covenant will be the "better sacrifices" offered by this Mediator, as the antitypical High Priest. —Hebrews 9:19-23.

The Pentecostal blessing then to come upon the world will not be upon the terms of their sacrificing their earthly rights to attain Heavenly blessing and spiritual sonship. On the contrary, its requirements will be a consecration to obedience of the Divine Law; and its reward will be earthly Restitution to the perfection of human nature and to the enjoyment of all the blessings originally given to Adam, but forfeited by his disobedience. "They shall build houses and inhabit them. They shall plant vineyards and eat the fruit thereof," and "long enjoy the work of their hands." (Isaiah 65:21, 22.) This is the Divine promise, applicable to mankind, but not to the Spiritual Seed of Abraham, the Church, the Kingdom class, who must all be changed; for "flesh and blood cannot inherit the Kingdom of God."—1 Corinthians 15:50.

As Jacob was a son of Abraham, not directly, but through Isaac, so also those blessed under Messiah's Reign will be children of God, not directly, but through Messiah. Thus it is written of Messiah, "He shall be called Wonderful, Counselor, the Mighty One, the Prince of Peace, the Everlasting Father — the Father, or Life-giver, to the restored world of mankind. (Isaiah 9:6, 7.) The life which He laid down in sacrifice—the earthly life—is that which He will give to all the willing

"TRAILING BOMBS" DESTROY ZEPPELIN

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., May 20. — According to despatches received here the success of the attack of British aeroplanes on the Zeppelin the destruction of which was described in Monday's war despatches is attributed to a simple contrivance known as the "trailing bomb." It was invented by Mr. Joseph A. Steinmetz of this city, and is being extensively used by the Allies, particularly Great Britain, in repelling attacks from the air.

The trailing bomb is suspended beneath the aeroplane and has hooks pointing upward which will catch on an obstruction, and the pressure caused by the pull on the tow line sets off the explosive. Each bomb is attached to a mile of wire wound on a spool. A measuring device tells how far the bomb has fallen, and its descent can be checked by the pressure of a finger. Scientists declare the device is the simplest yet the most terrible instrument of death ever conceived by man.

CREMATE THE DEAD

Thousands of Bodies of German Soldiers Burned in Blast Furnaces

A Catholic cleric writing from the trenches in North France mentioned the following incident regarding the German dead and the manner of their disposal: "In the towns of Lille and Namur in north France there are large blast furnaces for the smelting of iron ore, which is found in large quantities in this part of the country. The furnaces have long since ceased the work of smelting, and the dump cars used for bringing the iron ore have been emptied of their loads and put to a far different purpose. Every day two and some times three long trains of these dump cars are brought in loaded to the brims with German corpses and piled high at the mouth of the furnaces. A large gang of men are employed day and night placing the bodies four at one time in a sling and dropping them into the huge fires, where they are quickly incinerated.

"Thousands have been disposed of in this way and the work still goes on."

Heroic Russian Leader

In control of the Russian legions is the stern, silent Grand Duke Nicholas, whose skill as a military tactician has earned for him the title of the "Russian Kitchener." Little is heard about the personal doings of this brilliant soldier of the Czar, for he desires no self-advertisement, neither does he seek it, and his life amidst his troops is one of Spartan simplicity. His headquarters at the front consist more often than not of a few carriages in a railway train, or a modest bell tent as sparsely furnished as those occupied by his men, and visitors are expected to dine on the plainest fare and to drink water only, for the Grand Duke is a strict teetotaler.

The relations between the Russian leader and his men are of the most friendly character, as is customary in the Czar's army; in speaking to an officer, a Russian soldier says, "Brat" (brother) or "Batooska" (little father), and the officer calls his men "my children." The manner in which the Grand Duke personally mixes with his men is the despair of his aides-de-camp, for the popular leader is several inches over six feet in height and makes an excellent mark for German snipers when moving about the firing line, as is his custom.

Well Stocked Aeroplane

More than 200 pounds of tinned meat and preserved fruits were carried in the cradle of a German aeroplane which was brought down by the Russians near Przemysl.

No Frills on It.

"Was the testimony in that case cumulative?"

"No, sir; it was just the plain stuff."

The Marne Battlefield

An American doctor gives an interesting description of a visit to the battlefield of the Marne. "The ground," he writes, "showed no signs of the terrific struggles which had taken place. The products of the earth apparently needed no better nourishment than human blood, for nothing could look more fertile than the fields we passed by. The villages that we encountered had a much less peaceful look. On each side were houses showing evidences of the terrible fire to which they had been exposed. In many of them were new bits of roofing mingled with old shingles that had done duty for many a generation. Holes in the walls produced by shrapnel had been hastily patched without, however, obliterating the scars.

"The church is evidently always a second thought, for while the houses had practically all been put back into a state of usefulness, the church remained as an everlasting monument to humanity's backsliding. The steeple was represented by a few bits of stone. The walls of the church looked like some ancient ruin. The entrance to the interior was blocked by a huge mass of debris and a large bronze bell. The disfigured picture of some sacred scene was all that was left of the altar. The nave was likewise a litter of stones and dirt. In the lust of war nothing is holy, except cannon and other engines of destruction.

"Behind the church, a short distance from the village, is a rough monument that has hastily been put up to those who fell in the battle of the Ourcq in the early days of September, where two regiments of tirailleurs had been completely annihilated. This monument and the few roughly constructed crosses were all that remained to remind the world that the brave tirailleurs had once lived. Further on the ground was strewn with crosses. What had been a battlefield now looked like a boundless cemetery, in which the hopes of Germany had been buried as well as the hopes of many a sorrowing mother of France.

"Occasionally a more pretentious cross was to be seen, surrounded, perhaps, by a wreath of flowers, with some inscription—Hort pour la patrie. Close by a cemetery was visible which had been the scene of a terrific action, now forming the last resting place of many a tirailleur. A few Germans likewise had been buried there. The name of Schmidt seemed a bit incongruous, but surely these men were nearer in death than they had ever been in life.

"We retraced our steps, stopping now and then to see some serpentine line of trenches. Modern warfare has converted man into a burrowing animal. On every side were graves, each bearing testimony to the awful effects of high power projectiles on men engaged in trench warfare.

Survivorship Become Issue Under Two Lusitania Wills

BALTIMORE, Md., May 2[illegible].—Interpreting the wills of Mr. Henry B. Sonneborn and Mr. Leo M. Schwabacher, victims of the Lusitania disaster, which were probated together Monday in the Orphans' Court, the court may have to determine which of the two died first. Each makes a bequest to the other. Each is named executor in the will of the other. Whether the occasion will arise to determine which of the two died first is uncertain.

By the will of Mr. Schwabacher, Mr. Sonneborn was to receive all of the former's personal effects, $5,000 with which to erect a mausoleum for the burial of both their bodies and a bequest of $50,000, provided he survived the testator. Mr. Conneborn, in his will, provided that all his personalty should go to his friend, Mr. Schwabacher, if the latter survived him.

The wil of Mr. Sonneborn was drawn up only a short time before he took passage. It was executed March 27 last. The Schwabacher will was made March 24, 1914, but a codicil changing one or two minor provisions was executed March 24 last.

WESTERN JUDGE IS ACCUSED

FORT FRANCES, May 20. — A Royal Commission appointed to investigate charges made against Judge C. R. Fitch, of this district, commenced hearing of the charges at the court house before Hon. Mr. Justice Hodgins, of the Supreme Court, the commissioner appointed by the Minister of Justice. Judge Fitch is defended by Hon. Wallace Nesbitt, K.C., of Toronto, and R. A. Bonnar, of Winnipeg, assisted by G. A. Murray, of Fort Frances. The Crown is represented by G. E. Henderson, K. C., of Ottawa, who is assisted by A. D. George, of Fort Frances.

Charges, which were preferred by Col. D. C. McKenzie, Mayor of Fort Frances, and president of the Board of Trade, involve grave irregularities, attempted extortion, improper influence in elections, engaging in the pulp and timber business and demanding large sums of money in excess of the market price, staying executions issued against himself, granting an injunction in connection with a ferry license in which it is alleged he was interested, defrauding the Canadian Customs, advising litigants, promoting litigation and prejudging cases.

Evidence was given by Dr. D. C. McKenzie and H. L. Cruso, of Fort Frances and Benjamin Levinson of Winnipeg.

The defence alleges that the charges are the result of a conspiracy brought about by D. C. McKenzie and others in order to secure the removal of the judge, who is antagonistic to them.

It was claimed in the evidence given for the prosecution that Judge Fitch had made a proposition whereby he was to get $10,000 from Levinson and Finglestein of Winnipeg, whereby they were to be fined and not imprisoned on a charge of conspiracy to defraud the Government of Ontario in the celebrated wolf bounty cases some five years ago.

In his evidence Levinson claimed that Judge Fitch recently promised his assistance provided action would be entered against McKenzie for conspiracy.

The evidence of Cruso corroborated that of McKenzie in regard to the alleged proposition that these two men should pay $5,000 each.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

SMART CIRCULAR YOKE MODEL

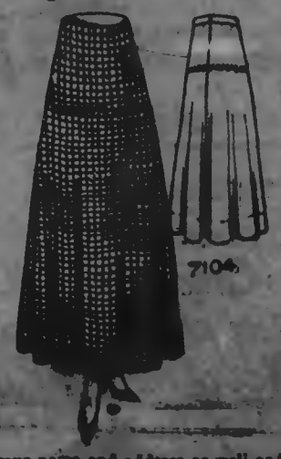
By Anabel Worthington.

Skirts that are circular and made with yokes at the same time leave nothing to be desired from the standpoint of fashion. They are used for separate skirts and for suit skirts as well. The model shown here is particularly graceful, with lower edge a little less than three yards round, which is not extreme as skirts go nowadays. The wider the material used the better in this instance, so that piecing seams will not run up to the yoke, but will fall in the folds at the back. The yoke is circular also, without any seam, merely closing at centre-back with the skirt.



The high waistline is still very much favored, but this skirt may be finished with a band at the top if preferred. Either wool or wash material may be used. For [illegible] size 2½ yards of 50-inch material [illegible] required. The pattern, No. 7104, is cut in sizes from 22 to 30 inches waist measure.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25c.

Dandruffy Heads Become Hairless

If you want plenty of thick, beautiful, glossy, silky hair, do by all means get rid of dandruff, for it will starve your hair and ruin it if you don't.

It doesn't do much good to try to brush or wash it out. The only sure way to get rid of dandruff is to dissolve it, then you destroy it entirely. To do this, get about four ounces of ordinary liquid arvon; apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the finger tips.

By morning, most if not all, of your dandruff will be gone, and three or four more applications will completely dissolve and entirely destroy every single sign and trace of it.

You will find, too, that all itching and digging of the scalp will stop, and your hair will look and feel a hundred times better. You can get liquid arvon at any drug store. It is inexpensive and four ounces is all you will need, no matter how much dandruff you have. This simple remedy never fails.

EXCITING BATTLE WITH BURGLARS

NIAGARA FALLS, N.Y., May 20.—In a half-hour battle between New York Central Railroad detectives and car burglars in the north end freight yards early yesterday, Anthony Jansky, an alleged car burglar, was shot in the left leg and through the right hand. More than 100 shots were fired. Later Martin Murphy, Thos. Kerr and Thomas Shanahan were arrested on suspicion of being members of the gang that was found in freight cars by the detectives.

Poland Is Literally a Desert With Its Homeless People In Starvation

Poland's population is suffering as no Europeans have suffered since the Thirty Years' War," writes Robert Crozier Long, correspondent of the Associated Press.

"Every second man is a refugee. Warsaw has 60,000 refugees, a third of them Jews. In Radom I found 15,000 refugees; in Kicle, 20,000.

"I visited all the chief towns and many villages, or ruins of villages, in 40,000 square miles of country living between the Austro-German lines and the Vistula in a semi-circle from the Bsura to the Nida. I visited also the basin of the Dunajec and Wisloka, the theatre of the sanguinary May battle. The country is a desert, the home of nomads. I got my first glimpse of it on the Bsura, west of Warsaw, where, during a four months' artillery duel, every habitation has disappeared.

Burnt Out Poland.

"I reached this battle front first after dusk, and from an observation tower saw against the red background, formed half by the sun's afterglow and half by a blazing forest, the remnants of a dozen villages. These remnants were gaunt, erect pillars. This is typical of burnt-out Poland. A street of frame cottages, often straw thatched, catches fire from the first shell, and only ugly rows of black chimneys are left. At night these long, double rows of chimne ypresent a gaunt effect.

"Destruction is of three kinds. Accidental destruction by shells, destruction in hand-to-hand street fighting when the enemy was burned or smoked out, or intentional destruction to make a clear field for artillery or rifle fire.

"A Warsaw rabbi assured me that [illegible] from the towns of Ivele, Piotrkow and Lowicz, were without clothes. Many refugees still tramp the roads begging despairingly from people themselves beggars. Many thousands are huddled in the tottering fragments of cottages, while 10,000 are shivering in the abandonment trenches and terraced Russian dugouts at Skaryszom.

In Radmor province I found 30 unfed families cowering underground. Some were half naked, as they had spread their soaked clothing to dry on a barbed wire entanglement. They told me of more pretentious underground dwellings improvised in Glownoi, near Lodz. There the shell-torn terrace dugouts had been repaired and enlarged, stocked with tables and untensils, and even equipped with stoves.

"I met many refugees without food or money and mostly ill-clad. Near Ostrowice was a dreary procession of men in thick sheepskin coats without other clothing, women in men's trousers, and children in dresses improvised from shawls.

Nothing To Eat Nor to Sow.

"Such is Poland's present. The future will be even worse. The country, ravaged and irreclaimable begins to resemble the primeval Sarmatian waste. Roads, forests, and even fields have vanished. Many roads are still as Von Hindenburg left them in his November retreat. They are chessboarded with quadrangular cavities neck-deep in rain water. Some still bear the Germans' ironical placard, No bathing here."

"The roads which have been repaired cannot bring food to civilians, for all are crowded by parallel transport columns. The fields were destroyed by transport and artillery trains which, finding the roads too narrow, spread right and left, obliterating farms.

"Winter grain was not sown and there is no seed for grain for spring. Everywhere are labyrinthine tangles of trenches faced by broad masses of barbed wire. These peasants, knowing that the war will return, fear to remove. Arable land is a sandy desert, for trench diggers dug beneath the fertile surface and scattered the subsoil of sand.

"The worst, because it is irremedial, is the forest destruction. Some woods have been hewn wholesale to make causeways through morasses, some to pave roads, some to make a clear field for artillery, some shelter to bits because they afforded shelter for troops, some drenched with petroleum and burned. Up the lower Rawka and in reserve positions 10 miles behind the Germans' loophole all the big trees were used by them as cover for sharpshooters and the Russians shelled down the trees one by one. This forest devas[illegible] of beggary."

Seven Millions Starving.

"Seven million Poles, of whom 2,000,000 are Jews, are in dire need of food," says Herman Laundan, a Jewish philanthropist of London. "The Jews are even poorer than the Gentiles, because of the boycott against the Jews in part of Poland before the beginning of the war, which impoverished thousands who otherwise would have been able to provide for their families.

"Political and religious prejudice against the Jews also renders their condition worse. In parts of Poland evacuated by the Germans, many Jews are living on potato peels and garbage left by the army.

"Communication with Poland and Galicia is so difficult that it is impossible for the world to learn immediately of the awful suffering there."

Thrilling Story of Retreat At Langemarck When Men Dropped, Stifled, One By One

TORONTO, May 20.—The following letter from Sergt. James Annand, 48th Highlanders, gives the most vivid and illuminating account yet received of the operation and effects of the poisonous chlorine used against some of the Canadian regiments at Langemarck. Sergt. Annand is an unusually powerful man of large physique. To this fact it is apparent he owes his life. He is now in hospital.

No. 8 General Hospital,
France, May 2, 1915.

I have put off writing, partly from weakness and partly from a disinclination to even attempt to think about the time that is past. I will try, however, and give an idea of the happenings of a week ago.

Our first move into the Ypres district trenches was on Tuesday night, 21st April, loaded up to the eyebrows as usual before going into the trenches; we moved off at dusk, and about 11 p.m., after a pery trying march of about six miles, we got into our fortifications; they were hardly trenches, being breastworks built up on the level ground owing to the water lying on the surface when they were built.

I had charge of a fort with about eighteen men with me. We got ourselves settled in and spent a quiet night and day never hearing a shot from our friends in front.

On the Thursday night we were shelled quite a bit, but no damage done. After the shelling was over there was some rapid fire from the rifles and we got all prepared for an attack which did not come off.

Shell Fire was Appalling.

On the Friday we were under a terrific shell fire for hours. It was really appalling. All one could do was to sit and listen to the screaming moan of an approaching shell and wonder just where it was going to land.

My fort was rather fortunately situated, a battery of small guns was raking the parapet about ten feet to our right, but although they sometimes varied the aim, they always varied it further right. On our left a battery of big guns was pouring its shells to within ten feet of us, on the left, and by a merciful Providence their aim varied only further left still. This just left us a God-sent little oasis in between the two fires and we just sat and watched the shells plunge into the earth and scatter the fragments to the four winds. They must have wasted tons of ammunition to no purpose at all, as with all that shelling not a person was struck beyond two very minor casualties from flying splinters.

On the Saturday morning very early —about 10.30 or so—the rations arrived, and I tell you we were real glad to get them, as none had come the night before owing to the shell fire. We got these divided out and as we had had a thoroughly exhausting day, put on our night sentries and tried to get a little sleep. I had only had three hours' sleep in 48 up to that time, and was about washed out.

At three a.m., one of my lance-corporals called me; he had heard something suspicious out near the enemy's barbed wire. He could not tell whether they were mending it or cutting it. I strained my eyes and ears, but could make out nothing at all. However, I thought it wiser we should "stand to" in case of danger, so all were raked out of bed and got ready in their places. Nothing happened at all, and at four a.m. the regular order to "stand to" came along the line.

White Steam Turned Yellow.

At about 4.30 we were all beginning to feel that the tension was slackening, when suddenly there came a shout from the sentries. I looked over the parapet and was dumbfounded to see about 4 feet above the ground and just in front of the enemy's trenches a jet of steam about 3 feet long. A row of these extraordinary jets ran right down the lines, and even as we looked the pure white steam became polluted and took on a greeny yellowy tinge. Very soon we felt the choking vapour in our throats, and I realised we would have to fall back but we still pumped shot after shot at the enemy until we saw that the whole of our line were having to retire.

It was then a case of hasty retreat with a bursting heart and lungs that would not work.

The stifling agony of that retreat was terrible—boys stumbling along, just gasping "Oh God, Oh God!" and then sinking down on the field unable to move—all this in a perfect tornado of shrapnel and bullets.

My own feelings were just that if I went down I would suffocate and must stumble on at any cost.

Presently we felt that the breeze was clearer when we turned and faced it, and meeting at the same time with an artillery officer, who directed proceedings, we lined a hedge with blinded eyes and choking throats and there we lay and gasped.

Lay for a Whole Day.

Fortunately our reserves came up, so that we didn't have any defending to do, and there we lay, in danger from shell fire all the time, the whole day.

And still no one came to carry us off.

By this time there were about 30 of us at this particular spot absolutely helpless—complete want of breath and a feeling of a bursting heart if you moved prevented us doing anything at all. By night many of the boys had succumbed.

I managed to drag myself about 100 feet away and attracted the attention of an artilleryman, and when dusk came he brought us a little tea and, like the good angel he was, assisted two others and myself into a dug-out nearby. Here he gave us a blanket to put over us and we were able to sink into a fitful slumber. About 3 a.m. one of the trio woke us up, as we thought we must make some sort of a move before daylight.

Agonies Still Persisted.

The terrible agony was still there whenever one walked, but something had to be done, and after a drink from a pump and a sluice of cold [illegible] and find our way back.

Twenty-five feet at a stretch was all I could do, and then I had to rest, and those twenty-five feet were really more than one young fellow could do, and we just had to drag him along.

We were making for a barn about 400 yards away; and when about 100 yards away from that, one fellow who had joined our trio after we started, and was not so helpless, moved on ahead with the third of our party, leaving young M. and myself together. We rested for a bit and I said, "Come on, let's get the next bit done." He answered, "I'm done, I can't." I tried to persuade him to try, but he just lay still, so I said I would send someone for him.

I managed to get over the last bit of ground, and after getting my wind, told a young artilleryman who was there about this fellow. He set off, only to call across the field that the poor fellow was gone. Even in so short a time!

Couldn't "Do" 1,000 Yards.

After getting water here and a good rest and being directed to where a dressing station was, about 1,000 yards away, we moved off again, but I was unable to stand the pace, and while resting by the roadside another blessed angel in the rough disguise of an A.S.C. man came for me and took me into a ruined house where he was living. He made me tea and a fire and warmed me through, then took off my things and made me a bed and I slept. Later in the day, they began shelling the house. He put me, bed and all, into his dug-out in the garden and kept me there till danger was past. At night he started me on my way to the First Aid station, and with the assistance of two of our own boys who turned up I got to the station and got another night's rest. Next morning I was sent further down the line in the ambulance. I then turned into a "lying" patient (what a blessed relief!) and was carried everywhere on a stretcher.

A night on the train brought me down to the hospital here at Rouen, where we are looked after just to perfection. I have heard so little news of any of our fellows that I really am very anxious to hear from them, but up to the present nothing has come through at all.

Is Laid Up for Some Time.

I'm afraid it will be a week or two before I shall be able to be back with the regiment, not that I am dying to get back to the worries and troubles, but I hate the feeling of being away just when I was most needed.

It does make one awfully proud to read what the papers say of the Canadians, even though one's own part was so hopelessly, so pathetically small, so thoroughly unheroic. However, we did the thing that was to be done at the time, and I suppose a life gasped out in the pains of poisoning is as truly and loyally given as one that goes out with the rush of a bullet.

Of the sisters and doctors here one couldn't say too much. They are splendid, giving every attention and every kindness, and one can only be grateful and yet I sometimes feel that some of the Red Cross boys up near the firing line deserve even greater credit if it is possible. A woman is naturally built to be tender and gentle, but to see how thoughtfully some of those great, rough R.A.M.C. boys help a wounded man, how tenderly they move him, and with what care anything they can possibly do for them is done, it is a poem; and even as I write my throat aches when I think of their splendid work and their splendid unselfishness.

I must close. I have already written longer than I should. I have been ting in here, but am getting on well, and am hoping that I may be able to get a run over to England to recuperate for a while before going back.

A Message To Thin, Weak, Scrawny Folks

An Easy Way to Gain 10 to 30 lbs. of Solid, Healthy, Permanent Flesh.

Thin, nervous, undeveloped men and women everywhere are heard to say, "I can't understand why I do not get fat. I eat plenty of good, nourishing food." The reason is just this: You cannot get fat, no matter how much you eat, unless your digestive organs assimilate the fat making elements of your food instead of passing them out through the body as waste.

What is needed is a means of gently urging the assimilative functions of the stomach and intestines to absorb the oils and fats and hand them over to the blood, where they may reach the starved, shrunken, run-down tissues and build them up. The thin person's body is like a dry sponge—eager and hungry for the fatty materials of which it is being deprived by the failure of the alimentary canal to take them from the food. The best way to overcome this sinful waste of flesh building elements and to stop the leakage of fats is to use Sargol, the recently discovered regenerative force that is recommended so highly by physicians here and abroad. Take a little Sargol tablet with every meal and notice how quickly your cheeks fill out and rolls of firm, healthy flesh are deposited over your body, covering each bony angle and projecting point.

All good druggists have Sargol, or can get it from their wholesaler, and will refund your money if you are not satisfied with the gain in weight it produces as stated on the guarantee in each package. It is inexpensive, easy to take and highly efficient.

Caution:—While Sargol has produced remarkable results in overcoming nervous dyspepsia and general stomach troubles, it should not be taken unless you are willing to gain ten pounds or more, for it is a wonderful flesh builder.

The Red Cross Fund in Edinburgh amounts toe £23,635 17s 10d.

Edinburgh breweries are stated to have £5,000,000 of capital sunk in them.

The late Mr. James Dick, wholesale grocer, Leith, left personal estate valued at £8,030.

As a result of the recent Licensing Court sitting in Edinburgh there was a total reduction of seven licenses. In Leith there is one license less.

THE ITALIAN FORCES INVADE AUSTRIAN PROVINCE OF GORITZ

Austrian Towns of Cervignano, Cormons and Terzo Are Taken by the Invaders Who Crossed Over the Judris River Caporetto, Also Occupied---Russians Are on the Offensive Along a 400 Mile Front.

FIERCE FIGHTING AROUND YPRES TO-DAY

Special Cable to The Examiner:

ROME, May 25.—The war office this afternoon confirmed the reports received here earlier in the day of an Italian invasion of Goritz province, and capture of the Austrian towns of Cerrgnana and Cormons and Terzo. The invading forces comprised a body of troops, supporting Italian cavalry, who earlier in the day were reported to have driven in the Austrian outposts. The Italians crossed the Judrio river, forming the boundary, without serious opposition, and then advanced into the valley between the Judrio and the Isonzo. Cormons, an Austrian frontier town of 4,000 inhabitants, was first occupied. It lies directly over the Austrian frontier. The first despatches to the war office did not indicate whether the enemy resisted the advance of the Italian troops at this point.

The town of Caporetto, 30 miles north of Goritz, was occupied by the Italian left wing, indicating that the invading force was of large size, and greater than earlier reports indicated. The Austrians everywhere are withdrawing several miles inside the frontier, destroying bridges and levelling all buildings that might be used by the invaders for military purposes.

ROME, May 25.—The Italian forces have crossed the Austrian frontier and are threatening the city of Giritz, the capital of the province of the same name.

ROME, May 25.—The official announcement was made by the war office to-day that Italian forces had penetrated Austria, occupying Caporetto, the heights between Judrio and Isonzo, and the towns of Cormons, Cervignagne and Terzo.

BERLIN, May 25.—via Amsterdam.—Chancellor Von Bethmann Hollweg flatly refused to receive the Italian ambassador, Signor Bollati, before Bollati left Berlin yesterday. It was learned to-day that Foreign Secretary Von Jagow called at the Italian embassy and advised Bollati not to call at the Chancellor's office, thereby avoiding any unpleasantness. Bollati it was reported expressed displeasure at what he called a violation of the rules of international courtesy. No statement was made by the government officials. It is known, however, that the indignation in official circles over what the Germans call "the Italian treachey," is intense.

FIERCE FIGHTING AT YPRES

PARIS, May 25.—The Germans are now attacking fiercely along the road east of Ypres. They have concentrated a large body of troops near Langemarck and have launched several violent drives against the British positions. The battle has continued for 24 hours with the result still in doubt. The British thus far have repulsed all the German attacks in the last 12 hours. In addition they have regained part of the trenches they lost when the enemy hurled strong forces against their lines yesterday. Thirty-five miles to the south the French and Germans are locked in an equally desperate struggle. The Germans are on the offensive in this region also, but the French artillery has worked havoc in the German lines. The enemy's losses in the fighting around Ablain have been particularly heavy.

NEUTRALITY PROCLAMATION.

WASHINGTON, May 25.—The state department to-day issued President Wilson's proclamation of neutrality between Austria-Hungary and Italy. The proclamation is along the usual conventional lines.

TURKS MUTINOUS

LONDON, May 25.—Mutinous Young Turks and their German officers fought a bloody engagement near the Asiatic forts guarding the Dardanelles, according to the Sofiia despatches to-day. The Germans called other Turkish troops to their assistance, and quelled the mutiny, Sofiia reported. Many of the rebels were killed, and others removed to Constantinople.

RUSSIANS ON THE OFFENSIVE

PETROGRAD, May 25.—Along the 400 mile battle front stretching from southeastern Poland to southeast Galicia, the Russians are now on the offensive, and are delivering crushing blows against the Austro-German lines, according to the official statement given out here to-day. The Germans are attacking in the Shavli region and in the Russian provinces of Kovno, southeast of Stryj. The Austro-Germans are battling stubbornly in the path of the advancing Russians, according to the war office, but the Slav forces continue to move forward, capturing new heights and hundreds of prisoners. The Germans must soon evacuate their positions on the east bank of the San, above Jaroslau, it was stated at the war office to-day. A Russian force that crossed the San and occupied Nisko and Rudnik is moving southward along the railway and theratening to cut the Germans off from the main body of General Mackensen's left wing. In southeastern Poland, the Germans are being steadily rolled back along the line extending from Kielce to Staszof.

HARWICH, Eng., May 25.—A German marine lieutenant, attached to the aviation corps, and his mechanician, were rescued from their disabled Taube in the North Sea and landed here to-day by a British destroyer. Engine trouble caused the Taube to descend to the water. The aircraft later sank.

THE GERMAN REPLY

AMSTERDAM, May 25.—The delivery of the German reply to the American note regarding the Lusitania, will be delayed one week. The German government officials are now occupied with the Italian situation and they have not found time to complete the drafting of the reply.

DEAD CHUMS ALL AROUND

Pte. Barney Quinn's Description of the Fighting at Langemarck — How Local Boys Were Killed

A PARAPET OF DEAD

The following is a letter received this morning by a local young lady from Private Theodore (Barney) Quinn, of Peterborough, who is with the 1st Canadian Contingent, at present at the firing line in France:

May 5, 1915.

Hello Dot:

Here I am O.K. after having been in the thick of what you have read all about in the papers by this time. Am writing this in a barn, some distance from the firing line. Just got back last night from the trenches for a rest and, believe me, we need it. The fellows are singing some of those heart-touching songs, and it sure makes me sad and lonesome when I think of all my chums lying on the battlefield, maybe not buried yet. Have not one of my old chums left. "Scoop" Taylor and Ward Billy Gibson, George Minorgan, and Boswell, were all afloat around me. When I look back two weeks ago to-night, when we were called out to drive back the Germans, it was a merry and happy bunch that marched to meet them. Frenchmen were coming hemmin drawn, suffocated with the fumes of the gas. But ahead we went confident that we would stop the two Germany army corps that were coming through the French lines.

CHARGED A TRENCH.

Our Highlanders got there first, and believe me, they did give it to them proper. We advanced across the fields with bullets flying all around, but only two went down. Then at dawn our company was ordered to take a trench the Germans had just dug. We were eager to get at them, but before he had gone far—(censored)—had gone down. Still not a man turned back—(censored)—of about 100 yards or so from the German trenches we got the order to retire. Scoop and I dropped down behind a couple of dead Highlanders. It was too light now to retire so we got our trenching tools out, and still hiding behind the dead men, dug a hole for ourselves. We then started to snipe the Germans, and believe me, we were mad. No matter where you looked there were dead and dying. No one need tell me that there was a coward in our company. It was something awful. I can remember every little thing. There were about three machine guns and a thousand rifles playing on us, and how those that got out did, is a mystery to me. Had my hat knocked off by a bullet first thing. Then Boswell went down on my right, and a little later George and Billy on my left dropped out without a word. A little farther and Scoop and I were the only ones left in our section. We had dug ourselves in, as I said before. We were firing over the dead Jocks in front, and I guess we did some damage, because all of a sudden a sniper ran into the woods on our right front.

DEATH OF PTE. TAYLOR.

Poor Scoop said: "There goes a sniper—dig deeper, quick." Well, Dot, in a minute a bullet ripped down the middle of his hat and knocked the wire out and cut a dreadful gash in his head. He never said a word. I was so mad and nearly crying that I forget all about the sniper and tried to fix him up, but 'twas of no use, so had to put him up on my right. Gee, but I felt funny for a minute with a parapet of dead all around me, and my pack was just riddled with bullets. I kept by head down for a while and

AN INTERESTING LETTER FROM FRONT BY CAPT. ACKERMAN

Second Battalion is Nearly Up to Strength Again — Were Reviewed by Gen. Alderson

SOME BRAVE DEEDS

The following interesting letter has been received from Captain C. H. Ackerman, of No. 1 Company, Second Battalion, Canadian Expeditionary Force. Since leaving Peterborough the writer has been promoted from Lieutenant to Captain. The letter reads as follows:

Dear Father,—Just received your letter to-night, mailed April 16th. It was rather late in coming, and I expect I shall get some more mail from Canada soon, as I understand there is two or three collection here ready for distribution.

I suppose you were somewhat relieved when you found that Arthur and I had come through the battle of Ypres safe and sound, and I may say you need never worry again about the physical endurance of either Arthur or myself, as we were both put along with several other fellows to a very severe test, and we now feel as fit as ever. As I stated in a previous letter, we will hardly be put in such a severe place again for a while.

Our battalion is nearly up to strength again, and we have a wonderfully fit type of men. They are nearly all westerners, and their average height above five feet eight inches, so you can imagine the appearance of our battalion.

To-morrow we are to be reviewed again by General Alderson for the purpose, I suppose, of being congratulated again as he seems rather proud of our efforts. I suppose we checked the Germans in their mad rush for Calais, but we only did what any British regiment would have done.

Major Bolster and Capt. Hooper, our first and second in command of the company, are both missing, but we hope they will both turn up sa-

Tuberculosis and Public Health Discussed To-day

Medical Officers of Health Opened Their Convention This Morning With Very Practical Addresses—Attendance is Fairly Large.

OTHERS TO COME TO-MORROW

One hundred and twenty-five medical officers of health had registered at the Armouries at one o'clock to-day for the fourth annual conference of their Provincial Association. There [illegible] identical with Dr. A. W. McPherson, the M.O.H. for Peterborough, and Dr. Amys, who is temporarily acting, and Dr. Clinton, the district official. The other doctors have just begun to arrive. Their influx should reach a tide to-morrow, when their convention opens.

The general public would have found considerable satisfaction this morning had it heard the discussion of its welfare.

Dr. W. R. Hall, M.O.H. for Chatham, who is presiding, opened the first session at 11 o'clock.

THE FIRST PAPER.

Dr. J. H. Holbrook, superintendent of the Mountain Sanatorium, Hamilton, read a practical paper on "The Early Signs of Tuberculosis." He held that this subject was becoming of more and more interest to medical officers of health. The law now provided that they could order cases into sanatoria, the cost of treatment to be paid by the municipality to the extent of $1 a day. While it was found in advanced cases that infection seldom spread to adults, it was almost certain that infection will spread from them to young children. Dr. Holbrook held that it should be made illegal for an adult case to remain in a home in which there were little children, or to be allowed to return to such a home until a medical health officer has declared a cure or danger removed.

NECESSITY OF EARLY TREATMENT.

In dealing with the rest treatment, he said he believed it a mistake to make the time too short. Hence a time limit had its apparent defects. Treatment should be begun early in the case. There was a time limit of six months in Hamilton when sanatorinm work was first undertaken, and cases were sent home at the end of that time. A few were able to complete the cure at home, but the majority were very soon as ill as when treatment began, and six months of expensive treatment were thrown away.

As a public measure, everything should be done to make the time required for treatment as short as possible. The system of putting the patient to bed and insisting upon absolute rest so long as there is active trouble as shown by temperature and by purulent sputum is the only factor of much importance towards this end. Begin the treatment early. The early case where suppuration has not commenced, is far more quickly and surely cured than any other; the case with moist sounds and suppuration in one lobe stands a better chance than the one with two lobes undergoing suppuration, and beyond this we come to the case who becomes of the wide involvement can not even hope to do more than check the advance of the disease. Such a case may be able to go an hour later, but he is not restored to working capacity.

SOME EARLY SIGNS.

Among the early signs of tuberculosis there may be little or no cough. Coughing is so much a mixture of habit, with local or reflex irritation, that it is a very deceptive symptom. Paleness or sallowness, or an absence on the cheek of the ruddy glow of health, and associated with it there is an undernourished condition proportionate in degree. A patient may complain that he is tired all the time, or that he is more tired on rising than on going to bed, or that a day's work is much more fatiguing than it used to be. Some patients may come with the history of a hemorrhage, but a hemorrhage results from the breaking down of lung tissue, and in such cases the first symptoms have been overlooked.

CONSIDERATION OF AGE.

When considering the age when these symptoms are likely to appear, we naturally have adults in mind, for it is they who tend to develop sputum containing tubercle bacilli, and must be considered from the public health

SERGEANT-MAJOR IN CHARGE AFTER OFFICERS DROPPED

Major Mills of Peterborough Says Fred Howarth Took Command of A Company But Was Himself Killed Shortly After Leading His Men

A LETTER FROM FRONT

Writing from Vlamertinghe, Belgium on April 26, immediately after the battle of Langemarck, Major Jos. Mills of Peterborough, Quartermaster of the 2nd Battalion, gives some interesting information in regard to that fight. The letter, received by a member of the Examiner staff, is in part, as follows:

First, let me thank you for your kindness in sending me the paper, regularly, by which means we were enabled to keep in touch with our dear old home town so far away. There is no need now to conceal the place where we are in, as long before this reaches you the world will have known it, and Peterborough, with all Canada, will be grief-stricken, but proud of the noble sons who have fallen for the Empire. I am writing this necessarily brief account of the battle:

We arrived at this town (near Ypres), on the 20th. An attack was expected and officers and men were not allowed to leave their billets, but to be ready to march to the front at noon on the 22nd. Orders were received that the men might leave their quarters. That afternoon very heavy shelling was carried on by the Germans, and towards evening the country people began to pour in with their cattle and whatever articles of clothing they could carry. Then soon French and Algerian troops came pouring in, many without any rifles and with terror in their faces, and soon we learned that they had deserted the trenches, even to the reserve. The Germans had used yellow fumes which are very suffocating.

Then orders came for the battalion to fall in, and at 9.30 p.m. they went out to the ground that the French had deserted, and whose trenches the Germans now held, so the Canadians had to go out and dig themselves in as best they could in front of the safely entrenched Germans, on ground they had never seen before, and, to make matters worse, we had no artillery support to keep the Germans down, so they were at liberty to keep up a good fire all the time.

Charge of A Company.

It was not quite break of day when A Company (Major Bennett's) charged the German trenches, and as the Company got on a little rise of ground they were swept by machine gun and rifle fire, with disastrous results. Major Bennett went down;

FORMER SERGEANT MAJOR OF 57TH ON WOUNDED LIST

Sergt.-Major A. E. Brittain of the Princess Pats After Several Narrow Escapes is Finally Hit By the Germans

HAS MANY FRIENDS HERE

The older members of the 57th Regiment and citizens generally will regret to learn that Sergt.Major A. E. Brittain, at one time Sergt.-Major of the 57th, and now of the Princess Pats, has been wounded. Sergt.-Major Brittain lived in Peterborough for a number of years, during which time he was Sergeant-Major and drill instructor of the local regiment, and caretaker of the old drill hall, leaving to join the Queen's Own in Toronto. Tall, straight as an arrow, and with a splendid word of command, Sergt.-Major Brittain was an ideal soldier. He was a fencer of no mean ability and clever in bayonet work, and while here gave a number of exhibitions.

The Toronto Telegram says:

Sergt.-Major Alfred E. Brittain, officially reported wounded, resided at 68 Shudell Avenue. He is 40 years of age, a native of Sheffield, Eng., and came to this country at the age of 16. He had been drill instructor at Stanley Barracks for seven years, and was for three years Sergeant-Major of the Queen's Own Rifles. It was his desire to leave for the front with the Queen's Own, but when the regiment discouraged the enlistment of married men he immediately signed with the Princess Pats. Although he did not see the Boer War, Sergt.-Major Brittain was at that time living in Peterborough, where he drilled the 57th Peterborough Regiment recruits for South Africa.

He had conducted a cigar and stationery store near Pape Avenue for about three years. He is a member of the Church of England.

His last letter home was dated May 2nd, when he was enjoying good health.

LEFT TO JOIN 8TH MOUNTED RIFLES

Ptes. Merton Adams, son of City Treasurer Adams, and Robt. Austin, Lee street, left on the midnight train Saturday night for Ottawa, where they will join the 8th Mounted Rifles for overseas service. Quite a large number of the friends of the two young men gathered at the station to say good-bye, and to wish them good luck.

WHAT WILL THE HARVEST BE?

The clouds of war lower black and threatening; the sun of hope breaks only dimly through the sulphurous mists, but God's sun shines still upon this happy land. We may have the gloom of war, but we have the promise of a bountiful harvest. It is probable that seldom, or perhaps never before, the farmers' fields smiled a broader smile of welcome to an approaching great harvest. The fields are green with the growing crops, long enough to wave in the soft wind. Even the hayfields that have for the most part, so long as the war lasts, to open the portals of office with that bloody key.

If it would be a contemptible, if not traitorous, act, to unlock the doors of office with a bloody key, it is equally traitorous to look oneself in office with a bloody key.

Defending the Liberals for their action in preparing for a campaign, Sir Wilfrid said:

But we have been told, and it has been made a grievance against us, that we were making preparations in view of a possible election. I have nothing to conceal in that respect. We have made preparations of late. After the war was declared in the month of August, we gave loyal support to those in whom the Canadian people placed confidence in 1911. Nay, we did everything we could to prevent party differences, but when we saw that preparations were being made for an immediate dissolution, when we knew the men who were pressing and pressing the prime minister and some of his colleagues for an immediate dissolution,—we would not have been true to the duties which we owe to ourselves, to the Canadian people, if we had not made some preparations, so as not to be caught absolutely napping should the moment of dissolution come.'

But I have this to say to the Prime Minister and his colleagues: I do not care for an election. Let the Prime Minister and his colleagues say that there shall be no election as long as the war shall go on, and I will pledge myself and the party that we shall stop all preparations, and think of nothing but the war.

It is possible for Sir R. L. Borden to put an end to all party dissensions and to all preparations for a general election, by stating publicly and unreservedly that he does not intend seeking for the dissolution of parliament until the regular time, or until after the war. Will he "Speak now"? —Brantford Expositor.

Sir Wilfrid's Attitude Towards Canada and the Present Great War Crisis

The speech delivered by Sir Wilfrid Laurier at the Liberal banquet in Toronto last evening was worthy a great occasion and of a great man. No attempt was made to play the role of partisan, but it was made clear that the leader of the Liberal party, and the party which he leads, have been prepared since the outbreak of the war, and are still prepared to obliterate party lines and give the government of the day all necessary support in the carrying out of its war measures. What is more, it was made clear that this support has been consistently given. A similar desire to obliterate party lines had been manifested in the Mother Country, but it was pointed out that this desire did not mean that an opposition should abdicate all its functions, and merely become recording clocks of the government. The Unionist leaders did not so read their obligations, nor did the Liberal party of Canada so read it.

Naturally Sir Wilfrid was particularly severe in his strictures upon the Borden government for contemplating a khaki election in the hope of snatching a further lease of power by an unfair use of the spirit of patriotism now prevailing, and he considered a September election to be quite as objectionable as one in June. He followed with this statement of his position:

I am a party man. I have been entrusted with the confidence of a great portion of the Liberal party for a long time past. We have our differences with the government of the day, but it is not for me to say, though I am certainly anxious for the return of the party to which I belong, because I believe we have the true policy of this country, and not the men who are now in office. I speak honestly that, which I believe in the interests of the country [illegible] there ought to be, a change of government or a different policy pursued, but I do not care, for my part, so long as the war lasts, to open the portals of office with that bloody key.

tant to yield their wealth of growth, are promising a good crop. With a wider breadth of seeding; with a continuance of the "Queen's Weather" that came to us on Victoria day, there will be throughout the immense expanse of Canada, one of the greatest crops in its history. Of course there are many things—drought, tempest, etc.—that may spoil the promise, the smiling fields present to-day; but there is reason to hope that we shall realize the divine promise of harvest as we have realized the promise of the best and most favourable seed-time in the history of the country.

SURROUNDED.

Germany is pretty well surrounded on all the points of the compass—Great Britain to the north, France on the west, Russia on the east and Italy on the south. The only open door is through Turkey, and Turkey is now between the upper and nether millstone. The entrance of Italy will probably bring in Roumania, which will add 300,000 fighters to the ranks of the Allies, give Germany and Austria 300 more miles of frontier to defend, and make possible, by way of the Black Sea, an invasion of Turkey from the north in cooperation with Russia. Germany, the centre of the malign influences against the world's peace, is not only girt about with a ring of foes, but she has the whole neutral world against her, in sentiment, at least; for she is fighting against the interests of our common humanity. She must succumb in the end, and meet the hard terms the victors will be sure to impose. The struggle however may be a long one; for Germany with forty or fifty years of preparation for just such a war as is raging, will fight bravely and resourcefully; and will not come under except perhaps from the effect of attrition and exhaustion of resources.

RED CROSS RESULTS.

The result of the campaign on Saturday in the interest of the Red Cross fund is satisfactory, considering the frequent and many demands on the public. While $1,200 is a considerable sum of money, it will melt quickly in the great ocean of needs for supplies demanded in Red Cross work. It it were $12,000 it could be easily and profitably used. We have a long roll of wounded now; the list is being added to day by day, and the additions will be many many more. One day's "spurt," as the sporting men say, does not entitle us to consider the race over—the work done in the interests of our soldiers. We shall have to continue it till the end; and with the present prospects, the end, though certain in victorious character, is uncertain as to time. With the opening of Summer the fighting intensifies; the wounded and diseased increase, and the needs of Red Cross supplies multiply. We cannot, therefore, consider the possibility of sitting down with folded hands with the feeling that our work is done. One cannot here specify the numerous needs for wounded soldiers. That work is in the hands of the experts of the Red Cross work. They are unstintedly giving their time to the work of helping care for our wounded soldiers. What is needed in money, or its equivalent in kind—materials, etc., etc. especially writing materials. Every man wants to write a letter home as soon as he reaches hospital and is recovered enough to do so. This reminds us of the exceptional opportunity our soldiers are making—enduring the hardships of trench life with few of the comforts we have at home, far away, lonely, and thinking of friends at home, one can fancy how a gift of money to buy even writing materials will be welcome. And think of the joy you bring into many Canadian homes, by helping bring a letter from "our boy."

One can't realize, except by a good deal of careful thinking, what the many wants of our wounded soldiers are; but it needs very little thought to realize that we have a duty to do in caring for them. We have perpetual work to do. We have a chance to make many little sacrifices in order to contribute to the help of our soldiers who are making so many sacrifices for our sakes—even the greatest sacrifice a man can make—the surrender of his life.

We must more and more realize what the situation is; what our duty is to meet it. Some of the canvassers on Saturday were met with the objection: "Why didn't these fellows stay at home and work the soil?" This shows the need of a propaganda of education to impress the reality of the situation upon the public mind, especially in the rural districts which the news of the war do not so readily and often reach. "Stay at home and till the soil?" If it were not for our soldiers on the fighting line, we should be under the domination of Germany with its merciless system of militarism, under which the ploughshare is beaten into swords, and everything—personal liberty, the right to speak openly, to enjoy personal liberty — is suppressed and turned to purposes of war. Our soldiers at the front are fighting for us as much as anybody else, and we, who stay at home in peace and prosperity, have a duty to do—to do our share and in our way. We can learn of our duty by reading the following official manifesto of Italy, which shows how the national duty of Italians—civilians as well as soldiers—is urged. It teaches as a lesson, and reads thus:

"From to-day every citizen forms a part of the national defence. All must have implicit faith in the Government and the courage to obey orders without discussions.

"All citizens must show a readiness to make every sacrifice to insure victory for Italy. Let there be no hesitation or grumbling. Let everyone cut down on private expenditure and support our fighting forces. Let us give our all for our soldiers and their families."

If we wish to be patriotic Canadians, to loyally stand behind our soldiers, and fight in our peaceful way for the interests of Canada, the Empire and humanity, we must take on such a spirit, and translate it into continuous action.

GERMAN SECRECY.

Amazement and almost admiration is often expressed for the German talent of espionage. Certainly a great ingenuity and also a great deal of patriotism and devotion have been shown in this direction by the subjects of the Kaiser.

History, however, shows that this genius for underhand and faithfully secret organization is nothing new. The Bernsteins are not the first Blackhanders of [illegible]many. The mediaeval emperors [illegible] Vehmgerichte, secret tribunals, to execute punishment on those guilty of breaking their laws. A summons to the Vehmgerichte was not delivered personally, but, blackhand fashion, was usually fastened to the door of the accused. Frightful abuses, of course, grew up in these "courts," but somehow their spirit must have been congenial to the soil, for it was not until 1811 that Napoleon finally dissolved the system for good, as he did so many other ancient things of Central Europe.

The German excels in cunning, patience and secrecy, as well as in brute hate. The Teuton and the Turk make a formidable combination of natural born pals. "Confound their politics, frustrate their knavish tricks."—London Advertiser.

CHANGED HER MIND

One Way Lay Fame and Joy; the Other Duty Consecrated by Love.

By JOHN A. PHELPS.

Lettie's voice rose high and clear above the accompaniment that she played upon the cracked old piano. When Lettie sang she lost herself in the ecstasy of the melody. It was a song from "Rigoletto," but she did not know that; she had found the music among a miscellany left by the last summer boarder.

"Drat that girl!" exclaimed Mrs. French, setting down her pans. She emerged from the kitchen into the parlor where Lettie sat.

"I wish you'd have a little consideration for the boarders, Lettie," she said querulously. "Didn't you know Miss Latham's gone to her room with a sick headache? And you must choose this time to screech like a sick owl in the woods."

Lettie came back to earth with a sigh. "I'm sorry, mother," she said and turned from the piano. Mrs. French went back into her kitchen again.

Just then the parlor door opened and Miss Lathem entered. She was dressed in her peignoir; her hair, hanging loosely down her back, gave her a singularly youthful appearance. Nobody would have guessed that this was the famous singer of the opera house, who was proudly displayed upon the billboards nightly during the season.

"Don't stop for me, Lettie," she said. "Won't you sing that again? Who taught you to sing?"

"Oh, it just comes natural, I reckon," said Letty, with an embarrassed laugh.

"But, my dear, that was wonderful. Don't you know that you have a remarkable voice?" Miss Latham asked. "If that were trained you might have a great future before you."

Letty left the piano stool. "You mean that I might get to sing at concerts?" she asked breathlessly. "Do you really think I ever could?"

"O, Letty anybody can sing at concerts. I mean something really big. Wouldn't you like to?"

"Oh, wouldn't I!" exclaimed the girl, clasping her hands. This had been her vision since her earliest years; as though remembering some previous existence, she saw the lights, the audience, she smelled the perfume from women's dresses and saw the jewels upon their necks as they bent forward to listen. And she was singing to them with all the joy of youth, pouring forth her beautiful soprano voice in sheer exuberance and as naturally as a bird.

"Would you like me to speak to a friend of mine in the city?" Miss Latham asked. "When I go back, I mean. Something might come of it, you know. Of course you would have to mention the matter to your mother."

Lettie sighed. Yes, there would be the trouble. Her mother and—William. What would he say? She felt by instinct, that if ever she left the farm she would never return; she would never stand with William before the minister, as they were pledged to do, and supplement the slender ring upon her finger, with its half-hoop of pearls, with a plain gold band.

The two impulses drew her in different ways. One way lay fame and joy and beauty; the other duty, but duty consecrated by love and wifehood.

She looked at William more critically than usual that evening. His hands were coarse and clumsy, his shoes shapeless; he took no care of his appearance. William did not shine in the external quantities. But he was good. His very goodness irritated her.

"William, how would you like to go to town?" asked Lettie. "I mean, for a couple of years, maybe, before we get married."

William's brow clouded. He looked sullenly at her. "You mean that you want to put off our marriage?" he asked.

"Don't you want me to have a little happiness before we are married?" asked Lettie.

She spoke sharply, conscious of the intolerable struggle. William answered her thoughts.

"I know if you leave Stapleton you won't never come back," he said. Then, with a burst of passion, "It's that Miss Latham, isn't it, with her notions. Do you know who she is? She's a singer. Just a plain singer—not even a typewriter or office girl. There isn't much good to be said of them, I reckon."

"I reckon you're too mean to live!" cried Lettie angrily, and stood before him with flaming cheeks. "Take your ring back if you want to talk that way."

William rose dully; he was only conscious in his heavy mind that the inevitable had happened. He saw the tragedy, but his untrained mind ran upon mundane things: the home that he was buying, the pigs, the cow, the apple crop that would not bear fruit for the new bride. He took the ring clumsily.

"If you change your mind, Lettie—" he began heavily. But Lettie had left him. She was in Miss Latham's room, upon her knees, sobbing.

"You must take me with you," she wept. "I can't stay here—I can't. I want to live in the town to see the faces of people, to cultivate myself—"

Miss Latham laid her hand on the girl's head.

"There is another side to the picture, my dear," she said. "Do you realize what you will have to go through—the days of labor, the nights of suffering, the loss of every ideal, the bruising of your heart, the shattered hopes of life and the promise of what might have been, vanishing with the passing years? Lettie," she said, earnestly, "if I could have the past ten years over again they would have been different. But I'll speak to the friend I told you of when I return—if you ask me again tomorrow."

Letty went slowly down the stairs. Her mental poise had come back to her. She thought of her mother's dreary round of days, of her real love for herself, hidden though it was beneath the load of petulance. She looked out into the village. There were the friends whom she had always known; it was peaceful tonight and the moon was rising over the apple orchard. A sudden revulsion of feeling came over her. The tears ran down her cheeks.

A man stepped lightly out of the darkness.

"Lettie," he said, "I want to say—I don't want to stand in your light. I want you to go—I want you to be happy. Perhaps you'll think of me sometimes—"

Lettie stretched out her arms and drew his head down to her own. "I'm going to stay, William," she said.

And Miss Latham, at her window above, heard and was glad.

WAY OF THE CHINESE DOCTOR

Queer Medicines Prescribed for the Ailing in the Celestial Kingdom.

The Mongolian physician, after feeling one pulse, then the other, perhaps both together, possibly may decide that a little dried grasshopper is the proper medicine to be used. On the other hand, if the Celestial of the native school supposes, by the action of the pulse, that the diseased condition requires some other form of treatment, the Chinese drugstore near at hand possesses almost everything under the sun as a prescription. Oftentimes the debilitated patient is said to need a particularly rare and unusual medicine, as for example, some preparation consisting of the pulverized dry bones of a tiger; treatment is considered very commonplace when the native physician prescribes only such ordinary things as dried leaves, roots, stems, dried flowers, the bark of trees, etc.

The Chinese doctor possesses many ideas particularly his own. There is much mystery and impressiveness in his manner of treatment.

According to Mongolian medicine the Chinamen believe that the human heart is more likely to become inflamed at noon during the summer season than at any other time. Likewise they regard the human ear as suggesting the condition of the kidneys, while the mouth and lips indicate the condition of the spleen and the stomach.

"Doctor" "John" Chinaman has evolved a wonderful system of diagnosis that depends on 24 main varieties of pulse, but entirely aside from these there are 27 other special and minor varieties that prognosticate death.

One fundamental reason why the Chinaman of today is utterly ignorant in knowledge of human anatomy is because of the ancient custom of the yellow man neither to dissect nor to study the muscles and internal organs of the human body. The basis of this reluctance to investigate the human body is in the ancestor worship which exists

Here is advice for parents

"IT is between the ages of 6 and 12 that the jaws as a rule fail to develop to their normal size," writes H. P. Pickerill, M. D., a world-quoted authority.

"During this period, therefore, the need for generous mastication (chewing) is imperative," the eminent Doctor continues.

For new and larger teeth are coming. The jawbone must grow normally to accomodate them.

Otherwise "crowding" of teeth is very apt to follow—and "crowded" teeth invite lodgment of food particles between them. The food particles make the acid which hastens decay.

At this period of the child's life judicious chewing of Sterling Gum gives the jaw much needed exercise—promoting full growth and full room for the important second set of teeth.

Welcomed as a "goody," the delicious peppermint flavor of Sterling Gum pleases the children while doing them good.

Sterling Gum is the gum for lasting flavor and absolute cleanliness.

SECRETS OF THIRTY-SEVEN YEARS BRING FORTUNE SUIT

CHICAGO, May 23. —Three months ago physicians informed Mrs. Mortimer P. Scanlon that her death was only a matter of hours. A priest was summoned and the sacrament of the Catholic church was administered.

"Please send my daughter to me," she whispered as the priest turned to go away. A short time later Mrs. Joseph M. Burke was kneeling beside her mother's bed.

"Clara," said the mother, "I'm dying. Before I go I want to tell you a secret that I have kept from you since your birth. Michael Lawlor was not your father.

"Your father was William O'Brien, who when he was only a boy of eighteen was shot to death by a policeman. On a rafter in a corner of the garret you will find a box containing the record of your birth.

Obeying her mother's instructions, Mrs. Burke found an old photograph of her father and records which now have resulted in the filing of a suit for the recovery of real estate valued at $85,000. Mrs. Scanlon, who recovered from her illness, may be her daughter's chief witness.

Romance Uncovered.

The present owners of the property are named as defendants. They are Guy C. McDonald, Johanna Curran, Edward J. Steinbeck and Byran Lathrop, Owen P. Aldis and Russell Tyson, as trustees for Mr. Steinbeck.

The mother's confession and the finding of the box in the garret resulted in an investigation which was started by Mrs. Burke. Its trail uncovered a story in which romance, sudden death and years of litigation are mingled.

There are three principals to the story, William O'Brien, the father, whose name Mrs. Burke had never heard until three months ago, Michael O. McDonald, one-time Democratic boss of Chicago and Mrs. Burke.

In August, 1878, five men were arrested and placed in the county jail at Anderson, Ind., on suspicion that they had been implicated in a daring daylight bank robbery. One of these men was William O'Brien.

From this point O'Brien's story can be taken up only as found in the testimony of William Pinkerton, detective, before the Superior Court three years subsequent to O'Brien's arrest.

"O'Brien said he could clear himself of the charge if he could sell his Chicago real estate," the detective's testimony ran. "He suggested that I see Michael C. McDonald, Chicago politician.

Politician Enters Case.

"I saw McDonald, who agreed to purchase the property, paying $2,000 in cash and further advances as required until the total of $4,000 was reached. O'Brien secured his release and came to Chicago."

Subsequent court records show that O'Brien was shot to death by a negro policeman two months later. At the trial of the policeman O'Brien's mother fired a revolver at the defendant in the courtroom, but missed. The policeman subsequently was declared not guilty.

O'Brien's sudden death before he had attained his majority and affirmed his execution of the deeds left McDonald with an imperfect title in the property he had acquired. Accordingly he began suit to quiet title. Opposition offered by William L. Snell who had been appointed guardian of O'Brien's infant daughter, ended with Snell's removal from the guardianship.

Thomas P. Bridges was appointed in his stead. Bridges agreed to settle the child's claim on the property for $500. This was approved by Judge Knickerbocker, subject to the ratification of the child when she attained her majority.

Although that was in 1881, the agreement never was brought to the attention of the child until it was discovered as the result of her mother's confession. In the records of the Superior Court it lay forgotten for twenty-four years.

Known as Clara Lawlor.

When O'Brien was killed his daughter Clara was only two weeks old. Her property rights were handled by Snell and Bridges, who were successively her guardians. When she was four her mother was married to Michael Lawlor, brother of Frank Lawlor, ex-Congressman and a close friend and political associate of McDonald. From that time on she was taught that Lawlor was her father. The name O'Brien was never mentioned in her presence. On September 17, 1892, she was married to Joseph Burke. The marriage license was made out in the name of Clara Lawlor and Lawlor affixed his signature as her father.

Thus O'Brien's child and her husband lived until January of this year, when Mrs. Burke learned from her mother that William O'Brien was her father. She communicated her discovery to her husband, who immediately retained W. G. Anderson and F. L. Barnett as her attorneys.

Investigation made by Anderson uncovered the forgotten suit in the Superior Court and forms the basis upon which Mrs. Burke hopes to recover her share of her father's property.

The bill she has filed prays for a return of the property on three grounds:

Alleged collusion between McDonald and Thomas Bridges, guardian, by which the child's claim was settled for $500.

The fact that both O'Brien and his wife were under age when the property was deed to McDonald and that O'Brien's premature death prevented subsequent ratification.

The fact that Mrs. Burke, O'Brien's sole heir, did not confirm the settlement, made by her guardian, upon her becoming of age, as provided by the court.

Tuberculosis and Public Health

standpoint of contagion. The modern view is that adults rarely infect other adults, but it is held that the most vulnerable period is early childhood.

But the wonderful thing about the child is that though far more readily infected than the adult, yet when it is once infected, it shows far less tendency for the disease to extend than in the adult, and it is unusual for it to reach the stage of suppuration. In the earliest stage in the child the disease is confined to the lymphatic glands and is very difficult to diagnose [illegible] the tuberculin test are of more value. Later it extends to the apices or other parts of the lung, and after a time can frequently be diagnosed by methods previously outlined.

TUBERCULOSIS PROBLEMS.

D. A. Craig, superintendent of the Queen Alexandra Sanatorium, London, Ont., dealt with "Tuberculosis Problems from a Health Standpoint." Few laymen, he said, seem to have grasped the fact that tuberculosis patients are subject to legal restrictions. There is little use of having health laws if they are left in obscurity. If the present regulations regarding the care of tuberculosis were strictly enforced, I venture to as ythat there are few physicians who would not be eligible for prosecution through ignorance or neglect of the Public Health Act. People must understand that the restrictions are for their benefit. The Provincial Medical Council could materially assist by requiring that every medical man, before obtaining a license to practice, should have a sound knowledge of the public health regulations.

HIGHER REMUNERATION.

Dr. Craig asserted that the local M.O.H. received such a small remuneration for his services that he must depend upon private practice for a living. He is thus placed at the mercy of public opinion. His reward should be such as to render him immune to outside influence and permit him to carry out his work conscientiously and well. Discussing the discovery of first symptoms, Dr. Craig said there was no excuse for carelessness of physical examination and lack of conscientious consideration of each individual case. He who examines his patient through his clothing or waits for the appearance of bacilli in the sputum, regardless of other indicative signs, is unworthy of a place in the ranks of recognized medical men. There should be a plain statement of facts. If the patient has the disease he should, for his own protection and that of others, be told his condition.

PREVALENCY OF THE DISEASE.

A recent report by Lapham in connection with the University of Minnesota shows that in a large number of cases he investigated, 67 per cent of the other members of the family, excluding the first case, were found to be tuberculous. The incipient cases of to-day will be the advanced consumptives of future years if precautions are not taken. Why then should it not be required that when a case of open tuberculosis is found, the other members of the family or those exposed to infection in that case, be required to undergo medical examination, and, if necessary, be tuberculin tested? We test our cattle and take chances with our children.

Tuberculosis is now recognized to be a disease of housing and living conditions. The contaminated house is one of the greatest sources of infection and one to which a large percentage of our people are exposed.

Dr. Craig reviewed some of the regulations covering this point. But they have not gone far enough. The time is coming when our health department will be in a position to give a clean bill of health for each house and public building. Owing to the communicability of tuberculosis, it is time measures were taken to insure the health of employees of bake-shops, confectioneries, meat markets, restaurants and all establishments where foodstuffs are manufactured or sold. Dr. Craig mentioned a number of illustrations of this trend, including the Pennsylvania Railway Co., which compels every employee having to do with the preparation or serving of food to undergo a physical examination every thirty days.

A serious problem was the tuberculosis immigrant, he continued. The fault does not necessarily lie with the medical examiners at the port of entry. Were these persons examined and passed by the department before leaving their homes, an opportunity for more thorough observations by physicians would be given and the hardships of deportation largely obviated.

Squad Left This Morning For Barriefield

No Drill of 57th To-night—Recruiting Continues at Armouries

A squad of twelve Peterborough volunteers for overseas service left this morning for Barrifield, where all the surplus overseas men from the division are going into camp with the different units of this division. A section of the Bugle Band supplied the music for the squad, who marched from the armouries to the station.

Recruiting for the new infantry battalion in this division, which will be known as the 59th Battalion, will continue at the armouries. A number of men have been rejected on account of having plates in the mouth. Word has been received by Major Eastwood, A. M.C., that the enlistment of men for the C.E.F. wearing partial dentures (plates) is now approved, so that men who were turned down before on this account have another chance to enlist. Volunteers may apply at the armouries each evening.

There will be no drill of the 57th Regiment to-night on account of the medical convention in the armouries. The band practice usually held on Tuesday nights is postponed for the same reason.

Salvation Army Had Big Time Over Holiday

Salvation Army Songsters, the orchestra and male choir given in the George street Methodist church last night before a large audience will be long remembered by all who heard it. As that organization, evangelistic in origin and intention, gives a large place in its work to music, both instrumental and vocal, much was expected from the concert, and none in the audience was in any way disappointed.

The work of the orchestra, which consists of eleven members, was very fine, and under the direction of Major W. A. Arnold, himself the first violinist, "Heavenward Bound" and "Hallelujah" were rendered with an appreciation for all the fine points in orchestra work. Training and talent were evidenced in the rendition of all the numbers. The various instruments were called into requisition in the solo numbers of the programme, and some of the most delightful were accompanied by violin, when Major Arnold, or Mr. Herbert Smeeton handled the bow.

Male voices are always appreciated in song, and the staff male choir, well trained, and conducted, brought down the house. "The Old Clariot" was a number after the similitude of the jubilee songs, and was sung with good effect, unaccompanied.

Major Arnold's work throughout, in the direction of the orchestra, and conducting the chorus numbers, was of splendid order. His work on the violin, too, was greatly appreciated. The violin work of Mr. Herbert Smeeton is deserving of special mention, and was particularly enjoyable in his rendering of "Gladness," and in the duet number with the Major, which they gave by special request.

The Staff Songsters arrived according to programme on Saturday evening. After a march through the principal streets of the city, escorted by the Temple Band, they were taken to the Temple, where a welcome cup of tea was provided. They had a very busy time until the grand finale in the George Street Methodist Church last night.

A fine crowd assembled at the Temple at 8 o'clock Saturday evening, when the first musical meeting was presided over by Mayor Buller. The programme given made it clear that the talent of the visitors was of a high order, and whetted the appetites of the listeners for the Sunday services.

In the Temple on Sunday morning a good crowd assembled for the devotional service at 11 o'clock, in which music of a suitable character again took a large place.

On Sunday afternoon a very successful open-air concert was given in the Victoria Park, which was presided over by J. H. Burnham, Esq., M.P., and large crowds listened with great interest to the music, and to Mr. Burnham, who gave a splendid eulogy of the work done by the Salvation Army.

The evening service in Victoria Hall was very special in character. The capacity of the building was unequal to the comfort of the whole of the congregation, many of whom had to be content with standing. Adjutant McElhiney addressed the Sons of England, who attended divine service officially, and the visitors again acquitted themselves in fine style. The Temple Band and Songsters again took part as in the case of the afternoon service in the park.

On Monday the Salvationists arranged a trip down the river and spent most of the day at the old T. A. S. grounds, the weather, which was delightful, favouring all that was desirable in the way of enjoyment.

The Staff Songsters came back early and at 4 o'clock gave a musical service at the Nicholls Hospital, which was much appreciated by the patients.

The visitors on leaving assured the local people that they had spent a most enjoyable two days in the city, and heartily appreciated the reception accorded them.

Local Board Busy.

Dr. C. H. Amys, acting Medical Officer of Health, is engaged in the work of arranging for the entertainment of the doctors attending the convention of Medical Officers of Health, which is now in progress.

Sidewalk Being Repaired.

The sidewalk in front of Ackerman and Sons is being torn up preparatory to being relaid to grade. A number of sidewalks throughout the city will receive the same treatment.

A Beauty Spot.

Men are at work beautifying the Park at the corner of Charlotte and Park streets. The sidewalk has been extended along the north end of the Park and a cement curb is being placed along the Park street side to connect with the sidewalk to the south. With a little attention to the grass this should be one of the beauty spots of the city.

Driver Hanton of Peterboro' Tells of the Terrific Shell Fire

Adjt. McElhiney has received an interesting letter from Driver John Hanton of Peterborough, with the 4th Battery, 1st Brigade at the front. The artillery has now been three months on the firing line, two in France, and the last month in Belgium. Driver Hanton says: "I may tell you that this is one terrible war and this battle we are in is too awful to tell. Our guns have been in the thick of it for nearly two weeks. It is the most awful battle of the war —simply slaughter. If the Germans would fight fair it wouldn't be so bad on our troops, but the use of those awful fume balls absolutely suffocate our fellows. I have seen the poor fellows came out of the trenches, their eyes all swoolen and their faces pure yellow. The Jack Johnsons have been flying around our guns this last week and it is a miracle how our boys had their escape from death. one of (censored) who left Peterborough as a private, but got promoted quickly. Well he got it in the stomach from a piece of Jack Johnson shell. Poor (censored) died bravely at his post. The following day our boys had their escape from death. They were getting shelled heavily when they had to take cover. A minute after a big Jack Johnson blew one (censored). We are the only Canadian battery that haven't lost any horses so far. Our poor infantry made a great fight the other night, but we lost a terrible number in it. However, they did their duty. I may say that a lot of the 57th men fell. I am not sure but their battalion lost heavily. God bless them all; may their souls rest in peace. I always have a talk with the wounded as they pass by and their stories of the Germans are terrible. This battle has been going on for [illegible] and our guns have done great work, but they have two of them out of action now. However we will have another two soon, as four is our battery number.

An Interesting Letter From, etc.

soners, although Major Bolster was seen go down, and in less than five minutes the Germans were over the ground where he fell. Some of the fellows saw me go down; so I did, but it was just to wait for the fire to die down a little as it was very hot for us, as we had to cross an open space of about seventy-five yards exposed to machine gun and rifle fire. I got one bullet through my boat and another through my water bottle, but was not touched except with a very small piece of a shell that made a very small mark on my leg about the size of a pea.

Lieut. Garnet Greer did most wonderful work dressing the wounded in a barn right up in the firing line. He worked away until they started tearing it to pieces with shells, then he managed to get all of the wounded out to safety. He and his "sterling" stretcher-bearers deserve V.C.'s, every one.

I was asked to recommend any of my own men for special mention, and I found it very hard as every one behaved as if they were at an ordinary attack like we used to have occasionally on Armour's Hill. I recommended one chap, Marchant from Quebec for a V.C. for his wonderful bravery in bringing in wounded men belonging to number one company (Major Bennett's) under what seemed an impossible fire. He crawled out nearly seventy-five yards under fire, lifted a wounded chap on his back and brought him in. Unfortunately the poor fellow died. While he was picking this fellow up to bring him in another fellow asked for a help and he told him he would come back after him. He went back over the seventy-five yard gauntlet, picked the wounded man up, but received a shot himself that broke his thigh. Another one of my men crawled out to try and bring Marchant in; he couldn't move him, so he dressed his wound and told him to remain quiet until dark. It was then about 3.45 a.m., and he remained there until about dark, when we brought him in. He was still conscious and at present he is in England, where he will likely lose his leg. I think that chap deserves a V. C. The other fellow (Carpenter) I recommended for a D.C.M. (distinguished conduct medal for carrying a message out to Major Bennett, under fire. When he reached his Company he found every officer knocked out, but one. He got his information from Capt. Kidd, and while he was still talking to him Capt. Kidd was badly wounded with a shot in the head. He returned to me with the information that saved my platoon from meeting the same fate that Major Bennett's' Company met. He was killed next day when we were moving up to occupy the trench that we afterwards had to retire from.

ARTHUR WHITE SENDS CARD FROM HOSPITAL

News was received to-day by his mother, Mrs. Arthur White, Sr., Albert street, that Arthur White is wounded in some hospital. He, himself, was unhurt.

Tried to Settle The War Without Going to Europe

It Does Not Pay to Leave the Italians in Doubt as to Your Sympathies With Their Cause

The scene of combat was removed from the bloody fields of Europe to Peterborough for a while yesterday afternoon when one O'Leary and some local Italian reservists exchanged views on the relative merits of the allies, Italy in particular, and Germany. The Italians were celebrating yesterday in honour of the stand their country has taken, and O'Leary admits he was not very sober either. The trouble started in an hotel, when O'Leary's limited knowledge of the Italian dialect, and the Italian's smattering of English probably led each to think the other was talking pro-German. Instead of congratulating the representatives of Sunny Italy on their stand, O'Leary, according to Vincenzo Saococio and Vincenzo Giorgio, belittled them and in fact, they believed he talked pro-German. This caused the staging of a little "Donnybrook," in which O'Leary came off second best. His face stopped a glass which was coming in his direction with such force that he was very badly cut, several stitches being necessary to close the gashes. The result was a charge against the two Italians in the Police Court this morning, before Acting Magistrate Rush. Judgment was reserved until to-morrow morning. Mr. T. Minicola acted in the capacity of interpreter.

The complainant swore this morning that he went into the hotel with a friend and met the defendants. They got into conversation about Italy going into the war with the Allies. One of the defendants spoke in favour of Germany, and the witness remarked that it was the wrong place to talk that way. Then the row was on. O'Leary claims he was backed into the dining room when one or the other of the defendants hit him with a drinking glass on the face.

Stories Differed.

The man who accompanied the plaintiff into the hotel told a different story. He believed O'Leary was talking pro-German and the Italians against Germany and Austria. He was quite positive about this.

Talked Pro-German.

One of the defendants gave evidence that he was in the bar with some friends having a glass of beer when O'Leary joined them and started to talk about the war. He said the Italians were no good. Defendant told him not to say any more in that line or he would get into trouble. O'Leary said, "Down with England," "Down with France," "Down with Italy," "Hurrah for Germany."

He said O'Leary put his hands up to his (defendant's) throat and the battle commenced. One of O'Leary's friends came up with reinforcements from the rear. When he saw forces ahead and behind he took up a glass and threw it at O'Leary, causing the marks on the face of the complainant.

Tried to Enlist.

O'Leary came back to the witness box and denied speaking in favour of Germany; but he knew there was one man among the Italians who did. He admitted, however, that he was not sober. As evidence that he was not in favour of Germany he said he had tried to enlist with the Canadians, but was turned down on account of his hand. He had lost a couple of fingers.

"Some two years ago, I was a great sufferer from Indigestion. One day my eye caught a billboard of "Fruit-a-tives" and I said to myself "if Fruit-a-tives will build me up like that, it is good enough for me". I bought some. After taking these wonderful tablets for only three weeks, I found myself wonderfully improved. In a short time longer, I cured myself entirely. My case was no light one, either, Gas would often form in my stomach and I was in daily fear that it would get around my heart and kill me. "Fruit-a-tives" is the only remedy for Indigestion".

Three Vessels Take Big Cargoes of War Material

New York, May 20.—Thousands of tons of munitions of war went from this port on three British steamships yesterday and the day before, and two of them—the Orduna of the Cunard Line, and the Arabic of the White Star Line—carried more than six hundred passengers. The third steamship, the Georgic, is a freight carrier only, and if the German submarines torpedo the ship only her crew will be placed in danger. All of the steamships cleared for Liverpool.

According to the officials of the Cunard Line, there were no American citizens among the 13 cabin, sixty-seven second cabin, and some 380 steerage passengers on board the Orduna, which went out on Tuesday morning. On board the Arabic, which left port at noon yesterday, there were two among the 75 cabin, and 175 steerage passengers. In the holds of the latter vessel were more than twelve thousand tons of general cargo, and from the manifest were obtained the following items which show the warlike character of a part at least of the freight of the deep laden ship.

Four hundred cases of cartridges, 1,516 pieces of forgings for guns, 41 automobiles, 730 reels of barbed wire, 14,014 packages of steel, 5,216 ingots of copper, 3,370 bars of copper, 5,407 pigs of lead, 565 barrels of grease, and 795 barrels of lubricating oil.

The manifest of the Orduna contained much more war material, and Captain Taylor will navigate the submarine zone with caution when he arrives at the other side, for his vessel would be a rich prize for a German periscope to sight. The war part of the manifest of the Orduna is of quite a length, and contains the following:

Thirty-two hundred cases of cartridges, 3,750 cases of shrapnel, 1,169 cases of empty shells, 548 cases of brass rods, 25 cases of tungsten metal, 120 barrels of sheet brass, 3 cases of copper, 3,687 bundles of steel angles, 5 automobile chassis, 1 aeroplane tractor (on deck), 220 barrels of crude metal, 200 barrels of nickel, 3,726 nickel ingots, 368 copper canthodes, 4,100 copper ingots, 400 tons of steel billets, 488 bundles of skelp steel, 133 cases of infantry equipment, 476 cases of uniforms, 2 automobile truck chassis, 5 cases of rifles, 4 cases of motorcycle tires, 594 cases of leather military articles, 14 cases of metal working machinery, and 6 cases of brass wire. The total cargo of the Orduna approximates ten thousand tons.

The Georgic, in command of Captain Howell, went out early yesterday, with about 10,000 tons of cargo, and heading the list of war material was a consignment of 4,247 cases of loaded shells shipped by the Bethlehem Steel Company. Then there were 1,000 cases of cartridges, one aeroplane, 670 reels of barbed wire, 940 pieces of steel billets, 729 bars of steel, 757 bundles of steel, 786 bars of iron, 24 cases of fuses, 120 cases of forgings for guns, 200 automobile trucks, 168 automobile chassis, 643 cases of automobile parts, and 1,882 barrels of lubricating oil.

Ammunition manufacturers repeatedly have stated that there is no danger to passengers in the shipnemt of ger to passengers in the shipment of cluding ammunition for infantry rifles, and in the case of shrapnel shells whose fatal work inspires dread, it is stated that the exploding fuses are not attached to the shells but carried in separate cases, hence there is no danger in transportation. There is, however, considerable conjecture regarding what might happen if a torpedo exploded beneath a cargo of such material.

SAFE AND SOUND BUT LONESOME

Pte. Theodore Quinn of Peterborough Detachment Says All His Chums Are Gone

Mrs. Wm. Quinn, East City, has received the following letter from her son, Pte. Theodore (Barney) Quinn, with the 57th detachment, 2nd Battalion, written on May 2:

Dear Mother.—Here I am safe and sound, but all my chums gone. No doubt by now you will have heard of our big battle, and will be worrying about me. Well, mother, I was in the thickest of it and came out O.K., although I feel awful lonesome. It was [illegible] but I kept my head all the time. The Peterborough boys all were game and many have gone under. Those who escaped only did so by miracle. I hope some day to be able to tell you all about it. Odely (Taylor) was shot right beside me. I did all I could for him, but he died without a word, game to the last. I had my cap blown off by a bullet and was almost stunned a minute after. It was one of the worst battles so far, and I think the worst we will ever be in. Now, mother, don't worry. If I came through one like that, I think God is answering your prayers. Canada should well be proud of her troops. I saw more heroic stunts on the field than I have ever read of. One man also went out five times under heavy fire and brought in wounded, while even our officers were helping them in. Harold Saunders was wounded by shrapnel in the leg and I helped him to the dressing station. The other boys I can say nothing of, because I don't know whether they were killed or wounded. Later on I will write and tell you more about the three days we fought so hard. I am afraid now that I have said too much and you won't get this. Give my love to dad, Harold and the rest as I have not enough energy to write them all. Well, mother, I am glad to say I stood the worst without flinching and I don't think anybody can call me a coward. I was a little afraid that when the time came ofr courage I might be wanting, but I was right there all the time, and am sure my rifle didn't fire over 700 rounds for courage I might be wanting, but coming to France, so I will likely see some more of the boys before long. Sorry I could not send home a helmet and some other things. They were in my pack and the pack was so heavy when we retired to a new line of trenches that I simply had to ditch it; helmet and all. Took it off a six foot two Prussian.

Geo. I was mad and game for anything that morning poor Scoop was killed. He was full of pluck.

Why Modern Women's Hair Is Getting Thin

Wigs, switches, curling tongs, artificial waving, singeing, etc., have combined to ruin the hair of many women, so there is decidedly an increase in baldness. But proper care will develop heavy, beautiful hair upon any head. In washing the hair do not use a makeshift which may remove more than the excess oil; leaving the hair dangerously dry, but use something which is made for shampooing only. A perfectly safe, economical, invigorating shampoo, that makes the hair so fluffy it seems much heavier than it is, can be had by dissolving a teaspoonful canthrox, which every good druggist sells, in a cup of hot water. This mixture cleanses gently, yet thoroughly, removing all dandruff, excess oil and dirt, giving to the scalp and hair the vigour that insures scalp-health and hair beauty.

Canthrox shampoos makes the head feel good, make the hair look good, are very beneficial where hair is faded, dull or brittle, and the regular use of canthrox will greatly enrich the colour of the hair and give a beautiful gloss and softness.

Regimental Fund For The Boys of 39th

Lt. Col. J. A. V. Preston Issues a Circular Letter

The following letter has been issued by Lt.-Col. Preston, officer commanding the 39th Battalion, and should receive a hearty response in Peterborough with 125 Peterborough soldiers in the 39th:

39th Battalion, C.E.F.
Headquarters, Belleville,
14th May, 1915.

To the Friends of the Battalion in the Western Part of the 3rd Division.

In view of instructions received by the Battalion to be prepared to proceed overseas at any time, the officers are faced with the problem of providing such a regimental fund as will be required for the various necessaries and conveniences, in addition to Government issues, which are desirable for the health and comfort of the men.

There are many articles of equipment and supplies not provided by the Government which experience has shown to be necessary to keep the morale and physical fitness of the men up to the highest possible standard, and it is the intention to provide such things for the men of the 39th.

It has been estimated that a regimental fund of $10,000, which is only $10.00 per annum, will be necessary for this purpose, and we appeal to the various municipalities from which the Battalion is recruited, as well as to the generosity of private citizens, to make up the required amount.

Subscriptions may be sent to Lt.-Col. J. A. V. Preston, Commanding the Battalion, or to Lt.-Col. R. W. Smart, President of the Regimental Committee, at Belleville.

Confidently relying on your support and assistance, I am,

Yours faithfully,
J. A. V. Preston,
Lt.-Col. Commanding 39th Bat., C.E.F.

Sergeant-Major in Charge, etc.

then Captain Gordon and all the officers; then Company Sergeant Major Heworth took charge of them, and he went down. The balance of the Company sought shelter in any hole they could get, and dug themselves in with their entrenching tools, and in this position they had to remain all day and most of the night. Amongst those who did this was Sgts. Nichols, (afterwards wounded), Ackerman, Pte. Quinn, Pte. Taylor, (Scoop), Pte. Boswell, English, and others. Taylor, for some reason, left his position, and was shot; Boswell also was shot. Bruce (my son) managed to crawl in next morning, so I am told, all seed up with the cramped position and exposure, and was sent to the hospital. I have not seen him. Just at this we can't tell what the casualties are, but in addition to the above, the following are thought to be dead: Cumberland, Field Rogers, Hayes and Minorgan. I shall never forget the horrible sight of that night of the 23rd when I went to find the Battalion—men with heads blown off, others with legs hiding off, some lying as peacefully looking as though asleep. Just a little hole in the head or body; then there was the agony of the badly wounded, and the steady stream of the men wounded in the arms or with other wounds that did not prevent them from walking back to the rear. It will be some consolation to you all to know that none of our men suffered from shell fire—it was a bullet through the head or body. There were many Victoria Crosses won by our brave fellows that will never be much known about.

Heroic Stretcher Bearers.

Our Stretcher Section worked hard in the face of great danger, for you must remember that a German soldier is only a brute beast in human form, and will fire on Red Cross men or wounded men. They shell the Red Cross wagon whenever they can at our dressing station. Captain Greer worked hard for four days and nights—no sleep and no time to eat, as in that time about four hundred men had to have first aid.

I will not dwell longer in this letter of the horrors of that night, but you can all understand what my feelings were, as I had always gone to see the Peterborough men every time they went to the trenches, and there springs up such a strong attachment that any loss is keenly felt, and, oh, what were my feelings when next day I ordered No. 1. Company wagon back; no Company to send anything to! We can't tell our exact losses yet, and we are hoping more men will turn up, as they have got mixed up with other battalions. Here, about seventy miles from Waterloo, and almost one hundred years since that famous battle, was a far greater battle, in which many of Canada's sons have fallen, but they saved the line. Many British, Indian, and French troops have been pouring in, and all day yesterday, last night and to-day our guns, which are now up in great numbers, have been shelling fiercely, and the great effort of the Germans to break through will not succeed. Our men are now out of the trenches, but are ready if an advance is ordered. So heavy are the losses of our twelve battalions that we will have to be all reorganized.

Again let me extend to the bereaved citizens of Peterborough my heartfelt sympathy and say that their loss is mine also, and is hourly before me. You have this comfort—they died like heroes for the Empire.

Jos. Mills.

Major Mills encloses a copy of a special order of the day, as follows:

The Field Marshal, Commanding-in-Chief, has received the following message from the Secretary, War Office:

24th April, 1915.

To Sir John French, General Headquarters—

His Majesty sends the following message:

..."During the past week I have followed with admiration the splendid achievement of my troops, including the capture and retention of Hill 60, after desperate fighting, and the gallant conduct of the Canadian Division in repulsing the enemy and re-capturing four heavy guns. I heartily congratulate all units who have taken part in these successful actions.

A meeting which is open to the public will be held this evening at 8.30 in the Collegiate Assembly Hall, under the auspices of the Health Officers of Ontario. The city officials and members of the Peterborough Board of Health will attend and it is urgently hoped that the public will attend this gathering in large numbers. Mr. E. H. Pease, of the Lederic Laboratory, New York city, will give a lecture on "The Rational Position on the Food Question."

Tay-Day Yielded A Total of $1200 For Red Cross Fund

The local Red Cross funds were strengthened by about $1,200 as a result of the campaign on Saturday. The returns from the boxes came to $1,149.70, and Mr. John Anderson, 462 Gilmour Street, with a generous ambition for round numbers, kindly contributed $50, which brought the total to $1199.70—virtually $1,200, and belated returns, if any, will add a little more.

The lady custodians of the boxes did splendid work which the committee desires to publicly acknowledge. The solicitors had pretty hard work to make the market place yield a respectable return. The visitors to the market did not seem to be seised of the importance and object of the contributions they were asked to make to the Red Cross fund. One cautious agriculturist made the most minute inquiries as to the disposition of the fund and was as solicitous of an assurance that the money would really be expended for the object stated, as if he intended his inquiries as a preface to a donation of $50. He drew a big roll of bank bills from his pocket and that lady solicitor's heart beat high with hope. After careful search he came upon a five-cent piece, which he proudly placed in the box, thus winning the Red Cross. A contrasting incident among other amusing incidents of the day was furnished by a small boy. He opened negotiations with a lady collector with the inquiry as to whether he could get a Red Cross tag for three cents—"I had a 'nickel,' but I swall'ed it." He got his tag and his all contributed to the cause ranks in merit with the widow's mite of Holy Scripture. Considering the numerous demands made upon the public the fruit of Saturday's campaign was very satisfactory.

The Executive Committee wishes to thank the press for its great kindness in the way of advertising and advocating the claims of the Red Cross Society; Alderman Edgar, for contributing the cord to hang the tags by; the stores and offices that placed conveniences at the disposal of the committee; the young men of the banks who counted the contributions; the general public who so generously gave, and all others who contributed in any way to the work all adding a round $1,200 to the funds of the local branch of the Red Cross Society.

KNIGHTS OF COLUMBUS EXEMPLIFIED WORK

Large Attendance of Members at Reception of Candidates Yesterday

Probably the most successful exemplification of the degree work of the Knights of Columbus was held yesterday under the auspices of the local Council in the Canadian Order of Foresters quarters. There was a class of sixty-five candidates from Peterborough and other towns in this district. The day's proceedings opened in the morning when the members and visitors assisted in a Pontificial High mass at St. Peter's Cathedral, at which Rev. V. J. McAulay preached a splendid sermon, appropriate to the occasion. Orillia, Lindsay and Toronto Councils assisted in the exemplification of the degrees, among those present being District Deputy John T. Mulcahy of Orillia, Past District Deputy John Rogers of Lindsay, State Treasurer L. V. O'Connor of Lindsay, Past District Deputy J. D. O'Brien of Cobalt, and several visiting priests of the diocese and outside points. The members were honoured by a short visit from Rt. Rev M. F. Fallon, Bishop of London, and His Lordship Bishop O'Brien. After the evening degree a banquet was held, at which between three and four hundred members participated. A short programme of speeches and music was much enjoyed. The addresses by Rev. J. J. O'Brien of the Church of the Sacred Heart, Mr. Daniel O'Connell and Mr. L. V. O'Connor were particularly effective and affecting. Rev. Father O'Brien spoke of the new regard in which Canadians are held, especially within the British Empire. Even the Germans declared that had it not been for the Canadians' gallantry and bravery at Langemarck the Kaiser's troops would have broken through the allied line and probably would have attained Calais and Dunkirk, not to mention other dangerous possibilities. Canadian manhood demonstrated its verility and nobility. Rev. Father O'Brien felt that Canada had no more verile men than those who were Catholics, and especially Knights of Columbus.

Mr. O'Connell was especially eloquent. He dealt at length with the responsibilities of the present time, of the call of the state in its crisis. He also dwelt upon the necessity of upright living, of good example by which the whole community would inevitably be impressed by the sincerity, devotion and charity of its Catholic citizens.

Mr. George Daly and Mr. Ed. Hanrahan delighted the banqueters with several vocal solos.

Mr. F. F. Garden, Grand Knight of Peterborough Council, and its other officers received many congratulations upon the success of the day, which was concluded in the small hours by the singing of "O Canada" and "God Save the King."

FRECKLE-FACE

Sun and Wind Bring Out Ugly Spots. How to Remove Easily.

Here's a chance, Miss Freckle-face, to try a remedy for freckles with the guarantee of a reliable dealer that it will not cost you a penny unless it removes the freckles; while if it does give you a clear complexion the expense is trifling.

Simply get an ounce of othine—double strength—from any druggist and a few applications should show you how easy it is to rid yourself of the homely freckles and get a beautiful complexion. Rarely is more than one ounce needed for the worst case.

Be sure to ask the druggist for the double strength othine as this is the prescription sold under guarantee of money back if it fails to remove freckles.

Has Loaned $1,000 For Needy Cases

Of late there have been unavoidable and serious delays in the payment of soldiers' pay and separation allowances to the wives of local men who have enlisted. To offset this inconvience, Mr. J. H. Burnham, M.P., has placed one thousand dollars at the disposal of Mr. F. W. Miller for the purpose of loaning money to needy cases, as he deems advisable, until such time as the allowances arrive., Mr. Burnham will not hold Mr. Miller responsible for any losses that might be incurred in carrying out the above scheme, but accepts all such losses as his own.

Days of Miracles Not Yet Gone

Writes Corp. Stanley Fenwick Describing the Langemarck Fight

Mrs. A. L. Fenwick, 418 1-2 George Street, has received a letter from her son, Corp. Stanley Fenwick, at the front with the 2nd Field Company, Canadian Engineers. He says: "Of course by the time you receive this letter you will have read an account of the battle in which we were engaged, and it appears that, considering we were practically green troops, we made a very creditable showing. I would like very much to give you a lot of details, but really I hate to think of some of the things I have seen in the past two weeks. The people at home can never imagine what it was like. I used to think that the villages and towns through which we have passed since our arrival in France, with their homes, farms and beautiful buildings all smashed up, were bad enough, but when one sees a city in that condition and then add to it heaps of wounded or dead men and horses, overturned waggons, long streams of ambulance waggons going swiftly and returning slowly. Then regiments of reinforcements marching up and a shell or two landing in the middle of them, making a great gap in their ranks, yet the column would close up and move along again. It's awful, but still they tell me the execution done on the other side was far worse. But this is war and as long as we are alive we are willing and ready to go on and do our best, hoping that we will be able to get back at them for the loss of some of our friends.

Some people say the days of miracles are over, but I for one do not believe them. How many of them came out of it I don't understand and I think the Canadians have given the enemy something to think about. Maybe they'll have a little respect for us now.

OLD BOYS OF T. C. S. HOLD BIG REUNION

A number of Peterborough people attended the re-union of the old boys of Trinity College School yesterday. Among them was Mr. R. B. Rogers, Rev. Canon Davidson, Lieut. Rackham and Mr. Morris of the Collegiate staff, a former master of T.C.S. In the afternoon a cricket match between the old boys and the present eleven was won by the latter by a score of 134 to 50. In the evening an impressive service was held in the chapel. A banquet followed, at which one of the speakers was Col. Sweeney, invalided home from the front since the battle of Langemarck.

Italy Strongly Fortifies Venice Against An Attack

PARIS, May 24.—In anticipation of an attack on Venice by the Austro-Hungarian fleet the Italian war authorities have erected powerful works along the shore line, extending from the Lido to Point San Pietro. The distance between these two points is approximately six and one-half miles, and the ordnance now installed has a maximum range, it is said, of ten miles.

Venice is only seventy-five miles from the Austro-Hungarian naval base of Pola and the water approach to Venice permits of five fathoms being carried right up to the breakwater channels leading into Port Lido, on the north, and Port Melanocco, on the south. Venice lies behind the shore line of the Adriatic not more than 4,000 yards, and from the five fathom line to St. Mark's Cathedral in an air line is not more than 7,000 yards. It is obvious that if the fire of the fortifications located on the beach before the city can be silenced the city can readily be reached by the main and secondary battery guns as carried by the Austrian war ships.

Vessels proceeding to Venice enter either by Port Lido Channel on the north or by the Malanocco Channel on the south. The passageway up to Venice by way of Port Malanocco is practically parallel to the beach.

The Austro-Hungarian fleet comprises a number of powerful dreadnoughts and battle ships. In the former class are the Tegetthof, the Veribus Unitis, the P. Eugen and the Szent Istvari. Each of these dreadnoughts carries twelve 12-inch guns and twelve 6-inch guns, and are protected over the principal vitals by 11-inch Krupp armour. The armour plates, while of the Krupp type, were turned out at the Witkowitz work. The heavy guns for these ships were supplied by Krupp, while Skoda, of Pilsen, supplied all the medium-size pieces. The main battery guns of the dreadnoughts are mounted in four turrets, three guns to a turrent.

The other dreadnoughts are the three battle ships of the Radetsky class, viz.: The Radetsky, the Frs. Franz Ferdinand and the Zrinyi. These three vessels were turned out between 1908 and 1910, and displace 14,500 tons each. The batteries comprise for each ship four 12-inch and eight 9.4-inch guns. The armour protection consists of 9-inch Krupp plate over the principal vitals.

The three battleships of the Karl class follow next in order after the Radetsky. The three ships are the Ers. Karl, the Ers. Friedrich and the Ers. Ferdinand Max. The displacement for this class is 10,600 tons. Skoda gunned all three vessels, supplying for each one four 9.4-inch and twelve 7.6-inch rifles for the main batteries. The maximum thickness of armour plate is nine inches. The three Karls were launched between 1903 and 1905.

Three battle ships, the Hapsburg, the Arpad and the Babesberg, each of 8,340 tons displacement, were added to the fleet between 1900 and 1902. These vessels carry in their main batteries three 9.4-inch and twelve 6-inch guns. The armour protection measures eight and three-quarter inches for maximum thickness.

The Budapest, the Nemarch and the Wien, each of 5,600 tons displacement, complete the battle ship contingent. These are comparatively old vessels, being brought into the fleet between 1895 and 1898. The main batteries comprise four 9.4-inch and six 6-inch guns.

The Austro-Hungarian navy contains a number of fine armoured cruisers, though none exceed 7,400 tons in displacement. For heavy battering work against forts the cruiser class may be regarded in a negative sense.

The task assigned to the Italian navy in the war probably will be to contain this Austro-Hungarian force in Pola, Trieste and Fiume, where it is now protected by shore works, and thus insure protection of the Italian cities in the Adriatic from a repetition of those attacks which Germany delivered against English coast towns. That the Austrian submarine fleet is enterprising and can be depended upon to attack is attested by the loss which the French [illegible] their effort to blockade the shores of Otranto.

AUSTRIAN PRISONERS FROM PRZEMYSL—Some of the large number of Austrians taken by the Russians when they captured Przemysl. This fortress is again the object of great battles and may result in the return of the fortress to the Austro-German forces.

Once Comrades in Arms Return to Do Their "Bit"

New York, May 21.—Two well-dressed men, who from their appearance, would lead one to suppose were in prosperous circumstances, passed each other hurriedly on the deck of the White Star steamship Arabic, about half an hour before she was ready to begin her voyage to Liverpool.

After proceeding a few paces both wheeled around in an uncertain manner, glanced briefly at each other, started on their respective ways again and once more turned around for another glimpse. By the time they had started haltingly in each other's direction the attention of several of the passengers had been attracted.

"Aren't you 'Sam' Weston?" asked one of the men eagerly.

"Well, bless my soul—and you are 'Bill' Cooper," replied the other.

Such a hearty handshake as they bestowed on each other had seldom been seen by the eyewitnesses to the little scene. The faces of both men were wreathed in smiles as they began a veritable hum of conversation, as they recalled experiences they had gone through together while campaigning with the British forces in South Africa during the Boer war.

Weston was a civil engineer of Victoria, B.C., and "Bill" Cooper proved to be W. H. Cooper of San Francisco. Both are Englishmen, and were privates in the same company during the boer war. When peace was declared they separated and their meeting yesterday on the deck of the Arabic was the first that they had heard of each other since the close of the conflict.

Further conversation elicited the information that both were bound for England with the same purpose in view—to enlist.

"We will join the same company again," said "Sam" Weston.

"Sure!" said "Bill" Cooper.

They started down the deck together arm in arm, unmindful of their baggage, which they had forgotten altogether in the pleasure of the chance meeting.

Only two Americans were on the passenger list of the Arabic. They were Mr. John Coyne of Chicago, and Mrs. George Pratt, of Boston. The steamship had 37 saloon, and 300 steerage passengers, most of whom were from Canada. She also carried 15,000 tons of freight, including 70 motor trucks for war service.

STONEY LAKE WATER AT A HIGH LEVEL

Early Visitors.—Kawartha Park Improvements

Both stationary wharves at Juniper Island are entirely submerged. The government pavilion seems to be floating about in the lake. The water is over one-third way up on the railing. A new floating wharf is being built beside the boat livery at Juniper.

Mr and Mrs. H. W. Stock have arrive dat Juniper Island store. The season's supplies of groceries will arrive shortly.

Many buoys, both red and white, are not to be seen at all owing to the high water. Stoney Lake seems to be discriminated against in the matter of buoys. On other ports of the canal, particularly beyond Bobcaygeon, the buoys are in some cases ten feet in the air, and they are no saplings either. It is there not hard to see them.

One would imagine that in Stoney Lake, where the level of the water changes so much, the buoys ought to be long enough to be seen at all seasons of navigation. Not so, however. Besides there are a number of dangerous rocks in close proximity to steamboat channels which have never been marked.

Mr. J. W. Wilson hos returned to Rochester, N.Y., and will return with his family the latter part of June.

Mrs. Dr. Bell of Toronto, is a guest at the Victoria House, McCracken's Landing.

The Lakefield Business Men's Picnic last Wednesday was well attended. Over 75 men boorded the "Empress" for Sandy Point, where a few sports were run off. Dinner was served at the Victoria House, McCracken's Landing.

Mr. Robert Hamilton is repairing his launch "Roy Roy."

Mr. Arthur Sawers is spending a short holiday at "Bonnicastle."

Professor Mackenzie returned to Toronto on Friday. He will bring his family up the middle of June.

Miss Winnifred Mackenzie spent a few days at "Lochend."

Mr. David Charlton is making extensive improvements at Kawartha Park.

Mrs. Ivor Brock and Mr. Douglas returned to Toronto, Tuesday.

Miss Jean Harstone and Miss Denne motored to Bryson's landing, and are rusticating at "Oaklands."

Sudden Death Of Miss Robinson

Daughter of T. W. Robinson, Weller Street, Dies in Montreal as Result of an Accident.

The sad news of the death of Miss Edith F. Robinson, a graduate of Nicholls Hospital, and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. T. W. Robinson, 526 Weller Street, which occurred in Montreal on Saturday, when she was walking along a street and was hit by a flying rock which came in her direction from some blasting operations on the street, was received in the city on Saturday evening.

A jury, empannelled in Montreal on Saturday, it is understood, brought in a verdict of criminal negligence on the part of those conducting the blasting. According to information received here the late Miss Robinson was on her way to a livery barn to get her horse, her usual custom about that time of day being to go riding. It seems precautions were taken to protect pedestrians on one side of the street, but on the other side, upon which she was walking, there were no precautions taken. She was hit by a piece of rock on the head, causing a concussion and a large abrasion, from which she died in a few minutes.

The late Miss Robinson, a graduate of the Nicholls Hospital, has been in Montreal about sixteen years. She was a member of the Victorian Order of Nurses there. She was the daughter of Mr. T. W. Robinson of Weller Street, an old resident of this city, and had many friends here and in Montreal who were shocked to hear of her sudden death.

The remains were brought to the home of her parents here, and the funeral took place this afternoon to Little Lake Cemetery, Rev. R. G. Peever officiating.

Besides her parents she is survived by two sisters and two brothers. The sisters are Misses Abbie, nurse, of New York, and Sarah, at home, and the brothers, Messrs. Walter of Winnipeg, and Howard, of Toronto.

WHOOPING COUGH.

Mrs. Charles Lovell, Agassiz, B. C., writes: "Seven of our nine children had whooping cough the same winter and we attribute their cure to Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine. We always have it in the house, and recommend it as the king of all medicines. I was for merly completely cured of protruding piles by using Dr. Chase's Ointment."

Nurses Held Big Meeting

Report From Peterboro' Chapter Read at the Annual Meeting.

TORONTO, May 24.—A membership of 300, with 100 new members, was announced at the annual meeting of the Graduate Nurses' Association of Ontario, held on Saturday in the clinic room of the Toronto General Hospital. Mrs. Tilley, of Brantford, presided.

The treasurer's report showed $356 from fees, leaving a balance of $129 after expenses were paid.

The report of the Neighbourhood Association in connection with the church was read by Miss Jamieson. The report read by Miss Gunn on the Red Cross work done by the Kingston chapter of the Queen's University Hospital from the Peterborough chapter, which will work until the [illegible] from the Hamilton chapter also for the Red Cross, under Miss Denison, were received with great applause.

Interesting papers were read by the following:—Miss Helen McMurrich, on "Institutions and Social Laws Connected with Social Service Work"; Miss Paull, on the experiment of teaching young Jewish girls different departments of housewifery, especially in the Ward.

Miss Flaws finished the session with an excellent paper written by Miss Robina Stewart, on "Household Enemies, and how to Deal with them," with varied rescription of the different pests, from rats to roaches, and methods successfully employed for their extermination.

Afternoon tea was then served in the Nurses' Residence, the party being welcomed by Miss Gunn.

This Leaves the Skin Free From Hairy Growths

(Toilet Talks)

A simple method for completely removing every trace of hair or fuzz is here given. This is painless and usually a single treatment will banish even stubborn growths. To remove hairs, make a thick paste with some powdered delatone and water, spread on hairy surface and after about 2 minutes rub off, wash the skin and the hairs are gone. This method will not mar the skin, but to avoid disappointment, be certain you get delatone.

Cottagers At Stoney Lake For Holiday

Peterborough and Toronto People Spent Victoria Day at Their Summer Homes

STONY LAKE, May 25—Hunderds of cottagers from Peterborough and Toronto took advantage of the holiday to visit their summer homes. The Stony Lake Navigation Co. put on an excellent service which was greatly appreciated. Friday the steamer Stony Lake, in charge of Capt. Scollard, met the noon train, which brought up a record crowd from the Queen City.

The day was none too promising, and about 3 o'clock a heavy rain set in which continued well into the night. When it ceased a heavy fog settled down on the lake, and rendered it very difficult for the "Stony Lake" to navigate. Fortunately the majority of the cottagers had been landed before the arrival of the fog, not without some difficulty, however, for the extreme height of the water covered all docks, and landings had to be made elsewhere.

If the Superintendent of the Trent Valley had been a passenger that afternoon he would have overheard remarks not altogether complimentary about his policy of maintaining the water in Stony Lake at such a high level in the Spring and so low in the late Summer.

At Ben Simpson's Island in Upper Stony, the steamer was obliged to tie up for two hours, owing to the density of the mist, after which she proceeded for Young's Point, leaving off a quantity of lumber at McKinney's cottage long after midnight.

The following are among those who came up on Friday from Toronto: Mr. and Mrs. C. T. Peck and W. J. Peck to "Belle Chasse," Mr. and Mrs. Simpson and Rev. Mr. Gibson; Mr. and Mrs. J. Henderson, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Sutherland, to "Inglestana," Mr. and Mrs. H. G. Stubbs and family to "Chateau Du Lac," for the season; Mr. McCready to "Blarney Castle"; Messrs. A. B. Mitchell and A. E. Klippert, to "Sunnyside"; Dr. Griffith, to "Maplehurst"; Mr. and Mrs. Onley, and Mr. Aikens, Mr. and Mrs. H. M. East and Dr. East to 'Indian Isle"; Mr. J. Cole to "Big Otter; Mr. and Mrs. J. O. McCarthy, and family to "Emerald Isle," Mr. Sam Hunter to 'Pepacton"; Mr. and Mrs. Larbaux to "Britannia"; Mr. and Mrs. Addison to "Clandeboye"; Mr. and Mrs. Rathbone and family, Prof. and Mrs. Stuart, Messrs. Eric and Crawford Grier to "Woodonga"; Mr. Clarence Bell, Mr. Reynolds to "Black Rock"; Mr. and Mrs. Robertson and the Misses Robertson to "Cairn Dhu".

Saturday saw quite a number of Peterborough people of whom the following are a few; Mr. and Mrs. J. J. McBain and Mr. Hubert to "Bona Vista"; Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Knapman, Ruth and Jack and Mrs. Foote and son, Norman, to "Forest Home"; Mr. and Mrs. Ben Shortly and son, Douglas to Boschimk, Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Craig and Mr. F. D. Craig to "Upsidedown"; Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Beal, Miss Amy and Master 'Bob' to "Seldom Inn"; Messrs. John Crane and Mr. Kenneth Crane to "Gladhalken"; Mr. and Mrs. John Carlisle and Mr. Douglas Carlisle to "Upsidedown"; Dr. and Mrs. Morrison and Misses Madeline and Ethel Morrison to "Happy-go-Lucky Lodge," Kawartha Park, and Mr. and Mrs. Wesley Sherin and famil of Lakefield, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Scroggie, of Toronto; also Mr. and Mrs. Harry Sherin and family of Lakefield.

—Monty La Rock.

Scout News

The promised hike of the Peterborough Boy Scouts has come and gone and the boys have had a glorious time during their three days' camp. The Scouts went out Saturday morning and came back this morning. The parents and friends of the boys took a visit to the camp yesterday and if they didn't enjoy themselves it was their own fault. One feature of the sports yesterday was the baseball game between the Scouts' team and a picked team, with a win for the Scouts by the score of 14—10. Mme. Bradshaw opened the game by a home-run. Another game was played between the Scouts and the ladies, and the score was a tie. Who says ladies can't play ball. Well we guess they can by all appearances.

The Scouts desire to thank all those people who helped to make them enjoy themselves, but especially desire to thank Mr. and Mrs. Bradshaw for their kind gift of two cases of soft drinks; Mr. Grady for his, and also Mr. Chew and Mr. Rountree for theirs. Three cheers, boys, for these people! Hip, hip, hurrah!

The Scouts will not meet this week, but will meet on Monday, June 7th at 7.30 p.m. sharp, and also on Friday, June 11th at 7.30 p.m. sharp. Uniforms and staves required.

BIRTH.

TURNBULLS

THE WORLD OF SPORT

RIVERDALES WON THE HOLIDAY LACROSSE GAME

The lacrosse season opened in the city yesterday afternoon, when the locals took the small end of a 15 to 6 score in a game with the Riverdales of Toronto. His Worship Mayor Buller put the rubber into play at 2.30 o'clock before a crowd which was decidedly disappointing in numbers to those who are endeavouring to revive lacrosse in Peterborough, but those who made the trip to Riverside Park got their money's worth, though the score was somewhat one-sided at the finish.

The locals showed clearly that they were not by any means in shape yet and their team work needs quite a lot more developing. They had only one spare man in uniform to relieve, and by the time the final gong sounded most of them were playing a pretty ragged game. Yesterday would have been a good opportunity to bring out some of the uncertain material for trial so that the management could get a line on their numerous players.

The visitors were a well-balanced team, accustomed to playing together, with a splendid defence and a home which got working nicely in spots. They started their game by playing the odd man stunt and the locals could not seem to fathom their style of play. Both teams played exceptionally clean lacrosse, which pleased the spectators. There were only three penalties for minor offences, and the offenders were local men.

For Peterborough, Dunford, Hamilton and McCoy divided the scoring honours, each hooking two. Ray Dunford the veteran, was probably the choice of the blue and white aggregation. Though he had doubts as to being sufficiently in shape to stand the whole game, he was still going good at the finish. The line-up at the start was:

| Peterborough | Riverdales |
|---|---|
| Gillman | Scott |
| Hatton | Gore |
| Mein | Sheehan |
| Best | Fecto |
| Burnham | O'Rourke |
| Brown | Pherrill |
| McCoy | Starling |

STAGES OF EUROPEAN WAR

How and when belligerents entered the European war:

1914—July 28—Austria declared war against Serbia, because of Serbia's refusal to accept Austrian internal control following assassination by a Serb of the Archduke Franz Ferdinand.

July 30—Germany gave Russia 24 hours in which to explain Russian army mobilization.

August 1—Germany declared war against Russia.

August 2—Germany invaded Luxemburg and violated Belgian neutrality.

August 3—Germany offered Belgium entente if Belgium would facilitate movement of German troops across her borders. Belgium refused, and appealed to England.

DEAD CHUMS ALL AROUND

dug my hole deeper, then as the Germans were still running from their trench to the wood, a distance of about 200 yards, I began to fire again, and feel sure that I avanged my chum's death. Just imagine what I felt like, 50 yards from the Germans, with all those poor dead and dying fellows around me.

If ever I said my prayers in earnest it was that day, as I lay there in that hole all day firing now and then and praying for the night. As soon as it came, believe me, I did run to our trenches a couple of hundred yards back with bullets singing all round. I did not get out any too soon either, as the Germans tried to advance again.

We sure did give it to them, and for the next two days we held the ground we took and to the "fear of the Lord" in the Germans. They called us the second Gurkas (whatever that is). Was there when we captured the German Colonel. He got down on his knees and begged for mercy. Said, "Mercy, mercy, I've got an uncle in Canada." Gee, but it was funny, and even made me laugh for a change.

ONLY TWENTY LEFT.

There were about four Germans dead to our one, and that is saying something. Peterborough sure ought to be proud of the fellows that died, and it was for a noble cause, too. If the Germans had got through us it would have been really serious, indeed. We were just counting what was left of the 120 Peterborough boys that came away and found there were only 20. I am the only one left in our section of thirteen, except Dutch Mills, who is in the hospital. I saw two or three cases of fellows who could not stand the strain and whose nerves had given out. But thank God it was not many, as every man was needed.

We certainly have earned the respect of the British regulars and the French, who at one time looked upon us with contempt. I saw many bayonet fights, and never did the Germans stand to it. Nothing could stop our fellows once they realised what was against them.

It will be some time before we go into the firing line again, and we will have to be reinforced—(censored)—. Drop me a line every now and then, for I am not dead yet, and hope to reach old Peterborough all right yet, although the chances are somewhat slim. But the mail is the only thing we have to look forward to.

Yours hopefully,
BARNEY.

Czar of Russia's Colossal Wealth

In his own right the Czar of All the Russians has possessions and investments probably greater than those of any other man.

In his name stand the titles to ninety-eigt grand palaces, to over 120 large estates, to churches, convents, houses and farms innumerable. A whole army of retainers, managers and overseers are on the salary list, say 50,000, without counting their dependents.

There are over 100,000 head of horned cattle, some 30,000 horses and pigs and sheep are counted into millions. He owns valuable mines in the Ural, and many important industrial establishments.

When it is borne in mind that all his possessions are exempt from taxation, a net revenue of another $25,000,000 would hardly be considered an over-estimate. The purchasing value of a rouble in Russia (though only about one-half the intrinsic) is the equivalent of seventy-five cents.

Mysterious Attack On Port Hope Ticket Agent

Port Hope, Ont., May 23.—Mr. John Harcourt, ticket agent of the Grand Trunk Railway, and one of the best known residents of Port Hope, was the victim of a mysterious shooting affray which occurred early on Saturday morning. At the time of the shooting Mr. Harcourt was in bed, and after spending some 12 hours in a comatose state recovered sufficiently to dress himself and walk to his office.

When practically at the door he fell unconscious, and was removed to the Port Hope hospital, where he now lies in a critical condition suffering [illegible]

The affair has created a profound sensation in Port Hope, and the police are at present making a thorough investigation into the shooting. Although unconscious Mr. Harcourt has made a number of statements which while more or less incoherent, indicate that he was the victim of an unknown assailant.

According to the stories told by the authorities Mr. Harcourt had retired some time before the shooting occurred. It was stated that three bullets were fired. When the police made a search of the bedroom one bullet was found lying on a dressing table, while the two others were imbedded in the wall, one having penetrated the wall behind a picture. The window near the bed was found open. According to the meagre statements made by Mr. Harcourt while lying in the hospital, the window was left closed and it is thought that the assailant made an entry by the window.

WAS ALONE IN THE HOUSE

At the time of the accident Mrs. Harcourt was visiting friends in Toronto and at once returned home. Her husband was alone in the house. As near as can be ascertained Harcourt was shot about 1 o'clock, and lay unconscious until 10 o'clock in the morning, when he recovered sufficiently to dress. He had just sufficient strength to walk to the door when his strength failed him. The police were summoned, and it was found that the back of his skull was badly shattered by bullet wounds. Dr. McKinley was summoned, and he had the injured man rushed to the hospital. The fact that Mr. Harcourt was able to leave his home and walk to his office has completely mystified the local physicians.

An examination of the wounds at the hospital showed that the bullets struck the skull on the right side, and that they glanced off diagonally.

The affair has proved to be most mysterious, and while the police have made a thorough investigation into it they have been unable to arrive at any adequate solution. Mr. Harcourt was a native of Port Hope. He was one of the most popular men in the town, and had a host of friends, but no enemies. He has lived here all his life. About 20 years ago he was appointed city ticket agent of the Grand Trunk Railway, and has since occupied that position. He has two sons, one of which volunteered for active service, and is now on the firing line, while the other lives at home, but at the time of the shooting was on a visit to Colborne.

A MEMORY AID THAT ISN'T.

Within a little book I write
The dates that I must keep,
The way my memory takes flight
Would make an angel weep.

"Now I'll be there," I firmly say,
"On me it's safe to bet,
I'm sure I won't forget."

And smooth, indeed, would be my way,
Without a turn or crook,
Did I not quite forget each day
To see what's in the book.

WAS A MEMBER OF ROBINSON PARTY

Mrs. Mary Collins, Who Passed Away in Emily Township Was 97 Years of Age

A pioneer of Emily township, in the person of Mrs. Mary Collins, one of the last of the Robinson party who landed in Peterborough in 1825, passed away yesterday at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Edward Hickey, Emily township.

The late Mrs. Collins was born 97 years ago. When she was but 7 years of age she came to Canada with her parents, who were members of the Robinson party. Her husband, Mr. Thomas Collins, predeceased her 31 years. She has been a resident of Emily township ever since coming to Canada.

She is survived by two sons and two daughters. The sons are Messrs. Michael of Chicago, and Patrick, 215 Stewart street, City; and the daughters, Mrs. C. Carey, Rochester, N.Y., and Mrs. Edward Hickey, Emily township.

The funeral will take place at 8.30 a.m. to-morrow from the residence of her daughter, Mrs. Edward Hickey, Emily, to St. Martin's church, and thence to St. Martin's cemetery for interment.

PTE. ENGLISH TWICE WOUNDED

Writing from the front, Pte. Ernie Dummitt, of Peterborough, in a letter to Mr. Will English, now of the Ross Rifle Co., says that the latter's brother, Pte. J. H. English, was wounded in the nose by a rifle bullet, and afterwards hit in the hip by shrapnel, at the battle of Langemarck. Another letter from Pte. Dummitt says that Pte. English is missing, as has been officially reported.

FARE-REFUNDING WEEK A SUCCESS IN PETERBORO'

Fare refunding week, which closed on Saturday, May 22nd, proved to be one of the most satisfactory shopping weeks we have had in Peterborough. On Saturday alone over 200 fares were refunded to parties who were attracted, not only by the refund of fares but also by the extra values that were offered by the merchants to both out-of-town and city shoppers.

The more shopping that is done in Peterborough by residents of this district the better service they will receive. Merchants will be able to anticipate their wants and the greater this volume of business the better the values. Fare refunding week should not be allowed to be discontinued with the effort just made, but plans should be worked out for this and other features to develop shopping in Peterborough.

Picnic Was Great Success

The picnic of the Salvation Army Band yesterday, the first outing of the season, was a great success. The old T.A.S. park on the Otonabee River was the scene of the happy gathering, and a big crowd spent the day there, the steamer Stoney Lake being crowded on every voyage down. There was a round trip each hour. Enjoyable music was provided by the Temple Band and a big programme of games, including a baseball game, made the time pass very pleasantly.

NEEDLESS LABOUR.

"What is your reason for believing in the nebular hypothesis?" asked the man who is always seeking information.

"I don't know that I exactly believe in it," replied the astronomer. "But after a man has gone to the trouble of finding out what it is, it seems a shame to contradict it."—Washington Star.

New York Stocks

A. H. Stratton & Co., Brokers, report the following:

NEW YORK, May 25.—Very little was done in second hour, but market in general showed a slight hardening tendency. Commission houses as a whole took the view that stocks as were giving a good account of themselves, but the market was being held in check in event that an unfavourable reply was received from Germany. Many brokers advised customers to avoid bullish commitments for the present. An advance of 1¾ in Chino to 45½ was accompanied by emphatic predictions that a meeting of directors within about a week the dividend would be restored to the $3.00 a share basis which prevailed prior to outbreak of the war. Present rate of distribution is $2 a share.

ROME, May 25.—It is officially announced that the Italian army has invaded Austria.

CHICAGO, May 25. — Wheat was slightly firm at outset. There was buying on strength in Buenos Ayres. Demand appeared to come principally from scattered short interest. Kansas crop reports show improvement. Corn was about steady at the opening. There was no definite confirmation of the report of 500,000 bushels having been sold for export late yesterday.

British Troops Make New Advance In The Direction of La Bassee

Desperate Efforts By Germans to Retake Lost Positions All Fail---British Capture Many Prisoners---Canadians Drive Enemy Back at Point of Bayonet.

Special Cable to The Examiner:

PARIS May 27.—Fighting in Northern France is proceeding on a vast scale. The British troops have made a new advance in the direction of La Bassee capturing a number of prisoners of whom several were officers.

The following official statement was issued by the London War Office last night.

"The first army continues to make progress east of Festubert. A territorial division carried Tuesday night a group of German trenches capturing 35 prisoners, and yesterday morning it captured one officer, 25 men and a machine gun.

"Since May 1 the first army has pierced the enemy's lines on a total front of over three miles. On this, the entire hostile front line system has been captured on a front of 3,200 yards, and on the remaining portion the first and second line trenches are in our possession. The total number of prisoners taken is eight officers and 777 other ranks. Ten machine guns, in all, have fallen into our possession, as well as a considerable quantity of material and equipment, particulars of which are not yet available."

To the north of Arras the enemy yesterday made desperate efforts to retake in the region of Angres the positions which they lost Tuesday. The engagement, which was of extreme violence, continued throughout the entire day. At other sections of the front sanguinary encounters have taken place, the French in most instances making progress. The Germans in the various actions suffered very heavy losses.

A hostile aeroplane which was flying over Paris yesterday morning dropped bombs without result near Meaux. The French aeroplane squadron engaged the visitor, and brought him down, the two German aviators being killed.

AIRMEN BUSY.

The French afternoon communique reported much aerial activity on the part of the allies along the entire front, over 200 projectiles being thrown, half of them weighing 22 pounds each, and some as high as 220 pounds. Two German aviation camps near St. Quentin were attacked, and several hangars destroyed, as well as the gasoline supply tanks. Shells were also dropped on the aerodrome near Douai, the hangars and machines being struck.

A German aeroplane was brought down yesterday at Braine. The pilot of the French machine which defeated the German aircraft was awarded th Military medal for his achievement and the officer observer was promoted.

CANADIANS DROVE THEM BACK.

LONDON, May 27.—"Canadian and Indian troops on Tuesday night successfully repulsed at the point of the bayonet a vigorous German attack near Richebourg. Having destroyed the British wire defences by means of a terrific artillery fire, the enemy launched a strong attack and succeeded, despite severe losses suffered in the open, in reaching our trenches here," says a Central News message.

"They were bet with an inferno of rifle and machine gun fire before which they wavered, then the Canadians and Indians leaped from the trenches and met the German reserves with the bayonet as the latter swarmed up to strengthen the thinned first line. The colonials, fighting with terrific vigour, simply paralyzed the attack of the enemy, who were pursued into the open. Our losses were heavy, but the defeat suffered by the Germans was severe both morally and materially. The progress made justifies the belief that the Germans hold on the region of La Bassee will very soon become untenable and necessitate a withdrawal to a new line of defence.

Italian Troops Are Swarming Through The Mountain Passes

On Both Sides of the Trentino Salient, Driving the Austrian Before Them---Austrian Garrisons Driven From All of the Entrances.

Special Cable to The Examiner:

ROME, May 27.—Italian troops were yesterday swarming through the mountain passes on both sides of the "Trentino salient," driving before them the Austrian garrisons of the forts guarding all the entrances to the Tyrol, the Austrians in only a few cases offering resistance. The offensive on the Friuli and Carniola fronts, which was begun successfully Tuesday, continues, and heavy artillery duels with the Austrian batteries posted on the heights of the Isonzo are reported.

The arrival of the King at Verona coincided with a general advance of the Italian forces gathered there up the valley of the Adige across the Trentino frontier into Southern Tyrol.

This army occupied Monte Pasubio, 7,300 feet high, and the chain of hills ending in Monte Baldo, 4,000 feet high, crowned by an Austrian fort, which was constructed since the opening of the great war, as well as the principal defiles of the Agno and Leodar Rivers. The objective of this movement is evidently Rovereto a strongly fortified camp on the Adige, about 12 miles south of Trent, capital of the Trentino.

At the same time Italian forces entered Tyrol by the Tonale Pass, occupying Forcellina and Montosso, while a third division proceeded up the Val Giudicaria, the same route followed by Garibaldi in 1866, taking Ponte di Caffaro in its thrust toward Riva, at the head of the Lake Garda, which is connected by railroad with Rovereto.

All the passes leading through the Carnic Alps have been occupied. The object of the operations in this region, which is directly north of Udine, capital of Italian Friuli, is apparently to cut the Villach-Lienz-Bruneck-Franzenfeste railroad, which is the only line leading from Austria directly into Southern Tyrol.

It is not known what Italian troops, nor how many, are engaged in the drives into the enemy's territory, but it is estimated that they number about 300,000 men on the Carniola and Friuli fronts alone. The Carniola army has organized the heights between Isonzo and Judrio and is holding them against heavy artillery attacks from batteries near Tolmein, at the junction of the Isonzo and the Idria. It is expected that the invaders will soon be in contact with the main defending army of Germans and Austrians.

Reports have been received here that a large German army is on the way from Onnsbruck, capital of Tyrol, down the valley of the Adige to Rovereto, probably with the object of defending these towns and at the same time threatening an advance on the Italian base at Verona. The Italian position is an exposed one, and the railway from Verona runs direct to Brescia, where there is an important small arms factory.

A battle is in progress on the lower Isonzo, which runs into the upper Adriatic. The Italians, moving on from Cervignan and Toiso which were occupied Tuesday are making an attempt to cross to the left bank and attack Goritza and Gradisca. In this they have the advantage of being supported by the fleet. Italian aviators bombarded Monfalcon on the railroad from Cervignano to Trieste.

Zeppelin Airship Attacked South End-on-Sea, Forty Miles East of London Last Night

WOMEN BLOWN TO PIECES

LONDON, May 27.—A Zeppelin airship attacked South-End-On-Sea, forty miles east of London at 11 o'clock last night, dropping a score of bombs. One woman was blown to pieces, a woman and a child were seriously injured and five buildings were set on fire.

British airmen pursued the attacking Zeppelin and drove it out to the sea. The Admiralty announced to-day that the airship escaped.

The official statement reported that two women were killed and one child injured, and that "little material damage was done."

King Victor Is at the Front In Command

Special to the Examiner.

ROME, May 27.—King Victor Emmanuel has assumed supreme command of the army and navy. He left incognito for the front Tuesday night. Only his Ministers, who were confidentially informed of the intended departure of the King, bade him farewell.

The Messaggero, in paying a tribute to the King, says:

"The first citizen of Italy has left the capital to go to the front and be among his fighting troops. To him, who to-day set foot for the first time on Italian land, which until a few days ago was yet disunited from the Mother Country; to him, who in this moment is the symbol of the union and concord among all Italians, goes our augural salutation, in the hope for the highest success to the Italian arms.

"For Victor Emmanuel has been reserved the highest fortune that ever a sovereign could enjoy; that he will see complete, under his crown, national unity.

"To Victor Emmanuel go the grateful and solemn greetings of the entire Italian people."

Fall Wheat Outlook Never Was Better

In a bulletin prepared by the Ontario Department of Agriculture, based upon information furnished by a large staff of correspondents under date of May 15th, the following report on the condition of the fall wheat crop is contained:

This important grain, with its largely increased acreage, gives promise of an unusually good yield should favourable weather continue. It wintered well, and evidently was not much injured by the "heaving" during the very open weather of March and April. In fact, spring injury may be regarded as practically nil. Hardly any fall wheat land has been ploughed up, and very little has been redrilled to spring grains. Injury from insects, also, has been slight, only the barest mention being made of the presence of the wire-worm, cut-worm, or Hessian fly. While a few patchy fields in low lying places are reported, the opinion is very generally expressed that the crop never looked better at this time of the year. Some correspondents are inclined to fear that growth has been rather too rank.

Conditions in the West.

Winnipeg, May 24.—The following advices were received from various sections regarding crop conditions:

Prince Albert— Crop conditions are excellent in this district and only one unfavourable report has reached the city. It came from Colleston where cut worms are busy on summer fallow.

Moose Jaw.— Crop conditions in this district are considered by grain men and farmers to be excellent. While weather has been cold during the past week and frost has been registered, no harm was done to anything but garden stuff.

The rain of last week has had a good effect, and everyone is optimistic as to the outlook

Edmonton— Crop conditions in the Edmonton district are generally good, but there is danger of loss if rain does not come soon. Garden stuff is certain to be set back by absence of rain. All seeding has been completed.

Regina— Wheat and oats are practically all sown and barley will be all in within two weeks, according to expectation of agriculturists today. The flax situation is the least understood. It is known that this crop will be woefully short in the province, due to a great extent to the inability to secure seed.

Pte. W. Hele Heard From

Went Through the Ordeal at Langemarck Safely

Mrs. Samuel Hele, Mark street, East City, has received a letter from her son, Pte. W. Hele, of the 57th Detachment in the 2nd Battalion. He says in part:

Dear Mother,—I received your letter the other day, and was more than pleased to hear from you, as I had not received a letter for more than a month. Well, I am still alive, and came through all right. I suppose you have heard the news by this time, better than I could tell you. We had a tough time of it for a while, but thank the Lord we don't run into situations like that very often. We have been out of it for some time now, and have been resting. I suppose you have heard me speak of Jeff (Pte. Geo. Jefferies). He is the fellow I have been with ever since I have been away. He was shot through the mouth.

It is too hot here now. A few weeks ago we were freezing, and today we can hardly breathe. I met Art Gray the other day, and he asked to be remembered to Dad. Bert Carpenter also came through all right.

Italy to Buy Her Supplies In U. S. and Canada

Special to The Examiner:

PARIS, May 27—Americans who are offering supplies to the French Government are being instructed by the commissariat to direct such offers to J. P. Morgan and Company of New York, who were recently authorized to make purchases in the United States on behalf of the military administration. Similar offers from Canadians should be addressed to the Hudson's Bay Company of Montreal, who are doing in Canada what Morgan and Company are doing for the French Government in the United States.

Practically all of Italy's buying will be done in the United States and Canada, according to the belief of the commission agents here. Three parties of military buyers have been sent to New York already, it is said.

British Warship "Triumph" Sunk by Turkish Torpedo

LONDON, May 27.—The Admiralty states that the British battleship Triumph has been torpedoed and sunk in the Dardanelles, according to an announcement made by the Official Press Bureau. A majority of the crew was saved.

The Triumph was torpedoed by a submarine while she was operating in support of the Australian and New Zealand forces on the shore of the Gallipoli Peninsula. She sank shortly after being struck. The captain and commander were among the saved.

The submarine was chased by destroyers and patrolling small craft until darkness set in.

The battleship Triumph was laid down at Barrow in 1902 for the Chilean Government, but was purchased by Great Britain in 1903. She was laid down under the name of Libertad and was a sister ship of the Constitucion, which was also purchased from Chile and rechristened Swiftsure. The two ships were completed in 1904.

Since the present war broke out the Triumph has been in operation in both Far Eastern and European waters. As flagship of the British Asiatic squadron she participated in the bombardment of the German base of Tsingtau, China, last October and was reported to have been damaged by the shell fire of the German forts.

After the fall of Tsing-tau the Triumph returned to European waters and early in the present year began operations with the other units of the allied fleet against the Dardanelles. In the latter part of April the Triumph bombarded the Turkish trenches on the western end of the Gallipoli Peninsula and afterwards went into the Dardanelles to search the trenches from a different angle. Here she came under the fire of a Turkish howitzer battery on the Asiatic shore, which dropped 16 shells around her and threy missiles on the Asiatic shore, which dropped 16 shells around her and threw missiles a stoker and a blue-jacket, were wounded. The battleship silenced the Turkish battery before retiring.

The Triumph which was commanded by Capt. Maurice S. Fitzmaurice, was a vessel of 11,985 tons and 12,500 horse-power. Her crew of officers and men in times of peace numbered about 700. The vessel carried four 10-inch, fourteen 7.5-inch guns and fourteen 14-pounders and four 6-pounders. In addition she carried two 18-inch torpedo tubes.

Fifty German Soldiers Killed In Airship Raid

SPECIAL CABLE:

AMSTERDAM, May 27.—Fifty German soldiers were killed and the harbour and railway station at Ostend badly damaged by allied aviators in recent raids, according to private advices received here to-day.

Many private houses in Ostend were demolished by bombs hurled from French and English aeroplanes. Several missiles fell near the post office. One crashed through the roof of an electric street car, blowing it to pieces and killing German soldiers who were passengers.

JUDGMENT ON PROMISSORY NOTE

Judgment for $3,996.62 has been awarded the Bank of Toronto by Mr. Justice Britton against L. G. Bennett, a Port ope hotel-keeper. The claim was on a promissory note made by Louis E. Hall, who had a contract to build a canning factory at Cobourg, in favour of the defendant Bennett, and endorsed by him. The note was to cover the indebtedness of Hall to the bank, which indebtedness was covered by Bennett's guaranty.

LINDSAY SOLDIERS WRECK GAOL

Made Their Escape But Were Recaptured

LINDSAY, May 26.—If the Lindsay lock-up was struck by a torpedo it could not present a more dilapidated appearance than it did yesterday, all through the ardent desire of two soldiers who were incarcerated there on Saturday to regain fresh air and freedom. The men were arrested during the afternoon for drunkenness and disorderly conduct on William Street and placed in the cells, which were not too secure, through masons being at work putting new windows and ventilators in the north wall of the cells.

The culprits while making a survey of the place discovered that the cement had not set in one of the windows just put in, so it was an easy matter to separate the stone and cement, the prisoners pulling out the stone until an opening was made sufficiently large to permit them squeezing their bodies through, there by making good their escape, which was only for a short while.

They were afterwards picked up by the Chief Constable, who placed the men in charge of Governor Balfour in the county jail.

Citizens Protest Against Change

Lindsay Sees a Possible Benefit for Peterborough Merchants

LINDSAY, May 26.—It is understood that a committee of citizens will visit Toronto this week to urge upon the C.P.R. authorities to reconsider the proposed change of hour for the arrival of the mixed train from Toronto each morning. According to the proposed change, which comes into effect on May 30th, this train will arrive in Lindsay at 4.15 o'clock. It is claimed by some that this change is made in order to suit the convenience of Peterborough merchants, who desire to receive their freight at an earlier hour, and that Lindsay's interests were not considered in making the change.

Happy Hawkins in the Panhandle

By ROBERT ALEXANDER WASON

Isaac was plumb a weaklin', but he had an over-sized soul in him which kept drivin' him on all the time. His appetite was stout and his digestion was weak, and that was his keynote all the way through. He had simply talked himself out the night before until he didn't have steam enough left to get him to his blankets. I gave a sigh to think I couldn't combine his disposition with Tom Smith's body, and went on pirutin' around the ponies which were still broodin' on their feet to keep 'em warm, and I angled over to a sheltered rise, thinkin' that would be the best place to take notice.

I seated myself and began to wonder where Shorty was, when he sez just behind me: "Are ya lookin' for somethin', or did you just come out here to watch the sunrise"

"I came out to keep ya company," sez I, "and knowin' your prejudice again' conversation, I didn't choose to start any."

This kept Shorty for as much as five minutes, and then he sez: "That blame little spectacle-tater and his imitation pup have been sleepin' there at the fire the whole night, I reckon. Red got 'em to call me out of turn and when I rustled him out he put up such a howl that I just came back and stuck it out, 'till now I reckon it's really my turn. I don't care a hang, anyway. Loafin' along the way we been lately allus gets on my nerves and I've been enjoyin' myself at the change."

I just grunted "Huh" and waited to see if he wouldn't drip some more remarks. Mighty few fellers who don't like to talk, but some are all-fired particular how they do it.

"That Tom Smith o' yours is goin' to get us into trouble, sure as we're both present," sez Shorty after a time. "About an hour ago, the' came a curious change in the coyotes' barkin', and all the hosses pricked their ears in that direction. I was dead certain it was men's voices mixin' in which made the change, and I figgered they had been sneakin' up on us and had spotted your friend Mr. Foster sleepin' in the ashes.

"I loosened up my gun and began to think 'at the long dry spell was about over when that Tom Smith o' yours blundered up out of his sleep and came over to the fire. He seemed to notice the difference in the coyotes, too, and put his hand over his eyes and looked in that direction just as though he had human sense. Then he dragged your friend Foster out of the ashes, and built up the fire. He sat there a while lookin' into it as though tryin' to make up his mind what he was good for anyhow, and then he went back to bed."

I didn't make any comment, 'cause I didn't have none to make, and besides, I knew that if I kept still, Shorty would speak some more. And if he didn't, why, I had some thinkin' I wanted to do myself. Tom Smith had sure attracted my attention. All the tenderfeet ever I'd seen who had any desire to ride the range were a perfect pest on askin' questions and tryin' to do stunts, and they were a sight more fearless 'n they were supposed to be; but so far as I could see this critter didn't feel much awe at the tricks of our trade, nor he didn't take the bother to do a bit of bluffin'—and yet whenever I'd get everything settled to suit me, I'd recall the snap of his voice when he had told me to rope that mule.

He had said this in the tones of a feller who had once been used to givin' commands, and he had jerked out his order in a flash; but not until after he had made up his mind what he was goin' to do while I was busy with the mule. Furthermore, he had said rope instead of lassoo, and lassoo is a word that most tenderfeet never give up 'till it's bucked out of 'em by an indignant cayuse. I had heard about fellers gettin' hurt in the head and forgettin' who they were and what they used to know, and this was the only theory that suited me all around.

While thinkin' thus, Shorty, whose mind never bolted from fact to theory, broke in with: "What did you want with those two, anyway?"

"I reckon I had the same reason for wantin' them 'at you had for wantin' Flames," sez I.

He grumbled down in his neck for as much as five minutes and then sez: "I never have any luck where the's a lot o' non-combatants cloggin' up the scenery. You see if we don't spend half our time gettin' those two out o' scrapes. I said two, and I meant two. Your friend Foster claims to be just goin' down with us; but you'll find it harder to shake him than to shake off your own ears. Listen!"

The coyotes had stopped barkin' for a few minutes, but now they began again, and the' sure was something just a mite different in their song. "We'll have some fun out o' this yet," whispered Shorty.

We waited on edge for a few minutes and then Shorty began to mutter fiercer than common, finally windin' up with: "I'm ready to quit right now."

Smith's neck and leave him into the quickstand with Red on top of him; but we finally got over and then Missourie proposed that we all get a little licker at the store which stood on the south bank. This met with general favour from all except Jim and Tom Smith. Jim advised us that it was a tough place; while Tom Smith refused point-blank to touch a drop of anything; which, naturally, decided all the other boys to either sluice out their feed-chutes or else die in the attempt.

Drinkin's a reasonable enough habit, but I've often puzzled about the superstition which keeps it alive as a sort of heathen religious custom. Whiskey has allus treated me square and I don't intend to slander it none; but I got to own up that it's often found in mighty low-down company.

This store was run by a man named Johnson and called Big Jeff. A knife-cut startin' at the out edge of his right eye and anglin' down to the centre of his upper lip had healed up puckerin' like a part-lifted awning, and had give him a most unwelcomin' expression, which a pair of shifty bloodshot eyes didn't do much to overcome. His store was of logs built in the shape of a lopsided T, the store part bein' one big room and back of this was four rooms, hitched tandem and runnin' at right angles to the store. The buildin' was east of the stage trail in a mott o' cottonwood timber and back of it was a fair sized corral with a feed shed.

The boys deviled Tom Smith to drink until they got purty earnest about it, but he just sat awkward on his hoss and simply wouldn't. When Big Jeff came to the door and joined in, sayin' he'd mix him up some condensed milk if that was his brand, but that he was sorry to say that he didn't have no nipple-bottle to serve it in, why Tom Smith looked at him as gentle as a dog and said that he didn't care for that either.

UNSTRUNG, UNSTEADY SHAKY NERVES

MAY BE TONED UP BY USING

MILBURN'S HEART and NERVE PILLS.

Mrs. John Harper, Toronto, Ont., writes: "I have used Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills for the heart and nervous system. I was confined to a grocery store for twelve years, and had to give up business, as I became terribly run down and nervous, and had heart trouble, and I am sure I am gaining very fast now. I feel that nothing did me any good until I tried your Heart and Nerve Pills, and I am positive they will cure me. The nerves of one hand would tremble and then seem to go numb so that I could not write or sew. Now my hand is quite steady, as you can see by my handwriting. This is a big change which delights me so much for I thought all was done that could be done. I was about to give up in despair when I tried this last remedy, and even after I had only taken half a box the change started to come."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills will restore the enfeebled, enervated, exhausted, overworked system to full constitutional power.

Price, 50 cents per box, 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

CHAUTER TEN.

The Lion Head Ranch.

Nothin' else happened on the way in though we kept watch every night. Durin' the day I herded Tom Smith all he would stand, but it was discouragin'. He either rode so stiff in his stirrups that at every bump he nearly dove out between his hoss's ears, or else he forgot all about his feet and grabbed for the saddle-horn at the first jerk. Now, after a feller has learned to ride once, he plumb forgets how he does it, and he has no idee how many different muscles he uses, until he takes a hard ride after havin' laid off long enough to get soft, but he never does forget the knack of ridin'; so I about gave up the notion of Tom Smith havin' once had the savvy; and when he came to ford the Canadian, I knew it for certain.

The water was belly-deep and middlin' swift, and Smith might' nigh got into quicksand. I caught him headin' square down stream and beatin' his pony with the flat of his hand. "What's wrong with you now?" I yelled.

"This pony keeps backin' up," sez he, "and I'm gettin' dizzy."

This was the tenderfootedest trick ever was and I gave up all hope of him right then. Up to then, I'd had a sneakin' notion that he was the lost brother of the gel we had passed and had had his memory kicked loose, but that it would come back to him and that I'd have a chance to do a little crowin' about havin' picked him out when he didn't seem worth savin'.

"Don't watch the water, you idgot!" I yelled at him, clear losin' patience. "Look at the opposite bank if you've got sense enough, and if you haven't, trust to the pony who has."

This was the first time I had ever really bawled him out, and I expected to see him get red in the face but I didn't even have that satisfaction. He just threw his lines, which were knotted together, owin' to the way he kept droppin' 'em, down on the pony's neck while his face took on the resignated expression of a cemetery lamb.

Red followed close behind him, singin' a camp-meetin' hymn about one more river for to cross until I was ready to tie a stone around

PRESS ON ACTIVITY OF DR. DERNBURG

"A Press Agent."

Rochester Democrat and Chronicle:—"Dr. Bernburg was sent to this country by the German Government, supposedly to take charge of certain work for the German Red Cross. It soon developed, however, that he was spokesman, a press agent, for Germany."

"Right of Germany".

Kansas City Journal: "So long as Dr. Dernburg confined himself within the limts of good taste and modesty he was not particularly objectionable to Americans, who believe in fair play and who conceded the right of Germany to have a spokesman in a country manifestly unfriendly to its cause."

"Mission Not Peaceful."

Oshkosh Northwestern: "Personally Dr. Bernburg is a estimable man, but his mission to this country is not exactly a peaceful one, as has been clearly shown by numerous public expressions made by him."

"No Unbridled License"

Providence Journal: "Free speech is still as jealously guarded in America as ever—a thousand times more so than in Germany. But, we want no more unbridled license, no more sneers at our government and no more scoffing at our sorrow over American dead."

"His Visit Ended."

Baltimore News: "Dr. Dernburg should himself realize that the purpose of his visit in the United States is ended and that it will be best for all concerned if he terminates it."

"Unneutral Utterances".

Pittsburg Sun: "In opposition to our national efforts to remain neutral and in disregard of the President's message to the people advising that course, Dr. Dernburg has made the most unneutral utterances, has spoken and written with offensive frankness."

"Kaiser, Krupp and Kultur".

New York World: "The failure of Dernburg's mission has been due to his cause. He came to glorify Kaiser Krupp and Kutur, a combination which most of our fellow citizens of German descent or their parents or grandparents emigrated to America to escape."

SEIZED WITH PARALYSIS COULD NOT WALK

Most Extraordinary Cure Effected by the Use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food

To have the nervous system paralyzed, to be unable to walk and scarcely able to talk, and then to be completely cured, is not a usual experience, but Mr. Hyatt tells in this letter what he passed through. Doctors told him that his case was hopeless, and when they gave up he turned to Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and obtained complete cure.

Mr. Avery Hyatt, blacksmith, St. Anns, Lincoln Co., Ont., writes: "I am a blacksmith by trade and ten years ago became afflicted with paralysis. I could not walk or read or write, and could talk with difficulty, so that it was a hard matter to understand anything that I would say. Being only a young man I was nearly discouraged. Two doctors told me it was brought on by overwork, and that my case was hopeless.

"One day my father read about Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and advised me to try it. I bought 12 boxes, and when the fifth was used I saw that I was getting better. By the time the 12 boxes were used I was cured. I am well and strong and working every day, thanks to Dr. Chase's Nerve Food."

This statement is certified to by Mr. Elmon J. Hodgkins, J.P.

No ailment is more dreaded than paralysis. And yet how few people realize that paralysis of the nerves is only the natural result of neglected nervous troubles.

At first you do not sleep well, have nervous headaches or indigestion, find yourself easily irritated and annoyed, can hear noises which in good health you would never notice. You do not consider yourself sick, and yet you lack the usual energy and vigour and feel out of sorts.

Restore the nerves by using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. 50c a box, 6 for $2.50. All dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

TO CHECK A COLD.

It is easy to check a cold if you begin in time. Frequent doses of Dr Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine keep the cough loose, allay the inflammation and so prevent it spreading to the bronchial tubes and lungs. Mrs. S. M. Moore, Shortreed, B. C., writes: "I wish to state my gratitude for Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine, for it cured a cold which a friend said would soon put me in the grave."

SPOILS OF VICTORY

A Story of Intrigue and Love in the Frozen North.

By CLARICE ANTON WESTICOTT.

"Will you remember me when I am gone, Leona? Tell me!" The tone was masterful.

"Perhaps."

The man gave a sharp exclamation, and catching the girl by the wrist he said sternly:

"Don't speak that way. When you do it cuts like a knife," and his other hand fell half-unconsciously upon the hilt of the hunting knife in his belt.

"How dare you? You know, Jean Lemare, I have never told any man that I love him."

"Actions speak louder than words," the man returned coldly. "Those glorious eyes of yours say yes, when your lips form no. You have listened to my words of love and never turned away."

"They interested me as long as they were different," the girl returned, maddeningly.

"When you have something new to say, expect me to remember you; but until then I do not care to even listen," and the trapper was left alone with his rage and love. Until his departure on the following day the spoiled beauty kept out of his way, and once he had disappeared, she drew a deep sigh of relief.

Smiling a little to herself, and yet wondering if he would study something new to say to her when he emerged from the dangers of the unbroken path into the wilderness, she hummed a song he favored, and was so wrapped up in her own thoughts she did not hear the stealthy step of a man who stole upon her. Small wonder that she did not, for he was skilled in tracking down the wildest kind of game, and hiding his presence from the keen-scented wild things of the unexplored north. The first that she realized that she was not alone was when Leona felt a man's arms about her, and a man's mouth pressed to hers; and frightened almost to death she looked up into Jean's dark, flashing eyes.

"You told me to make love differently," he said, after he had kissed her breathless, "and so I have. I knew no other man has ever held you in his arms or taken kisses from your lips. Now I have put my stamp on you. I know you well enough to know that the man who kisses you will be your husband, or you will go unwed to your grave. I've staked my life on your love for me. Kill me if you wish," and he handed her the heavy revolver that kept his knife company in his belt.

The girl's face quivered, her eyes filled with tears, then waving away the proffered weapon, once more she fled, but this time threw back no laughing challenge over her shoulder.

With a heavy sigh, and yet with the light of hopeful love in his face, Jean retraced his steps, and this time fairly began his long journey. For weeks afterwards, Leona felt her cheeks burn crimson at the very thought of Jean's kisses, and yet in her heart she was not angry, for she did love him, though her untamed girlish nature rebelled at restraint. As the days crept on, she took pleasure in the thought that she belonged to this mighty hunter, and she began to plan her future as his wife. Suddenly her happiness was crushed as the tender verdure beneath the branches of the felled forest tree. After a day that had seemed unusually long to her impatience, although one of the shortest of the year, she was sitting in the chimney corner idly listening to her father, when some of his words recalled her to attention.

"I didn't think that of Jean. He ought to be ashamed of such a thing."

"What?" Leona asked.

"Marrying an Indian girl," was the careless answer.

"He never did!" she said fiercely, her eyes blazing in the firelight.

The factor nodded his head. "Yes. Long John says so. Father Acton married them at St. Pierre mission, of which she was a convert. I'm sorry, for I never have held to these mixed marriages," and then he caught his daughter as she fell forward.

For a week she lay ill, and when she finally crawled forth into the open air she loved so well she was like one smitten. All her proud, young courage was gone. She shunned the trappers who flocked to her father's store, and spent her time out in the woods where Jean had kissed her maiden lips and held her in his strong arms. Into this retreat no one dared penetrate, not even Long John Hathers. He would not give up the secret hope in his heart, and tried to court her, although he said but little. His eyes glowed a red fire that nothing extinguished. Leona at first scarcely noticed him, then hated him for the love she saw he bore her, and prevented him from speaking of it until one day when the sun was beginning to feel warm, and she was once more in the woods. Believing herself entirely alone, she began to live over once more the love scene of the fall before, when suddenly Long John stood before her, speaking madly of his love, and pleading madly with her to return it.

For Answer the Girl Raised Her Face to His.

The girl fought like a young tiger. She knew now that he had been a witness to her last scene with Jean, and it drove her mad with rage. Finally, seeing the hateful, bearded face coming nearer and nearer, she cried aloud for help, and in providential answer to her cry it came, for suddenly Long John measured his length on the grass, and she saw Jean like one in a dream.

"Come, Leona, sweetheart," Jean said tenderly, "give me the welcome back I deserve," and he held out his arms.

"How dare you?" she gasped. "What will your wife think when I tell her?

"What about the Indian girl?" she continued, for the man looked puzzled.

"Indian girl? Oh, you mean the one I found and took to the mission. Why, dear, she is only eleven."

Leona gave a gasp of happiness, and Long John, crawling to his feet, once more saw Leona in Jean's arms, but this time she went of her own accord.

"Let him go," said Jean merrily, as he watched the tall figure of his late adversary disappearing in the distance. "He has lost, Leona, despite the lying reports he circulated, and the spoils of victory are mine, aren't they, dear?"

For answer the girl raised her face to his, and their lips met for the second time.

A Nightshirt Council

The most picturesque war council known to history took place during the battle of Mons. Commander-in-Chief, Sir John French, General Sir Douglas Haig, and General Sir Horace Smith-Dorrien, were awakened with the news that the English forces were gravely threatened by the Germans. Gathered about their maps in their nightshirts, they planned out new movements for the English and then went back to their beds.

In the morning, as the English again took up their retreat from Mons, Sir John French all at once broke out into a hearty laugh.

"What do you see that's funny?" demanded Sir Douglas Haig.

"I was only thinking how funny that nightshirt council would look in a history book," replied French.

FORTS ALONG STRAITS SURPRISED THE FLEET

Big Shells From Guns on Warships Smothered Them With Their Fire

But Material Damage Small

Mr. E. Ashmead Bartlett, writing of the operations against the Dardanelles said:

The days of the Turk in Europe are numbered, but no one will deny that he is dying hard and game.

It has long been an accepted axiom of naval warfare that ships are of no use against forts, or that they fight at such a disadvantage that it is not worh while employing them for such a purpose.

This axiom must now be modified, after the experience which the fleet has gained in the present operations against the Dardanelles. Any fort built of stone or concrete, however strong, can be put out of action by direct fire from guns, if only a clear view of it can be obtained, or provided aeroplanes are available to "spot" for the gunners, to signal back results and correct the fire. Yet nothing amazed the gunners out here more than the resisting power of these old forts round the Dardanelles.

For instance, those at Seddul Bahr and Kum Kale, at the northern and southern entrances to the Dardanelles, were subjected to a terrific bombardment by the combined fleets, both at long and short range. They were so completely smothered with fire that no one believed a stone or a gun could be left standing. Their fire was, in fact, completely silenced. Yet, when the landing parties were put ashore to examine them, the material damage was found to be comparatively small, although they were mere shambles.

Obstacles to Overcome

Many of the guns were still intact, and one 9-inch was actually found loaded. The work of destruction had to be completed by the landing parties and the forts are now heaps of unoccupied ruins, with their guns lying about at all angles.

The Turkish soldier fights very well behind entrenchments, but he is a very bad gunner, and possesses absolutely no knowledge of the science of war. But the Turkish army, directed by highly trained German officers, and having the advantage of their science and technical skill, is a very different enemy.

The old axiom that ships are of no use against forts is quite inaccurate, but the enemy discovered that even the heaviest shells can do but a minimum of damage to a well-constructed emplacement of earth thrown up in front of a gun. The great shells from the ships throw up an enormous amount of smoke and earth, but the actual damage is small. It can, in fact, generally be made good during the night, or when the weather is too thick to allow of shooting. A battleship has to score a direct hit on the gun itself before guns mounted in this simple manner can fairly be said to be out of action. The difficulty of scoring direct hits is enormous, especially when the fire is indirect and has to be corrected by aeroplanes which are themselves constantly exposed to heavy shrapnel fire which it is impossible to keep under.

Difficult Fighting Ground

If the ground on the European and Asiatic sides of the Straits were flat the task would be comparatively easy, because the enemy's guns could be kept out of range by the long-range 6-inch guns of the ships. Unfortunately it is just the reverse. The Gallipoli Peninsula is a jumble of hills, valleys, small rivers, low-lying ridges, and spurs which assume no regular formation, and which seem to have been specially designed by Nature to assist the defence of the Straits. In parts the country is thickly wooded, in others the trees are sparse, and there are patches of low-lying ground which have been cultivated. The ascent from the shore is steep and fairly high, and the ships must clear this initial obstacle before they can reach their mark.

Amongst this hilly country there are innumerable positions where guns can be concealed, in valleys, behind hills, or amongst trees. When a gun or battery has been located by an aeroplane it is often necessary to fire right over the top of several ridges of hills, and the smoke of the bursting projectiles cannot be seen, even from the control tops. The Asiatic shore of the Straits is lower, and is commanded along almost its whole length by the European. The hills are not so flush with the water, and it is therefore easier to locate the batteries on that side.

SHELLING HEADQUARTERS

Men Sought Refuge in Well as Farmhouse Was Smashed to Pieces

What happens when the enemy's artillery gets the range of a field headquarters is graphically told by Private H. Edwards of the Royal Fusiliers, as follows:

"I and ten others were on guard at headquarters. We were having our tea when we heard a terrible crash. I ran to the door to find that shells aimed at the headquarters were bursting all around. I knew it was hopeless to run into the open, so I and two chums jumped into a well in the cellar. There we stood up to the waist in water, with faces white waiting for the end. We could hear the groans of our comrades and the terrible crash of the shells. Suddenly we saw a blinding flash and heard a deafening roar. The top of the well seemed to jump on us. I remember no more.

"When I recovered consciousness I found that my two chums were dead. The shelling had ceased, so I climbed up again. What a terrible sight met my eyes! The farm was levelled to the ground, and my chums were all dead and frightfully mangled. Only three of us were left alive."

Germans Brutal to Prisoners

Mrs. C. E. Morgan of Guildford, England, communicated to the English press a letter in which she said: "I have to-day received a letter from a company sergeant-major in the Queen's Regiment interned in a German camp. Writing on a postcard to thank me for a parcel, he adds: 'Three men have died quite recently'; he gives the names, all men of the Queen's Regiment. A private, writing to his wife said: 'For the love of Heaven, send me bread. If you knew what was going on out here you would not wait to be asked twice.' How many more of our prisoners of war are to be allowed to die without any effort being made to save them?"

IT is predicted by the managers of the Exposition at San Francisco, California, which is to remain open to December 4, 1915, that because of the European war the attendance will be largely increased. American tourists, who customarily spend their annual vacation periods at one or more of the pleasure resorts on the European continent, to a great extent will be deterred from doing so this year, for the reason either that the war has rendered and wiped out of existence their favorite ones, or else they are no longer easily accessible, even if they do not lie actually within the zone of belligerent activity. It is also probable that only in a less degree tourists who are residents of Europe will be similarly affected, and an unusually large influx of these may be expected in America, many of whom will be attracted toward the Exposition.

While San Francisco may be the principal objective of all these tourists, they will miss an excellent opportunity for enjoyment and a large part of the pleasure possible on such a trip if, in at least one direction, they fail to travel via the Canadian Pacific Railway and its connecting lines on the Pacific Coast. Aside from the unparalleled scenic beauty and grandeur of the Canadian Rockies and the Selkirk Range, the valley of the Thompson River and the wild canyons of the mighty Fraser River, all of which may be viewed by daylight from luxuriously equipped observation cars, there lies beyond a stretch of more than fifteen hundred miles, extending from Vancouver to the Mexican boundary, hardly a league of which can fail to interest the tourist, and add materially to the pleasure of his journey. The finest salmon fishing in the world is found at Sicamous and every provision is made for the tourist by the guide at very little expense. A large part, if not all of this, is lost to one who travels to and from San Francisco by the more southerly routes; some of it need be missed if one goes or comes back over the Canadian Pacific Railway. The accompanying pictures are merely slight glimpses of the beauties of the Canadian route.

WOUNDED SOLDIERS MADE TO TRAVEL 55 DAYS

The New York representative of an Austrian manufacturing firm was talking to a party of friends, the war, as usual, being the subject of conversation.

"The Vienna firm I represent," he said, "is composed of a father and two sons, and is of sufficient importance to employ a thousand workmen and sell its goods all over the world, though it is not doing any business outside of Austria at present. One of the sons went to the war as a captain.

"Not long ago I had a letter from the captain by way of Vladivostock, through American friends there. The young fellow told me that in a battle with the Russians his entire regiment had been caught in an ambush or an enfilading fide and every one of them, except 36, had been killed. The 36 were captured, and he was one of them, but he had not escaped the deadly hail of bullets. One had struck him in the mouth and passed through his head coming out back of his ear; a piece of shrapnel had struck him on the right side of the face, destroying the right eye, taking away most of his cheek and jaw cutting off the right ear, and destroying the hearing; another piece had gone through the upper part of his chest and the adjoining shoulder, and a bullet had pierced his thigh.

"That would seem to be almost enough reason for a man to die on the field of battle, but the captain did not. Instead, he was able in some fashion to walk, and the Russians made him walk six miles to a railroad station, with other prisoners. The medical treatment he received was hardly worth mentioning, though, evidently, it was enough to keep him together.

"At the railroad station he was loaded into a car, and for 22 days he was on his way to some point or other where, after a day or two, he was loaded up again in the same kind of transportation and given a trip of 33 days. At the end of this journey he was landed in a hospital at Vladivostock, thousands of miles from where he started, and suffering tortures all the way. Still, he did not quit living and when he wrote me he was able to get out and move around.

"He said the prisoners were practically at liberty about the town, but that really did not mean much, because it was so cold that they were around very little during the day, and if a man tried to get away and remained out all night he was certain to freeze. He had not been able to tell any of his story to his people at home and had managed to get a letter to me through the American Consul.

"I have written to his people, but I hadn't the heart to tell them all his awful story, and for that reason I did not forward his letter as I had received it. I am now making an effort through the State Department at Washington to have him released, or something done to better his condition, though he does not complain at all as one might suppose he would."

Thin Folks Get Fat On Three Meals A Day

Specialist Explains Why Food Does Not Always Produce Flesh and How Thin People Can Increase Weight.

Most people who are thin and under-normal weight eat heartily but get no increase in flesh, while plump, chunky folks or normal weight eat less than they do and keep stout all the time. The underweight ones finally decide Nature intended them to be thin, that the amount or nature of their food has nothing to do with flesh-making and that nothing can make them fat. But this is not so.

A stout, strong, robust body can come alone from food nourishment. Food is the source of all fat and if you are thin and underweight it is merely a certain indication that only a small portion of the flesh-making nourishment in your meals is reaching your blood and tissues. The assimilative functions of your stomach and intestines are not working properly and the larger part of the food value is leaving your body as waste.

To correct such a condition, to gain flesh, increase weight and get 100 per cent. value from your food, a single Sargol tablet taken at each meal will work wonders. Sargol is a scientific combination of six splendid assimilative agents. It promptly stops the leakage of fats and while aiding digestion, also separates every last particle of the fats, oils, sugars and starches of your food from the waste matter, and prepares the former into rich, ripe, flesh-producing nourishment which the blood readily absorbs and distributes throughout the body. Weight increase usually begins within a very few days after Sargol is used with meals. In my opinion two ordinary hearty meals eaten with Sargol is equal in flesh-making value to six ordinary hearty meals eaten without it. Try it, you people who are thin, run down and underweight, and see if I'm not right.

You can buy Sargol from practically any druggist hereabouts and every package contains a positive guarantee of weight increase or money back. While also valuable as a treatment for nervous indigestion, it should not be used by people who do not wish to increase weight.

WEDDING BELLS

SCOTT—WHITMORE.

APSLEY, May 26.—The marriage of Miss Dora May Whitmore, daughter of Mrs. Effie Whitmore, to Mr. Merton J. Scott, of Brandon, Sask., took place on Wednesday, May 19th, at her home in Chandos, at 4.30 o'clock p.m. The Rev. Jas. Gould officiated and Miss Ella Brown played the wedding march. A large gathering of friends were present.

The bride, who was brought in and given away by her brother, Mr. Fred Whitmore, looked charming in her dainty white gown of silk voile, with an overdress of embroidered net. Her long tulle veil was arranged with a circular wreath of fine orange blossoms.

Little Miss Flora Wilson was a sweet flower girl in a pretty white embroidered frock with pink sash, and carried an armful of pink and white apple blossoms.

The bride was attended by her sister-in-law, Mrs. Dan Whitmore, wearing a dainty white gown. Mr. Daniel Whitmore, brother of the bride, was groomsman.

The happy couple stood under an arch of evergreens and white and pink apple blossoms prettily arranged. After the ceremony about 140 guests partook of the sumptuous wedding supper. The evening was spent very pleasantly in dancing. Splendid music was furnished.

Amid the abundance of good wishes the happy couple left on Tuesday morning for Brandon, Sask., where they will make their future home.

They received many handsome and useful presents.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

ATTRACTIVE AND ORIGINAL.

By Anabel Worthington.

It is rather difficult these days to find a design that is different, but no one could accuse this charming model of lack of originality. The curve of the yoke a guimpe edge, the glimpse of girdle and the shape of the skirt yoke are as different as can be from what is seen every day. To most persons this is a distinct advantage. There is a separate guimpe, without sleeves, consisting of front and back and the collar. The cuff is made of the guimpe material and trimmed with the same little buttons that fasten the front edges of the guimpe.

The overwaist has front, back and sleeve top cut in one piece. For full length sleeve a separate sleeve section is sewed on. It is just a matter of taste whether the sleeve is made long or short, but the short sleeve means the sacrifice of the smart little cuff, since this belongs with the long sleeve only. The section of girdle is attached to the guimpe and the overwaist droops over it softly and becomingly.

The lower part of the skirt is in two pieces, with a seam at front and at back, and is gathered to the yoke, except at the front, where the yoke is cut up in the shape of a square. In spite of the gathers the lower edge is conservative in width, measuring about two and a half yards. For medium size the dress requires 6¾ yards of 36 inch material, and the guimpe 1½ yards in the same width. The pattern, No. 7,139, can be obtained in six sizes, from 34 to 44 inches bust measure. Price, 10 cents.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25c.

REGIMENT ADOPTED BABY

Kind-hearted Russians Looking After Helpless Turkish Infant

"Our regiment has adopted a two-year-old Turkish girl baby," writes a Cossack who is serving with the Russian army of the Caucasus. He explains:

"During our forward movement one of our men found in a farm house this baby, which had been abandoned by her fleeing parents. The starving little creature was cleaned, clothed and fed, and then taken to the staff headquarters. In the Greek church of the village the foundling was christened according to the rites of the Orthodox church, the commander of the regiment acting as godfather, and Princess Gelovanna, a Red Cross nurse and wife of a member of the Duma, as godmother. The child was named Alexandra Donskaia, after the name of the regiment.

"The officers and men of the regiment subscribed monthly amounts sufficient to pay for rearing and educating their regimental daughter."

Among the poor fishermen of the Labrador, $1,500 was collected for the Patriotic Fund.

TRY THIS IF YOU HAVE DANDRUFF

There is one sure way that never fails to remove dandruff completely and that is to dissolve it. This destroys it entirely. To do this, just get about four ounces of plain, ordinary liquid arvon; apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the finger tips.

By morning, most if not all, of your dandruff will be gone, and three or four more applications will completely dissolve and entirely destroy every single sign and trace of it, no matter how much dandruff you may have.

You will find, too, that all itching and digging of the scalp will stop instantly, and your hair will be fluffy, lustrous, glossy, silky and soft, and look and feel a hundred times better.

You can get liquid arvon at any drug store. It is inexpensive, and four ounces is all you will need. This simple remedy has never been known to fail.

Comparison of Bullets.

On the left is a drawing of a German copper-tipped bullet picked up at the battle of Neuve Chapelle. Beside it is shown a .303-pointed bullet for the Ross rifle, commonly known as Mark VII. The round-nose bullet is the regular .303 Mark VI. bullet as used by the Canadians at the front. The effect of the pointed bullet is that it fires higher than the round-nose.

THE CULT OF KHAKI

The following article on the paramount popularity of khaki appeared in the London Times:

The red coat and the black, fabled in other days irresistible to the feminine eye, have surrendered at discretion to the dun-colored suit of the modern campaigner. Khaki's the only wear, and lucky is he who has youth enough or sufficient standing in the service to put it on; for thereby he has womankind at his feet. In itself, particularly in the officer's uniform, and the horse soldier's at that, this unostentatious cloth is curiously becoming. Splendid and dazzling ceremonial uniforms may be, but this quiet habit has a spell of its own, for it approximates in its perfection to the excellence of faultless civilian dress, without abating one jot of martial quality. It is, indeed, most martial, and the god of war himself would look well in it. In the mass it suggests efficiency and eternal fitness; it carries, too, a note of reassurance in its protective mimicry, a hint borrowed from birds and animals. As you look at the long drab lines you know that no life will be wantonly sacrificed to needless display. The red coat had its undeniable glory and inspiration, but it took a wanton toll of bravery. It lies by, therefore, for gala days and the happy, celebration of peace, when that in good time shall be here. Meanwhile, it is the day of the "khaki-man."

On fair lips the phrase "khaki-man" has become something sacrosanct. It is pronounced with a reverent affection which "red-coat" never won., It implies at the present hour the whole sum of womanly devotion. And in certain circles it carries an added piquancy, because of the unwonted constitution of our new armies. The society man as private and non-commissioned officer is just sufficiently bizarre to be lionized in a manner impossible to his superior in other times. Then the soldier one met was an officer as a matter of course, and it would have been banal to insist upon his rank or even to mention it. One did not say, "We dined last night, one colonel, two majors and three captains." Atrocious! But in these paradoxical days it is quite permissible to say, "Such a jolly dinner last night. Only think, one private, two corporals, and a colour-sergeant!" And the private who has to call his own son "sir" on duty is a most exquisite rare bird to have met. Better still if he took one in to dinner.

Drab as it is, the inherent and becoming manliness of khaki prevails. Our fair allies across the Channel looked for an expeditionary force ablaze in traditional scarlet, and for a moment they were disappointed. Only for a moment. The man Thomas Atkins justified his garb and his garb justified him. Jeannette, were she questioned to-day, would say she prefers him as he is, in quiet campaigning kit. She treasures his bronze badges as fervently as if they had been glistening nickel, or even silver. And here at home it is the same. Watch the returned on short leaves in any public place, fashionable or unfashionable, and see how the woman's eyes brighten and their manner radiates worship as they fete their warrior. For them he is no dull figure. Yet, essentially, they bow still before bright color as of old, for their soldier in khaki wears for them the red badge of courage.

The Hohenzollerns.

The house of Hohenzollern, of which is the present emperor of Germany, had its origin in Thassilo, who built the castle of Hohenzollern about the year 800. In 1417 Frederick of Nuremberg, his descendant was made Elector of Brandenburg. The Prince of Hohenzollern abdicated in favor of the King of Prussia in 1849. Charles, son of Charles Anthony, was elected Prince of Roumania in 1866. His brother, Leopold, was nominated for the throne of Spain in 1870, but withdrew on account of the excitement of the time, brought on by the Franco-Prussian difficulty.

TRANSPORT SHIPS

Since the outbreak of the war transport vessels with their freight of troops, guns, and provisions have steamed to and fro across the Channel with the regularity of clockwork. Hundreds of ships were commandeered for this purpose, cargo boats, cattle boats, steamers, and emigrant vessels being pressed into service. Each transport was fitted so as to carry horses, guns, motor cars, aeroplanes, and the hundred-and-one necessities of war. Great cranes on the quay side hoist the guns, with their waterproof covers, on to the transport, and they are firmly stacked in the hold with other heavy objects where weight does not perceptibly interfere with the balance of the ship. When possible, horses are led on to the transports through covered-in gangways, but those who prove vicious are coaxed into a wooden cage and are slung on board by cranes. Each horse on the vessel is placed in a narrow stall only 2 feet 5 inches in width. It is not possible for the animal to lie down in this narrow prison, so, to provide the horse with some means of resting his legs, a canvas sling like a hammock is placed under his body. On this the animal can rest his whole weight and can sleep without falling.

The captain of a transport has to convey the troops on board safely to their destination, and there his responsibility ends. The feeding of the soldiers is in the hands of the Government, who supply the food and drink necessary for men and horses during the voyage. A military commander sails with every transport and controls the troops. In the present war the troop transports cast off from the English shore with little excitement or fuss. There is no shrieking of sirens, playing of bands, or crowds or hand-waving friends to give the ships a "send-off," as was the case in the South African War, when voyages considerably longer than that that across the Channel had to be negotiated.

About Zeppelin Machines

The building of a Zeppelin is not the work of a day. The mere work on the vessels takes an entire year, and when he work is done another three months must be spent in testing. Stretched in a framework of girders, there are from seventeen to twenty-five balloonettes from end to end. Over these and over the girders is an outer skin of proofed canvas. Slung under the great length is a series of cabins.

Right in front is the station of the lookout man, who is in charge of the starting and the landing; he has anchors slung beneath him. In the first boat, which is entirely covered in, are two petrol engines. Behind this boat is the gangway, fitted up with sleeping berths for the crew. In the centre is the observation station. It is from here that the bombs are dropped, and it is in here that the marvellous steering and sighting apparatus is installed, as well as the wireless plant.

RECIPE TO DARKEN GRAY HAIR

This Home Made Mixture Darkens Gray Hair and Removes Dandruff.

To a half pint of water add:
Bay Rum ..... 1 oz.
Orlex Compound ..... a small box
Glycerine ..... ½ oz.

These are all simple ingredients that you can buy from any druggist at very little cost, and mix them yourself. Apply to the scalp once a day for two weeks, then once every other week until all the mixture is used.

A half pint should be enough to darken the gray hair, rid the head of dandruff and kill the dandruff germs. It stops the hair from falling out, and relieves itching and scalp diseases. It promotes the growth of the hair and makes harsh hair soft and glossy.

MONTREAL STEAMER IS SENT TO BOTTOM BY GERMAN SUB.

After Sending a Torpedo Into the Morwenna Bound From Cardiff to Sydney N.S. German Pirates Turned Their Guns on the Helpless Crew, Killing One and Wounding Three Others---Italians Meet With Little Resistance in Their Invasion of Austria.

FRENCH GAIN GROUND IN THE WEST

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, May 27.—The Montreal steamer Morwenna was torpedoed yesterday.

The Morwenna is a steel steamer of 1,414 tons owned by the St. Lawrence Shipping Company, and under British register from the port of Montreal. She was built in 1904 at the Dundee Shipping yards. She is 260 feet in length and 34.2 at her beam, and was equipped with wireless. Her master as given by Lloyds register is L. E. Holmes.

The Morwenna was bound in ballast from Cardiff to Sydney, N.S. She was attacked by a German submarine yesterday morning 160 miles south of Ireland. The submarine shot a torpedo against her side and then opened fire upon her, shelling the steamer several minutes. One member of the crew was killed and three wounded by shell fire. The remainder of the crew escaped to the boats, and after drifting about for several hours, were picked up by a trawler.

LONDON, May 27.—With instructions to make a thorough investigation of the reported submarine attack on the American steamer Nebraskan, a naval attache from the American Embassy left for Liverpool to-day to meet the steamer when she comes up the Mersey. Wireless messages to the Admiralty said that the Nebraskan was proceeding slowly through St. George's Channel, and was due to arrive at Liverpool this afternoon or to-night. The Admiralty disclaimed knowledge of the presence of any British mines near Fastnet and the officials refused to admit the possibility that British mines might have broken loose from their moorings and drifted along the southern coast of Ireland.

AMSTERDAM May 27.—Germany has called all her untrained Landsturm over 35 into active service according to Berlin advices to-day. Italy's entrance into the war is said to have necessitated this step.

OTTAWA, May 27.—Canadian casualties officially reported and recorded up to this morning total 5,757. This includes 924 killed in action, 3,616 wounded, and 1,217 missing.

All of the casualties of the Langemarck battle are not in yet. There are also casualties from more recent action near Fistubert. Among these being men who formerly belonged to the 23rd, 30th and 32nd Battalions, which crossed to England in February, and have been used as reinforcements.

PARIS, May 27.—Eighteen French aviators bombarded the Bavarian town of Ludwighaven on the Rhine, setting fire to German ammunition factories.

LONDON, May 27.—An Athens despatch received here to-day assert that Djavid Pasha, former Turkish Minister of Finance, has left Constantinople for Berlin. His purpose, according to Athens despatches is to inform Germany that Turkey is unable to continue the war and finds it necessary to conclude a separate peace.

BERLIN'S CLAIM.

BERLIN, via wireless, May 27.—"Our airships successfully attacked the British fortifications at South-End-on-Sea," said an official statement from the War Office this afternoon, dealing with the Zeppelin raid on the English resort.

AMERICANS SENTENCED.

BERLIN, via The Hague, May 27.—Charged with insulting a German officer, Mrs. Harriet Boyce and daughter, of San Francisco, have been sentenced to three weeks' imprisonment at the little Bavarian town of Lindau. Ambassador Gerard to-day sent a memorandum to the German Foreign Office. Pending action by the Foreign Office Mrs. Boyce and her daughter are at liberty under $50,000 bail offered by the American counsel at Munich.

NEW CABINET MEETS.

LONDON, May 27.—King George held Privy Council this morning, at which seals and warrants of office were handed to the new members of the Cabinet. Subsequently the first meeting of the new coalition Cabinet was held. The King has conferred a knighthood upon Frederick E. Smith, Solicitor-General in the new ministry.

DANISH BOAT SUNK.

LONDON, May 27.—The Danish steamer Betty was torpedoed by a German submarine in the North Sea yesterday and sunk. The members of the crew were rescued.

CHIASSSO, Switzerland, May 27.—The first great battle of the Austro-Italian war may be fought in the Trentino. The Italian army is pushing steadily northward into the Tyrolean Alps, advancing over passes and snowy peaks a mile high. In practically every instance the Austrian advance guard is fleeing without offering serious resistance, and falling back upon the main body of the Trentino army. Advices received here to-day indicate that the Austrians are massed in great force in the Adige River section. Strong Italian forces are being brought up to support the advance guard raiding the Trentino frontier district. Swiss military men believe a clash between the two main bodies may occur within a few days.

THE EASTERN FIGHTING.

PETROGRAD, May 27.—Under irresistible Austro-German artillery fire the Russian line between Przemysl and Jaroslau has been forced to fall back slightly. The War Office despatches to-day described the Austro-German bombardment is "A hurricane of fire." The enemy artillery men swept the exposed Russian positions along the Paroslau-Przemysl railway until a portion of the Slav line fell back to more protected positions along the west bank of the San. Reinforcements, including heavy artillery reached the Russians and they are now successfully meeting the enemy attack both north and south of Przemysl.

Official despatches announced victory over the Turks in the Caucasus. The Russian troops occupied the Caucasian village of Mirandaub.

THE WESTERN SITUATION.

PARIS, May 27.—Official despatches to-day reported fresh progress by the French in the direction of the German railway centre of Lens. Southwest of Souches the French drove the Germans from a trench in a most desperate bayonet fighting of many days. East of Neuville the French artillery converted an advancing German column into a screaming mass of dead and wounded. The Germans launched two attacks against the Belgians near Dixmude. In both instances they were driven off. Ludwighaven, where the French airmen blew up ammunition factories, is 140 miles from the French lines

PETERBORO' MAN IS KILLED AT PORT CREDIT, ONT.

Wesley Crouter Was Identified by Letters and Papers in His Pocket When His Body Was Found on the Railway.

RELATIVES ARE HERE

Some letters and papers in the pockets of a man killed on the Railway at Port Credit, last night, identified him as Wesley Crouter, a local man, son of Mr. Albert Crouter of this city. County Provincial Constable Rutledge telephoned Chief of Police Thompson, here, last evening, to have him locate the family of the deceased man, who, he believed, resided here.

Crouter was a well-known character in Peterborough. He enlisted from Lindsay with the 21st Battalion of the second contingent, but got into trouble at Kingston and was discharged. He was married and has two children. His wife and family also reside in this city. His father, Mr. Albert Crouter, has a contract for scavenger work in the city.

It is not known how the accident happened which caused the death of Crouter.

It is probable that the remains will be brought ere for burial.

Two Big Games In City League On Saturday

After a week's lay-off the City League will be in full swing at Riverside Park again on Saturday, when the Empires and East City teams will clash in the first game, and the Classics and Thistles in the second. Two good games will be on the cards and there is special interest over the 2 o'clock battle, which brings together the undefeated Empires and Dan McCabe's aggressive East City gang. "Yebbie" Flaherty will likely do the heaving for the Empires, while Kirn will perform for the cross-river bunch. The Thistles will show a strengthened line-up to make things interesting for the Classics.

BANK CLEARINGS

The bank clearings for the week ending to-day were $851,228, a decrease of $8,111 over last week. The corresponding week the previous month the clearings were $327,218.

PETERBORO' BOY'S LETTERS WRITTEN BY MRS. ASTOR

Wife of American Multi-millionaire Also Writes to Mrs. Parrington to Tell Her Not to Be Worried About Her Wounded Son

INTERESTING LETTERS

Mrs. J. B. Parrington, 339 Aylmer street, has received a letter from her son, Private Tommy Parrington, of the 57th detachment, 2nd Battalion, wounded at Langemarck. Pte. Parrington is in the Duchess of Connaught's Red Cross Hospital at Cliveden, Taplow, England, and a most interesting feature is that the letter was written for him by Mrs. Astor, wife of the American multi-millionaire, who has turned over her magnificent estate for hospital purposes. The injured boy's arm is in such condition as to prevent him writing, and his letter was prepared by Mrs. Astor, who also wrote a personal letter to Mrs. Parrington.

Pte. Parrington says:

Sunday, May 9th.

Dear Mother,—My arm is getting along all right. The doctors think it will be in good shape once it starts healing. My shoulder is in plaster of Paris to hold the arm firm. There is a steady pain to it, but I sleep well. The nurses are very kind—everybody is very kind, and I have confidence in my doctor, Major Spears from Lindsay.

Give my love to brothers and sisters and all at home. I don't think that I shall be going back soon. The Salvation Army Band played for us yesterday and they moved my bed out on the lawn. Many visitors came today, but I did not catch their names.

Lord Curzon gave us a speech and said that Italy will be in by the time you get this.

I will write again soon.

Your loving son,
TOM.

Mrs. Astor writes:

My Dear Mrs. Parrington,—Your son is going on well. He is so good and uncomplaining and if he suffers he says very little. He looks very cheerful and is getting every care and attention, so I think you need not worry about him.

Yours,
NANCY ASTOR.

Real Piano Bargains

No opportunity has occurred for a long time for Peterborough citizens to select from such an assortment of new and used pianos as that offered by the Nordheimer Piano Sale, announced elsewhere in to-day's Examiner. Many of these instruments have come to the Nordheimer firm in trade and may be bought at reasonably low prices, or on monthly terms, within reason. If you have a favourite make you are almost sure to find it in the list. Used player pianos, too, are offered at prices within reach of most people. The occasion of this sale is the removal of the Nordheimer Company to their handsome new building in Toronto. Peterborough citizens desirous of interviewing the Sales Agent, may arrange for an appointment with Mr. Frank Whitehouse, the local Nordheimer District Representative, at his sales rooms, No. 118, Hunter Street.

DRIVER J. HANTON OF 24TH BATTERY ON WOUNDED LIST

Another Casualty Among Peterboro' Artillerymen at the Front is Reported—Was Employed by Peter Hamilton Co.

TO-DAY'S MILITARY NEWS

Yesterday's casualty list contained the name of another 24th Field Battery members in the person of Driver John Hanton of the 4th Battery, First Brigade. Driver Hanton, who left here with the 24th Field Battery quota, is reported wounded. He is well known in Peterborough, where he had lived for two years prior to the outbreak of war. He was employed at the Peter Hamilton M'fg Co. and boarded at Mrs. Bullied's, Water Street. Driver Hanton came here from Paisley Scotland, and a short time before he enlisted he received word of the death of his mother. Just a few days ago Adj. McElhinney received a letter from Driver Hanton which was published in Tuesday's Examiner.

The Lindsay Warder says:

Five soldiers got their walking papers from the armouries, and will leave town to-day. The men are being sent back to Toronto. The civic authorities, it is understood, could register a charge in the criminal court against one of them, but his offence was of such a nature that in the interest of society it was deemed expedient to let the fellow fall into other hands, and where he is better known. The man in question behaved badly at Fenelon Falls, it is stated, while spending the 24th in the village, his conduct being so disgraceful that he was placed under arrest during the day.

Comforts For The Soldiers

On Tuesday afternoon the ladies of the Canadian Kitchener League packed and shipped a large box to our boys fighting in the trenches, consisting of 27 pairs socks, 27 handkerchiefs, lead pencils, writing material, reading matter, salve, tobacco, games, emergency bandages, pepperment, foot powder. The box was sent to Major Mills, and the League is quite confident our own Peterborough boys will enjoy its contents.

Since the organization the League has been knitting, and now as the weather becomes finer the demand is not so great for knitted articles, so the League is doing hospital work and is busy preparing bandages, etc.

THE WEATHER

This ice was to be seen this morning on pools of water, and it is quite probable that damage has been done, particularly in the lower lying sections of the county. The official registration was 29 degrees, or three degrees below the freezing point.—W.P.

PETERBORO' PLEASES AS A CONVENTION CITY

Doctors and Exhibitors Express Approval of Arrangements and Facilities—Officers Elected Include Peterboro' Men.

TO TORONTO IN 1916

Peterborough may regard with considerable pride the present convention of the Ontario Medical Association and the M. O. H. conference, which was concluded yesterday. This is really the first occasion on which the doctors assembled outside of Toronto and other large cities, and the venture has been an unqualified success. Dr. F. Arnold Clarkson of Toronto, Secretary of the Ontario Medical Association, told the Examiner to-day that the local arrangements left little to be desired.

Speaking particularly of the conveniences for the various meetings and the exhibits he said the facilities were exceptionally good. Meetings were held simultaneously in several of the large rooms in the Armouries, in the Collegiate Institute and Public Library assembly halls. Directing the visitors to these places was greatly simplified by their proximity. The various halls bordered Central Park and were within easy approach of the convention headquarters at the Armouries, which Dr. Clarkson termed a splendid location. The drill hall with its exhibits was the logical focal point for the visitors, a feature which the manufacturers' representatives found highly satisfactory. Without exception the exhibitors stated that their work had been successful. They had met practically all the doctors and had secured considerable good business.

Praise for Local Doctors.

In his presidential address at the meeting in the Collegiate Institute hall, last night, Dr. J. A. Gibb Wishart of Toronto complimented the local doctors upon the smooth working and complete arrangements for the convention. While some of the Peterborough men may have been more assidnous than others, their selection for particular mention would not meet with their approval. However, it seems that they worked unselfishly for the success of the convention, for the entertainment of the visitors and, incidentally, their efforts have reflected a most favourable opinion of Peterborough and its citizens.

The Attendance.

The registration reevals that 281 Medical Officers of Health were present, and a total of 445 doctors signed their names. It is stated that quite a number neglected to register. And this large attendance is recorded in an exceptionally critical year. It is hardly necessary to remark upon the high standing of the present visitors.

Officers Elected.

The Ontario Medical Association accepted the invitation of Toronto for next year's convention. The officers elected for 1915-16 are as follows:

President—H. B. Anderson, Toronto.
Vice-President — G. S. Cameron, Peterborough.
2nd Vice-President—A. T. Emmerson, Goderich.
3rd Vice-President — C. B. Oliver, Fort William.
4th Vice-President—W. K. Collbeck of Welland.
Secretary—F. A. Arnold, Toronto.
Asst.-Sec.—F. C. Harrison, Toronto.
Treasurer—J. B. Elliott, Toronto
Delegates to the Canadian Medical Association—D. J. Gibb Wishart, Toronto; F. C. Neal, Peterborough; H. J. Hamilton, Toronto.

LIEUT. FESSENDEN AND HIS PLATOON WERE SURROUNDED

Practically No Ammunition Left, No Rations or Sleep for Two Days and Had Not a Chance to Reach the Enemy

IS IN SAXONY

The following extracts are from a letter to his sister from Lieut. Fessenden of Peterborough, of the 48th Highlanders, who was in the missing list after Langemarck. It was written from Bischofswerde, in Saxony, on May 1st:

Dear Dorothy,—We have been here since the 27th of April, and are getting on fine. Please send my letters and cards home (to Peterborough, Ont.), as I can only write six postcards and two letters each month. Will have lots of experiences to tell you after the war, but can't write much now, as incoming and outgoing mail is all censored.

"Our last battle was a tremendous one, but on the fourth day Macdonald, Smith, Jones, Rider (an Imperial officer), and I were absolutely surrounded with what were left of our men. We had practically no ammunition left, had had no rations or sleep for two days, and were under such a heavy rifle and artillery fire that we had not the remotest chance of reaching the enemy, who were under cover from 100 to 300 yards on all sides. Our holding out had no tactical advantage any longer.

"Please send me two khaki shirts with collars, and hose, and then something to eat in the way of biscuits, chocolate, etc. I enclose cheque. We can buy some clothes here, and a few extras at meal time.

"Only allowed to write one page."

Bales Sent By Progressive Club

Supplies for University of Toronto and Queen's Canadian Military Hospital

During the last three weeks the Peterobrough Progressive Club has sent two bales; one to the University of Toronto Hospital and one to the Queen's Canadian Military Hospital. The contents of the bales are as follows: Eighteen night shirts, 180 hospital handkerchiefs, 36 operating room towels, 9 wash cloths, one sack of bandages and a bag of sterilized dressings, 14 day shirts, 10 night shirts, 2 pair bed socks, 1 pair slippers, 147 khaki handkerchiefs, 106 hospital handkerchiefs, 545 bandage rolls, 1 scrap book. In addition to the above the Club sent on May 5th, 22 pairs of socks and 12 packages of tobacco to Captain Garnet Greer for the men of his battalion. The tobacco was donated by Mrs. Pilling.

Memorial Service For Departed S.A. Comrades

One year ago next Saturday eve, the great wreck of the Empress of Ireland took place.

The local Salvation Band very nearly made arrangements to go on that boat, but a matter of saving $2.50 per ticket stopped them.

A great number of the Salvation Army were aboard, including Commissioner Rees, the Army Leader in Canada, and the local Corps are holding great memorial services this week end.

Adjutant McElhiney has arranged to have the photos of the crowd who went down on the Empress thrown on the canvas at the Temple Saturday night, and also the slides of the great funeral services held in Toronto when the victims of the disaster were buried. The public is cordially invited.

Adjt. McElhiney is sparing no pains nor expense to make this worth while.

A LITTLE WAR ROMANCE.

There's a considerable element of romance and cross play of interests in the following incident:

Moved thereto, doubtless, by the fact that his fiancee, was drowned in the Lusitania, through German fiendishness, a young bank clerk in Toronto, James Moir Ross Torrie, has enlisted to fight the Germans. Last July young Torrie saved a German from drowning in Toronto Bay, and last night, Bishop Reeve, at the close of a confirmation service, pinned upon the young man's breast the medal of the Royal Humane Society. It was the original intention that there should be a double presentation, Torrie's fiancee, Miss Kellenbach, of German extraction, having assisted at the rescue of the German from drowning; but as the German pirates sent her down to death on the Lusitania, of course, this was impossible. Mr. Torrie, who heroically saved a German's life, and through German savagery lost his German wife, has now turned his face heroically to the work of making some German lives in the field of war, pay tribute for his loss. He will doubtless show as much heroism in destroying life—the work of war—as he did in saving life.

THE DESCENT OF THE DOCTORS.

During the present week we have had a visit—or as the irreverent might say, a visitation—of about half a thousand doctors from all parts of the province. This circumstance calls the attention of the thinking to the place of the physician in our social, civic and municipal economy; and will give new play to appreciation of, as well as prejudice against, the profession. There is a popular prejudice, mostly founded, as most prejudices are, upon ignorance, against doctors as a class, and there is no limit to the desparagement, associated with this prejudice. To show that they are unfounded, it is only necessary to mention one instance—Doctors, the ignorant say, write their prescriptions in Latin so that the patients won't know what poisons they are being served with. Prescriptions were first written in Latin at a time when Latin was a universal language, the language of diplomacy, the language with which every educated man was familiar. A prescription written by a Canadian physician in Latin, if presented to a druggist in any country in the world, could be properly compounded through the medium of the universal medical language. This is only mentioned as a type of the ignorance and misunderstanding that create popular prejudice against physicians. Companion to this is the practice of a patient waiting till he is nearly dead before he calls a doctor, and because a miracle of healing is not done the doctor is blamed.

But in spite of all this, the doctors flourish and humanity is the gainer. Medical research, and improvement in surgical science, have made tremendous strides. Operations that a few years ago were considered capital and only to be trusted to some distinguished and expensive specialist, are now classed as minor and common with the humblest rural doctor. Not only has the healing branch of the art been vastly improved and human life prolonged, and human suffering mitigated, but the higher branch of the healing art — prevention — has made immense advance; and improvement in sanitation, in face of bitter opposition from ignorance and the indifference of ignorance, has added immeasurely to the promotion of the natural health. When, as told at the meeting of the Medical Health Officers, as a type of general provincial conditions, systematic sanitation has in the short space of fourteen years reduced the death rate in the City of Toronto nearly seven-fold—from 40 per 100,000 to 7, credit cannot be withheld from medical science applied to solving the problem of disease prevention, promotion of public health and human happiness.

We make the doctors the butt of dull wits, but as a class the doctors of Canada, as well as other countries, are the cream of professional philanthropy and human benefaction. Their intimate association with humanity in its direst needs, begets a wide catholicity of sympathy, and we find among the physicians of any town or city, doctors leading in all good works, for the welfare of its citizens. The part doctors have taken in the sublime work of caring for the sufferings caused by war makes thes heroes in their class. We may poke weak fun at the doctors, but they stand between us and the grim monster many a time, and only the fact that humanity is not immortal, prevents a larger demonstration of the value of their services. We have about 500 doctors in convention here now, and it is probable that in no gathering of similar numbers could be found greater collective intellectual force, applied with more trained skill, in the interests of humanity and the well-being of the community, than is to b efound among the half thousand physicians now in consultation over the case of the patient, Ontario.

PESSIMISTIC PATIIOTISM.

Our evening contemporary, the Review, gives prominence in its editorial columns to this misleading expression of fact and opinion:

> In Canada, despite the urgent appeals of well-known speakers, members of Parliament, the press and other leaders of public opinion, the number of recruits offering is far below what is required to make good the wastage of war. Thousands of young men, apparently without home or business ties, attended hockey matches all winter, and are now flocking to baseball and lacrosse matches apparently indifferent to the appeals being made to them to enlist for overseas service. This case is not going to be won by young men singing Tipperary and Rule Britannia at baseball games. Unless we get a better response in Canada than we have been getting it will be necessary for us to adopt some form of conscription.

The above, coming from a responsible source, would be a serious matter; as it is, it is misleading enough to warrant a little attention in justice to Canadian patriotism and interest in the war. Let us consider for a moment what Canada has done in supplying fighting forces, and in contributing additional men to "supply the wastage of war"—"The number of recruits is far below what is required to make good the wastage of war." In the first place Canada was called upon last August to furnish 25,000 men. Within two weeks' time there were 33,000 Canadian soldiers in training in the camp at Valcartier, seven or eight thousands in excess of the number called for. They were sent across the water and, after training in England a full division—22,000—was sent to France—to the battle lines where they gloriously made their presence felt, leaving eight or ten thousand in England as reserves "to supply the wastage of war." Early in February 8,000 more Canadians were sent to England as reinforcing battalions and now a complete division of 20,000 are now in England, with six reinforcing Canadian battalions for the first and second Canadian battalions, ready to sail for England. The third contingent is now complete as to numbers, and is in training in Canada. The fourth contingent battalions are now being organized, and there is, contrary to what is stated in the Review, no lack of recruits offering. On the contrary there is the greatest activity all over the country. If our contemporary wants to be convinced, it has only to come to The Examiner office bulletin boards to see a photograph of a scene in Calgary—men lined up four deep in front of the recruiting station two hours before the office opened—with the entire band of the 103rd Regiment volunteering and playing patriotic airs, while the recruiting was going on. This morning's Toronto papers state that since the call to raise the 58th Battalion came, the offices of the three Toronto regiments, Queen's Own, Grenadiers and Highlanders, have been beseiged, and the officers are certain that there will be no trouble in meeting the drafts on their regiments called for. And though Peterborough has not been asked for any specific number, recruiting is going on satisfactorily, and there is no doubt that this city will send a good addition to the 800 soldiers and 30 officers Peterborough has already furnished.

Canada cannot be said to have done badly in contributing soldiers to fight the battles of the Empire. So far 110,000 Canadians, who make the best soldiers in the world—according to the test of actual battle—have answered the call. It is also to be remarked that no call, whether for infantry, mounted men, artillery or men for hospital work, has not been fully met; and the latest call will be as the others, judging by the way recruiting is going forward. If there is any criticism to be offered in the matter of recruiting, it should be directed against the Government, which, it is felt, has not made as ample opportunities for recruiting as might have been done. But this is not insisted upon. The Government has had its hands full, and the success that has attended its handling of the war situation has been splendidly contributed to by the patriotic spirit and action of the men of Canada, who have offered for active service abroad.

In regard to the statement, that "in spite of the urgent appeals of well-known speakers . . . . the number of recruits offering is far below, etc.," it is worth while to state that the only "well-known speaker"; the only public man of capital importance, who has made "urgent appeals," has been Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who spoke twice in the Province of Quebec, as only he can speak, in the interests of Canada responding to the call, with, as one result, that that province is nobly doing its duty, and we see in the despatches mention made of the deeds and wounds in the battle line of members of two Montreal regiments. There is, so far, no need of Canada being compelled to resort to conscription. Canada has answered every call nobly and is nobly answering the latest call; and arm chair critics are wasting their time in threatening conscription. The Canadian heart is sound; the Canadian spirit worthy of the best traditions of the Motherland, in display of practical patriotism; in measuring up to the demands of the moving spirit of the British Breed—duty.

CRITICISM INVALUABLE—IN ENGLAND.

Disapproval of the new Government in Great Britain is expressed by the Toronto News. It thinks it is doubtful if the war will be carried on with greater energy, or greater efficiency under a coalition Government, and adds the amazing comment: "To a degree public criticism will be lessened and public vigilance relaxed." We call this amazing because the Toronto News, in its capacity as a Tory organ, has been objecting to any criticism of the Borden Government, or any sign of vigilance on the part of the Liberal party. With a Liberal Government in Great Britain it thinks that criticism and vigilance is of great public value. But with a Conservative Government in Canada it brands Liberal criticism or vigilance as a sort of lese-majeste, for which the whole country ought to be punished by a khaki election.—Montreal Herald-Telegraph.

YOUNG CANADIAN TELLS STORY OF HEROIC BRITISH BUGLER

"I dropped, wounded in the leg. We were in the open. Bullets of rifles and machine guns were whizzing around us, and shrapnel was bursting above. I did not think it was so bad when I was first struck through my puttees."

Thus spoke a young Canadian private from Montreal, now in an English hospital. "But a gallant English bugler stopped and picked me up," he continued. "Like many another hero, he is now dead. We were engaged in a retiring movement. The bugler stuck to me, although I was a burden. A shell burst immediately above us. A piece of the explosive struck him in the chest. We fell. I turned and looked into the face of my brave friend. He was no more. Lead and shrapnel still rained around us. I crawled to a spot behind a turnip patch. There I was seen by a stretcher-bearer. My rescue was swift. The work of the stretcher-bearers is always swift and glorious. He lifted me to his back, and proceeded to carry me. Only a few yards had been covered, when he was shot, and we were rescued and taken to a dressing-station. And, would you believe it? I was wheeled away in a baby-carriage."

The young Canadian could not resist a smile as, lying in bed, he thought of the mode of his conveyance from the danger-zone.

"Yes, a baby-carriage," he added. "It was strange, but there was something more ludicrous, and that was to see Germans masquerading in kilts and khaki, as some of them did in that offensive movement. Unfortunately, with their poisonous gases, followed by a withering artillery fire before St. Julien, their aggressive tactics were temporarily successful, although by this time on another part of the line the Canadians, we now know, had recovered their lost guns. But we had retired for a time, and I am afraid we lost heavily in the engagement which followed the heroic charge of our Canadian comrades on Thursday night.

TRENCHES STORMED.

"On the morning following that battle we moved to St. Julien, having with us several English regiments. We took up a position on what may be described as a large open plain. There were no trenches, and we understood that the Germans were about 400 or 500 yards in front of us. We dug ourselves into a small trench, and at four o'clock the next morning (Saturday) we were the object of a tremendous fire from the Germans who were in front of us just on our left.

They stormed our trenches and what are commonly known as "coal-boxes" followed in quick succession. So hot was the fire that it was impossible for us to hold the position. Then a large body of Germans were noticed coming up almost behind us on our right.

"The only means of retirement was across what was practically an open plain, consisting of three fields, one with turnips, another with hay, and the third with stubble. It was in the turnip field that I crawled before being rescued by a stretcher-bearer. I was not wounded when the retirement commenced. A slight ridge commanded the plateau over which we crossed. Upon this the Germans had placed a machine-gun, and we retired amid a heavy fire. I am afraid our losses were heavy. The order to re-form was afterwards given and obeyed, and subsequently reinforcements arrived. Before then I had been wounded and had met the English bugler, whose name I do not know, but whose face will live with me for ever."

The conversation turned again on Germans methods and poisonous gases.

"Let me tell you something humorous," said another wounded Canadian soldier, two beds away from the, private who had been describing his experiences.

"On Friday morning last, in the fighting around Ypres, a German soldier left his trench, which was immediately in front of ours, and walking towards that in which we were situated, at the same time holding his hands high in the air. In broken English he shouted to us to 'surrender.' Walking towards us until he came quite near, he continued to shout 'Surrender,' until our boys were 'tickled.' We invited him to join us, but as he did not seem inclined to accept our invitation, we shouted to him to go back. He then turned round and we gave him an opportunity of returning safely to his comrades. And then the firing began."

DASTARDLY METHODS.

These stories were told by Canadian soldiers, who with their comrades, had taken part in the fighting around Ypres towards the end of last week, where men from the outposts of the Empire, from Quebec to Saskatchewan, and the Pacific Coast ranged themselves alongside gallant troops from the Mother country. They spoke of the dastardly methods of the Germans.

"I was in the trenches," remarked a private of the 8th Canadian Battalion, "when the poisonous gases rolled over us. It was at a time when the Germans were commencing an attack. In our rear was a house which had been used as headquarters, and although at times there were many of us who would have liked to make for it, it was impossible, because to do so would have been to court certain death.

"The effect of the gas is that you cannot get air. The sensation is horrible. In the trenches I saw men collapsing around me. I managed to retain consciousness, but unfortunately I was wounded in the right arm and shoulder. A 'chum' dressed my wound in the trench, where we remained for several hours.

"Eventually at what seemed a favourable opportunity some of us decided to make an attempt to reach the house, and we succeeded. We found that the upper part of the building has been completely blown away by the German artillery fire, and that there were some occupants in the cellar, above which had been piled potatoes to protect it from the shell fire. After remaining there a brief period some of us who were wounded but could walk, or were suffering from the effects of the gas, decided to search for a dressing station, and, I think, eleven of us started on the journey. It was about eight o'clock in the evening. We were just able to drag ourselves along.

"Star shells at this moment were more welcome than usual; they showed us the way along the road. The light fell upon a weird scene. On all sides were the signs of battle and the destruction wrought by shells, which were continuing to burst above us. The number of dead horses by the roadside was awful.

We also observed a motor-cycle gun machine evidently smashed by artillery fire. It seemed miles that we walked along the road, furrowed by shell; but this probably was fancy, because we could not walk fast. Without uttering a word to each other we made our way. Another shell, another flare, and then darkness again. Another flare, and then joy. In front of us was a Red Cross sentry. We knew we had reached a dressing station. It did not matter to us whose it was. We limped in, and received attention, and I was removed to hospital.

All the Canadians spoke of the terrible effects of the poisonous gases, and one, condemning the methods of the Germans, stated that a hospital in which he was placed after being wounded was shelled, and the wounded had to be taken out.

SCIENTIST PROVES THAT RATS ARE MIGRATORY

That rats are affected with the wanderlust, and will cover miles of dangerous territory, when they are put to the expedient of getting back to the locality they consider home, has been demonstrated in an interesting experiment made by the United States public health service under the direction of Surgeon R. H. Creel.

Doctor Creel, from his long experience in fighting rats as disease carriers, concluded that a rat captured and turned loose, would do his best to find his way back to his old neighbourhood and to test the theory he ordered several local experiments. A big grandpa rat, trapped in the freight sheds of the Texas & Pacific at Westwego, was one of the selections for the experiments. He was taken to the laboratory in his cage and put to sleep with a little ether.

While he was in the oblivious state that Morpheus allows all creatures, the doctors clipped his long ears with an ordinary office punch. They devoted care to the operation and with a series of punches succeeded in making a complete oval disfigurement in each aural organ.

When the rat woke up with a succession of coughs and sneezes, and with skinny paws rubbed his eyes, wondering "where he was at," he obtained a view of beautiful lakes and woodland reaches through the tiny bars of his cage. He was in City Park, 'way back in the extreme end, behind the Greek temple facing the broad lagoon.

As part of Doctor Creel's experiment the rat's prison terms was at end, and he was set at liberty. He couldn't understand it for a moment, but stood on his haunches at the open trap door blinking at the setting sun. Then he gathered his wits and bolted in a straight line for a clump of trees a hundred yards away. He disappeared in the shadows cast by the drooping branches, and that was the end of him at least for a while.

Three weeks passed and the rat with the oval punches in his ears came to light a second time. He was again in a trap, but it was one of those merciless guillotine affairs, and the rat lay dead under the heavy spring. He was the same rat that was set free in the City Park, and as the scene of his second capture and final elimination from rodent activities was in Doctor White's district close to the Stuyvesant docks, it was evident that the animal in the three weeks of liberty that bridged the time from his release to his death, must have travelled at least five miles. From the fact that he was close to the docks, Doctor White believes that he was seeking means to cross the river, to regain his old home at Westwego.

Some scientists have contended that a rat is not a migratory animal, but lives all his troublesome days within the radius of a city block. Doctor Creel's experiment upsets this theory with the facility of a tidal wave having fun with an empty skiff.

The order from the Italian Government calling for a general mobilization was greeted with intense enthusiasm in Venice. A great popular demonstration took place

Amazon Explorer

Swears by Grape-Nuts

Algot Lange—famous tropic explorer—recently made a perilous exploration of the lower Amazon.

The question of food supplies was a big one. Economy of space—food value—keeping qualities—palatability—all had to be considered.

Lange chose for his standby—

Grape-Nuts

Here is the way he refers to this food here and there through his book, "The Lower Amazon."

"I have included in my supplies Grape-Nuts."
"At lunch I eat some Grape-Nuts (an American breakfast cereal) with condensed milk."
"After this egg (turtle) meal comes for me Grape-Nuts from sealed tins."
"I go back to the molocs at noon to eat my lunch of roast turtle, Grape-Nuts and hard-tack."

Everywhere—at home or abroad—wherever big things are accomplished—this famous wheat and barley food is relied upon to build and sustain vigor and energy of body, brain and nerve.

Ready to eat—delicious—economical—nourishing.

Medical Officers of Health Demand Minimum Salaries

Resolution Passed Asking Legislature to Give This Question Consideration—Also Want M. O. H. to Give Entire Time to Public Health Work.

OFFICERS FOR 1915-16

A resolution recommending a scale of minimum salaries for medical officers of health found one dissenting vote in the business which concluded the M. O. H. conference, yesterday afternoon. The Committee on Papers composed of W. E. Crain of Chrysler, F. W. Vardon of Galt, C. N. Laurie of Port Arthur, Emerson Bull of Lambton, submitted a report proposing the following salaries for medical officers:

For townships, $300 per annum.

For incorporated villages, up to 1,000 population, $150 per annum, with an additional $50 per annum for each 1,000 of population or major portion thereof.

Towns, for the first 1,000 of population, $100, and $50 for each additional 1,000.

Cities under 20,000 of population, $1,000.

Cities over 20,000 of population, $1,200.

It was also recommended in this resolution to the Legislature that medical officers should receive sufficient remuneration, especially in towns and cities, to enable them to devote all their time to public health work.

The resolution was carried on motion of Dr. Crain, seconded by Dr. Bull. Dr. Crain admitted that the feeling of the Ontario Legislature was opposed to this idea, and if anything was to be accomplished it would come through each M. O. H. explaining the facts to the local representative.

Dr. Vardon remarked that this was a recurring question. The medical officers did not ask for anything they did not earn. They were at the call of their communities whenever required. There was no means of determining what would be an exact payment of their services, but their reward should be more adequate than it has been. Dr. Vardon and others declared that Medical Officers received the most disproportionate remuneration on the face of the earth.

Election of Officers.

Peterborough was honoured in the report of the Nominating Committee which was adopted as follows:

President—A. W. McPherson, Peterborough.

Vice President — A. J. Macaulay, Brockville.

Secretary-Treasurer—J. W. S. McCullough, Toronto.

Committee on Papers—Dr. Roberts of Guelph, Dr. F. A. Dales, Stouffville and Dr. McCullough, Toronto.

Question Drawer.

The question drawer, to which Dr. McCullough replied, presented several topics of general interest. Dr. McCullough said that schools should not be closed during an epidemic of disease. The M. O. H. has power to do so, but it is considered preferable to keep the children at school, than to allow them play, unrestricted, on the streets.

A member — "The school trustees closed the school before I learned of an outbreak."

Dr. McCullough — "I'd open it again."

Discharging an M.O.H.

A medical officer can be discharged only for neglect of duty, not by the municipality, but by the Provincial Board of Health.

Determining Salary.

The M. O. H. must be paid a reasonable salary, to be determined by what was previously paid or by what adjacent municipalities are paying.

Quarantine for Measles.

The Provincial Board has under consideration the reduction of the quarantine for measles from 8 to 16 days.

Breaking Quarantine.

If a man breaks a small-pox quarantine, issue a warrant for his arrest.

Sending to Sanitarium.

The M. O. H. has the right to send a tubercular patient to a sanitarium even at the public's expense.

Quarantine Notice.

A written notice of quarantine should be given. To save time, it may be given over the telephone.

Poor Toronto.

Question — "What becomes of an animal, with lump jaw, killed, after it is sent to Toronto?"

Answer.—"If Dr. Hastings does not find it, I suppose we eat it."

Scarletina.

Quarantine for scarletina should be six weeks, for a mild or severe type. The one may prove as dangerous as the other.

Typhoid Bacilli.

Colon bacillus in water indicates the presence of sewage, but typhoid bacillus is not necessarily there. When you find sewage in water, however, you are never sure you are not getting typhoid.

Rabies.

A dog suspected of having rabies should be chained up for ten days. If he has rabies death will occur before the ten days have elapsed. If persons refuse to chain the animal write W. W. Stork, Queen Street, Toronto. He will see to it at once.

Abnormal Mental Condition.

Dr. Adam H. Wright of Toronto said that cases of abnormal mental conditions in children should be treated on their respective merits. Children who have a terror of being left in the dark, who have night terrors, undue bashfulness, etc. What is the proper treatment of these abnormal conditions. You can't tell [illegible] must be looked at from their physical and mental sides.

The careful and tactful family doctor should accomplish much good as he has done in the past.

Night terrors sometimes are caused by adenoids. Signs of violent temper in older boys may be checked by showing the boy what a fool he makes of himself.

SOMEBODY'S STRING IS NOW BEING PULLED

To many of our people, writes the Glasgow News, it must seem a waste of time to give heed to the news, and the comment upon news, which appears in the German press. They will argue, and with much truth, that the information supplied by German newspapers is a concoction of the truth and the false, cleverly devised to delude the German people, while the comments are, for the most part, directly inspired by the German Government. No doubt but even so it is not wholly unprofitable to note the tendencies in these inspired manœuvres. It is not wholly valueless, for instance, to note that the officially stimulated hatred of Great Britain has undergone a change. The policy of God-punish-England is now retiring into the background—having failed of its purpose presumably—and milder terms are now being employed. Possibly this change will go further. Logical consistency is not an attribute of German newspapers, under official guidance, may discover that nothing would please them better than to obtain the opportunity to love the British people, as in the good old days. They will tell us that we all belong to the noble Teutonic stock, and that we are at one in our adoration of Shakespeare. The sentimental string will be twanged; already it is being twanged in the trenches, where the Germans have appealed to "their dear honoured comrades" in the opposite trenches to get the war stopped, so that all may go home to their wives and children. Let us beware; there is more danger in this than in the God-punish-England policy.

WHAT GERMANY DESIRES.

That the German Government would like the war to end now, and the bargaining for peace to begin, is quite easily understandable. They cannot hope to gain any more territory than they have already gained, while there is the looming probability that in a short time they will be [illegible] Belgium, France and Poland. Even their present hustling German show in Flanders may easily be little more than a formidable blinding of the actuality of the situation. Once the Germans sustain a heavy and definite defeat, their bargaining-power, apart from their other losses, will be greatly diminished, and that is a kind of loss which appeals to the German Government. They will want to drag as much salvage out of the war as is possible, and to do this effectively they must conserve their bargaining power; they must have something in hand, if possible, to give in exchange for something else. It is to prepare for this situation, no doubt, that Herr Dernberg has been trying to influence public opinion in the United States with certain vague suggestions about peace terms. These suggestions are designed to prove that Germany is not merely quite moderate in her demand and expectations, but that she is the champion of freedom, in trade and on the high seas. Belgium is not mentioned, of course, and the Germans intend to retain their grip on Belgium, if possible. But in any case they want to be able to make a bargain if possible—Belgium to be exchanged (say) for the German colonies that have been captured. It is clever scheming and it may appeal to sentimentalists in the United States, and even here. It is the Allies, however, that will settle the terms of peace, not the sentimentalists.

Tenders For Coal Supply

Three Dealers Will Supply Coal at Seven Dollars a Ton

Tenders for a supply of coal for the Police Station, City Buildings, Fire Hall and Isolation Hospital have been awarded to W. Scott, Taylor & Son, and J. E. A. Fitzgerald. The prices quoted were all the same, namely $7 a ton for present delivery, with ten cents a ton per month for future delivery up to a maximum of fifty cents a ton. Coal delivered two months from now will cost the city $7.20 a ton and five months from now $7.50 a ton. Twenty-five cents a ton extra will be charged for coal delivered at the Isolation Hospital.

The matter was decided at a combined meeting of the Property and Fire, Water and Light Committees, which was held last evening. Ald. [illegible] there was little [illegible] for tenders as the prices were all the same.

"We got it cheaper last year by calling for tenders," said Ald. Langford.

"There was a fight on among the coal dealers or you wouldn't have," replied Ald. Weir, who is a coal dealer.

"Then there is a combine?" enquired Ald. Green.

Ald. Weir—"There was."

At this stage of the discussion Mayor Buller cautioned Ald. Weir for fear he would "get into trouble," to which Ald. Weir replied, "There is no danger."

Fell From a Street Car

Accident Happened Just as the Doctors' Excursion Returned to the City

William Whitworth, 845 Water Street, fell from a street car shortly after six o'clock last evening, and suffered injuries that necessitated medical attention. The accident happened on the George street line about half way between King and Sherbrooke streets. Whitworth sustained a bad scalp wound that stunned him for several minutes. He was stretched out on the sidewalk just about the time four street cars loaded with doctors, who are attending the convention, came along. The cars pulled up at the corner and a number of the doctors showed professional enterprise by marathoning over to where the crowd had gathered. Dr. George Clinton, district officer of health, was almost the first to arrive. He was followed by Dr. C. H. Amys, who arrived on the scene in an automobile. Dr. Amys volunteered to remove the injured man to his home. There must have been between two and three hundred doctors at or within a short distance of the accident.

TRIP OVER LIFT LOCK AN UNIQUE EXPERIENCE

Nearly all the doctors availed themselves of the boat trip over the Lift-Lock and up the canal yesterday afternoon. Many pleasing remarks were heard in regard to the pleasing appearance of the waterway, and of the unique experience of the 65 feet lift. The programme called for a trip down the river, but the weather man had the chill faucet open. However, the local committee arranged a luncheon in the armouries, followed by a smoker, which proved entirely enjoyable.

The De Laval Company and J. J. Turner & Sons had two fine exhibits representing Peterborough's manufacturies.

Ingram & Bell, of Toronto, have a big exhibit of doctor's supplies, electrical and otherwise, and has been the centre of interest all week.

The MacMillan Book Co., and Phillips Milk of Magnesia were also prominent exhibits.

The weather man provided a welcome element of coolness, but it did not invite the visitors to enjoy the beauties of Peterborough.

Dr. Nicholl of Stratford-on-Avon displayed a joke telegram some of the men fixed up for him at the Empress last night. Don't ask us.

President Wishart and Mrs. Wishart will hold a reception this evening in the Collegiate Hall at the close of the symposium of papers on the heart.

Peterborough Boy In Training As Birdman

Interesting Description of the Work of the Aviation Class at Toronto of Which Norman Geale of This City is a Member.

LEARN IN 400 MINUTES

The Toronto Star says:

'There are now seventeen young Canadians training to join the British aerial forces. 'All have been up in the air. Before the end of June the first squad will be in England. A number of the class, indeed, are young men who have despaired of seeing any war by the usual processes of appointment and who have joined the air service as the quickest and surest method of getting into the fray. The Curtiss Aviation School at the Island, where they are being instructed, was visited by a Star man.

Three Times and "Out."

The boys, with an instructor, go up 400 to 1,000 feet, and on their third trip, after they have got used to having their heads nearly pushed off by a breeze unknown on terra firma are given control of the boats. It's very simple theoretically. When you want to turn left or right you do it with your feet, as on a bob sled. Pull the steering wheel to or from you and you slope up or down. Turn the steering wheel and you tilt whichever way you care to. The boats weight about 1,800 pounds. The engines are 9,200 h.p., and the way they hum would strike terror into the heart of Berlin.

There is no dizziness or nausea, no matter how high they go. There is only the sensation that the breeze is "blowing the skin of your face out the back." "You feel flat-headed," as Mr. Peberty says.

Six weeks of training, with a total of 400 minutes in the air, is considered enough to send the boys to England. The students are to have the advantage of seeing motors of the kind they will eventually use in England. All but the shape of the planes is the same as in England.

Military Training Later.

The class is under commission from the British Admiralty and the Dominion Government to train men for war service. When they have had six weeks training and have mastered the art of flying, they will go to the Central Aviation School near Salisbury Plain, England, and there learn the military part of the business—scouting, bombing, and attacking a Zeppelin.

Most of those now enrolled in Toronto have had themselves transferred from the local militia. Of the 17, only three have signed up for the Royal Flying Corps, which does artillery scouting, etc. The other 14 are to be with the Royal Naval Air Service, which does the raiding, patrolling—the romantic work.

Those Now Enrolled.

The seventeen now enrolled are: W. H. Peberdy, Rugby, England; Lieut. D. A. Hay, Owen Sound; Capt. E. H. McLachlin, Ottawa; Lieut. D. Joy, Toronto; A. S. Ince, Toronto; Lieut. F. Homer Smith, Toronto; G. A. Gooderham, Toronto; C. N. Geale, Peterborough; C. Day, Toronto; R. Courtauge, Brantford; C. MacLaurin, Montreal; M. Van Allen, Summerland, B.C.; Lieut. C. J. Van Nostrand, Toronto; C. H. Dearley, Montreal; Lieut. R. M. Butchart, Owen Sound; G. R. S. Fleming, Toronto; and A. F. Cowley, Victoria, B.C.

There are two flying boats under Instructors Samuel S. Pearce, who was the first British subject to see war service, when he was instructor of the Serbian, aviators in the first Balkan War and Victor Vernon, who has had years of flying experience.

Major Norman Hoyte—Son of Mr. N W. Hoyte, of Vancouver, who has been gazetted major.

A 37 Year Old With the Canucks

An interesting account of his visit to the front, on the occasion of the reent press tour organized by the War Office, is given in a report presented to the Hon. Sir George H. Perley, the acting high commissioner, by Mr. W. L. Griffith, the secretary to the high commissioner's office. Here is one passage:

"The discipline and spirits of the Canadians,' says Mr. Griffith, "are exemplary. General Smith Dorrien informed me that the men had given him the utmost satisfaction, 'as men must,' he said, 'who have the spirit to come thousands of miles overseas to fight "for a common ideal." ' When General Smith-Dorrien was inspecting the Canadian troops he asked one of the men, 'How old are you ' 'Thirty-seven years, sir.' 'How many years have you served?' 'Forty-one, sir,' 'How do you make that out?' 'Well, sir, actually I am fifty-seven years of age, but I was allowed by the Department of Militia and Defence to enlist as at thirty-seven years. I have four sons now at the front. 'Yes,' added his colonel, 'and he came in second at the regimental heavy kit race.'

Cancer Curable Says Doctor

NEW YORK, May 27.—That nine-tenths per cent of cancer cases are curable in their early stages, that there is no specific for the treatment of all cases, that radium is overrated greatly as a curative agent, that the removal of facial blemishes is a prolific cause of cancer and that the disease is increasing were statements made at a meeting of the Medical Society of the County of New York, held at the New York Academy of Medicine, No. 17 West Forty-third street.

The meeting was held with the cooperation of the American Society for the Control of Cancer. The subject was "The Physician's Responsibility in the Early Diagnosis of Cancer."

Dr. Sigmund Pollitzer, discussing skin cancers, said this disease had increased steadily for thirty years. Cases in men exceeded in number those in women in a proportion of two to one. Mistakes in diagnosis were frequent, he declared, patients often being treated for other diseases with symptoms similar to those of cancer.

He strongly condemned electrolysis and like methods of removing moles and other facial blemishes as dangerously conducive to the contraction of cancer. The X-ray likewise was potentially perilous, he said. Hundreds of cases of successful treatment by radium had been reported, Dr. Pollitzer stated, but thousands of cases in which radium failed had not been reported. He advocated cutting out cancerous growths, and said that any hard protrusion on the skin was suspicious.

Dr. A. R. Robinson, professor of dermatology of the Polyclinic Hospital, advocated the burning out with caustic of skin cancer instead of cutting it out.

"Cancer is a pathological and anatomical condition caused by a wide variety of agents," said Dr. Robinson. "Each case requires separate and individual treatment. No single agent in the form of toxin or serum will cure all curable cases. The public must not be misled by statements or announcements that a cure has been discovered. Practically all cases of skin cancer which constitute the vast majority of all cases can be cured if treated in time. All will kill if they are not treated in time. Cutaneous and buccal cavity cases are fatal because treatment has been applied too late. The value of an early diagnosis is great."

Dr. Frederic E. Sondern spoke on cancer in laboratory diagnosis, Dr. Charles L. Gibson in surgery and Dr. Morris Manges in general medicine.

Convention Will Come To Peterborough

Local Delegates to the Ontario Conference of Typographical Unions and Labour Educational Association

The fourth annual convention of the Ontario Conference of Typographical Unions was held in St. Catharines on Tuesday, May 25, the morning session being held in the Collegiate Institute, and afternoon session in the Journal Hall.

President T. A. Stevenson of Toronto, presided. Letters of regret for their inability to be present, owing to a prior engagement were received from M. G. Scott, President I.T.U. and James T. Burke, Chief Factory Inspector.

President Stevenson, in his address spoke of the matrix question and the reproduction of borrowed matrices which is becoming an important question in large cities. He suggested and strongly urged that the question be taken up at the afternoon session. He also called attention to the supervision of apprentices and suggested that stringent rules be provided to insure learners being given a thorough knowledge of the different departments connected with the trade.

The question of looking after the members of the Union who had enlisted at the call of their country was taken up. This is becoming quite a problem to many of the locals.

Ald. W. R. Burgoyne and J. M. Elson, in short addresses conveyed the greetings of the Master Printers to the conference.

Mr. W. A. Vickery, organiser of the Pressman's International Union, and Charles E. Kinskey, President of Buffalo Union, also briefly addressed the gathering.

A very interesting report on the Union Printers' Home at Colorado Springs, Colo., was given by Delegate Michael Powell, Ottawa, who is a trustee of that institution.

Election of officers for the ensuing year resulted as follows:

President—C. P. Doughty, Guelph.
Vice-President—G. L. Myland, Peterborough.
Sec.-Treas.—Philip Obermeyer, Hamilton.

The Peterborough delegates were successful in landing the 1916 conference for this city, and the convention will meet here on June 9th and 10th next. President Chas. Hammacott and Fin.-Sec. G. L. Myland represented P. T. U. No. 248.

Educational Association.

The thirteenth annual convention of the Labour Educational Association of Ontario opened in the Masonic Hall, St. Catharines at 9 a.m. Monday, May 24, with well over 100 delegates from all parts of the Province in attendance.

The question that received considerable attention was that of unemployment and a resolution was adopted, calling upon the Federal Government to immediately appoint a committee to bring down such legislation they may deem efficacious to deal with conditions of unemployment and pledging the convention to stand ready to support any practical plan to abolish unemployment entirely. Ex-Controller Simpson of Toronto who introduced the resolution with Delegate Norman of London was appointed to head a delegation to Ottawa to take up the matter with the government.

During discussion three suggestions were offered toward solution: Furnishing of employment by the government for a reforestration which would add to a national asset as well as supply employment; a larger system of permanent roadways and assistance to smaller and intensive farming as an inducement to get the men back to the farm.

The convention endorsed the plan of the Industrial Toy Association, and urged hearty co-operation of trades unionists to make this undertaking a success.

It was shown that the demand already exceeds the supply and indications were given that branches of the movement now in operation in Toronto are to be established in other points in the province.

Berlin was chosen as the place of convention for 1916, which will be held on May 24th.

Officers were elected as follows:

President—Jos. E. Sauve, Kingston.
First Vice-President—James Usher, Ottawa.
Second Vice-President—C. P. Doughty, Guelph.
Third Vice-President— J. A. Wiley St. Catharines.
Fourth Vice-President—J. A. Briggs, Hamilton.
Fifth Vice-President—G. L. Myland, Peterborough.
Secretary-Treasurer — Jos. Marks, Toronto.

The local delegates who attended and the organizations they represented were, Chas. Hammacott and M. H. Gainey for the Peterborough Trades and Labour Council, F. C. Browne, for Toronto Patternmakers, and G. L. Myland for Peterborough Typographical Union, No. 248.

A WONDER WORKER.

"It heals like magic" is a favourite expression where Dr. Chase's Ointment is used. It works quickly, stops all itching at once, often heals in a single night. For eczema, salt rheum, barbers' itch, skin irritations or eruptions, it is a most satisfactory treatment. Being antiseptic, it prevents blood poisoning.

Driver Reynolds Writes From Front

Came Through Safely But Says Fighting Was Hell on Earth

Mrs. Reynolds, Peterborough, has received a letter from her son, Driver Jos. Reynolds, formerly of the Examiner press room, who is at the front with the 4th Battery, First Brigade, and who came through the Langemarck fighting unhurt. He says:

May 8th, 1915.

Dear Mother,—Just a few lines to let you know I am well. Came through the battle at Hill 60 all right, but I never want to see anything like it again. I would call it hell on earth. It is not war at all. Never will I forget the day the poor Canadians got it. I never did so much praying as I did that day. It was the worst battle ever fought, bar none of them. We have lost two, a sergeant and the Major's batman—(that is the fellow who looks after his things. His name was Muns. Sgt. Boone was killed. O'Toole and King were wounded.

Belgium is a lot cleaner than France. Had a long talk with Oswald Brooks. He came through the battle all right. Tommy Parrington is slightly wounded. Bruce Mills is also all right. We have been here two weeks. It is getting a little quieter now. The stench from dead horses and men is enough to kill you. Many of the wounded lay in the field begging to be shot. Some of the Red Cross people could not get to them.

I have just received a letter from the people with whom I was billeted in England. They sent boiled eggs, cigarettes and tooth paste.

Women Appear As Old As Their Hair

It is astonishing to see how much good-looking hair does toward producing a youthful appearance. It is astonishing also to realise how much the attractiveness of the hair is affected by the care we give it, especially in the matter of cleansing. In washing the hair it is not advisable to use a makeshift, but always use a preparation made for shampooing only. You can enjoy the best that is known for about three cents a shampoo by getting a package of canthrox from your druggist; dissolve a teaspoonful in a cup of hot water and your shampoo is ready. After its use the hair dries rapidly, with uniform colour. Dandruff, excess oil and dirt are dissolved and entirely disappear. Your hair will be so fluffy that it will look much heavier than it is. Its lustre and softness will also delight you, while the stimulated scalp gains the health which insures hair growth.

A LETTER FROM PETE CAMPBELL

Peterboro Boy is Now Machine Gun Officer of the 15th Battalion

Lieut. Gordon Campbell of Peterborough, who is with the 15th Battalion, better known as "Pete" Campbell, the quarter-back of the 'Varsity Rugby team, has been on the firing line since Langemarck. He arrived with Canadian reinforcements from Shorncliffe, and he has already been in the thick of it, although he was not in the "big fight" of April 22 and the three days that followed.

"I came over to fill up when Trumbull Warren was shot," he writes, "just getting here for the last of the big fight. A lot of the boys are missing, most likely dead, as they weren't taking many prisoners that day.

"I have got my old job as machine-gun officer with 'Dutch' Wilson as my assistant. Poor Bob McKessick, from Sudbury, who was the M.G.O., wouldn't leave his guns. Only five out of forty-eight returned. He was a fine fellow, worthy of the 48th Highlanders. The Germans sure can shoot, and their artillery is wonderful. They don't like to close, though.

"Geoff. Taylor Was Killed."

"Geoff. Taylor was killed —one of the best friends I ever had. As soon as the machine gun starts you should see the shells burst all around. Jack Johnsons, coal boxes, and their 'slow freights.' You get callous and don't care much. But back here in the billets living as 'Smoot' Mayor and I are in a lonely French farmhouse, feeding on cream, eggs, and good food, sleeping in a bed, and resting under trees all out in blossom reading the Toronto papers, it makes you wonder why you are fighting. I don't think those Huns have had their full share of fun, and I am perfectly sure we haven't, but I love the life. I am in great shape, brown as a berry.

"Dutch" Wilson, Jack Kay Acland, and Buck Pearce and a few others came over together. They landed at Boulogne. They said all the women hung out the windows at 4 a.m., and yelled, 'Vive les Canadiens.' I am enclosing a piece of lace I got at Ypres when passing through. I could have had anything from an automobile to the kitchen stove."

CIVIC EMPLOYEES WILL BE TAGGED

Records Will be Kept at City Engineer's Office—In Favour of Concrete Paving

The Board of Works committee is perfecting a system whereby any ratepayer who is in doubt as to the residential status of any individual employed on civic work will be able to approach the said individual, secure his number, which will be designated on a tag, repair to the City Engineer's office and secure a complete record of the man from his finger prints to the colour of his hair. The matter was brought up at last night's meeting of the Board when Ald. McIntyre charged the paving contractors with employing a greater number of outside men than was absolutely needed. He said that he was in favour of the city undertaking street paving rather than let it by contract. Contractors, he claimed, did not use local men. Twenty or thirty per cent. of the contract price went outside of the city. The municipality could buy a paving plant of its own with the profits that were paid to the contractors.

Ald. Green said that the city had not decided to undertake any further street paving this year, although it had been proposed to advertise for tenders on three classes of paving, including cement.

Both Aldermen McIntyre and Lowery were in favour of the former. It would give employment to a large number of local men and the money spent would thus be kept in the city. Ald. Green assured the Board that tenders for concrete paving would be asked for as well as bitholitic and asphalt.

What You Have to Do

FOLLOW these directions and you have an excellent chance of securing one of the above cash prizes. Firstly, order a 10c tin from your grocer and get familiar with Paris Pate. Then set to work and win a prize as follows:

Look carefully through the different pages of this paper and you will find certain white letters on black squares similar to the reduced illustration shown here. When these letters are placed in their proper order, they compose a sentence which we ourselves have made up as being a good definition of what Paris Pate is. Clip each letter out separately. You will find there are 31 altogether. Now arrange and paste them in their right order on a sheet of paper so as to make a complete answer to the question—"What is Paris Pate?" The correct definition consists of six words altogether. The letters in capitals form the first letters of each word.

Specimen only. This must not be used. The letters will be found in other parts of this paper.

CONDITIONS OF CONTEST

Any number of definitions may be sent in by any one person, but the top of a Paris Pate carton must accompany each separate definition.

There are 31 letters altogether, and the definition consists of six words. Each letter must be used.

The letters must be neatly pasted on a sheet of paper, the name and address of the sender being written on the same sheet.

All definitions must reach our office on or before the 31st of May, 1915.

Send in Your Definition

AS soon as you have made out the definition and pasted the letters in their correct order, write your full name and address clearly. Then enclose in an envelope with the top of a Paris Pate carton and mail direct to us. This must be done or the answer will be disqualified.

All definitions received will be kept together until June 1st. On that date they will be placed before a special committee, who will draw at random from the pile, and the sender of the first correct definition opened will be awarded the first prize of $50, the second opened will receive $25, and so on through the list. It does not follow that the first letter to come to hand will be the first prize winner. Probably a large number of letters will be opened before the correct solution is found. The correct definition as composed by us has been placed in a sealed envelope and filed with our solicitors. It is known only to the Manager of Paris Pate and our Advertising Agent.

The 31 Letters on Black Squares, when properly arranged, make up the correct Definition of PARIS PATE. Can you discover it?

Letter from Pte. C. Holdcroft.

The following letter from Pte. Clarence Holdcroft to his father, will be read with great interest by our readers:

Shorncliffe, April 29th

Dear Father,—Will arrived here this p.m. and by luck I met him on his arrival. The engineers are at this camp, so we will be more or less together for a time. Bill is quite tired but looks very well. The boys had nothing to eat since 10 a.m., so I got a bowl of rice pudding from the Sergeant's mess and a meat sandwich for William. It was a treat to see the victuals disappear in his long, lean neck. When I arrived here I had only a few biscuits to eat. I would have mightily appreciated what he had. He has quarters all fixed up and will be comfortable.

We are all well here and I am feeling fine. We dig ditches all day and have been doing so for over a week now. The ditch is for laying a water pipe and is 18 inches wide and four feet deep. So far we have dug about two miles. At night I feel tired and am quite ready to go to bunk.

The fighting at the front now is appalling. The mechanical transport of the 1st divisional supply were all put in the trenches the other day. On Monday evening men were sent down from Shorncliffe and on Wednesday, all day long, from where we were working at our digging, we could see long Red Cross trains bringing in the wounded to the base hospital, here, in the south of England. These wounded soldiers were the same which left here on Monday evening. We are within ten miles of the trenches here. It is very near, but I cannot realize it.

Things are not going very well at the front; three thousand Canadians were killed on Tuesday, and I expect we will have some hard fighting yet. I figure it this way: I am going to have as good a time as I can while I am here now, and not figure on the future, at all, because the chances are there will be no future here: If by a lucky chance there is a future it will doubtless look out for itself. I wish we could go now. The Canadians have made a lasting name for themselves on the battlefield and the English papers are full of praise for them. I expect we will be moved any time now. We are to go under canvas today and then I expect we will get our trucks. I honestly think our chances are good to be turned into an infantry battalion and go to the trenches. However, we should worry. Time will tell.

I guess I will close now, so good night and be good. Love to all.

—C. P. R. HOLDCROFT.

Sapper Wm. Holdcroft Writes.

The following letter was received on Monday morning from Sapper William Holdcroft:

Sandling, April 30, 1915.

Dear Dad,—We arrived in England yesterday morning. All the roads here are narrow and paved, and about six to twelve feet below the level of the fields alongside, with hedges on both sides. The houses are all small and of stone and brick. Near Avonmore the gardens and farms are about forty feet square. Vegetables are planted beside the railway tracks, inside the fences. All crossings are under or over the tracks—no deadly, level ones. We passed some large flower seed farms. Bed after bed of wonderful flowers, all in bloom—a radiant mass of harmonizing colour; you certainly would enjoy seeing them. In the cities the houses are in long blocks, with about one hundred families living in each block. I am enclosing my diary which I want you to keep, as I haven't a copy of it. I will send photos when I get them developed and want them kept in an album. I saw Clarence yesterday. He is encamped here and is looking fine. The barracks are fine—low wooden and steel structures, and accommodate about thirty men. Guess I will close now. Good-bye.

BILL.

EFFECT OF ITALY'S ACTION AS VIEWED BY NOTED MEN

ROME, May 27.—Guglielmo Ferrero, the famous Italian historian says:

Italy's intervention will have a threefold effect — moral, economic and military.

It will bring home to the German masses the isolation of Germany and will react on Roumania. That is its moral importance. The German people do not yet understand the impression the war has produced on the world at large. They do not fully realize that Europe is firmly resolved to put an end to their dreams of German hegemony. Now that to-day they see that her former ally has entered the struggle against Germany, one may hope that they will begin to open their eyes, especially if Roumania follows Italy's example.

The economic importance of our intervention consists in this, that we (Italy) complete the encircling of the two German empires. Heretofore Italy has been a door opening on to the world through which Germany had been able to communicate with neutral powers. That door also is now closed.

From the military point of view Italy's intervention means one more enemy for the Germanic empires; that is obvious. But in what measure that enemy will be able to hasten the end of the war no one can say to-day. The present war has demonstrated that it is impossible to foresee the action of armies on campaign or the effect that action will have; the factors modifying or determining it are too numerous and diverse. On that point we can only wait and see. Rapidly-coming events will furnish a speedy reply to that question.

By Gabriele D'Annunzio.

Italy to-day has entered the most solemn hour of her history. Events have shown her to be united as one man for the fulfilment of her destiny, toward which she is swept in the face of entangling counter-currents. Now truly will she become Queen of the Adriatic, whereof both shores have been Italian in both origin and essence.

By Mario Borsa.

Milan, May 23. —Italy has intervened because her supreme national interests so demand. But her intervention, it may be hoped, will have a more far-reaching effect than that of encompassing Italian unity.

The entry into action of 1,200,000 fresh, well-trained troops will modify the situation in favour of the allies—England, Russia and France.

Moreover, Italy's participation in the war closes one more door— perhaps the most important — for Germany's supplies.

Taking everything into account, it may be confidently predicted that the great conflict enters upon its last decisive phase from to-day onward.

By Yves Guyot.

Paris, May 24.— To-day finds every important power in Europe firmly united in the resolve to break up the sinister evil of German hegemony. The economic ruin of our foes is henceforth only a matter of time, and a brief time at that. Europe's pariah is doomed to a lingering death by economic starvation.

Maurice Barres, Academician, President of the French League of Patriots, says:

The world expects three things from Italian intervention: First, that the blockade of Germany become more rigorous; second, that German public opinion shall be deeply stirred and become enlightened and discouraged; third, that this war is largely an industrial problem, wherein the winners are they who can be most prodigal in the use of arms and ammunition. Germany has already been forced to reduce her fire against France, England and Russia. Now she is compelled to feel the Italian front also. The allies' advantage will grow enormously.

By Colonel Feyler.

Geneva, May 23.— The Italian army's task is undoubtedly hard. The Dalmatian coast must be seized and, simultaneously, the key to the north, Istria, with the military port of Pola and the commercial ports of Trieste and Fiume. This enterprise will necessitate the co-operation of the army and navy for the disembarkation of troops at various points, and simultaneously a great strategical march from Friuli and Venetia toward the Tyrol and the hereditary Austrian States. From Venetia the armies may follow two directions, eastward toward Vienna or northward to cover the left flank of the principal movement. Occupation of the Trentino is necessary for the security of the principal operation.

Labourers Wages Will Be Raised

Men Employed by the City Will Receive Minimum Wage of 25c. an Hour Subject to Approval of Departmental Heads

The request of the Trades and Labour Council for a minimum wage of twenty-five cents an hour for all civic employees came before the Board of Work committee last evening. After considerable discussion Ald. Edgar succeeded in having a resolution passed to the effect that the rate of wages that the city shall pay be left in the hands of the heads of the different departments, each man to be paid according to what he is capable of earning, and that twenty-five cents an hour be the maximum wage to be paid labourers. This was seconded by Ald. Langford and carried in the form of an amendment to the original motion that was fathered by Alderman Saunders and McIntyre, which was designed to fix the minimum wage at twenty-five cents an hour. An amendment to have the matter shelved for one week in order to give members of the committee who were absent an opportunity of familiarizing themselves with the question failed to receive the support of the meeting despite the fact that a number of the aldermen who voted for Ald. Edgar's resolution were in favour of giving the proposal further consideration. This amendment was moved by Ald. Stratton and seconded by Ald. Weir.

"Going Too Far."

Ald. Edgar was of the opinion that the Trades and Labour Council were going a little bit too far in making such a request. He thought that the city was in a position to pay according to the ability of the men to do the work. He did not think it was within the province of the Trades and Labour Council to dictate to the City Council.

Ald. Stratton was of the opinion that a labourer was worthy of his hire. Men who were employed by the city seldom had an opportunity of working more than six or eight months in the year. They were entitled to twenty-five cents an hour. Special provision could be made for men who were unable to do a maximum day's work. The latter class include men who are given work for charitable reasons. If they were unable to earn a minimum wage of twenty-five cents and an hour were dropped from the payroll they would become dependent upon the city.

Ald. Edgar—"I do not object to any man getting twenty-five or thirty-five cents an hour providing he can earn it. I further contend that the Trades and Labour Council should look after their own men. I understand that certain members of the Trades and Labour Council are employing stone masons from the City of Toronto to do work on churches in this city."

A controversy arose between Ald. Edgar, McIntre and Langford as to who the guilty parties were. Ald. Langford said that it had been found necessary to employ outside labour on the construction of a church in which he was concerned, but that was because there were no local stone masons who were qualified to do the work required.

Ald. Weir submitted that some men employed by the city were worth twenty-five cents an hour while others were not worth ten cents.

Reply of Labour Council.

"I believe that ninety per cent. of the men employed by the city are worth twenty-five or thirty cents an hour," put in Ald. Saunders. I have spoken to members of the Trades and Labour Council in regard to the men who would be incapable of earning a minimum wage of twenty-five cents an hour. Some of these old men would have to step down and out. Their reply was "let them go." Added Ald. Saunders.

Mayor Butler argued in favour of a minimum wage.

Ald. Evans—"Here we are setting a standard for wages to be paid by the city and yet we let paving contractors come in and engage men for one dollar and seventy-five cents a day and work them an hour longer."

"Have a minimum wage clause put in the contracts,' put in one of the aldermen.

"They will charge more for the paving" was the reply.

"Everybody will be elected by acclamation next year," observed Mayor Butler, when Ald. Edgar's resolution had safely passed the gauntlet of aldermanic fire.

The resolution if passed by the City Council will mean that all labourers employed by the city, if competent to do a maximum day's work, will receive the maximum standard of wages and those who are not, will be graded accordingly.

INTERMEDIATE BASEBALL LEAGUE ORGANIZED

A meeting of representatives of the Intermediate Sunday school classes was held in the Y.M.C.A. last night and a baseball league formed. W. Adams of St. Luke's, was elected president; A. Skuce, of Charlotte Street, vice-pres.; Bert Hamilton, George Street, sec-treas.

The following churches were represented: George Street, Murray Street, Charlotte Street, Knox, Mark Street and Grace. There were other representatives present who were not sure whether or not they could enter a team but they will have to decide this week, as the league opens Monday night.

The committee decided that the league should be confined to boys of 18 years and under and no city league players would be allowed to play.

The representatives of the different teams were very enthusiastic and a good league is looked for. The schedule will be published later.

YESTERDAY'S BASEBALL GAMES

Utilizing a Costly Plant

What will be the economic condition of Canada after the war?

Canada is now equipped with a plant for the production of her resources, which has cost hundreds of millions of dollars, and the opinion of business men generally appears to be that the Dominion will enter into a period of construction, not of buildings, but of business.

Whether the production of this country during the next few years be sufficient to make this plant profitable is a question which will not be settled until after the war. The general trend of opinion is that it will require very careful management:

Slow Moving.

"If we have provided ourselves with a more expensive equipment than we can use," says one authority, "it will mean several years of slow moving and retrenchment. If this state of affairs occurs, it will be more prolonged in the west. The east has been conservative in its progress and will suffer less from a re-action than will the west."

An opinion is held by a small group of business men that there will be hard times in Canada after the war. They look for an increase in the cost of living and a great increase in taxation, because of the bonded indebtedness forced on us partly by the war and partly by the financial assistance supplied rather wildly to various transportation and industrial schemes, which in their opinion will not be profitable for some time. These men think that immigration will be stopped in a large measure by these economic conditions, but their opinions may be unjustifiably pessimistic.

War Saved Us.

Canada's war debt of approximately $100,000,000 is not too great a burden for a country of Canada's resources. The returns of one year's wheat crop would pay it, and still leave forty or fifty million dollars. As for stopping immigration, it is pointed out that by no possible circumstances can conditions be as bad in Canada as they will be in Europe after the war, and that as long as they are better, so long will immigration continue.

Canada was before the war well furnished with transportation, by both rail and water, with storage accommodation and with factories. We may have been slightly over-engined for our demands, but the war by increasing the demand, has very probably saved us from a worse period of depression than we have had.

Priests Find Willing Ears

Writing from Budapest, a correspondent on the battlefield says — Among the characteristic figures of the war, is the field priest. Few at first sight would recognize him as such. His face is as red as that of a soldier, for he rides about in the wind and snow. He wears a black military blouse, with three golden braids on the sleeves and the stars of his rank on the collar, riding breeches, gaiters and spurs. He looks more like a naval officer than anything else.

Tramp Through Slush.

Each regiment has a priest in the field—and he is either Roman Catholic, Orthodox or Protestant, according to the majority of the soldiers. Through mud and slush, snow and storm, he follows his regiment. It is hard work, but he has every reason to be delighted with it. The soldiers with death ever near, are content when some one speaks to them of the world to come. Quite lately a priest said to me: "There are no unbelievers in the field."

The "field-curates" as they are called, are clever at finding opportunities for a short service. As they walk around, they stop in front of a group of soldiers and address words of comfort and advice to them. On Sunday a rough table or a board on two casks, placed before a group of pines, makes a very good altar, for which a tolerably white cloth from the officers "rooms" in the trenches is provided. Here mass is read or a sermon spoken.

Turns to Soldiering.

Very often the priest turns into a soldier at a moment's notice. Only last week a field-curate had wandered away from his division to visit a church on the other side of the hill. When he returned, the division had marched away and only a patrol of a few sharpshooters remained behind. Suddenly a number of Cossacks appeared on the crest of the hill. The field curate took command of the patrol, and, revolver in hand, waited for the Cossacks to come down. They were all killed and were found to be the bearers of important news who had lost their way.

Stock Markets

New York Stocks

A. H. Stratton & Co., Brokers, report the following:

NEW YORK, May 27.—There was a little spurt, bullish activity following publication of statement of the captain of the Nebraskan, which made it clear that no submarine had been observed by any one on the ship, and indicated therefore that the explosion resulted from contact with a mine. The rise was soon over, and at noon the market was quiet but generally steady, although there was weakness in MOP and R.I. It was the general opinion that Utah Copper rise had discounted an increase of the dividend and that in case rates were raised to $4 there would probably be realising on the good news. U.P. earnings, April gross $6,294,001, December $504,347; net $1,709,220, December $311,496.

CHICAGO, May 27.—Wheat developed weakness, due to sharp decline in Chicago May option. Predictions of further rains in west were bullishly regarded.

KILLED IN ACTION

The following verses were written by Mr. C. H. Adam of Peterborough, whose son Pte. C. H. Adam, was killed in action at Langemarck:

Killed in action! Killed in action!
On the battlefields in France;
Defending England's honour,
And Belgium's only chance.

Pray tell me where they have laid him:
And is there a name to the grave?
Oh! the agony of the poisoned gas,
For one so young and brave.

Dear Lord has his spirit arrived there?
Is there room for a soldier boy?
Yes, there's room for every brave soldier
Who is not afraid to die.

Oh, blest be Thy name, dear Saviour,
And blest be the tie that binds;
Did you hear his cry, dear Saviour,
When his eyes with tears were blind?

Mother—Mother—Mother,
Were the last words that came to me;
Dear Lord, is my boy in Heaven,
Is he safe and is he free?

Yes, all are safe in heaven;
It's the land of the loved and free;
For God has made it eternal;
It's the land of eternity.

We shall all meet again in heaven;
In Thy name, which is ever blest.
Oh, precious Saviour, guide us,
To that home of the loved and blest.

C. H. Adam.

Wearing Kilt In War Time

A private in a Highland regiment writes as follows to his brother in an Ontario regiment:

"I'll now try to give you some advice on the strength of my five months' campaigning. Of course, you labour under a distinct disadvantage in not having the kilts to begin with. The only times I've ever thought with even a tinge of regret on the trousers I've almost forgotten how to wear have been when I've chanced to be on guard on a cold, breezy night, when the wind maliciously whistles round and about your legs, and then you think involuntarily almost that two thicknesses of cloth might be better than none, the thought vanishes as soon as you are relieved and you see the guardroom fire again. I see from a letter in the papers that the Canadian Scottish treat their kilt as a sort of parade dress, and put on 'trews' when they go into the trenches. This, of course, we consider a great mistake, for it is in these wet trenches over here that we shine.

"For instance, it's no uncommon thing for a trousered section who've stood shivering on their platforms with their wet things clinging to their legs for twenty-four hours to see with a feeling of envy their kilted comrades coming up through the water to relieve them with their kilts tucked up high up out of the wet, so that with the exception of feet and puttees they can look forward to a comfortable and, all things considered, a warm time instead of a shivery one; for the kilt being exceptionally thick round the waist and loins keeps the whole body nice and warm, and if it does happen to get wet the constant swinging about tends to dry it quickly without a constant clammy contact with the legs.

Is a Bed at Night.

"But it is on the march that one appreciates the kilt most. There's a delicious cooling sensation as the wind strikes your knees, that helps you along, and there's a sense of freedom about the waist and shoulders which the trousered man will never feel. And then when you are in billets on a hard wood or stone floor, all you've got to do is to take off your kilt and spread it on the floor, and with your blanket starting from the bottom of it and brought forward again over your feet, you've a bed which keeps the cold and hardness of the floor away from you.

"In the hospital when I came here was an old Highland sergeant who was being sent home with sciatica and rheumatism. He got out his kilt and commandeered one of he ward tables during the absence of the sister, and ironed out the creases of his kilt with a heated stone shovel used in place of the missing flatiron. Then he surveyed his handiwork with pride. Sister came in and admired, and then said that he'd surely feel cold in the kilt after being in bed, and thought he'd better have trousers. 'Sister,' he said to her, with a proud air, 'I've been cold in the kilt for nineteen years now, and I'll be cold in them for a little while longer yet.' So sister smiled and said no more, being a wise woman."

The Point of Contact

YEARS AGO, retail buyers met retail sellers at the counter. To-day they meet first in the columns of the newspaper. The advertising is the vital point of contact. There, may be seen what is wanted, how, when, and where, it may be purchased.

EACH MORNING, when the shopping expedition for the day is planned, the EXAMINER is examined in thousands of homes. Its advertising pages, with description of goods and prices, is a never failing guide to the ladies of Peterboro.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

Miss B. Mowry and Miss L. Simons were elected for two years to the executive of the Graduate Nurses Association which recently met in Toronto.

Mrs. P. Fitzpatrick and Mrs. John Delaney, Douro, left on Monday for Rochester, N.Y., to attend the funeral of Mr. John Drumm, their brother-in-law.

Rev. James Price, Rector of St. George's Church, who has just recovered from a severe illness of several weeks' duration, was able to make his first visit to the city to-day.

Dr. and Mrs. Middleton spent the holiday in Toronto with Mrs. Middleton's brother, Lieut. H. G. Manning, B.A., who leaves this week for England to join Kitchener's Army.

Dr. Collins, of Bridgebury, Ont., and Dr. Gray, of Niagara Falls, who are attending the Medical Convention, are the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Lewis, 579 Aylmer Street. Mrs. John Allan is also a guest of Mrs. Lewis.

RESULT IS NOT ENCOURAGING

The Auto Association are not meeting with a great deal of encouragement in their membership canvass. They realize that this year is an extraordinary one in every way,—and that all are husbanding their resources as much as possible, yet they think that among 350 car owners in the city and vicinity there should be a membership of 100 at least. The canvassers meet the argument that nothing has been done locally with the funds of previous years, and ask what will be done this year. The answer must be nothing unless we can secure a good membership. On the other hand, if a membership of even 100 is secured a good deal can be done. The Executive have in view some road improvement in the vicinity, but can not undertake it until they are assured of financial support. The question of a government road from Port Hope to Lakefield will be discussed with the County Councils at their June session. A scheme for mutual insurance is being worked out and may be ready during the present season.

If you are willing to encourage these activities send along your cheque to the secretary, S. J. Keyes, 773 Water, and you will receive in return a year's subscription to the Canadian Motorist, a Motor League badge and a right to link if the present executive have nothing during the year.

THE BEST GLASSES.

Tait Optical Co.'s glasses are stated to sell people of Canada as being the best that optical science and skill can produce. They maintain their own factory; therefore the price is lower than elsewhere, a combination hard to beat. 440 George St. 2d-15-1-w

Peterborough Soldier Is Grateful

Expresses Thanks For Way His Loved Ones Have Been Looked After

The following letter of thanks has been received by the Examiner:

St. George's Island, Bermuda,
May 21, 1915.

Mr. Editor,—Please allow me, through your valuable paper, to express my thanks for the kindness done me by some of Peterborough's patriotic citizens.

When war was declared, I, with my Regiment, the Royal Canadian Regiment, (permanent force), was ordered to (censored), where we are still stationed, but having a family of young children, I decided to send them to my wife's old home, instead of bringing them to this hot climate.

In December last my wife was seriously ill and during April my little boy had to undergo an operation in Nicholls Hospital, and both of these cases were attended by Dr. Amys, so to him and the staff of Nicholls Hospital I wish to express my sincere thanks.

In these dark days of trouble it is a comfort and a blessing for me, who is many miles away, serving his King and country, to know that the loved ones be left behind are being looked after in the way mine have been.

I hope the time and opportunity will soon come that Peterborough will not be ashamed that I was known there. I trust that when I return to be able in some small way to show my appreciation for the kindness which me and mine have received. I remain,

Yours sincerely,
J. Macknass, Sergt.,
R.C.R., St. George's Island, Bermuda.

STREET NAMES TO BE CHANGED

Some Think That the Name Concession Street Has Too Much of a Rural Flavour —Meeting of the Board of Works

The proposal to change the name of a number of streets throughout the city was exhumed at last night's meeting of the Board of Works. A letter was read from E. Courtney, 536 Concession street, asking to have the name of that particular street changed. Mayor Buller suggested calling it Armour street as it runs right past what is known as Armour's hill. Ald. Weir would call it Kawartha street or avenue. This was considered too long and awkward a name. The matter was left in the hands of the East Ward aldermen to bring in a name with less rural flavour than the present one. There is a petition on the way respecting the changing of the name of Elm street. Some thought it might be as well to call it Brock street, but Ald. Green was inclined to the opinion that some day Brock street might be opened up through its natural course when it would prove a valuable asset to the city.

Ald. Stratton said he was asked to recommend Water street for a change. Some time ago Anson street was recommended for another name. A north end resident wanted it changed to Sperry street, but few of the aldermen are inclined to agree, as they believe the name Sperry street would conflict with Perry street. The whole matter was left over for future discussion.

Objected to Sidewalk.

H. McFadden, 541 Bolivar street, in a communication to the Board expressed his objection to the construction of a sidewalk on Monaghan road between King and Sherbrooke streets, also on the south side of his lot on Bolivar street. The objection was based on the grounds that conditions in that section of the community did not warran the construction of the sidewalk named. It was pointed out by a number of the aldermen that the sidewalk would not only serve the residents of that district, but also a large number of school children who were compelled to use the thoroughfare as a means of getting to school. It was moved that the communication be received.

Want Pole Removed.

A letter was read from Superintendent Coyle of the Grand Trunk Railway asking if any steps had been taken to have an electric light pole removed from the corner of Simcoe and Bethune streets so as to enable the company to move their siding. The chairman was instructed to see the Utilities Commission and arrange to have the pole removed.

The Bell Telephone Company was given permission to erect four poles on the north side of Smith street. Ald. Edgar said that before granting permission he would see that the Company removed the pole objected to in front of Banks' garage on Charlotte street. He said the city was giving the Company every privilege they could possibly give and receiving very little in return.

Mayor Buller accused the Board that the Company had arranged to remove the pole, but it might be a matter of a couple of weeks before this was accomplished.

Ald. Edgar— "We heard that story two months ago."

Ald. Green said the Company offered to move the pole a distance of eight feet or so as a means of temporary relief, but the issue of the building decided to forego this advantage in the hope that it would be removed permanently.

Paving in Lindsay.

In reply to a communication sent by the city, the town clerk of Lindsay wrote to say that no paving had been undertaken in Lindsay during the year 1914 and that Foley and Gleason, pavers, had been awarded a contract for a minimum of twenty thousand yards at $2.10 per yard and accept five and a half per cent. bonds in payment.

A request from the Utilities Commission for permission to erect a line of poles on Concession Street, was referred to City Engineer Parsons. The latter thought the request was too indefinite.

City Solicitor Gordon wrote the board expressing opinion regarding the means that the city would have to take in event of them passing through the Kennedy property to a point lower down for a site upon which to construct the sewerage disposal plant. The communication was shelved for future reference.

Troops to be Seen Everywhere In England

LONDON, May 27—Spring is witnessing a movement of troops all over England, some leaving for the front and others moving from the towns where they have been billeted to encampments in the open country. But when a battalion is ordered to move, not even its officers know its destination.

On any of the main highways of England troops may be seen on the march, generally in brigades. Kitchener's army looks as well seasoned and as fit for active service as the men at the front for most of it has now been six months in training.

Practice Marches.

To conceal the movement of troops constant practice marches in full equipment are held and the men do not know whether they are returning to camp until they are actually back there. Often they march to some point, entrain, and in the course of a few hours find themselves on board a transport. If their quarters are crowded, they may be sure it is only to cross the Channel. But if bunks are provided and ample deck room, it means Egypt, the Dardanelles or some far point.

Last Farewell.

Every farewell a soldier takes of family and friends he in any case expects to be his last until his return from war. So secret and so complicated are the movements of the new forces in England that no authentic information could possibly be collected for the enlightenment of the enemy. But, it may be assumed that the volunteer system has not disappointed Lord Kitchener.

Nothing has cheered up the despondent cavalry regiments in the British training camps like the news of the departure for the front of King Edward's Horse, first regiment. The hopes of the volunteer troopers had ebbed away during the dismal winter, for reports came back that horses could not be used in trench warfare and were superseded in reconnaissance and despatch work by aeroplane and motorcycle. But now it is found that cavalry is of use. Other new regiments hope to follow.

K. E. H. Unique.

King Edward's Horse is unique in the British Army. It is a Boer war product that has since kept up its organization not as a territorial or militia regiment, but as a part of the regular army reserves. Its officers of the higher rank are all old fighters. Its colonel in chief is no less a personage than King George himself. Its men come from all parts of the world. Canada contributes an important contingent, as the Canadian is, as a rule, physically and temperamentally fitted for the K. E. H. Men who can ride and shoot and who fear neither hard work nor the foe are wanted, and the unfit either by reason of shirking duty or of lacking nerve are quickly got rid of. Untrained men are accepted, but they must show themselves keen for their work.

The last squadron of King Edward's Horse to leave for the front finished its training at Bishop's Stortford, Hertfordshire, only the past week. But a reserve squadron will be maintained in this quaint old town to fill the gaps in the fighting ranks, sending out drafts as soon as properly trained.

ITALIANS TAKE IMPORTANT POSITION-ENEMY IN RETREAT

ITALIANS TAKE ENEMY BY SURPRISE CAPTURE IMPORTANT HEIGHT ON THE TYROL-TRENTINO FRONTIER

Austrians Abandoned Tents and War Materials in Their Retreat---Advance of King's Army Reported on the Friuli Front

ARMY HAS CROSSED THE ISONZO

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, May 28.—"The general situation is entirely satisfactory," says the Italian official report received from Rome last evening. The statement announces that Mont Bonno, an important height on the Tyrol-Trentino frontier, was occupied by Italian troops on Tuesday. Little opposition was offered apparently by the Austrians, who, taken by surprise, retreated from the mountain, leaving their tents and a quantity of war material behind them.

An Austrian battery at Tonezzo was located by the Italian artillery and silenced, the Rome report states. Steady progress also is reported on the other fronts against the Austrians.

HAS CROSSED THE ISONZO.

A despatch from Geneva says:

The Italian army operating on the Friuli front, which occupied the towns of Carignano and Tarzo two days ago, has crossed the Isonzo, and is now before the town of Monfalcone, an important railway centre, on the direct road to Trieste. The railway line running to Gorits and Gradisca also passes through Monfalcone.

Monfalcone is 23½ miles from Trieste, and the railroad line runs along the Adriatic coast for the entire distance, so that an army moving along that line would have constant support from the Italian fleet. The forces which crossed the Austrian frontier farther north and occupied Cormons have repaired the railroad leading thence to Goritz and Gradisca, which was cut in several places by the retreating Austrians.

The heaviest resistance so far offered by the troops of the Dual Monarchy has been at the Ploecken Pass, in the Carnic Alps north of Udine, and at the Predil Pass, south of Pontebba and north of Caporetto, already taken by the invaders. Battles are now raging at these passes.

In the Adige valley, up which the Italian force which crossed the frontier near Lake Garda is moving, the fighting has been confined to skirmishes. Heavier guns have been mounted on the Italian gunboats in the lake, which is traversed by the frontier line.

German reinforcements, including several regiments of Bavarians, are on their way to the threatened positions in Southern Tyrol by way of Innsbrueck. Forty-five trains are passing daily from Salsburg to Innsbruck with men and war material. There is only one railroad line—, the Innsbruck-Bozen-Trent road—by which troops can be sent south through Tyrol.

Both the Austrians and the Italians are giving much attention to the aerial auxiliaries of their armies. Many aeroplanes and airships have been gathered at Venice to take part in the defence of the city from air raids and naval attacks. It has been learned that a Parseval airship arrived Wednesday at Trent by rail from Bavaria, and the garrison of the place expect a Zeppelin shortly.

Your correspondent was informed yesterday from a diplomatic source that owing to the intervention of Italy, which is soon to be followed by that of Roumania, the secession movement in Hungary is rapidly gaining ground. The correspondent's informant said that Hungarians seem to be convinced that Austria cannot much longer hold out, and they are seeking to make a separate peace to ensure Hungarian independence and save Transylvania.

For this reason the Roumanians, who aspire to Transylvania, are urging immediate intervention, realising that delay would be fatal to their dream of territorial aggrandizement at the expense of the Dual Monarchy.

King Albert's Chauffeur.— M. Henri Schorremans, who is now the chauffeur to the King of Belgium, previously a despatch rider, was the means of saving the British general staff of the district from being ambushed. The British officers recommended him to his Government for decoration and he received the Order

FRENCH TROOPS WIN DECIDED SUCCESS IN THE REGION OF ARRAS

Drove Germans Out of Ablain---Inflicted Great Losses Upon Enemy and Captured Many Prisoners---Take Fortified Positions

Special Cable to The Examiner:

PARIS, May 28.—French troops have won decided successes in the region of Arras during the last 24 hours, and have secured possession of a greater part of Ablain. In addition they have driven the Germans from their strongly fortified positions in the cemetery near Ablain and have advanced for some distance beyond it.

During this fighting, says the War Office report, the German losses were very heavy, as they had been the day before. Nothing is said as to the price in lives at which the French made their progress. It will be remembered that Carency was occupied by the allied troops several days ago, who were subsequently forced to retire by the violence of the German counter-attacks.

Otherwise in this sector, where the principal fighting of the last few days has occurred, the French have taken some of the German trenches southwest of Souchez at Chateau Tarleu.

BOMBARDED CHEMICAL FACTORY.

A French aerial squadron, composed of 18 aeroplanes, each one carrying 110 pounds of projectiles, yesterday morning bombarded a chemical factory at Ludwigshafen, on the Rhine, opposite Mannheim.

Fire broke out in several of the factory buildings as a result of this bombardment. This factory is one of the most important manufactories of explosives in all Germany. The French aviators were in the air for six hours, and covered more than 400 kilometres (240 miles). This expedition against an important German establishment was the French reply to the attempts of German aviators on the City of Paris.

An official statement issued last night describing the raid says:

"The aeroplanes which bombarded Ludwigshafen numbered eighteen. They took the air at 3 a.m. Thursday. The works of the Badische Anilin and Soda-fabrik Company, the largest explosives factory in Germany, occupy an entire quarter of Ludwigshafen, near Mannheim, and an important annex has been established near Oppau, a mile and a half from Ludwigshafen.

"The aeroplanes threw 47 four-inch bombs and two six-inch bombs on the main establishment, and thirty-six four-inch bombs on Oppau. All the bombs reached the mark.

"Towards 6:15 three enormous columns of yellow flames could be seen at Ludwigshafen, and at 6:30 the aviators saw Ludwigshafen and Oppau covered by vast volumes of smoke.

"The aeroplanes were fired at, but all returned except one. According to the pilots the latter machine was obliged to land at Ludwigshafen, and was seen to be in flames as soon as it landed. They believe that the landing, which was caused no doubt by the enemy's fire, was effected normally, and that the pilots burned the machine to prevent it from falling into the hands of the Germans.

"This expedition, which shows to what degree of skill and daring our aviators have attained, constitutes the finest aerial exploit yet accomplished during the war."

Ludwigshafen, an important commercial and manufacturing town, forms practically one city with Mannheim, the two places being connected by a bridge and ferry service across the Rhine. The population of Ludwigshafen is about 75,000, while that of Mannheim is nearly 175,000. Ludwigshafen was several times the scene of sanguinary contests during the period of the French Revolution.

GERMAN SPY IS SUSPECTED

Special to the Examiner.

SHEERNESS, Eng., May 28.— Persistent rumours that a German spy touched off the gigantic explosion that sent the steamer Princess Irene hurtling skyward with a loss of more than 300 lives, caused the British Admiralty to-day to order an immediate investigation. The Admiralty officers who were on the ground early to-day, ridiculed these rumours.

British Steamer Is Torpedoed

Special Cable to The Examiner:

PENSANCE, Eng., May 28. — The British steamer Caedby, with a cargo of pitwood, was torpedoed and sunk off the coast of Cornwall by a German submarine. The crew was saved.

TRIFLE ANXIOUS OVER DELAY OF GERMAN NOTE

Special to The Examiner:

WASHINGTON, May 28.—Officials are becoming a trifle anxious at the delay of the German note on the Lusitania, Guljight, Falaba and Cushing cases. It was explained to Ambassador Gerard that the delay would be unavoidable because of the Italian crisis, but this crisis having passed, the sentiment is that Germany should complete the note.

Believes It Was a Torpedo Not a Mine

Special to The Examiner.

WASHINGTON, May 28. — Capt. Greene's preliminary report to the American Naval Attaches at London, giving the story of the explosion, which damaged the freighter Nebraskan, has reached the State Department. It emphasizes the Captain's earlier statement that he had definite knowledge of the cause of the explosion. He leans to the belief that it was a torpedo, but says neither he nor his crew saw any evidences of submarines at any time, while this report adds to, rather than explains, the mystery of the attacks. Officials here will take no action until complete reports are received from United States Naval Constructor McBride, who was to-day making a complete survey of the damages to the Nebraskan. It is admitted that he may be able to fix the responsibility, although experts here say that unless he finds in the flooded hold fragments of the torpedo, if one was used, his task will be difficult. Captain Greene's statement that there was first a shock and then an explosion, both accompanied by lifting movements of the forward part of the vessel, indicated a mine rather than a torpedo, they said, explaining that a torpedo shatters, with most of its force downward, while a mine lifts.

Battleship "Majestic" Torpedoed Nearly All the Crew is Saved

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

LONDON, May 28.—The Admiralty announced last night that the British battleship Majestic, Capt. H. F. G. Talbot, was torpedoed and sunk yesterday morning by an enemy submarine while the battleship was supporting the allied land forces on the Gallipoli Peninsula. Nearly all the officers and men were saved.

It is supposed that the submarine that sank the Majestic was the same that sent the British battleship Triumph to the bottom on Tuesday last.

The Majestic was completed in the year 1895, and was the oldest battleship on the active list of the navy. She was one of nine vessels known as the Majestic class. Her displacement was 14,900 tons, length 390 feet, speed 17 knots, and she carried four 12-inch, twelve 6-inch and sixteen 12-pounder guns of old pattern, with five torpedo tubes. Her nominal complement was 757 officers and men.

The sinking of the Majestic is said to have occurred off Seddul Bahr, at the southern point of the Gallipoli Peninsula. This statement is made in a Constantinople despatch received by way of Berlin.

A despatch to the Times from its Mudros correspondent says that 440 men of the crew of the battleship Triumph, which was sunk Tuesday in the Gulf of Saros, were saved. The officers and crew on board the Triumph in peace times numbered about 700 men.

The Turkish official communication issued here yesterday concerning the sinking of the British battleship Triumph Wednesday in the Gulf of Saros says: "The Triumph was accompanied by two destroyers, while other vessels were on guard to protect the battleships, when a German submarine attacked and sank her. The torpedo which the submarine fired exploded amidships. The Triumph listed and nine minutes after capsized. She floated keel upward, however, for 20 minutes. The crew, who had rushed on deck, were rescued by destroyers and other ships. The submarine was chased by destroyers, but escaped undamaged."

RUSSIAN TROOPS NOW OCCUPY URUMIAH

SPECIAL CABLE:

PETROGRAD, May 28. — Russian troops have occupied Urumiah, the mission centre in Persian Armenia, where wholesale massacres of Armenians by Turks and Kurds recently occurred.

Urumiah lies 60 miles southwest of Tabriz and is one of the chief missionary centres in Persia. The Fiske seminary for girls, under United States' direction, and Urumiah college, are located there. The War Office also announced the defeat of a band of Kurds in the Caucasus, south of Mollaz Gherde, and another victory over the Turks near Bashkala.

22nd Battery Now in France

LONDON, May 28.—A private message received here to-day says the twenty-second Battery from Kingston, Ont., reached France, all well.

RIGHT HON. HERBERT H. ASQUITH—Who has organized the most remarkable Cabinet in British history. It consists of 12 Liberals, 6 Unionists, and one Labourite, and Lord Kitchener.

Becker Has One Chance

New Evidence Might Enable Becker to Escape Chair

NEW YORK, May 27.—Martin T. Manton, chief counsel for Charles Becker, the former police lieutenant, whose conviction of the murder of Herman Rosenthal was affirmed by the Court of Appeals, was planning to visit Becker at Sing Sing to confer with him concerning future action. Mr. Manton agreed with Becker in stating that no attempt will be made to obtain executive clemency from Governor Whitman.

District Attorney Perkins said that in his opinion Becker's only chance of escaping the electric chair is in newly discovered evidence or in an appeal to the Governor. "Not a single constitutional question has been raised in this case," said Mr. Perkins. "and without such a question the Federal Court will refuse to touch the case."

WELCOMED BY THE PEOPLE

Special to The Examiner:

ROME, May 28 — Italian troops have occupied the Austrian town of Orado, 22 miles southwest of Gorita, on the Adriatic. An official announcement to-day said that invading forces were enthusiastically welcomed by the invading forces.

Efforts To Save Mrs. R. Copping

Was Supplied With a Life Belt —Carried Under Water

Mr. Leonard McMurray of Toronto, in a letter to Mrs. McMurray, tells of the efforts made to save Mrs. and Miss Ryerson and Mrs. Copping, while the Lusitania was sinking. A part of the letter was written prior to the tragedy and was carried by him through the perilous time that followed.

"As she was being looked after I went to the help of the Ryersons and Reg. They still had no belts, so I gave them those I had and helped them put them on. Standing beside them was Mrs. George Copping of Toronto, who had no belt, so I gave her one and helped put it on her. Then I saw a circular life buoy lashed to the rail of the ship, so I cut it loose and took it for myself. By that time the ship was sinking so Reg. and I helped the Ryerson ladies into a lifeboat and he got in with them.

Carried Under Water.

"As it was pretty well filled I did not get in, but waited until the ship was nearly down to the water's edge, and jumped overboard. I was carried down by the suction of the foundering ship for some depth, but my vigorous strokes and desperate efforts managed to gain the surface with the invaluable help of my lifebuoy. I had seen the life boat that Ryersons and Mr. Lockhart were in upset, but when I came to the surface could see nothing of them. I then swam about for a while until I came to an upset lifeboat, on which were a number of men. It was very much overcrowded and mostly under water.

Happy Hawkins in the Panhandle

By ROBERT ALEXANDER WASON

Now all this was reasonable: if one man was minded to buy a hard-boiled hat and would ask another man to join him in one, and the other man would say that hard-boiled hats would be a curse in his line of business, why that'd be all right; but when it comes to drinkin'—well, I was a mite nervous 'cause I didn't want this boy cowed until I had had time to either put a little more starch in him or else tie a can to him.

Isaac had decided that he was goin' to take a drink and he beamed out through his plate-glass windows as pleased and as innocent as a baby. He held his pup under his left arm and his umbrella in his right hand and when I looked at him, I decided that just about one drink o' the kind o' poison he was likely to find in such a place would start his safety-valve to fizzin' in about a minute, but anybody could see that he was harmless, so I judged him to be safe no matter what happened. Tom Smith was wearin' the gun he had been practisin' with and this made him fair game. Jim had rode on by.

Red and Missourie lifted Tom Smith off his hoss and carried him inside and Flames and I follered after, the kid tryin' his best to look six feet tall. When Isaac came in with his pup, a monsterous big, tawny dog came forward and sniffed of 'em.

"No, indeed," sez Isaac. "I couldn't part with him."

"What ya goin' do have, gentlemen?" sez Big Jeff, settin' out a bottle o' gin and a bottle o' whiskey, and cups enought for all of us.

"You can put at least two o' those cups back, Captain," sez I as friendly as I could force, "'cause the kid, here, and I are not goin' to drink."

"You're a stranger in these parts, ain't ya?" asked Big Jeff.

"First time I was ever here," sez I, "but I don't expect this climate to make me feel so strange that I can't tell when I want a drink."

I tried to make my voice just as soft and friendly as possible, but I never could run that voice to altogether suit me though I've worked on it ever since I first discovered it. Big Jeff looked at me through his blood-shot eyes, and they returned in good measure the challenge which had leaked into my voice.

He knew in a minute that I had shifted that forced drinkin' business from Tom Smith to myself—and the change didn't suit him. The other boys savvied the game, too, and they turned in to amuse 'emselves with Isaac, while Tom Smith didn't appear to notice that anything at all had happened, and was examinin' a pile of overalls on the counter.

"Come on, Flames," sez I, "let's help Jim herd those ponies."

Smith followed us out and it wasn't long [illegible]

asked Big Jeff.

"That's a Yorkshire terrier," sez Isaac.

"Well, my dog never et nothin' like that, and I'm thinkin' it might do him good. Tell ya what I'll do, I'll give you two-bits for him, and we'll head him down thet rail and see how long it'll take old Nick, here, to get him."

corkin' good outfit and the' wasn't a man in it who couldn't fight square whiskey and stand a fair chance of gettin' the best of it. They had got Isaac to deliver a lecture on what whiskey looked like in the fossil age and all about what had happened to it since, and he had took fire over his drink the way I thought he would and had told 'em the joke about wine.

Boiled down, this joke is, that in the olden time the rich used to squeeze out grape-juice and drink it until it spoiled, when it was given to the slaves. Then it was noticed that the slaves forgot they were slaves and cut up as scandlous as a covey of kings and queens; so the rich kept the fermented juice for themselves, and gave the slaves bean soup as a beverage. Isaac had quite a few o' these jokes; but in order to put 'em over so they'd be sure to land, he first had to teach us history, geography, the meanin' of words, and the religious and political schemes at work when the joke was put in force; so that we generally got more fun out of the serious part of him than the comic.

The boys were all in good humour, and didn't bear any ill will towards me, nor Tom Smith either, and we rode along in fine spirits, while Isaac talked a hole into ol' Monody, tryin' to make him see the point in something one old Greek philosopher had said to another old Greek philosopher.

We struck the Washita at Dan Cooper's and we all felt in high glee, 'cause she was a purty stream, and Jim's ranch house was only eight miles west from there. Dan ran a small store, and kept a lot o' fast mules for speedy haulin' and a lot of oxen for heavy stuff. He was doin' well, but was deep in debt and hustlin' like a badger to dig out. His wife came to the door with the perkiest little infant in her arms ever you saw, and when she saw Jim, she welcomed him proud and made him light down and let her fix up a feed for the whole outfit.

Dan wasn't home but her brother and his brother were, and they joined in, so Jim had to agree to it, if they'd let him provide a few knick-knacks he'd brought along with him. She finally gave in to this and then Monody turned in and helped some with the cookin' and we sat down in the regular dining-room and for about twenty minutes we sounded more like a herd comin' out of a boggy ford than anything else I know of. The stage from Fort Supply to Fort Elliot ran right past her door, and while this wasn't a regular relay, she often had to feed a load, the same as Dan often had to hire out some of his mules, so she wasn't one o' these housekeepers who have to have a month's notice to get up two extra meals.

Mrs. Cooper was a wonderful refreshin' woman to gaze upon; her hair was smooth and wavy, her skin was clean and deep and soft and her eyes just reached out and mothered ya without askin' no impertinent questions. She was quite a young woman, but had plenty o' size to her and nearly allus went with her arms bare to the elbows so she could put things through with a rush, but no one ever saw her fussed up nor tryin' to do more than she could do right. If I was the Lord and really wanted to throw men into the right way o' livin' pronto, why I'd turn loose a whole lot more of just such women as Mrs. Cooper.

That sure was a pleasant meal for all of us except Isaac, whose stomach was never designed for any such rough work as handlin' Big Jeff's whiskey, and who got deathly sick tryin' to do justice to Mrs. Cooper's banquet. She fixed Isaac up some mustard and soda and one thing and another, and gave it to him out in the yard, and after he had responded to it, he pitched his umbrella under a tree and curled up beneath it with the faithful pup in his arms.

"You ought to be ashamed of yourself," she said, shakin' a finger [illegible] Red, the minute she returned to the house.

"Did that little punkin-beetle tell that I taught him to drink?" sez Red, as brazen as a sheep bell.

She looked at Red with her eyes twinklin'. "That poor little man didn't tell me a thing," she said; "but I might just as well warn you boys first as last that it won't do you a mite o' good to try to fool me. I know every one of you right now, and you in particular. Why, by the time that red beard of yours gets gray with age and long enough to step on, I'll still lock my pantry door before leavin' you alone in the house."

After givin' our dinner time to settle, we loaded Isaac into the wagon and turned west along the south bank of the Washita to Jim's place, which began just across White Creek, four miles beyond.

Well, he sure did have house-sense, I'll say that for Jim. He had picked out one of the soothin'est cottonwood groves for his ranch house ever I saw, and had built him a comfortable three-room shack out of logs. The bunk-shack was at some little distance from the house, bein' a half-dugout and right next to it was a smaller dugout which General Miles had built a few years before when he had chose this location for winter headquarters durin' an Injun campaign. I wasn't altogether sure how Jim would suit me as a steady diet, so I decided on the jump that what was good enough for General Miles could be made to do me some way or another. The corrals and stables came just to the edge of the grove, and winter or summer it was a mighty restful place to head in for.

When we turned our stuff loose and got ready to fit into our quarters I happened to notice a curious old figger sittin' up back of the bunk-shack holdin' his long gray beard in his hand and sinin' us up at his ease. He had a regular hawk nose, and a pair o' piercin' eyes back in under his bushy brows, and I estimated him to be the old codger who had been left in charge, and at first it amused me to see how cool and offish he was; but after a time seein' him perched up there like an owl began to scrape on me and I was tempted to try peggin' a small stone at him. He had a buffalo gun between his knees, and this was one of the reasons why I didn't jar him loose; but I finally went to Jim and sez, "Jim, before I go any farther with my home-makin', I want to know something about the habits and customs of the old resident who's perched in that clump o' bushes up back of the bunk-shack."

"Oh, that's Josiah Cornell," sez Jim. "He's the man I left in charge."

"His name suits me as well as any name would," sez I, "but if he spends too much time up there, he's liable to get on my nerves."

Linguistic Barriers.

It is generally accepted that the adoption of a universal language, purely spoken, is handicapped by the fact that it is confronted with physical impossibilities. In the first place, the vocal organs are so entirely dissimilar in different races that a language will change too much for the various people using it to understand each other. If the Italian language could be given to the Chinese or the Russians it would change so that in a few years no one would recognize it as the same. This disability may be accounted for by the fact that the people in the chilly north speak with the lips nearly closed and those living in a mild climate give free articulation by opening the mouth.

Who can predict what the future will be, in view of what has already occurred in this generation of miracle working? New inventors, standing on the shoulders of those who so transformed things during the last half century, will doubtless learn still greater secrets of nature. Much of our worry over posterity is idle. While we are handing down many serious problems for posterity to wrestle with, we are also giving it the richest legacy any generation has ever had. Thanks to our inventions, the youth of tomorrow will live more before he attains his majority than "Methuselah did in all his stagnant centuries."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Was Troubled With Eczema.
Would Nearly Yell With Pain.
BURDOCK BLOOD BITTERS CURED HIM.

Mr. R. J. Swales, Harriston, Ont., writes: "I have been a great sufferer with eczema. I tried all kinds of salves, but they did me no good. Sometimes I would nearly yell with the pain, and would pass little white worms. I was told to get at the blood, so I used four bottles of Burdock Blood Bitters, and it has made a complete cure."

All skin diseases such as eczema or salt rheum, itching or burning rashes, boils, pimples, eruptions, ulcers, etc., are all caused by the blood becoming impoverished, and while not usually attended with any fatal results, may sooner or later develop into some serious blood trouble, and the entire system become affected.

Burdock Blood Bitters will cleanse the blood of all its impurities and by this means cure all skin and blood troubles.

This valuable preparation has been on the market for the last forty years, so you do not make any experiment when you give it a trial.

CHAPTER XIII.

The Second Story Man.

JEAN DARNELL paced back and forth in the miserable room where Harry Wilkerson had lodged her and her maid pending the outcome of his wild plotting to get possession of Ruth Gallon's precious papers. Her handsome and cruel face was clouded with slow wrath, and she clinched her hands now and again till the knuckles were white.

For one thing, Mrs. Darnell loved the pinch of life. Physical luxury was her highest wish, the goal of her loftiest ambition, the one price she had set on her soul. The dull surroundings she had been forced to accept nauseated her. She hated Wilkerson for making her uncomfortable.

So when he came in, walking very slowly and quietly, she turned on him like a wildcat.

"Take me out of here!" she panted. "I won't stay here another hour, Ruth or no Ruth!"

Wilkerson flinched. "I'm sorry," he rasped, "but Drake made a mess of the whole affair, the police are after Sing Wah and that girl got away."

Mrs. Darnell stopped in her almost hysterical walk about the room and He returned her look defiantly. "I'd never had to do all this if you had done your part long ago and got the papers when she was in your charge," he said. "But there is no use in crying over what can't be helped."

"I've got my scheme and my man."

At this moment Drake entered, presenting himself sullenly. He had already received Wilkerson's acrid compliments on his astuteness in failure, and he expected nothing less from Mrs. Darnell. He was ready to quit the conspiracy.

Jean's quick instinct did not fail her, and she instantly smiled on Drake and murmured: "You poor boy! Now tell me all about it!"

When he had finished his relation of the morning's experiences, with much emphasis on the shooting and his narrow escape from Sing Wah's den, she looked at him thoughtfully.

"It was a madman's scheme," she said. She turned to Wilkerson. "Harry, you used to do things better. Use your wits! This isn't the desert. Force won't avail and time is getting short. We must have those papers immediately and raise the money on them and get enough capital ahead to find the old plan to the mother lode of the 'Master Key' mine. Use your wits!"

For a long moment the three of them stood in silence. Then Wilkerson smiled sardonically.

"All right, Jean; I think I understand you. I'll see what I can do today. First I must find out a few things. Drake and I will go together."

"Thanks," said the young man drily, "I have a notion that I'm about fed up with your plans and plots."

Before Wilkerson could respond with the bitter reproaches ready on his lips Mrs. Darnell interposed, curbing her own unruly temper.

"George," she said, looking at him with suddenly soft eyes, "I know just how you feel. But it means everything to me—to all of us. I have trusted you so, and if you fail me now"— She threw out her arms in a gesture of pleading. Then she came closer to him and whispered, "And are you going to give up the stake you are playing for? You are in love with her!"

"That's but little reason why I should help Harry here out with all kinds of preposterous plans. That one of last night nearly did for us all. If she would be at the door now."

"John Dorr is a stupid fool," Wilkerson broke in. "It's been mere luck that's helped him so far. Nobody ever crossed Harry Wilkerson yet and got away with it. Old Tom Gallon found that out."

Jean Darnell glanced at his feverish eyes and understood him. She knew that the reaction from the thought that he had caused Dorr's death—the sudden surprise of finding him alive and in San Francisco—had shaken his nerve. He would hereafter seek the devious and obscure ways he knew so well. Her eyelids almost closed till she was looking at him through narrow slits. She seemed satisfied and turned to Drake. "Please do it for me," she urged again. "I know Harry has some good, safe plan in view."

Wilkerson nodded. "We'll be back before very long, Jean. Better stay right here so that I can get you on the phone if necessary."

"Oh, I'll stay here!" she mocked. "That seems to be my role—staying where you put me."

He stepped very close to her and looked into her stormy eyes. "And if I put you where you most want to be in the world?"

She saw the passion flaming, as if the man's soul were on fire, and drew back fearfully. Wilkerson understood that movement and laughed grimly. She feared him, and he feasted on the terrors he inspired, even where he also loved.

Once out on the street, Drake sullenly followed his companion's lead into a still lower quarter of the town. Busy with his own thoughts and still shaken from his experiences of the morning, he did not notice that Wilkerson was evidently on the lookout for some one. Once or twice he stopped to think. Once he greeted an old acquaintance and carried on a low voiced conversation, of which Drake heard nothing except the name "Pell" and "he usually hangs out around Adam's poolroom."

When Wilkerson rejoined him Drake said peevishly, "Where to now?"

"I've got my scheme and my man," was the reply. "It'll be plain sailing from now on."

A moment later Drake was surprised to see Wilkerson step to one side directly into the path of a pale faced, quietly dressed young man of about thirty years of age. The individual stopped, stared at the man who had so rudely interrupted his walk and then recoiled.

"Harry!" he stammered.

Wilkerson smiled cruelly, but said nothing. The other repeated the name and went on, "Are you here? Why are you here?"

His dread was so evident that Drake looked at him curiously. It was strange what a number of queer acquaintances Wilkerson had and how deeply most of them seemed to fear him. He listened intently to his companion's drawling tones.

"Yes, I'm Harry Wilkerson. I was looking for you, Pell."

The man he addressed raised his dry lips and essayed a smile. "Long time I no see you!" he said in an attempt at a jesting tone.

"How long is it, now?" Wilkerson said as if to himself. "Ten or five years"—

"For God's sake, man, be quiet!" whispered Pell. "I—no one knows me here, and I'm on the square now too."

"You mean the police don't know you," grinned Wilkerson. "But, then, I know you, old sport. You wouldn't say now that I weren't an old friend, would you?"

Pell grudgingly accepted the hand held out and shook it feebly.

"We'll just go to some little place and sit down and talk over old times," Wilkerson remarked pleasantly.

"But I've got a date! I'm working downtown!" protested Pell miserably.

"Working?" demanded Wilkerson mockingly. "Since when has old Sam Pell been working? Answer! Since he was broke." He laughed loudly.

"I came out here to live on the level," pleaded the other, his foxlike face white with fear.

"Things too hot for you in the torrid east? Well, I never went back on a pal, did I, Sam? And I'm not going back on you now. I'm going to put you in the way of some coin."

At this point they turned into a small Greek cafe, and Wilkerson ordered coffee all around. When they had been served and were alone he introduced Drake and Pell and remarked to the former: "Sam Pell is known as the slickest man in his line. Ain't you, Sam?"

"I ain't working that lay any more," was the sulky answer.

Wilkerson leaned across the table, and his lean face held a very evil expression on it. "Not working? But you'd do a turn for an old friend, wouldn't you, 'specially when there's lots of good, safe money in it?"

As if hypnotised, Pell stared into the dark eyes fixed on his and swallowed chokingly.

"I knew you would," said Wilkerson, willfully misinterpreting his inarticulate groan. "Now to business, Sam!"

"Henry!" gasped the other. "My name's Henry now. Don't call me Sam."

"Well, Henry," said Wilkerson soothingly. "I declare, I do forget names so easily. Now, I want to explain my little proposition. It's just in your line, Se—Henry."

Pell bit his finger nails and squirmed on his seat. But when the man opposite him casually pulled out a heavy purse and as he heard the clink of gold he subsided.

Very rapidly and curtly Wilkerson told him of the existence of a bundle of papers that he wished to "recover." He laid only enough emphasis on their character to enable Pell to identify them on sight and concluded by saying: "It's worth money in your pocket to locate them and get them back. Find a girl named Ruth Gallon in one of the hotels here. She has the papers."

Pell rose nervously. "Not for me, Wilkerson."

Wilkerson rose, too, quite undisturbed. "We'll just walk down the street apiece with you, Se—Henry, and I can explain a little more clearly."

The outcome was that half an hour later Pell took $50 advance from Wilkerson and promised to recover the papers for him. Before they parted the latter made several little jokes of, but which seemed to make Pell sick with terror.

"Who is that fellow?" Drake demanded as they were returning to their lodgings.

Harry Wilkerson laughed bitterly. "The best hotel worker and second story man in America," he replied. "But he's lost his nerve."

"I don't like the way we're getting mixed up with all sorts of crooks in this business," said Drake crossly. "I went into this to oblige Jean and"—

"Help yourself," Wilkerson finished for him. "I notice that Mrs. Darnell and I are putting up the coin and doing the work so far. Where's your kick?"

The evil spell that Wilkerson had cast over so many weaklings closed about George Drake, and he was silent.

* * * * * * *

Just how it was that she found herself again in the same room in the hotel Ruth could not have told after her terrible experiences of the night and morning. But John had hurried her into a cab, ordered it driven to the Manx and quickly made arrangements for Ruth to occupy his room with a maid to look after her.

"All my clothes are with that horrid woman," she whispered.

"I'll rig you out, and then we'll go shopping," was the rejoinder.

With the help of the maid and the housekeeper Ruth was presently made presentable for the street, and John, in dry clothes and none the worse for his ducking, met her in the lobby.

"I have engaged a taxi by the hour," he told her. "I think it will rest you more to get the fresh air and dig around in the shops among the pretties than it will to brood in your own room."

Ruth hesitated shyly. "But I have no money, John."

"Oh!" he said blankly, and then a thought came to him. "Why, here I am carrying around a lot of the ranch money which I was going to turn over to you."

Once in the taxi Ruth told him of her experiences from the time she had left the mine. John listened soberly, though once in awhile a heavy flush on his cheeks betrayed his deep seated anger at the plotters who had not only tried to deprive her of her mine, but had finally risked her life and liberty.

"It's all that man Wilkerson," he said when she had finished. "He caused your father to make him superintendent of the mine and then hounded him into his grave. He is your bad angel, Ruth. But I am here now, and I'll get busy with Everett and finish things up, and we'll soon be back at the mine and have things going again."

He answered her questions about the situation at the "Master Key" as tactfully as he could; he realized that her nerves were badly shaken. He would trust to old Tom Kane to hold the fort in the mountains while he transacted the necessary business in San Francisco.

He directed the chauffeur to drive them through the shopping district, and while Ruth spent several hours in replenishing her wardrobe John sat in the taxi and studied things out. But he was continually seeing Wilkerson's dark face before him, and before they returned to the hotel he had determined to find out where he was and what he was doing.

While Ruth went to her room to dress for dinner John sat in the lobby and completed his plans. He did not observe a slender, quietly dressed young man with a very pale face, who sauntered in and out with an occasional trip to the cigar stand to light a fresh cigarette. It was Henry Pell.

The ex-thief had spent the day going from hotel to hotel, searching the registers. He was quite at last that he went to the Manx. There he found the name "Ruth Gallon" on the register and below it "John Dorr." This he reported to Wilkerson, who swore luridly, but emphasized the necessity of getting hold of the papers immediately.

"And I trust you to do it," he said meaningly.

Pell, flushed with drugs, nodded briskly. "I'll get 'em, all right, Harry," he said, but did not add his inmost thought, which was that, with the papers once in his own possession, he could easily get much more from Wilkerson than the $200 he had promised.

"When will you have them?" Wilkerson went on impatiently.

Pell smiled faintly, but significantly. "I know your address," he remarked.

them."

"But when?" growled the other.

Pell flicked his cigarette stub into the gutter and whistled. "I never make dates ahead," he said quietly. "But it won't be long."

"Have you your plan all schemed out?"

Pell winked and moved off, [illegible]

A SOLDIER'S CAMEL RIDE

An Australian soldier in Cairo wrote the following description of a ride on a camel. "Before a camel gets down it makes a noise like a sitz bath being dragged along Oxford road at the rate of about four miles an hour. Then it folds its legs under it like a four-fold two-foot rule, and then you start. It's your turn now. You get on its back and its legs unbend, and you clutch and think of all the bad deeds you have ever done, and then open your eyes expecting to find the Pyramids far beneath you. The motion when it starts is that of riding astride the banner in a Good Templars' procession, and when the beggar runs it's like being astride the banner in a Bad Templars' procession.

"It's when a camel gets down that one really begins to see life. Have you ever trodden on a loose stair rod? That is the second sensation. The first is like one you get when you come across the top stair from above in the dark, when you don't know it's there, and the last makes you remember the day the hammock rope broke."

Bibles in Bristol.

A hint of ancient Bibles in the neighborhood of Bristol has brought many other confessions of concealed treasures. There is a "Breeches" Bible of 1610, a "Bishop's" Bible of 1585 in a country cottage, a Bible in good condition dated 1560, and another dated 1594, which the owner, being a poor man, would like to sell. That also is in good condition. They bound their Bibles well when printing was young, and that is possibly the secret of their preservation.

Those long-preserved west country Bibles remind one of the peculiar sanctity which the Bible attained among those who never opened it. "We always keep a Bible in the house in case of illness," said a pious relative, "but, thank heaven, we've had no use for it since poor old grandfather was took!"—London Chronicle.

"SPIKING" MOTOR CARS

Problem of Destroying Autos Captured From Enemy and Abandoned

When the French cavalry in 1870 captured German guns, being unfamiliar with breechloaders, [illegible] some cases were driven off before they had disabled them. It might be supposed that motor cars would be easier to dispose of, yet experts are offering suggestions to the inexperienced, such as dropping steel nuts in the rear axle casing. Another way is to open the throttle, run off the radiator water and then throw cold water upon the engine, which will thereupon crack in a way most detrimental to future usefulness. Civilization seems more eager in these days, to smash things than to make them, but motor cars can at least be replaced, which cannot be said of cathedrals.

This story stands out for cool, superb heroism. Learning that an officer was lying badly wounded in a trench 400 yards beyond the dressing station, Dr. D. C. Finding an operation necessary, he decided to remove the officer, but could not get beyond the communication trench. A heavy German fire was directed at him, and all through the day he lay in the trench, compressing an artery by hand to check the bleeding. As darkness fell, Dr. Turnbull, helped by an orderly, lifted the officer and started the perilous journey. He got his patient safely through, but in doing so he received a shot through the lung, from which he subsequently died.

The last pig-tail has disappeared from the Chinese embassy in London. It belonged to the majordomo of the Chinese ambassador, and it is now on its way to China as a present to that functionary's wife. "Never mind, your ladyship," was the smooth reply, "I can converse tolerably well in English!"

DOCTOR SAID SCIATICA—RHEUMATISM—LUMBAGO

But He Could Not Help Me, and Endorsed the Use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills

Mr. Wm. Parker, 105 Cayuga street, Brantford, Ont., tells in the following letter of his remarkable experience with Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills: "My doctor treated me for some time for Sciatica, Rheumatism, Lumbago, but to no purpose, for I had to lay off work. The visiting officer of Sick Benefit called to see me and advised the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, stating that he had been cured of the same trouble by their use. I asked the druggist about them and he recommended them highly. Not being satisfied with this, I went back to my doctor, and then he said they were good I began their use. The promptness with which they enlivened the action of the kidneys and bowels was wonderful, and it was not long before I was rid of all my trouble.

"I was so bad that I could only walk by hanging on to a chair or the wall. My wife had to lace my shoes. Only those who have had this ailment can realize the way I suffered. I am writing this letter to let people who have my trouble know of these pills. You are at liberty to use this letter, and if anyone interested will call or write to me I will give every detail."

Write to Mr. Parker, enclosing stamp for reply, and he will verify this statement. He will do this out of the gratitude he feels for his cure and because he realizes how difficult it is to obtain the cure of these dreadfully painful ailments.

There are so many treatments recommended for rheumatism that you naturally doubt them all. Here is an opportunity for you to verify the cure and put this great medicine to the test. It will only cost you a quarter to try Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. They get at the very foundation of rheumatism, and by removing the poisons from the system take away the cause of pains and aches.

Could Hardly Straighten Up For The Pain in Her Back.

Many women suffer from an excruciating pain in the back. They are not even able to look after the common duties of their housework, and cannot even walk at times.

The whole trouble is that the kidneys have become affected, and when the kidneys get "out of kilter" the whole system becomes deranged. On the first sign of a weak, lame, aching back you should not neglect it, for if you do, you may be sure that some serious kidney trouble will follow.

What you want is a kidney medicine, for kidneys only. This you will find in Doan's Kidney Pills. Doan's Kidney Pills know nothing but kidney disorders, because they're made for kidneys only.

Mrs. George Craigie, Rose Valley, P.E.I., writes: "I am writing to tell you what a wonderful cure Doan's Kidney Pills did for me. I was suffering with a lame back, and for several days I could hardly straighten up for the pain. I had used quite a lot of other kind of pills, but received no relief. Just then my sister told me about what "Doan's" had done for her, so I decided to try them. I used three boxes and I am completely cured. I do not hesitate to recommend them to all."

Doan's Kidney Pills are 50c a box, 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

Tom Riley Will Not Return

OTTAWA, May 28—Tom Riley, the wrong Riley who was released by mistake from Kingston Penitentiary, is still down in Missouri and inquiry at the Justice Department failed to disclose any new developments in his case. Some weeks ago it was intimated that Riley would come back voluntarily. Now, it is stated, he intends to stay where he is. Officially it is said the Department has taken steps looking to the return of the prisoner to custody. Nothing has come from this action. It cannot be said that any great anxiety is displayed about bringing Riley back. He is out of the country, is reported respectable citizen, was deported at the request of the Government, and the probabilities are fairly strong that if he does not come back of his own accord he will stay where he is. At all events, no one here appears to be worrying particularly about it.

DON'T WASH YOUR HAIR WITH SOAP

When you wash your hair, don't use soap. Most soap and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali, which is very injurious, as it dries the scalp and makes the hair brittle.

The best thing to use is just plain mulsified cocoanut oil, for this is pure and entirely greaseless. It's very cheap and beats soaps or anything else all to pieces. You can get this at any drugstore and a few ounces will last a whole family for months.

Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in, about a teaspoonful is all that is required. It makes an abundance of rich, creamy lather, cleanses thoroughly, and rinses out easily. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and is soft, fresh looking, bright, fluffy, wavy and easy to handle. Besides it loosens and takes out every particle of dust, dirt and dandruff.

SPLINTER IN HEART

French Doctor's Astounding and Successful Operations

An operation unique in the annals of surgery, the extraction of a fragment of hand grenade from the heart, was described at the French Academy of Medicine, by Professor Armaingaud, of Bordeaux.

The patient, a young Parisian sergeant of rather delicate constitution, who was present at the session, was wounded at St. Hubert, in the Argonne. A splinter penetrating the diaphragm, the pericardium, and the cardiac muscle, lodged in the right vesicule of the heart, where it remained four and a half months.

Dr. Maurice Beaussenat undertook to extract it. Once the heart was made open the difficulties began. The fragment was very awkward to catch, and slipped from the forceps several times before it could be got out, but the heart continued to beat all the time. Although complications were feared, everything went well, and the sergeant could be considered cured a month after.

Before the war there were five thousand German waiters and barbers in London.

How to Curl the Hair In Damp Weather

Damp days have no terror for the woman who has adopted the simering method of keeping her hair in curl. The effect is more lasting than where the hot waving iron is used, and yet the hair is quite manageable, regardless of how it is done up. Besides, the hair has the appearance of being more naturally wavy and curly, and the application is really beneficial to the life and growth of the hair.

In dry weather the hair will of course remain beautifully curly and fluffy for a still longer period. Most any druggist can supply the liquid simerine and one need not get more than a few ounces. A small quantity should be put on before retiring, using for the purpose a clean tooth brush, drawing this down the full length of the hair from root to tip. The effect upon arising is delightfully surprising and there is no discolorations, no stickiness, greasiness, nor any other unpleasant accompaniment.

THE EARNINGS OF SPIES

Large Sums Paid For Inside Information—Espionage a Profession

A spy who really takes an interest in his work and makes himself useful and trustworthy to the Government that employs him—or her—may often have a very remunerative, if not exactly a pleasant, time.

A regular, accredited Government "agent" may expect at least $2,500 a year. Germany, which is recognised as the country that makes the most use of espionage, has also a system of bonuses, to encourage the spy and spur him on to greater efforts. If he should be lucky enough to secure an especially valuable piece of information for the Fatherland he may be presented with $2,500 or $5,000. Germany spends an enormous sum annually in the attempt to discover the plans and intentions of other Governments. It is estimated at over $400,000, and German secret service agents are found in the most unlooked-for places.

Russia's expenditure runs very close to that of Germany, and her system is agreed to be the finest in the world. Russian spies have figured in novels galore. In fact, the Russian system of espionage is the most perfectly organised human machine in existence. Her neighbors, France and Austria-Hungary, spend about $300,000 and $200,000 respectively for the same purpose, but it is not brought to such a pitch of perfection as in Russia. Italy devotes $800,000 for her secret service, but this amount is divided by the Ministry of the Interior as follows: For secret service, $200,000; for police rewards, $170,000; and for defective service at home and abroad, $230,000.

Spying is looked upon as a fine art in Japan, and she runs Germany very close for the world's championship in getting at other nations' secrets. There is a curious kink in the Eastern character that makes them adepts at this sort of work. Orientals are noted for their patience, and they bring to this work a never-failing store of it. This, together with their ingenuity—in some cases cunning—makes them remarkably clever spies. The war in Manchuria gave a striking example of the value of the work done by Japanese secret service agents.

In England the service is principally controlled by the Intelligence Department of the Admiralty and the War Office, and has in recent years been raised to the same high standard of perfection credited to Russia and Japan.

To most foreigners spying is simply a business, a profession to be entered like any other, and to be paid as well as other dangerous professions requiring skill and courage. Spying, perhaps more than any other profession, needs skill and courage. Often the spy has to act a very difficult part, and the least failure of nerve would spell disaster. It is audacity that brings him through the most critical situations.

It is a striking fact that when women take up the profession they generally make better spies than men. Their feminine instinct and resourcefulness enables them to carry out the boldest plans, where men by their less tactful methods might fail.

PROUD OF HIS NEW CLOTHES

Rhodesian Native, Returning From Mines, Was Scandalized By Unclad Relatives and Friends

A town in Rhodesia is not generally a town, declares Mrs. M. L. Woods in "Pastels Under the Southern Cross." A few scattered shops, a broad road deep in red dust, down which a sudden miscellaneous herd of blacks occasionally pours, constitute a town. Of these natives, Mrs. Woods gives the following description:

They are collected from all parts of Rhodesia, from Portuguese territory, even from Nyasaland. Dressed in anything and everything, they come pell-mell, grinning and chattering, some like young colts bounding into the air as they go. These happy fellows are probably rejoicing because they are being sent to some mine where certain of their friends and relations are already working.

This is the native as he appears entering on his term of service at the mines. I once saw a group of black men who had completed their term of service and were on their way home. They were serious, dignified, conscious of clean and complete costumes, consisting of shirt and trousers and a hard straw hat. Each had his neat bundle and his gaily painted wooden box.

We were once appreciative witnesses of the home-coming of such a miner at a wayside station. A party of relatives and friends had come from the kraal to meet the returning one, all innocent in their nakedness and rags. The plutocrat surveyed them with a scandalized eye; coldly he waved their salutations and endearments, obviously too shocked and pained to appreciate them. Then he withdrew from the platform to the foot of a neighboring tree, and beckoned his bewildered friends to approach. In a few minutes, before the eyes of the passengers in the train, he had clothed his whole party with decency, and surely, in their eyes with splendor. Then, and only then, did he condescend to return their greetings; and, exceedingly joyful, all marched off together in the direction of their kraal.

"Kitchener's Way"

For many years "Kitchener's way" has been a sort of saying in the British army. Innumerable stories have been told about it since the war began, and some of them are true and some are not—mostly not. Here, however, is a true one. When the Field-Marshal went to the War Office, he found himself threatened by a shortage of guns and ammunition which later developed seriously. It so happened, however, that he knew that in a famous city of a certain neutral nation, in Europe, a great modern plant for the manufacture of war material had recently been erected. He purchased the entire works, shipped all the machinery to England, where, so considerable is it, it is not yet entirely in working order. When it is in thorough order, it is calculated a great part of the difficulties arising from want of guns and ammunition will have been overcome.

The Girl Who Thinks.

"My 'estrangement,' if you can call it that, from my mother, dated from the moment I began to think," says a writer under the title of "My Mother Didn't Tell Me," in Harper's Bazar. "I had been very much a 'mother's girl.' My mother and I planned my frocks, we sewed a great deal together, we chatted together, we read poetry aloud together, and also a good deal of modern fiction. My mother was very fond of books, and kept abreast of the times. Our companionship was of a very beautiful sort and still is—as long as I keep within those prescribed limits and as long as I do not venture into any question that has to do with the life or thought of the country today. My mother is as much interested in my books today, now that I am twenty-seven, as she was when I was seventeen. She will lose that interest in books, now does her dislike of the tendency of modern thought extend even to her literature."

BUILDING RULES MOST STRICT

Those of Switzerland Designed to Give Protection to Adjacent Property Owners

A peculiar building regulation is in force in most parts of Switzerland. It is required that before the erection of a new building, frames or screeds must be erected to mark out the shape of the building in profile as well as in plan. In practice this amounts to erecting at each angle of the building a pole or mast with a projecting triangular frame attached to it at the cornice level to indicate the height and projection of the cornice. The building law of the canon Zurich requires that the framework shall be erected when the plans are submitted for approval by the public authorities. The purpose of the rule apparently is to bring out, in advance of construction, the architectural relations of the building to adjoining structures and to the districts in which it lies, both for aiding the municipal authorities in passing upon the plans from the architectural viewpoint and giving the neighboring owners an opportunity to judge of the effect of the proposed new building upon their interests.

Velocity of Light.

The first determination of the velocity of light was made by Römer in 1676. The method was based upon the observation of the eclipses of Jupiter's satellites, phenomena of frequent recurrence and easy of observation. Assuming that light required time wherein to move from place to place through space, the interval between successive eclipses would appear too short when the earth is approaching Jupiter and too long when the earth is receding therefrom. Romer found in his observations that such was the case and that the interval was conditioned by the rate of speed at which the earth changed places relatively to Jupiter. From these constants Romer computed that light expended about sixteen and one-half minutes in crossing the earth's orbit. From this is deduced a velocity of about 186,500 miles a second.—Harper's Weekly.

Soldier's Queer Biscuits

The Indian and Australian can make their own army biscuits; the former is a "chupatty," the latter "damper." A chupatty results from the mixing into a stiff paste by an Indian of flour, salt and water, and baking it on a metal dish over a hot fire. But the Indian cook seems a necessary ingredient to make it pratty as well as nutritious.

Damper needs flour, baking powder, water and wood. A hole in the ground is the oven. Fill it with your wood, and while that is burning make your dough. Then lay it on a large stone, cover it with a tin, and cover the tin with the hot wood ashes, and the result will be a damper.

CARE OF THE EYES

Health as Well as Beauty Demands That Eyes Get Attention.

The woman who takes care of herself should give as much attention to her eyes as she does to her skin or to her hair. In the first place after driving or being in the dust of the city or country she should wash or bathe her eyes with tepid water. This removes the irritating dust or small particles. After reading or before going to bed she should bathe the eyes with salt water or tepid water to which is added a pinch of salt, and using an eye cup, will be surprised at the difference in the sparkle of the eyes. If inflamed they should be bathed several times a day. The dull, sunken eyes, the hollow circles and the shallow complexion of many women is due, however, to the complaints and diseases peculiar to women. The best thing I know for this is Dr. Pierce's Favourite Prescription, because it is a temperance tonic, being made of roots and herbs with pure glycerine. Dr. Pierce publishes the ingredients on the wrapper so it is not a secret, and I have seen many women cured by it and not only that, but the dull, sunken eyes, the sunken cheeks, and bust, have taken on a sparkle and healthful appearance. Thousands of women have testified to having been cured of womanly diseases by this Prescription. It speedily causes all womanly troubles to disappear—compels the organs to properly perform their natural functions removes pain and misery at certain times and brings back health and strength to nervous, irritable and exhausted women.

It banishes pain, headache, backache, low spirits, hot flashes, dragging-down sensations, worry and sleeplessness surely and without loss of time.

Keep the bowels healthy by using Dr. Pierce's Pellets. They don't gripe.

Dr. Pierce's Medicines are manufactured in Canada at the World's Dispensary, Bridgeburg, Ont.

Wounded See Queer Things

"Sometimes you see queer things when you are wounded," says an Irish Guardsman. "At Cuinchy, while I was lying out until the stretcher-bearer came, I got a bit delirious and fancied all sorts of things. As clearly as I see my prayer book in my hand now, I saw my little girl of three picking her way among the wounded with her wee feet, to come and cheer me up. I knew in a vague sort of way that it was only a delusion. All soldiers who have been wounded will tell you that they, too, have seen visions. They are not always pleasant ones. A man I know thought he saw his mother-in-law."

War Devastation

According to data published in Petrograd, three-quarters of Russian Poland has suffered from the German invasion, and not one of the ten provinces has escaped devastation. Ninety-five towns and large villages have been laid in ruins, while of the 27,000 smaller villages in Russian Poland, 4,500 have been destroyed, a thousand of them being burned to ashes. The total losses are estimated to amount to $500,000,000.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

BOLERO FROCK IN RATINE.

By Anabel Worthington.

Black and white check ratine was used for this stylish model, with bolero jacket and smartly flared skirt. The skirt particularly is interesting. There is a foundation skirt of lining, to which the front gore of ratine is laid on in the manner of a facing. This allows the box plaits to fall free at the front edges in a graceful, novel and altogether modish way. The plaits are part of the side gores, not separate pieces, and extend up over the girdle to meet the bolero.

The bolero is quite free at lower edge, with plain, loose back, and is worn over a simple underbody made of lining but having vest and sleeves of cotton crepe. The collar is on the Medici style and made of a fine net lace. Buttons of the crepe are not a negligible feature, but add a great deal to the effect, serving to fasten the front edges of the bolero and the top of the plaits to the under blouse. The dress closes conveniently, the waist at the front and the skirt a little toward the left under the box plait.

A variety of combinations is possible, such as linen and lawn, cotton corduroy and batiste, serge and taffeta, and shepherd check with China silk. Any of the fashionable silk materials that may be used for suits are appropriate for this design, particularly pongee, poplin and taffeta. For medium size 4 yards of 40 inch material would be required for skirt and jacket and 1¼ yards of 36 inch material for underblouse. The pattern, No. 7,179, can be obtained in six sizes, from 34 to 44 inches bust measure. Price 15 cents.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25c.

ITALIAN AVIATORS' SUCCESSFUL RAID

FIERCE ASSAULTS ON TURKEY BY LAND AND SEA

FRENCH TROOPS STORM AND CAPTURE GERMAN EARTH WORK

Brilliant Charge Near Souchez Resulted in Capture of Number of Prisoners—French Artillery Drives Enemy Out of Fortified Positions and Near Angres a Rain of Shells Stopped a Vigorous German Onslaught.

ITALIAN AVIATORS BOMB RAILWAY

Special Cable to The Examiner:

PARIS, May 28.—The French troops stormed and occupied the German earthworks near Souchez, in a brilliant charge that resulted in the capture of a number of prisoners. The fighting in this region and everywhere north of Arras continues with uninterrupted violence. Around Ablain the French artillery drove the Germans out of several strongly fortified farm houses.

Near Angres, a vigorous German onslaught encountered a rain of shells that sent the enemy reeling in retreat, leaving several hundred dead and wounded on the field.

The official communique this afternoon announced a renewal of the fighting in LePretre woods, near Pont-a-Mousson. The French realised a slight advance on the edge of the woods.

ROME, May 28.—Italian aviators flew over Monfalcone and dropped several bombs on the railway between Trieste. General Cadorna reported that considerable damage was done by the bombardment and that communication between Trieste and the Austrian forces near Monfalcone was interrupted, possibly entirely cut off.

HOT WORK AT DARDANELLES

LONDON, May 28.—Undismayed by the loss of the British battleships Triumph and Majestic, the allied fleet has begun a fresh bombardment of the Turkish forts from inside the Dardanelles, and from the Gulf of Saros. The despatches from Tenedos to-day said that the renewal of the warship attack was the signal for simultaneous attacks by the allied land forces. The Australian and French troops swept forward in the direction of Krithia, storming the Turkish trenches in rapid succession. Other allied troops are making a fierce attack on the Turkish positions near Bulair and Gaba Tepe.

Under the guidance of German officers the Turks have converted the Gallipoli Peninsula into a maze of wire entanglements and trenches. Every Turkish position is guarded by land mines that have caused the allies severe losses. Powerful German searchlights play upon the allied trenches during the entire night.

The admiralty to-day had no further details of the disaster to the Majestic, the fifth English battleship destroyed at the Dardanelles. Naval circles took some consolation to-day in the official statement that Submarine E—11 had sunk two Turkish ammunition ships in the Sea of Marmora, and had shot a torpedo against a Turkish transport.

Salonika despatches received here to-day said that the German Admiral Von Usedom had succeeded General Von Sanders, who was recently severely wounded in the Dardanelles operations. For several days the Turks have been rushing reinforcements toward Krithia, along the railway leading through the peninsula. It is now estimated that the Turkish land forces at the Dardanelles number 210,000. Opposed to these are allied troops numbering not less than one hundred thousand.

THE CANADIAN CASUALTIES

OTTAWA, May 28.—Additions to the Canadian casualty list bring the total number up to 5,847. Of the total 938 were killed, 3,092 wounded, and 1,217 are missing.

BERLIN, May 28.—via wireless.—The admission was made by the German war office this afternoon that General Mackensen's left wing has suffered a slight reverse, and has lost six guns in the fighting on the east bank of the San, north of Jaroslau.

The official despatches also reported the beginning of a new German offensive along the Dcbissa in the Russian province of Kovno.

In the western theatre of the war the French have occupied part of the German position near Metzral in Alsace. The war office admitted this, but reported that fierce French attacks in Le Pretre forest were repulsed.

A TERRIFIC EXPLOSION

LONDON, May 28.—An official statement from the Admiralty to-day emphasizes the terrific force of the explosion that shattered the Princess Irena and sent pieces flying miles sky-ward. Of the 300 or 400 men known to have lost their lives, only one whole body has been recovered, and it was so badly mangled as to make identification impossible. Tiny chunks of human flesh and bits of fingers scattered over the bank represent all that is left of the steamer's crew and the workmen engaged in repairing the vessel.

FALLS FIGHTING FOR THE GERMANS ONCE LIVED HERE

Max Hadrich, For Three Years an Employee of the Local Branch of the Quaker Oats Company, Reported Killed in Action

A PICTURESQUE PERSONAGE

About three years ago Max Hadrich was in the employ of the Quaker Oats Company. He was a German by birth and a German by conviction. The outbreak of war found Max Hadrich in his native land, and when the call went forth last March for additional reserves, Max and his brother submerged their identity in their home regiment. Since that word has come to Mrs. B. Matschke, 114 Dublin Street, with whom Max Hadrich boarded for upwards of three years, to the effect that he had fallen.

Mrs. Matschke, when seen by the Examiner to-day, had no confirmation of the death of her former boarder. She recalled him as a fine type of man, well liked by everybody with whom he came in contact, and possessing an enviable disposition. He came to Peterborough about six years ago with the object of learning the milling industry as conducted by the Quaker Oats Company. Prior to that he was technical manager in a large mill in Hamburg, Germany, where his father conducted a milling business on a large scale. After three years' residence in Peterborough, a parental call came over the waters, requesting Max Hadrich to return to his native heath and take charge of a large addition that had been made to his father's mill. Max responded reluctantly. He would liked to have remained in Peterborough at least another year. So anxious was he to learn the milling business from the ground up that he started in as a floor sweeper, and when he left had made his way into the office. He was an admirer of the methods employed by the Quaker Oats Company, and often referred to them in eulogistic terms. Max Hadrich was a well-known figure in Peterborough. He frequented the Young Men's Christian Association and the Belmont Club. During the three years that he resided in Peterborough, he boarded with Mrs. Matschke, with the exception of one week which he spent at the Munro House.

WAS WELL TO DO.

"Max had no occasion to work as he did," said Mrs. Matschke this morning. "His parents were wealthy and conducted a large milling business on their own account. He was anxious to familiarize himself with the methods employed here, and realized that to accomplish this he would have to

PRZEMYSL STILL SAFE

Austro-German Attempt to Seize Railway Ends in Failure After Violent Artillery and Infantry Attack

A DECISIVE DEFEAT

Special Cable to The Examiner:

PETROGRAD, May 28.—The Austro-Germans have been decisively defeated in their attempt to surround Przemysl by a grand assault.

Official despatches to-day reported a lessening of the violent artillery attack launched by Gen. Mackensen in his attempt to reach the Przemysl-Lemberg railway. At no point on the east bank of the San is the enemy within 20 miles of the Russian line of communication.

Mackensen planned to pierce the Russian right wing by battering artillery and infantry attack and then to seize the railway. For 24 hours the enemy's artillery poured a torrent of fire against the Russians between Jaroslau and Przemysl. At the same time a German force that crossed the San above Jaroslau recrossed the River Lubaczeka and struck at the Russian flank.

Between Przemysl and Jaroslau, the chief danger point, the Slavs have checked the enemy. There is a marked diminuition in the force of the Austro-German onslaught.

On the east bank of the San in the neighbourhood of Jaroslau fierce fighting continues. But the enemy's left wing is no longer advancing, and the threat against the railway is believed to have been definitely removed. A great see-saw battle between Stryj and Kolomea continues without decisive result. Isolated forces on both sides have captured positions of minor importance. Both armies have suffered heavily, but the decision all along this battle front is in doubt.

"Y" Boys Visit The De Laval

A large group of boys from the 'Y' had a most enjoyable as well as an instructive time for an hour yesterday afternoon, when they visited the De Laval. Mr. Breyfogle knows what boys like and know how to handle them. Had it been the Duke that was paying the concern a visit the management could not have been more cordial or opened up his place of business more than he did to the boys. The magnificent suite of offices were visited first and we are sure that many a boy had dreams and visions that some day he might be at the head of such a business system.

Then the work shops were inspected and the boys saw the separator business from A to Z. Every boy was given a souvenir to carry home.

The hospitality of the management and the insight into the business will linger long in the memory of the boys who took the trip.

ARGYLLSHIRE TORPEDOED

Big Glasgow Liner is Attacked and Damaged by German Submarine —Wireless S. O. S. Signal Heard on Irish Coast

NO PARTICULARS YET

Special to The Examiner:

LIVERPOOL, May 28.—The Glasgow steamer Argylshire was attacked and damaged by a German submarine to-day. Her wireless "S. O. S." calls were received here, and vessels have put out to her assistance.

The Argyllshire is a big steel twin screw steamer of 10,302 tons. She is owned by the Scottish Line, Limited. Her home port is Glasgow. Her length is 506 feet, beam 61 feet. She was built in 1911.

The Admiralty was besieged this afternoon with requests for information concerning the fate of the Argyllshire. Wireless stations at several points along the Irish Sea coast caught the big liner's cry for assistance and sent vessels rushing to her aid. Her message simply reported that she had been attacked by submarines, but carried no details as to the extent of the damage.

Local Nurse Is In France

Mrs. Douglas is Matron of a Party of Thirty Five

Word has been received that a party of thirty-five Canadian nurses in charge of Matron Mrs. Douglas of Peterborough have crossed over to France. The nurses left Canada several weeks ago and have gone directly to the front. Dr. Frederick is mentioned in the list of Canadian doctors at present in London.

Many Licenses Are Cut Off

Special to The Examiner:

WINNIPEG, Man., May 28. — By order of the new Attorney-General twenty-six hotels and ten wholesale liquor houses in Winnipeg lost their licenses to-day, not being up to the requirements of the law.

Music & Drama

"A PAIR OF SIXES."

Edward Peple's hilarious farce "A Pair of Sixes," gave a good-sized audience an evening of unmitigated enjoyment at the Grand Opera House last night. One of the funniest comedies seen here in many moons, the charm of the production was enhanced by the clever acting of a thoroughly adequate cast. Enabling more amusing than the quarrels between the two partners of the Turska Digestive Pill Co. has been shown at the Grand this season, and the parts were exceedingly well taken by Geo. B. Lethbridge and Harry O. Stubbs. The other parts were in good hands and the farce was played in sparkling fashion.

THE BIG MEDICAL CONVENTION NOW A THING OF THE PAST

The Concluding Sessions This Morning Were Marked by a Number of Very Interesting Papers.

A SUCCESSFUL EVENT

The concluding sessions of the Ontario Medical Association's convention this morning were marked by a number of interesting papers, and by an address to the final curtain. On the parade floor the exhibits were passing through the usual filter with the resulting precipitate of excelsior and other packing materials left for the caretaker. In the exhibit of Ingram & Bell of Toronto, J. McDonald [illegible] down the Kaiser, a skeleton that dangled above the booth, and packed up the X-ray machine which shown at times was in danger of destruction when its machine-gun spark flayed the nerves of Cunningham over in the Glaxo booth. Horlick's Malted Milk, Phillips' Milk of Magnesia, the Ideal model incinerator and the other exhibits packed away their goods and quietly disappeared.

DR. AND MRS. GIBB WISHART'S RECEPTION TO [illegible]

The reception held by Dr. D. J. Gibb Wishart and Mrs. Wishart, of Toronto, in the Collegiate Institute Assembly all last night, provided a pleasant social finale to the events of the convention. Practically all the Peterborough doctors and their wives were present, and of course, the visiting doctors and their wives and daughters, to the number of those who made the Peterborough trip.

Musgrave's orchestra was down from Toronto for the occasion, and provided a delightful instrumental programme.

Mr. Frank Oldfield, also of Toronto, was heard in several vocal solos, sang in his usual pleasing voice. His numbers included "Be British," "The Floral Dance," and "British Over All."

Light refreshments were served by Coleman at a prettily decorated buffet across the east end of the hall. The reception was quite informal, and enabled the doctors and their ladies to meet socially for a short time before the convention concluded. Dr. Wishart, who received with Mrs. Wishart, was the president of the Medical Association in 1914-15. At noon to-day there were only a few stragglers left of the mid-week hundreds.

Dr. McMurtry, who has been presiding over the meetings of the surgical section, read a paper before that body this morning.

PTE. GORDON HARDIE, 9th Royal Scots, killed in action. He was a brother of E. G. Hardie, Dalhousie Street, and of Alex. Hardie, with the C.G.E. squad in the Canadian Engineers at Esquimault, B.C.

SERGT. HAMILTON TELLS OF DEATH OF DICKY BOONE

Peterboro' Artilleryman Was Not Hit by a Piece of Shell and Died Two Minutes After—Buried in a French Church Yard

WORK OF THE ARTILLERY

In a letter to his brother, Dr. J. J. Hamilton, of Bethany, Ont., Sergeant H. H. Hamilton of the Divisional Artillery, 1st Brigade, C.F.A., refers to the death of Sergeant G. V. "Dicky" Boone, and to his being buried in a French court yard. During the last week Sergt. Hamilton has sent home some interesting souvenirs, including a button from the uniform of a Prussian officer, one from the serge of a German private, and a cap of a shell which exploded within a few yards of his position. So far he has come through unscathed.

The following letter was written in Belgium, May 1, 1915:

Dear Jack—Just a few lines to let you know I am still alive,' although I have had a few narrow escapes.

On Friday, 23rd April, we got orders suddenly to come up here and take up a position, as the Germans made a big advance over a considerable front. Well, we rushed up and have been at it day and night ever since, and are now in our dug-outs at the guns waiting orders to open fire, as we expect to make an attack, for yesterday we got them going, took three lines of trenches and several prisoners. Previous to yesterday the Germans used gasses which killed thousands and prevented the remainder from gaining their trenches. Last Tuesday our position was found by aeroplane and we were shelled very heavily as a result. One of our sergeants was hit in the stomach by a fragment of shell which made an awful wound and also in the forehead by another fragment. He died in two minutes and was buried in a French churchyard. He was a brother Mason. We had two others killed and fourteen wounded the same day.

There is not a great deal of news to tell you, except that our officers and men are behaving splendidly.

I have not had a letter from you for almost a month. I must admit that our mail service is demoralized at present, so am patiently waiting for it to straighten out.

This is all now, so will close. Hoping this finds you all well, I am,

Your loving brother,
HECTOR.

P.S.—I forgot to tell you it was Sergt. G. V. Boone who was killed. He lived in St. John's, Newfoundland, but enlisted in Peterborough. He was an electrical engineer. We have a tobacco famine on now.

This is the 25th day of this fight.

The splendid letter was written in Belgium to his mother, Mrs. F. Ham-

A GREAT SMALL THING.

The criticism directed against Lord Kitchener by some British newspapers, is, in itself, apart from its justification in fact, a tribute to the freedom which the genius of British institutions guarantees. We don't know to what extent the taciturn Kitchener may be impassive under criticism; but he cannot logically complain. This criticism, the freedom to make it, is the very thing Kitchener and the British people are fighting for. They are fighting for human freedom; for the [illegible] freedom in all its various legitimate manifestations — freedom for man to speak the thing he thinks, to exercise the right of free manhood, which nationally enjoyed makes free people. This freedom is the germ of all the benefits we enjoy under British institutions. That is what Britain is fighting for, and what Germany is fighting to suppress. Criticism like that made by the Harmsworth papers is inconceivable in Germany, where force dominates, and individual freedom, as we know it and enjoy it, is unknown. Individual freedom is a small thing per se, but great in what it stands for and leads to—national freedom.

A SERIOUS SET-BACK.

We often have demonstrated the force of the Scriptural injunction—"let him that standeth take heed lest he fall"; and never more pointedly than in regard to some of our crops. We were hugging ourselves over the idea of an early spring; many had planted out tender vegetables with prospects of early enjoyment. Then comes a frost; a killing frost and disaster follows. The frost of night before last was a bad blow to many of the owners of little private gardens, and a sadder blow to our market gardeners, who had laid plans and planted largely for early production of certain vegetables. Many of them will be heavy losers by the destruction of their early planting, and they are to be sympathized with; for though some of the early growth will only be delayed, such as potatoes, and subsequently in large measure, recover, other early vegetable growths will be ruined and necessitate replanting, which of course, involves delay in maturing to saleable size. The frost of night before last was no respecter of lines of latitude. In the south and west of the province it was much more severe than in the higher latitude of Peterborough. We had only three degrees of frost here; but in the Niagara district, there was thick ice formed, and great damage was done to the advanced fruit crop, with, of course, similar damage to early vegetable growth. In this transitory life we can count on little, with certainty. We must, however, take things as they come, without repining or rebellion. Some may wonder at the ways of Providence, that permits such visitations, which may be a rebuke to our pride and our undue trust in our self-accomplishment. But is it certain that Providence has anything directly to do with a spring frost? May not the elemental forces of nature, put in motion when this old world was first swung into space, and operating according to nature's laws through countless ages, have been directly responsible for the killing frost of Wednesday night?

MANNERS AND MORALS.

Note two more the Ontario Department of Education has decided to attempt to effectively place instruction in "manners and morals" in the public school curriculum. This is shown by the following paragraph in the Globe:

> Manners and morals will not be neglected in the teaching of Ontario's children. The withdrawal of the first book on the subject has made way for "The Golden Rule Readers," which the Department has authorized. He has also asked Chief Inspector Cowley of Toronto that these books on manners and morals must be in the hands of pupils by September next. It is left to the trustees to say whether the Board of Education supplies them free to the pupils or whether the pupils will be required to buy them for themselves. They will cost at least $2,600 for Toronto.

In this action of the Department of Education we have official endorsation of the long-time contention of The Examiner, that the inculcation of morals, and inevitably of manners, is too much, if not entirely in a practical sense, neglected in our public schools. The Department is logical in its bracketting of the two subjects—"manners and morals." They are very intimately related; too closely to be separately regarded. It is true that one may have good manners, of the superficial kind, without the accompaniment, necessarily, of good morals; but it hardly possible for one to have good morals—that is genuine good morals—without good manners, being necessarily associated. Good manners are in a sense a sort of religion, and in themselves a part of good morals. They are, when of the true kind, founded upon the divine law of altruism—"love thy neighbour as thyself"—and involve respect for the feelings of others and deference and reverence, the latter the basis of all religion or religious worship. When we can succeed in indoctrinating our school children effectively with the principles of true good manners, we have gone a long way in implanting good morals.

Nowadays we note, and often feel, that the present generation is lacking in good manners—in respect for age—superiors in position or in authority; and consequently respect for the rights and feelings of others, which is one of the chief elements of good morals; and we note and feel that this condition is due to lack of home training and training in the schools. Yesterday, two boys on the way to school, were seen robbing a flowering shrub, growing in grounds close to the street, and separated from it only by a low retaining wall. Not only did they take the flowers, but in the process bent down and broke large branches in their eagerness for spoil. This may be thought a small matter, perhaps, but it involves a disregard of principle that makes for the beautification of the city, and the pleasure of the public — the principle of respect for the rights, feelings and pleasures of others. These flowering shrubs, planted primarily, for the benefit of the owner, in effect give as much pleasure to the public as to the owner. The actions of the school lads are exhibitions of selfishness and disregard of the golden rule, and all the considerations that foster the amenities of social and civic life. If they had been taught, effectively, at home, and in default of that, been taught effectively in school, good manners, equivalent to the respect for the sacredness of private property, for the rights, and feelings, and even pleasures, of others, they would not have done as they did do in contravention of all these considerations. We cannot, and never can expect, universal, or even general home training in these regards. All parents are not, and unfortunately as it seems, few parents are, qualified or willing from moral constitution and social refinement, to give the instruction needed; but we should certainly expect our teachers, educated specifically for the instruction of youth, to supplant home neglect. Teachers faithfully instruct the minds of pupils; but where there would be the will to devote themselves to their moral and aesthetic culture, the over-loaded and cap-heavy prescribed course of studies, leaves little or no time for the culture of the part of the child that really counts—the immortal soul—no time to implant in the child the sense of the higher—the highest duties—only preparation for the comparatively sordid duties of life, making money and getting on in the world. Now we are to have a change by the introduction of text books on manners and morals, to be made obligatory. This is an immense step in advance and a wholesome change; one that, if practically followed up, will work a wholesome revolution and make a new people when the rising generation reaches grabbing age, we need to do something to stem the tide of intense popular and national absorption in material and mortal things, and leave freedom for the play of influences that affect the truly real part of man, the immortal. The only real part of us, that makes man man, is the soul. While that remains we are men; when it departs we become dust—on the same level as the beasts that perish.

Sir Wilfrid and the Country Await Sir Robert's Answer

In his notable speech before the Liberal Club Federation of Ontario at Toronto Friday evening last Sir Wilfrid Laurier, leader of the Liberal Opposition, issued a challenge to Sir Robert Borden, premier of Canada.

This throwing down of the gauntlet by the Liberal chieftain was not a defiance nor was it a call to war. It was a challenge for peace. It meant that during the term of the present war against German savagery Sir Wilfrid Laurier renounced all claim to office for the Liberal party, it meant that the Government should conduct its war policies without the dread of being forced to the country. It meant that for a term of one or two or four or more years Sir Wilfrid Laurier was content to remain in an Opposition that has been given no voice in the affairs of the country during a war crisis in spite of the fact that in the great issue of the war there was no politics and that the Liberal party represents almost half of the people, according to the records of the last election, and certainly no fewer at the present time.

So far Sir Robert Borden has made no reply to the Liberal leader's magnanimous offer, The Premier has not had time to agree to this direct wartime pledge. But he has had time to give an anxious country word as to whether or not there will be an election while the war lasts.

Liberals do not ask that Sir Robert Borden open the portals of his cabinet chamber and admit the able members of the Opposition by forming a coalition cabinet as the Motherland has done. Liberals only volunteer with the voice of their chieftain to give of their best service to the country, whether in the fields of France or at home.

The Advertiser believes that Sir Wilfrid Laurier was never so noble a figure as when he stood before the Canadian people, and though he may have renounced for all time the chance to again become premier of Canada (we cannot forget that his years are as great as his honour, and cannot remember without pausing to pray that he may long be spared), he removed Canada from beneath the cloud of a political conflict so far as it was possible for him to do so.

These words we print below are ringing in the ears of Sir Robert Borden. Has Canada two great statesmen at the head of her political parties? Let the Premier give to his people an answer, for Laurier has spoken and said for all to hear:

"But I have this to say to the Prime Minister and all his colleagues: I do not care for an election. Let the Prime Minister and his colleagues say that there shall be no election as long as the war shall go on, and I will pledge myself and the party that we shall stop all preparations and think of nothing but the war."

Canada is waiting to hear your answer to this challenge to a united battlefront for Canadians, Sir Robert Borden.—London Advertiser.

Inherits $800,000 But New Wealth Will Not Change Plans

SAN FRANCISCO, May 20.—"If you are going to say anything in the papers about me, please go easy. The boys are 'guying' me—call me 'Millionaire Kid' and such names."

The speaker was seventeen-year-old Robert M. Bandini, who has just come into a fortune estimated at $800,000 as his share as one of the heirs of the estate of the late Arcadia de Baker, who dies in Los Angeles in 1912.

Records of many European States were searched by his attorney, A. M. Free, former District Attorney of Santa Clara County, to prove the relationship of the Bandini boy to Mrs. De Baker.

"Robert," Mrs. Ruth McMahon, the boy's mother, who lives at No. 888 Diamond street, warned the reporter, "is the greatest mixture of boy and man you ever saw."

The san showed this in his conversation. He was worried lest the interview put him "in Dutch" with his play fellows, and the members of the baseball team to which he belongs.

Then, forgetting his playfellows, he talked like a man about his future.

"I am going right ahead with my plans," the youthful heir of nearly a million-dollar fortune said. "I am going to study agriculture and become a farmer.

"I gradnated from the Santa Rosa High School last spring. I have been planning to go to an agricultural school. Now this lump inheritance comes along and will help my education fine.

U. of C. to Get His Scrutiny.

"I am going down to the University of California the first chance I get and will look up the agricultural courses they offer.

"No," he said in response to a question, "I don't know of any difference that the money will make in my life beyond making things easier. I intend to go on living the same as before.

"I will buy a ranch as soon as I am through with my college work. I have always been interested in farming and mechanics."

Young Bandini halted as if feeling that he had given away a secret.

His mother laughed and prompted him to go on telling what he meant by being interested in mechanics.

The lad refusing to discuss the subject, Mrs. McMahon explained that her boy had a workshop in the basement of the house where he was experimenting and building little aeroplanes and automobiles. He had also made a cabinet and bookcase for himself, which could pass for the work of an expert mechanic.

"I don't like to sit in the house," said young Bandini. "That's why I want to become a farmer. I want to live in the open, to go fishing, boating.

"The money that I get does not really make much difference in my plans, except that they will be carried out much more easily," the boy continued.

Pestered by Letter Writers.

"Yet, people seem to think that by falling into this fortune I have changed over night and become—I don't know what.

"All sorts of queer letters came in the last few days. One man asks me for money with which to go back to the old country to fight.

"Another wants me to subscribe to a worthy cause—and I don't begin to understand his letter.

"A third wants me as a partner in business. He thinks I am just the man he has been looking for.

"We have a farm near Santa Rosa," said Bandini, after he laughed himself to satiety over the antics of the letter writers. "I worked on it last summer. I began pruning the grapevines.

"Say, I am expert it it now. I'll bet you anything I could go out now and work beside any man in an orchard at pruning trees and get a man's wages."

"Bob," came a call from the basement.

"You will excuse me," said Bandini, with a twinkle. "My chum is calling. I must keep him on my side.

"If you keep on writing about my inheritance all my chums will turn against me for fear that I am getting swelled up. I am not a bit. I do not see why I should be."

AMATEUR NURSES

Not Always Useful in Hospitals—Declined to Tend Nobleman

Amateur nursing of "war heroes" has developed some amusing things. Some professional English nurses were in a hospital run by a strange crowd of English society and artistic folk. There was a titled poetess among them; also a poet of undoubted genius who is noted for the poetic license of both his language and metre.

The amateur nurses had a way of crowding around the beds while the genuine nurses were washing their patients and changing their bandages. "We are above such prejudices," said the poet. The other amateurs seemed to agree with them. "But we aren't," said the professionals. So the poetical and artistic ones had to go away and let the patients be bathed without a gallery.

A wounded man, covered with dirt, was brought into a hospital. Not only was he muddy but as a result of a month in the trenches he offended the nose, as well as the eyes of certain society nurses, who managed to palm him off on some accommodating Sisters of Charity among the nursing staff. They felt rather foolish the next day when the wounded man was washed up and discovered to be the Marquis de Z—, one of the oldest names and greatest fortunes in France.

A Gallant Old Fighter

MR. J. A. CHOLLEY

of Montreal, a hunter's guide in the back woods of Beauce county, near the Maine boundary and a veteran of the Franco-Prussian war of 1870-71. Although 77 years of age, the old Frenchman, upon the outbreak of the present war, went to Paris at his own expense and offered his services to the Minister of War in a personal interview. The Minister, of course, could not accept a soldier at that age, at least "not for the present." These latter words carried great comfort to Mr. Cholley, who hopes yet to account for a few Germans.

Lower Birth Rate

It is common knowledge that the birth rate in France has fallen much, but it is not generally realised how rapid and great has been the fall in the birth rate in Germany during the last decades. An eminent German scientist has discovered that, though the number of marriages has practically not changed, the birth rate has fallen by more than 25 per cent., and the mortality by 35 to 40 per cent.

Meat Rations

The meat ration of the British and the German soldiers is about 1¼ pounds a day; that of the French soldier only ½ pound. But the French soldier has nearly twice as much bread as the Englishman and about 10 ounces more than the German. The mainstay of the Kaiser's soldiers seems to be potatoes— 2 pounds 5 ounces a day for every man of them.

A HOHENZOLLERN GHOST

Many of the Royal Families of Europe are said to possess family ghosts. The most famous of all is [illegible] whose appearance is said to mean death to a Hohenzollern and disaster to Germany.

The White Lady haunts the Kaiser's palace at Berlin, and is said to be the ghost of the wife of a small German prince who, in a fit of rage, had her bricked up alive in a vault.

The last time she is said to have appeared was in 1840, during the reign of Frederick William III. A sentry outside the palace was found one night lying in a dead faint. When he recovered he reported that the White Lady had passed close to him and he had fallen senseless through fear.

That night, William III. was taken ill and died shortly afterwards. It was recently rumored that she had made her appearance again, but the report was immediately denied by German Court officials.

GAS BOMBS FRIGHTFUL

Cause Slow Suffocation Like Prolonged Drowning and Great Pain

The following description of the effect of the gas is told by a responsible British officer who visited some of the men who were disabled by gas on Hill 60. The letter of this responsible officer, which first appeared in the London Chronicle, follows:

"The whole of England and the civilized world," he says, "ought to have the truth fully brought before them in vivid detail, and not wrapped up as a present. When we got to the hospital we had no difficulty in finding out in which ward the men were, as the noise of the poor devils trying to get breath was sufficient to direct us.

"There were about 20 of the worst cases in the ward, on mattresses, all more or less in a sitting position, strapped up against the walls. Their faces, arms, and hands were of a shiny, grey black color. With their mouths open and leaden glazed eyes, all were swaying slightly backward and forward trying to get breath. It was a most appalling sight. All these poor black faces struggling for life, the groaning and the noise of the efforts for breath is awful.

"There was practically nothing to be done for them except to give them salt and water and try to make them sick. The effect the gas has is to fill the lungs with a watery frothy matter, which gradually increases and rises until it fills up the whole lungs and comes to the mouth—then they die. It is suffocation, slow drowning, taking in cases one or two days. Eight died last night out of twenty I saw, and the most of the others I saw will die, while those who get over the gas invariably develop acute pneumonia.

"It is without doubt the most awful form of scientific torture. Not one of the men I saw in the hospital had a scratch or wound. The Germans have given out that it is a rapid, painless death—the liars. No torture could be worse than to give them a dose of their own gas."

Abalone Meat in Demand.

Dried and smoked abalone meat, most of which is cured in southern California fishing ports, is purchased by Oriental importers at fancy prices. Occasionally it sells for $300 a ton. In some instances divers are employed to procure the mollusks, and it is not uncommon for an experienced man to bring to the surface two tons of meat and shells in a day.

Music For Prisoners

Music cheers the lives of the German war prisoners interned in the great camp at Handforth, Cheshire. The military guard includes a number of able musicians, and a brass band is now being formed. Some are singers who appear in local church choirs and at concerts. Many of the prisoners are apparently musical for they sing very heartily whilst out [illegible]

How Horseshoes Came to be Lucky

All superstitious people know that a horseshoe nailed over a door will keep out evil and bring good fortune; that a miniature horseshoe worn as a watch "charm" or suspended from a chain around the neck is infinitely "lucky," and that a floral horseshoe forms a part of the decorations for festivities. The efficacy of the horseshoe is well-known and can no more be doubted than can the luck-bringing qualities of the right hind foot of a rabbit caught in a graveyard at midnight during "the dark of the moon."

While only a few iconoclasts will deny the luck of the horseshoe, not many of even the most ardent devotees of that charm know how or why it gained its magical properties. It was St. Dunstan, the blacksmith, and the patron of all smiths and Smiths, who made the horseshoe lucky.

St. Dunstan was an Anglo-Saxon ecclesiastic who lived in the Tenth Century. He entered the Benedictine order at an early age, and when not engaged in religious duties he was employed as a blacksmith. One day he was toiling away at the forge, thinking, doubtless, of heavenly things, when a shadow fell athwart the doorway. The saint looked up and whom did he see? The devil—no less!

Dunstan, serene in his piety and faith, was not in the least afraid of his visitor, who, according to all accounts, looked very much like an ordinary man, save that he had horns, a tail and cloven hoofs. The blacksmith inquired of His Satanic Majesty the occasion of the dubious honour he had paid him, and the Prince of Evil replied that he had been travelling so long and so far that his hoofs had become sore and tender, and he desired to have horseshoes put on them.

Dunstan agreed to do the job, and he made it as painful as possible for Old Nick. The devil bellowed and roared in rage, but Dunstan was very strong and refused to let go of his hoofs until the Evil One had promised that he would never enter any house where a horseshoe was nailed above the door, nor molest any person who carried a horseshoe charm.

This legend accounts fully for the good fortune that is supposed to attach to a horseshoe, but it raises an interesting question. Satan promised to respect the horseshoe as a sacred talisman, but the efficacy of the charm rests solely on a promise given by the author of all evil. It was nearly a thousand years ago that the devil entered into that compact, which is a long time for even the best of folks to remember a promise.

The Heroism of A Wounded Lad Of the Maple Leaf

Alexander Powell, the war correspondent, writing to the New York World from a hospital at Bailleul, France, with mostly British wounded, tells among other things

On one cot was stretched a young Canadian. His face looked as if it had been stepped upon by a giant in spiked shoes. "Look," said the surgeon, and lifted the woollen blanket. That man's body looked like a field which has been gone over with a disc harrow. His feet, his legs, his abdomen, his chest, his face, were furrowed with gaping, angry wounds.

"He was shot through the hand," said the surgeon. "He made his way back to the dressing station in the reserve trenches, but just as he reached there a shell exploded at his feet."

I patted him on the shoulder and told him that I too knew the land of the great forests and the rolling prairies, and that before long he was going back to it. And though he couldn't speak, he turned that poor, torn face of his and smiled at me. He must have been suffering the tortures of the damned, but he smiled at me. I tell you, he smiled at me!

LLOYD'S INSURANCE ON END OF WAR.

Lloyd's, London, will write an insurance policy in any case where a person has a legitimate insurance risk. The rates, guineas per cent., recently quoted by Lloyd's to pay a total loss in the event of peace not being declared between Britain and Germany on or before the following dates, according to the Boston News Bureau, are as follows:

Aug. 31, 1915, 90; Sept. 30, 1915, 80; Oct. 31, 1915, 72; Nov. 30, 1915, 65; Dec. 31, 1915, 55; Jan. 31, 1916, 45; Feb. 28, 1916, 35; March 31, 1916, 30; April 30, 1916, 25; May 31, 1916, 20; June 30, 1916, 15; Dec. 31, 1916, 5.

This means that a person who wishes to be insured that the war will end before August 31, 1915, must pay 90 guineas, or £94 10s as a premium in order to recover £100 in case the war is not ended at that time. Reduced to betting terms, this means that person who puts up 90 guineas per cent., or £94 10s, would win £5 10s in addition to his original stake, if the war is not ended by August 31. In other words, the insurance men at Lloyd's are asking odds of 94½ to 5½, or, roughly, 17 to 1 on the termination of the war by August 31.

If the rate of insurance were 47½ guineas per cent., the betting would be practically even. In figuring insurance in guineas per cent., the rate is expressed in guineas, while the recovery is expressed in pounds.

The figures given above indicate that even money opinion at Lloyd's is that the war will end in January, 1916.

SEVENTEEN DAYS WITHOUT TAKING OFF THEIR CLOTHES

Col. Morrison Says Canadian Artillery is as Good as the Best in Any Army—Driver Galloped Through Rifle Fire at 300 Yards' Range to Bring Ammunition to the Guns

The following letter from Lt. K. W. B. Morrison, commanding the First Canadian Artillery Bridage, will be read with interest:

"Northern France,
May 15, 1915.

"Your note came to me as we are resting behind the firing line after having 17 days and nights of continuous battle at Ypres, where the Canadian artillery supported their infantry, some of our batteries firing two ways at once during the critical time when the French exposed our flank. The same mail brings a letter from Major McCrae's mother, dated April 28, six days after the battle began, saying that they were comforted by a cable in the Toronto Star, stating that the Canadian artillery were 'in reserve!' Hell's delight! We (my brigade) have not had our clothes off for 17 days. We fired 18,000 shells, had six guns put out of business by 'Jack Johnsons' and lost five officers and 75 men killed and wounded. That's the sort of 'reserve' we were in. My remaining guns were nearly out of business when we were finally ordered out of the position night before last the oil was boiling in the recoil buffers and the recoil springs 'tired,' but I flatter myself there was only standing room in hell for Germans that night. We helped stop five German attacks on that day alone.

"But, grousing apart, I'm getting all the fighting I want and it is good. My brigade was the last to come out of the big fight that commenced on the afternoon of April 22, with 'gassing' the French division on our left, and is really not over yet. The Canadian division did well, and we never lost a gun, newspapers and official reports notwithstanding. It was some British territorials lost four 4.7 guns, and our infantry had to go over and take them back from the Germans.

"You remember I always said the Canadian would hand out a breed of fighting if ever they got into a European war that would make 'em all sit up. Well, they have. You remember I told you the Canadian artillery was as good as the best in any army, and then some? Well, they are. Major King's battery (of St. Catharines) stood right out on the left flank of the whole British army after the French division had run through his guns, and fired to his front and flank at the same time with Prussian infantry 200 yards away. Our drivers galloped through the straggling enemy's infantry and ran the gauntlet of rifle fire at 300 yards to bring ammunition to the guns. It was a gorgeous pink-eyed afternoon and evening—that time we were 'in reserve,' and for 17 subsequent days.

"Yours in the pink,
"E. W. B. MORRISON."

Will Confer With Officials

LINDSAY, May 27. — Arrangements have been made with Mr. M. G. Murphy, District Passenger Agent of the C.P.R., by a committee of citizens for a conference in Toronto on Thursday regarding the proposed change in the hour of the arrival of the mixed train from Toronto. The change contemplated, it is claimed, would prove a handicap to Lindsay's business.

HIS COAT RIDDLED AND BUTTONS SHOT OFF

Pte. Charlie Mongour of the 57th Detachment, Came Through Safely, Although He Had Many Narrow Escapes, He Tells His Mother in Letter Just Received.

MANY CHUMS GONE

Writing on May 11th, Pte. Charlie Mongour, of the 57th Detachment, 2nd Battalion, in a letter to his mother, Mrs. A. Mongour, 414 Dublin street, tells of his narrow escapes in the Langemarck battle. His letter in part is as follows:

Dear Mother,—I received your letter quite safe, and am glad to hear you are all well, as it leaves me at present. What do you think of this bunch now? Don't you think we did all right? Well, I am pretty lucky to be able to write this. We certainly had it pretty rough, but never mind, if there's any chance of getting through this I'll get there. Geo. Carson was not in the charge. He was lucky as he has just come out of the hospital. It was pretty rotten to see them go down after chumming together so long. There were 200 of us Peterborough fellows in it, and eight of us came through. I helped several of our wounded. You know Jimmy Robertson, the fellow I joined the 57th with. He was hit in the thigh with a big lump of shell. I was sitting right beside him and got hold of him and took him to the dressing station. It was awful to hear them screaming and yelling. The shells came in the trench and blew some poor fellows to [illegible] nearly choked me. It gets to your eyes and you can't open your mouth. You are just like a lot of "dummies." There are hundreds of fellows dying from that gas, and I don't know how I stood it.

Pte. Mongour (in the centre) who had many close calls at Langemarck

An Uncle in Canada.

When we charged the trench and captured it there was one German officer left in it. He threw up his hands and said: "Don't shoot, I'm only eighteen. I've got an uncle in Canada." They don't have any mercy for us. They got into one of our dressing stations. The screaming was fierce. We wouldn't have been so bad only the French ran back on our left and the Germans had us nearly surrounded. We wouldn't have gone back only for the French. We had to retire about 500 yards, right through an open field with the Germans shooting at us, and the shells bursting over head. It was a hot time. Shells burst ten feet away from me, but I was only buried with dirt, and just a little bit of shell hit me in the arm. It made my arm sore for three or four days. I am lucky it didn't hit me any harder or it would have taken my hand off. My great coat is riddled with holes, and the bullets took two buttons off right across my breast so you guess what narrow escapes I had. We are back in billets now resting and getting some new men to take the plac of our comrades. I hear the 24th (Field Battery) is pretty badly cut up. Charlie White and Boxer King were wounded. Well some of them are pretty lucky that got a wound in the arm or leg. They won't see the trenches for a long time. The mail that is coming in now is mostly for the dead and wounded. There is a pile of parcels that will be sent back to where they came from.

Pte. Mongour winds up his letter with a request for a mouth organ.

WHEN DINNER COMES

One Ought to Have a Good Appetite.

A good appetite is the best sauce. It goes a long way toward helping in the digestive process, and that is absolutely essential to health and strength.

Many persons have found that Grape-Nuts food is not only nourishing but is a great appetizer, and children like the taste of it and grow strong and rosy from its use.

It is especially the food to make a weak stomach strong and create an appetite for dinner.

"I am 57 years old," writes a grandmother, "and have had a weak stomach from childhood. By great care as to my diet I enjoyed a reasonable degree of health, but never found anything to equal Grape-Nuts as a standby. When I have no appetite for breakfast and just eat to keep up my strength, I take 4 teaspoonfuls of Grape-Nuts with good rich milk, and when dinner comes I am hungry. When I go without any breakfast I never feel like eating dinner. Grape-Nuts for breakfast seems to make a healthy appetite for dinner.

"My little grandson was sick with stomach trouble during the past summer, and finally we put him on Grape-Nuts. Now he is growing plump and well. When asked if he wants his nurse or Grape-Nuts, he brightens up and points to the cupboard. He was no trouble to wean at all—thanks to Grape-Nuts."

Name given by Canadian Postum Co., Windsor, Ont. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

A Bush Fire In the West

THE PAS, Man., May 28. — Ten thousand dollars' worth of railway ties and a dozen dwellings were destroyed by a bush fire yesterday. The Hudson Bay Railway terminal yards were completely destroyed. The fire raged through a space of timber five miles wide on the edge of the town, and threatened destruction to the place. The fire is travelling eastward at a rapid pace ahead of ten-mile wind.

Increase In Price of Food

The Prussian Statistical Department issues a monthly list of average retail food prices in 80 Prussian towns with the prices in the corresponding month of the previous year. The list just issued for March shows the following changes, as compared with last spring, in cents:

| | 1914 | 1915 |
|---|---|---|
| Butter | 58 | 79 |
| Wheat bread | 6 | 13 |
| Coffee | 77 | 88 |
| Potatoes | 4 | 8 |
| Eggs (each) | 4 | 7 |
| Milk | 5 | 6½ |
| Beef | 33 | 35 |
| Ham | 30 | 80 |
| Pork (home fed) | 34 | 66 |

Horses Will Be Scarcer

The wastage of the war will mean a scarcity of horses for years to come. The deficiency will not be confined to this country nor to the belligerent nations, but will be general in all horse-breeding and horse-using countries. Even if it were to end at once, the war would already have decimated the studs of the world, for the neutral, as well as the combatant territories, have been drained to an extent unparallelel since the breeding of horses became an organized industry. This aspect of the war has a direct and double bearing upon farming. It has already reduced the supply of animals of all types below normal requirements, and further reductions are threatened, and will undoubtedly occur, if hostilities be prolonged.

Up to the Farmer.

Farming perhaps feels the lack of horses more acutely than any other industry, now that motor vehicles have acquired the ascendancy on the streets and roads, but the farmer has left to him the comforting knowledge that he alone can restore the supply to the normal level. No one can deprive him of the advantages of a market, the requirements of which will be insufficiently supplied for some years to come. The existing dearth of horses will no doubt give an impetus to the process of substituting motor for horse power, but when full allowance is made for the diminished needs of the future there remains a bright prospect for the man who breeds a class of animal serviceable either for draught or saddle purposes.

The farmer was never presented with a better opportunity for turning the mares in his working teams to good account, alike to himself and to the nation. Every mare of a suitable type should be put to the stud this year, says the London Times, and there is evidence of such an intention in the high prices that were paid for working mares at the Islington and other sales as in the early spring. Horse-breeding brings a slow return to those who rear the young stock to maturity, but it is not necessarily exacting either in capital or in labour.

Outlook is Bright.

There might be some hesitation in advocating the breeding of horses on an extended scale if it were conducted as a separate enterprise, but managed as an adjunct to other pursuits, as it usually is, it offers exceedingly liberal prospects for those who produce a useful type of animal. As far as the market is concerned, it seems to matter little whether the farmer breeds for the collar or the saddle. The supply of riding horses has been the more severely depleted, and a rich reward will await the man who can help in replenishing the hunting stables; but the outlook is bright for draught animals also, and the farmer may consider himself fortunate who includes in his working teams a chest of mares which, when suitably mated, will be capable of breeding a type of foal for which the market will be impatient long before it has attained maturity.

Service in London For Mr. Frohman

LONDON, May 28. — Tears of heartfelt sorrow were shed by many women present at the memorial service held Tuesday afternoon for the late Mr. Charles Frohman at the Church of St. Martin in the Fields. The Rev. W. P. Besley, sub-dean of St. Paul's Cathedral, in his address characterized the sinking of the Lusitania as murder, no less dastardly and unjust and inspired by hate no less senseless than the murder of Abel by Cain.

Almost every one of note in London's theatrical world was present at the memorial service.

After his denunciation of the Lusitania horror as a senseless murder the Rev. Mr. Desley said in part:

"For Mr. Frohman dead had no terrors. It was for him 'the most beautiful adventure of life.' Strong in that happy faith he was able to smile in the face of the great wave that swept him through the gates of death into the field of paradise. His life was one of tireless energy, unstained honour and boundless sympathy, and in his passing went yet one more very gallant gentleman."

Among those who attended the service were Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree and Lady Tree, Mr. Hall Caine, Mr. Alfred Sutro, Mr. Hadden Chambers and Mr. Gerald du Maurier.

BROTHER KILLED AT GETTYSBURG FOUND BY SISTER

HERMOSA BEACH, Cal., May 28. —As Mrs. Betty Matthews of Cincinnati, walked out of the post office to take a car for Los Angeles on her way East she encountered to tall stranger. She took a long look. So did he.

"Brother Charley," she gasped.

"Little sister Betty," came the reply. [illegible] woman was folded in the arms of a bearded veteran of the Civil War, to the amazement of a throng of bystanders. With tears of joy streaming down their faces the aged couple boarded the car for Los Angeles.

William Jefferies, the brother, enlisted in Maine as a drummer boy in the Civil War. At the battle of Gettysburg it was supposed that he was slain, as no word of him reached his people at home.

According to the old soldier's story he came to California in a prairie schooner with some friends and neglected to write home.

Mrs. Matthews, who is an author, has been spending a month in Hermosa. Her brother came down for a day's fishing from Los Angeles with a party of friends.

Mrs. Matthews recognized her brother from a deep scar on his face which she accidentally caused when they were children.

Pineapple Healthy

Just now the fruit stores are well stocked with pineapples, and the season is on for preserving and canning, as well as for its fresh fruit uses.

The pineapple is a most desirable fruit-food, not only because of its delicious and "different" flavour, but because of its worth as a "fruit medicine."

While there are some few persons so constituted that its acid is not easily assimilated, for the average individual it furnishes properties that help to keep the system fit and ready. In many cases it is highly recommended by physicians for throat troubles, and some have found it very helpful in stomach troubles.

By itself, either in the canned form or fresh, it is one of the most attractive of desserts. When made into a drink it is as refreshing as anything I can think of.

The thing about pineapples that is not generally known is their adaptability for combining with other foods. In themselves, pineapples contain an ordinary amount of fuel-value—the canned variety having almost four times as much fuel value as the fresh fruit. But at certain times of the year the fresh fruit is more reasonable to buy than the canned, and whenever the fresh fruit can be got economically, it is to be used liberally.

There Cannot Be Peace Till The Kaiser Gives In

By yon castle wall
at the close of the day,
I heard a man sing,
though his head it was gray;
And as he did sing
the tears fell to his chin—
"There cannot be peace
till the Kaiser give in.

The church is in ruins,
the state is in jars,
Delusions, oppressions,
and murderous wars.
I dare not say it now,
just here in Berlin—
There cannot be peace
till the Kaiser give in.

My seven brave sons,
for the Kaiser did fight,
And now I weep round their green graves in the night,
It breaks my frau's heart,
for the trouble we're in:—
There cannot be peace
till the Kaiser give in.

My life is a burden,
that bows me down now,
Since I lost my sons
and my heart-broken frau;
And till my last moments,
my words will begin—
There cannot be peace
till the Kaiser give in.

The Kaiser built a fleet to be over all,
But now it is there,
in our own Keil Canal;
Our submarines and poison gas will not win—
There cannot be peace
till the Kaiser give in."

The Lusitania
lies under the sea,
With women and children,
a sad massacre,
Which roused the whole world,
no neutrals now begin—
There cannot be peace
till the Kaiser give in.

Will Not Employ Mechanics Who Have Positions

Representatives of British Government Have Arrived in Canada —Will Employ Mechanics Who Are Out of Work

OTTAWA, May 28. — Mr. G. N. Barnes, M.P., and Mr. W. Windham, who have been commissioned by the British Government to get 30,000 skilled mechanics to work on munitions of war in Britain, have been assailed by mechanics of all kinds, since their arrival in Ottawa.

Mr. Barnes and Mr. Windham were kept up until after one o'clock this morning by workmen who went to the Chateau to interview them with regard to jobs. The visitors included carpenters, bricklayers, stone masons, machinists and many unskilled labourers.

The representatives of the British Government made it clear that they will not take men who are at present employed, particularly if they are engaged in the manufacture of munitions of war.

Mr. Barnes and Mr. Windham informed the Canadian Government of this policy and Premier Borden and his colleagues were entirely in sympathy with it.

Every applicant for a position in England will have to submit to a very thorough practical test, which will be held under the auspices of expert mechanics. Only those who come up to a very high standard will be acceptable.

At present no men will be hired. Messrs. Barnes and Windham have an enormous amount of organization work to do, and will be in the city for several days to [illegible]

The forms of application to be filled in by workmen will be sent out to the Mayors of the different cities who have offered to co-operate and when they are returned properly filled in they will be considered by the representatives.

Speaking of the effect of drink on the workmen of England who are turning out munitions of war, Mr. Barnes stated that the situation was not as serious as some people would make it out to be.

In connection with the above, Mr. J. H. Burnham, M.P., has wired the authorities at Ottawa for particulars as to the address, etc., of the government representatives.

FURTHER INQUIRY

Death of Miss Edith Robinson is Being Investigated

MONTREAL, May 27. — At the adjourned inquest into the death of Miss Edith Robertson, the Victorian Order nurse who was killed by a blow from a stone which it was thought came from a blast in the sewer work at Hutchinson street Saturday morning, efforts will be made to have the cause of her death known and clear up the contradictory evidence given at the preliminary inquest yesterday. Mr. Rene Bergeron, the contractor, was emphatic in his declaration that no stones were hurled from the blasting at the sewer construction.

The inquest was adjourned till Friday, in a last effort to ascertain if the stone which killed the nurse came from the blasting on the old Molson property, or from the sewer.

To Educate the Public Regarding Cancer Signs

Doctors Pass Resolution to Consider Methods of Securing This End—To Check Disease Public Should Know the Earliest Symptoms.

THANKED LOCAL DOCTORS

The education of the public in regard to cancer, especially its first symptoms, for the purpose of securing an earlier diagnosis and thereby more successfully checking this disease, was the subject of an important resolution at yesterday afternoon's session of the Ontario Medical Association. In far too many cases cancer is brought to the attention of doctors too late. If the public could recognize the first signs of the disease it is felt that the doctors would have greater opportunities for successful treatment. The resolution was passed in the obstetrics and gynaecology branch of the Association and with a view to obtaining the co-operation of the public in checking the spread of cancer.

Appreciate Patriotism.

The Association expressed its appreciation of the patriotism of its members who had responded to the call to active service in the present war, and the resolution moved by Dr. J. H. Elliott and Dr. F. N. G. Starr of Toronto was an assurance that the work of the absent doctors would be dutifully attended to by members of the Association, and their practices retained for them until they returned.

Another resolution recommended the affiliation of county medical societies.

A workmen's compensation committee was appointed to obtain legislation for the protection of the interests of the medical profession in the working and effect of compensation. The committee consists of the president and vice-presidents.

Thanks to Local Doctors.

A hearty vote of thanks was passed to the doctors of Peterborough and to the Ladies' committee for their many kindnesses to the visitors and for their efficient arrangements which assured the convention's success.

CITY HALL PARAGRAPHS

What's Doing in Civic Circles---Items of Interest Concerning Municipal Administration

A meeting of the Board of Health has been called for this afternoon at 4 o'clock. This is probably to take the place of the regular monthly meeting which was not held two weeks ago owing to the absence of a number of the members.

Council Meeting.

The City Council will hold a special meeting this evening to consider the question of additional street paving. City Engineer Parsons will have a report to make showing the estimated cost.

Has Returned.

Ald. J. J. Duffus has returned from Ottawa where he went to represent the City at a conference of Mayors and municipal representatives, which foregathered for the purpose of dealing with the unemployed problem.

Building Permit.

Thomas Blodgett has taken out a building permit for a house to be erected at 617 Downie Street. The cost is estimated at $300.

WITH OTHER MUNICIPALITIES.

A commission may be appointed at Hamilton to take up city planning and better housing.

Stratford will vote on a by-law to grant $2,500 for a site for a three-storey factory to be erected by the Bartlett Automobile Company, and to fix the assessment at $7,500 for ten years.

For Patriotic Fund.

The citizens of Walkerville are raising $15,000 which will complete the amount of $60,000 promised to the Canadian Patriotic Fund. Already $45,000 has been subscribed.

Will Issue Debentures.

A by-law is to be submitted to the ratepayers of Stratford to provide $7,000 of debentures to wipe out hospital indebtedness.

FALLS FIGHTING FOR THE GERMANS ONCE LIVED HERE

start at the bottom. Hadrich was about thirty years of age, and about one year ago became a benedict. Last March he was called out together with [illegible] struggle that is now being waged in Europe. Since that, his death has been reported. Whether the report is correct will probably remain a matter of conjecture until after the war, if it is ever known. It does not require a vivid imagination to picture Max Hadrich say at the battle of Langemarck, where the Canadians fought so gallantly, and coming face to face with some of the men with whom he associated, while in this country."

HAS VISITED BELGIUM.

In the word of Mrs. Matechke—"Such is war." Mrs. Matechke herself was born in Germany. She has resided in this country for upwards of fifty-three years, the greater part of which has been spent in Peterborough. She has little sympathy for the Kaiser's decision to wage war on the world or hundreds of millions. She feels for German mothers who have lost their sons as well as for those of the Allies. But for Belgium her sympathy is stronger than perhaps for any other country engaged in the conflict. She admires the Belgians for the stand they took in an endeavour to resist the invaders. "Do you think I would let anybody run through my house in order to destroy somebody else's property?" she demanded of the Examiner. Mrs. Matechke travelled through Belgium on her honeymoon, and remembers the people as a peace-loving and industrious nation."

The Province Is Swept By Disastrous Frost

Damage in Peterboro' County Was Comparatively Light—Fruit Growers Suffered Very Severely—Early Vegetables Ruined

Contrary to expectations the thermometer did not register frost last evening. The lowest official reading was thirty-seven degrees. The lowest for the previous evening was twenty-nine degrees, a difference of eight degrees. The damage so far as Peterborough county is concerned, was comparatively light. The market gardeners suffered the worst.

The most disastrous result of the cold wave that has swept Ontario is that it will make strawberries both scarce and expensive. It was estimated by agricultural authorities that the crop would be 50 per cent. less than it would have been if the weather had remained warmer. The frost touched every part of Ontario, and although it did little or no damage to field crops, tender garden plants and fruits were damaged.

Thousands of tomato plants throughout the Province were ruined. However, it is not too late to replace these, and about the only loss is the cost of the plants and the labour in putting them in. There will also be some loss in that the crop will not be as early as other years.

Ice Was Formed.

St. Catharines.—Fruit and vegetable growers with statistics before them, declared that the frost of Wednesday night was equal in severity to that of the worst previously on record, 29 degrees [illegible] 1888. Ice one-eighth of an inch thick was formed in localities previously considered immune from late May frosts. Stretches of hundreds of acres of early tomatoes are totally ruined, but the part that is worrying the growers most seriously of all is the damage to grape vines. Large vineyards are rendered entirely unproductive. A large number of tomato and early potato patches can be replanted, provided seed and plants are obtainable, but the grape loss is irreparable.

Little is being said of peaches, as the trees are so overburdened with embryo fruit that it has been considered that a slight reduction would be a boon, as otherwise it would be necessary to thin in order to assure good samples of fruit and to guard against a sacrifice of price.

Particularly in the high lands is the grape ruin most severely felt, in Thorold, Pelham, South Grimsby and part of Clinton townships, "above the mountain." Even Louth township has suffered severely, and in the vicinity of Niagara-on-the-Lake the loss has been heavy. The total loss is beyond estimate.

Inland Farms Suffered Most.

Niagara-on-the-Lake.—Fruit growers here declare that the frost destroyed their crops between this place and St. David's, 7 1-2 miles away. Practically the whole of the grape crop is gone, and most of the berries, but the amount of loss cannot be estimated yet awhile.

Losses Elsewhere.

Similar reports of damage to fruits and vegetables by frost have come from Ingersoll, London, Hamilton, Sarnia, Brantford, Kingston, Whitby and other points. Many of the reports are that the frost was the most severe in 30 years. From Quebec comes word of a regular Christmas snowstorm sweeping the valley along the lower St. Lawrence River and the Intercolonial Railway between Sydney and Bimouski. A snappy cold wave spread over the eastern portion of Quebec province. In the suburbs of the city of Quebec heavy frost was reported. While at St. Feresol, Montmorency county, [illegible] miles distant, [illegible] snow fell. Crops have been seriously damaged lately in that Province by cold weather.

Early Vegetables Ruined.

Ingersoll.—Most of the early gardens were completely ruined in Ingersoll and district by Wednesday night's frost, though in many instances they were covered. Ice half an inch thick was reported by many citizens. Practically all the early vegetables were cut off, while the fruits were also seriously affected. One grower stated that the early strawberries would be a complete failure. Other small fruits also suffered. Many farmers will lose heavily in their clover crops.

"Citizen" Makes Good Suggestion

Editor Examiner:

Sir,—In common with others I admire your articles dealing with the beautification of our city which should be responded to by all loyal citizens according to our opportunity.

One point often strikes me as it must strike others.

In George street we have as fine a street as in any other small city or town in Canada, and the very most should be made of it, as it must make the chief impression on visitors. How greatly would this front street be improved if the buildings on either side were brightened up by a coat of paint and brought into some correspondence with Turnbull's and Barrie's handsome new edifices! The owners would have the appreciation of citizens generally in making such an improvement.

It might also be suggested that the crooked, unused flag-pole over a central store on the west side might well be replaced by a straight and usable one. It is an eye sore at present and does not seem to symbolize the straight or upto-date business methods of our city.

Yours, etc.,
CITIZEN.

Police Will Keep Weather Eye Open

Men Wanted for Robbery, Also Theft of Horse, Buggy and Automobile

The police have received a communication from Chief Constable Grasett, of Toronto, asking them to be on the lookout for Norman Regan, age 27, 5 ft. 9 in. tall, slim build, sharp features, wearing a dark tweed suit and peak cap; also Wm. J. Turner, age 27, 5 ft. 5 in. tall, full face, dark complexion, wearing dark coat, blue pants, gray sweater and slouch hat. The men are wanted for a robbery which they committed in Toronto on May 25th inst., when they held up a clerk in the office of the Dominion Express Co., stealing $135 and a Smith and Wesson revolver, No. 73077. The two men escaped from the scene of the robbery on an Indian motor cycle with side car attached. The cycle was stolen previous to the robbery, and bears license No. 157.

HORSE AND BUGGY GONE.

Chief Constable Arthur Hurd, of Oshawa, also asks the police to be on the watch for a party who stole a horse and buggy from Brown & Ward, livery men in the above town, on May 25th inst. The animal weighed about 1,000 pounds, black points. The buggy was a McLaughlin make.

STOLE A FORD CAR.

Chief Constable Wm. C. Killing, of Woodstock, writes the police to be on the lookout for a man who stole a Ford auto from the above mentioned town, while Chief Grasett, of Toronto, gives similar notice concerning an auto stolen from that city.

Dead in Montana

Civil War Veteran Was Born in Peterborough

A Montana exchange says: James Thomas Moran, an old timer, and a highly esteemed citizen, passed away at 4.30 p.m. Wednesday morning at the Sacred Heart Hospital after an illness of two months with cancer of the stomach. He was 72 years of age, was born in Peterborough, Canada, in 1843. In his early yoth his parents removed to the State of New York, where he was reared. When the Civil War broke out, he was among the first to answer President Lincoln's call for volunteers, and with a New York regiment he participated in many of the severe engagements of the war. He was under General Hooker's command at the battle of Chancellsville, where he was taken prisoner and confined for a while in Libby Prison. Later on he was exchanged as a prisoner of war.

He came to Fort Assiniboine in 1879 with the transportation service of the army and shortly after his arrival, was made master of transportation and held this position until that branch of the service was discontinued at the fort.

He has been a resident of Montana for about 35 years. In the nineties he took an active part in politics as a democrat, was elected assessor of old Cheyenne County and on account of his high standing for personal integrity, he was nominated for representative to the state legislature on the democratic ticket and was elected, although this county at that time was strongly republican.

A few years ago he purchased the John Bailey ranch between this city and the post, and for the past several years made the place his home.

About the time the Great Northern railway was built into the country Mr. Moran and Robert Maine thinking Yantic would be the railway division point, opened a general store at that place, which they conducted successfully for several years.

HUNDREDS OF TROOPS NOW AT BARRIEFIELD

Peterboro' is Well Represented at Kingston Camp, With Detachments in the 8th Mounted Rifles, 26th Battery and Surplus Infantry Squad.

UNITS ALL ON HAND

KINGSTON, May 28—The 8th C. M. R. arrived in the city this morning with their horses over the C. N. R., and this made the last unit ordered into the war camp at Barriefield for active service training. With the exception of No. 3 Company, C.A.S.C., and the C.O.C. all the men in camp are for overseas service. As no parade sheets have yet been presented to headquarters it is impossible to give the number of each unit in camp, but the combined strength is in the neighbourhood of 3,000 men and officers.

The units now in camp are No. 2 Company, C.P.A.S.C., and No. 3, Company, C.A.S.C., of Kingston; No. 5 Company Queen's Engineers, the C.O.C., of Kingston, 8th Mounted Rifles, Ottawa; 38th Battalion, Ottawa; 7th Artillery Brigade, composed of the 26th Battery, Kingston; 25th Battery, Ottawa; ammunition column, Ottawa, and headquarters, with a surplus force of about 700 men recruited by the 14th, 19th, 16th 40th, 42nd, 43rd, 45th, 46th, 47th, 49th, 58th, 57th, 59th regiments and the G.G.F.G. of Ottawa. These will constitute a composite battalion that will temporarily be placed in command of Lieut.-Col. Fee of Lindsay, and will either be sent to form the nucleus of the new 58th Battalion that will be mobilized at Ottawa, or retained here to form another battalion now yet designated.

Under Major Burritt and Sergt.-Major Taylor all lines had been laid out by Queen's Engineers, who have done excellent work in Barriefield within the last week.

Good Sanitation.

Major Gardiner, A.F.M.S., and sanitary officer for the camp, has the most perfect arrangements for keeping the camp sanitary and clean and the men marched into Barriefield yesterday with clean lines, and every facility for maintaining cleanliness throughout.

The first unit to arrive yesterday was the Smith's Falls Company, 200 strong. With banners and drums they marched up to the Armouries so that Kingstonians could have a chance to see the fine class of men Lt.-Col. Balderson was bringing to the big war camp. With this company was a bull terrier mascot in khaki coat all nicely trimmed with Union Jacks, and he seemed proud of his company. The Company arrived at 11.30 a.m. at the C. P. R. station.

At 2 o'clock the 38th Battalion arrived, and detrained opposite Tete du Pont Barracks and marched directly to the camp. Well might Ottawa be reluctant to part with such a body of fine men and officers. With a swing, a song and a free display of flags in nearly every hand the 38th Battalion made their way to the camp to the music of their own band This unit looked fit for the front and was recruited in the Ottawa Valley, Smith's Falls, Renfrew, Pembroke, Brockville, with two of the companies and the machine gun section recruited in the City of Ottawa.

Batteries Arrive.

At 2.45 the 25th Battery and Ammunition Column arrived at the station opposite the city hall, and the appearance of these men was more like that of the smart regular Imperial soldier, rather than the man that has been recently recruited and hastily drilled for special service in a great crisis. Not since the R.C.H. A. left here for the front has Kingston been permitted to see a finer lot of artillerymen than the 25th Battery and Ammunition Column appeared to be yesterday as they stepped off the train and formed up on the line near by. The familiar face of Captain Wm. Harty, Jr., was all wreathed in smiles as he nodded to old acquaintances who were glad to see 'Billy' handling such a fine lot of men.

At 7 o'clock this morning the 8th C.M.R. arrived from Ottawa with ten car loads of horses, and both men and horses are in the pink of condition. All the troops were given a great farewell in Ottawa yesterday morning, and the capital city has certainly sent a fine lot men to be trained at Barriefield.

To-day the units are all getting in shape to commence real work tomorrow. The rain made the camp grounds a little wet, but the perfect drainage arrangements will make mud puddles impossible.

The Army Service Corps under Captain Welch, was ready to receive all troops and prepared to issue food and fodder for men and horses. Major Hamilton is in camp superintending transport and supplies, which means that there will be no suffering in camp in connection with his department. In fact, Colonel Hemming and his staff have left nothing undone that could possibly contribute to the comfort of the soldier and the efficiency of his training.

A Cat That as a Hunter is Better Than a Dog

San Bernardino, Cal., May 28.—The cat family is coming into a new use. A hunting cat is the latest. His name is Admiral and he belongs to Jack Entwistle and Herman Luhrman, Dale miners who are in from the desert.

The cat has the combined hunting qualities of all, the famous hunting dogs, and then some. He has everything that English, Gordon and Llewellyn setters have, and beats even the Airedales, it is declared. He is staunch on the stand, retrieves in rapid fashion, and is not gun shy.

The men trained the cat on the desert, and the animal has covered hundreds of miles with them on prospecting trips. On the retrieve the cat is faster than any dog, and is particularly effective with slightly injured birds. Jackrabbits are the only game that trouble Admiral on the retrieve. They are too heavy. The cat flushes in great shape. On the stand the cat uses his tail like a pointed to give the warning of the presence of game.

BIG SURPRISES IN COALITION CABINET—Sir John Simon is new Home Secretary. As former Attorney-General he was probably offered the High Chancellorship. Walter Long is President of the Local Government Board; he replaces Samuel, whose exclusion is a great surprise. Reginald McKenna gets the Chancellorship of the Exchequer, in peace times regarded as the post next in importance to the Premiership. Sir Ed. Carson, as Attorney-General, gets the office with the most money in it. Winston Churchill's removal from the Admiralty was forecasted, but that he should be deliberately shelved to the Chancellorship of the Duchy of Lancaster was unexpected. Sir S. Buckmaster, gets the Lord High Chancellorship, the highest legal office in the Empire.

The above facts really give no idea as to what a busy place the Y.M.C. A. is. During the winter season from 75 to 100 different events have been scheduled per week. One day 17 different classes and events were conducted. Notwithstanding the fact that the Association has been handicapped because of the lack of funds and loss of many active workers, among them the sixty-five boys who enlisted for the war.

Association work has developed to such an extent that it is now founded on scientific principles. There is a reason for every plan of work inaugerated. Perhaps the most important part of the Association work is meeting of the needs of boys in the teen age, (this fact was impressed upon the audience of men by Mr. Taylor Statten last Tuesday night), although the work of the Association by no means is limited to the boys. The scope of work conducted by the Association is broad enough to be helpful to men of all ages, and it has been a pleasure to note that men of middle age or even of more mature years, find the Association helpful in meeting their needs from a physical, social anad religious standpoint.

THE NATIONAL ANTHEMS OF THE ALLIES

The following article on the National Anthems of the Allies was written by Miss Annie Ford, of Cannington, a pupil of the Peterborough Normal School:

BRITISH.

There is considerable dispute as to the authorship of our National Anthem "God Save the King" but it is generally agreed that Henry Carey has the honour of being its author. Carey was a Jacobite and it is believed that he composed the anthem during the disturbed times of James II.

Apparently he took an old song and an old Welsh air and by making alterations in both produced the National Anthem almost as we have it to-day. It was first sung by Carey at a celebration of the capture of Portobello by Admiral Vernon.

Besides being the British National Anthem, "God Save the King" has been accepted as the Prussian State Hymn and was also the State Hymn of Russia until 1833.

FRENCH—La Marseillaise.

The period in which this song was written was the eve of the great French Revolution and the author, Rouget de L'Isle, was a young officer, then stationed at Strasburg. While there de L'Isle became a warm friend of Doetrich, the mayor of the town. In 1792 de L'Isle was dining with the Mayor, but as there had been a famine, the meal was quite frugal. However, Dietrich said he would open the last bottle of wine in the cellar in the hopes that it would inspire de L'Isle to write a hymn which should convey to the people the enthusiasm needed at the time.

De L'Isle laboured hard all night, sometimes at the words and sometimes at the music. In the morning he returned to Dietrich and sang his song. At the first stanza the cheeks of the listeners turned pale—at the second tears ran down every cheek—and at the last all the madness of enthusiasm broke forth. The hymn of the nation was found.

It rapidly gained popularity and was sung by the troops from Marseilles as they entered Paris and was named La Marseillaise in honour of them.

RUSSIA.

The Russian National Anthem has little more than attained the age of 70 years. Before the year 1833, this great nation had no national anthem by means of which to voice its loyalty to the Czar. As mentioned above the British National Anthem had been used.

On his return from a trip to Prussia, the Czar expressed his desire for a state hymn and requested that Alex Lyvoff, a General in the army, and a musician of some note, compose an anthem worthy of Russia.

In his memoirs, Lyvoff says: "I felt the necessity of writing a hymn which should be majestic strong touching and suitable for every undertaking—for the army and for the people. One evening when I returned home late, I sat at the table and in a few minutes the Anthem was written."

Lyvoff then went to the poet, Jourkovsky and begged him to write the words to suit the music. This was soon finished and the Czar was so pleased with the result that he ordered it to be adopted as the State Hymn immediately.

BELGIAN—La Brabanconne.

The air of the Belgian National Anthem is quite unlike that of any other European country, but like La Marseillaise, it sprang up in the very breath of battle. It was composed in 1830 during the Revolution in which Belgium gained her independence. The words were written by a French actor, an active Revolutionist, who was killed in action near Brussels. The music was composed by Campenhout, a Belgian musician.

The title "Brabanconne," means 'a woman of Brabanton,' a province in Belgium, but why it was given this name is not known.

JAPANESE—Kimigayo.

The Japanese Anthem is by far the most ancient, dating from the year 905 A.D. The composer of the music and the author of the words are both unknown, although it is believed that the music was written at a much later date than the words. The poem from which the Anthem was taken ran as follows:

"May our glorious Emperor reign
Till a thousand years shall roll
Till the sands of the brooklet grow to stone,
And the moss from these pebbles emeralds make."

ISSUE TWO CENT WAR POST CARD

Department is Cognizant of Several Abuses That Are Being Practiced

The Post Office Department has decided to issue a two-cent post-card for domestic use, covering both the postage and the war tax. The department is taking special precaution against the non-observance of the War Revenue Act, and Canadian postmasters at points near the boundary have been notified to look out for letters carried across the border and mailed back to points in Canada under the United States postal rates, and, of course, without the war tax stamps.

Another abuse which has been brought to the notice of the department has to do with the manner in which patent medicines, perfumes, wines, etc., subject to the war tax, are being sold by merchants in certain cases. The law requires that the war stamps on these articles must be cancelled by the retailer, That is not being done in all cases, and the postal revenue is thus exposed to serious loss, the offenders laying themselves open to a fine of from $50 to $250. The department is holding all postmasters responsible for seeing that every precaution is taken against defrauding the revenue.

Ald. J. J. Duffus Has Returned

Attended a Conference of Municipal Representatives in Ottawa

Ald. J. J. Duffus has returned from Ottawa, where he attended a conference of municipal representatives which met together for the purpose of [illegible] It was generally agreed that action rather than investigation is wanted for the Canadian employment problem. A commission with power to act in co-operation with municipal authorities was asked of the government. Sir Robert Borden replied that he would give the request his earnest consideration.

The deputation of Ontario and western mayors was strengthened when it met the government by Sir John Willison, representing the Ontario government, and Hon. Charles Stewart, Minister of Public Works for Alberta. Mayor Waugh of Winnipeg, read the government a resolution agreed upon by the aid-seekers. It asked for co-operation by commission.

Sir John Willison favoured the plan on behalf of the Ontario government. Prof. Bedford, Deputy Minister of Agriculture for Manitoba, read a message from Premier Norris declaring that province would co-operate.

Hon. M. Stewart gave the pledge of Alberta, and Mr. Molloy, M.P.P., that of Saskatchewan, to the commission idea.

Sir Robert Borden then promised to take the request up with his colleagues.

Charged With Entering Premises

The adjourned case in which Jas. Carnsey was the complainant and Messrs. Wm. Hill and R. Davis Hill of Dummer the defendants, was heard yesterday before County Police Magistrate Langley. Judgment was reserved until Monday. The charge was "that they did break the lock and enter the premises of the complainant and remove certain goods." Argument was put in at a special sitting of the Court which was held last evening.

Crown Attorney Hatton appeared for the prosecution and Mr. J. A. New of the firm of Gurdon and Widdifield, for the defendants.

Alderman Resigned.

Alderman John Keyes of Stratford placed his resignation in the hands of Mayor Barnsdale, giving no reason for his action.

Sixty Wounded Bayoneted By Enemy in Barn

TORONTO, May 28. — How sixty wounded Canadians were bayoneted in a barn during the fighting at Langemarck is told in a letter from Private H. A. Hammill, a despatch rider, He also tells how he captured three Germans.

"The Canadians were resting behind the French lines when the Germans broke through. There is no doubt that the Germans used them pretty rough and violated all the rules of modern warfare by pumping burning gasoline on to them and dropping gas bombs in the trenches. The Canadians being the closest reserves were rushed to the break. They succeeded in breaking the rush but the cost was enormous. Out of one battalion of 1,100 men, 83 and four officers answered the roll call the following morning. Even the French artillerymen ran and left their guns, which were captured, retaken, and turned on the Germans by the Canadians at a half mile range.

A friend of mine remarked during the [illegible] not stop fooling with the guns some one would get killed.

"We caught it pretty heavy on Friday night, and by Saturday midnight I had hauled up twelve hundred tons of shells. The funny part of it is that although we have been under fire most of the time none of our company has been hit.

CAPTURED THREE GERMANS

"I was returning home from a trip with a despatch when I saw three Germans cutting across a field. The poor devils did not put up much of a run, and I put a few shots over their heads with my revolver, stopped them, and made them march into town and push the machine, while I followed up in the rear.

"Saturday and Sunday all our crowd were on the jump up and down the front. It was pitiful to see the crowds of men coming in from the trenches all blood and with an arm or head tied up. One fellow told me the smell of the dead would kill anybody without the shell. He had his ear cut off with a piece of shrapnel, and two bullets in his arm."

BATTLE FOR LIFE WITH DEVIL FISH MILE FROM LAND

NEW YORK, May 28.—One who with his crew of five fought for life against the greatest of devil fishes is now in the city to attend to the mounting of his kill.

Russell J. Coles, is his name; tobacco merchant, from Dansville, Va., and by avocation a scientist. He and his comrades slew the monster ray in the Mexican Gulf, off Saptiva Island and that they got back to tell the tale is no fault of their quarry and her mate.

The creature measured seventeen feet from the tips of the fins and more than eighteen feet on the curve. Her mouth was nearly five across, and the head, which has been received by the American Museum of Natural History, is bigger than any of the hogsheads in which men stow the choice Virginia. There were three tons of the fish, of which parts were sent here, and the form of the body is preserved for the taxidermist in casts which it took six barrels of plaster of Paris to mould.

Mr. Coles has killed thousands of sharks and rays in his time in gathering material for his scientific papers. He undertook an expedition to Florida waters last month to find a female devil fish at least fifteen feet in width. He had on other trips found two male devil fishes less than fifteen feet wide.

On the morning of April 11, while cruising in a gasolene launch a mile off Punta Gorda, he encountered a school of the devil fish—the Manta birostris of the books. He selected the largest female, and both he and the head of his crew, Captain Willis, let drive at her with harpoons. The creature dived and came up under the launch, causing the craft to list over and to ship much water. Then alongside came a bull devil fish, the mate of the stricken manta. Mr. Coles struck the harpooned fish with a spade lance. She dived again and broke off the handle of the implement.

For twenty minutes the crew and the ghastly sea monsters fought. One hundred feet of the line attached to harpoons had been released. There were no other boats in sight and no means of rescue. It was a case of the lives of the men or the lives of these creatures of the depths.

Several men were kept busy with the first devil fish and others bailed. Mr. Coles stabbed the monster twenty-three times with an old fashioned whale lance before she was killed. Her mate disappeared. As the launch drew away there could be seen on the surface of the sea a two acre tract, Mr. Coles said, red from the fighting.

At the camp the cast was made after the ghastly head of the creature had been removed. The work was done by J. C. Bell, a taxidermist for the American Museum of Natural History.

When, after four months of preparation, this great devil fish is placed on exhibition the general public will get an adequate idea of what it means to fight with such a thing a mile from the shore. It will be the only perfect female specimen to be seen in any museum in the world.

The popular impression is that the devil fish is equipped with tentacles like the octopus. As a matter of fact it is one of the gaint flat rays, with tremendous fins, a survivor of prehistoric times, which even in this day and generation is undergoing evolutionary changes of structure.

Phonographic Voice Record Saves Suspect From Prison

OMAHA, NEB., May 28.—Saved from prison by a phonographic record of his voice in the love-song duet from "Lucia" was the experience of Walter Wheatley, well-known first tenor of the Century Grand Opera company, who has appeared at Edgardo in almost every city in this country.

Wheatley was arrested by United States secret service men and charged with being George D. Wheatley, Jr., of Americus, Ga., former cashier of the Americus National bank, who absconded two years ago, taking with him $360,000 of the bank's money. After being held in custody for a week he was released, following a hearing at which was reproduced on a phonograph a record of the love song, "Upon the Breeze to Thee," made by him some years ago and which was duplicated by the singer with all the twists and turns and thrills of the accomplished and polished voice.

Other phonographic records of the voice of Walter Wheatley in "Alda," "Tales of Hoffmann" and "La Gioconda" were reproduced by the suspected man, and in the end the United States commissioner was so convinced by the similarity of the voice to the records and the evidence of witnesses brought up from Georgia, that Wheatley was declared not to be the fugitive banker and was given his liberty.

NO NEAR WITNESSES.

After the close of the operatic season this year Wheatley opened studios in Lincoln and Omaha, and soon had large classes in each city. But when he was placed under arrest charged with being the missing banker there were none in either city sufficiently acquainted with him to swear positively he was not the Georgia absconder.

The Americus banker disappeared [illegible] He left Americus [illegible] He [illegible] $350,000 [illegible] $10,000 [illegible] 1-2, opening at 94 1-2.

voices to be the same without a doubt.

In addition to a general resemblance the man under arrest bore to the missing banker, the detectives pointed out that he had a scar described in the circular description of the man for whom they had been searching. W. A. Hamilton, a Chicago real estate man, was brought to identify Wheatley, but failed to do so. Hamilton had known Wheatley in Americus and believed the man under arrest was the Americus man but was not positive. He admitted that the voice in the phonograph was the voice of the man under arrest, but would not swear that both were not the voice of the banker.

Finally the Government telegraphed for several witnesses at Americus who had known the banker intimately to come to Lincoln and settle the question definitely. They came and in two minutes Walter Wheatley was free.

New York Stocks

A. H. Stratton & Co., Brokers, report the following:

NEW YORK, May 28—At the opening, the market was firm. The Street held to the opinion that the mishap to the Nebraskan was not caused by a torpedo, and that therefore it did not produce a new complication in this country's relations with Germany. The report that the German reply to President Wilson's note would be a serial affair, the first part being a mere statement of facts as they were understood in Berlin to the belief that negotiations would be long-drawn-out and that the market would probably have many ups and downs before they were concluded. ### Wheat Market.

CHICAGO, May 27.—Wheat quiet and steady. Export business at a standstill. Cash wheat heavy. Reports from the North West were favourable and the outlook is claimed to be above the average, with 8 to 10 per cent. increase in area. The reports on winter wheat indicates little damage from the heavy rains, and fly damage reports are having little effect.

Corn and oats, dull, and steady cash markets quiet.

Two Games City League To-morrow

With the weather turning warm again prospects for a fine afternoon for the City League games at Riverside Park to-morrow are bright. After a lay-off of two weeks the teams should be in pretty good shape. The first game, commencing at 2 o'clock, will be between the Empires and East City. The Empires are the League leaders to date, but the boys from across the river are confident of being able to take a fall out of them to-morrow and even up. Both teams have been practising a lot during the past two weeks and with Kirn in the box for East City and Flaherty for the Empires, the fans will undoubtedly see a good game.

At 4 p.m. the Thistles and Classics will play. The Thistles have had a run of hard luck so far and have been unable to put over a win, and expect to do so to-morrow at the expense of the Classics. The latter, however, have been playing several games with other local teams during the past two weeks and are out to keep the Thistles down once more.

The plan adopted two weeks ago of allowing boys in free providing they remained in the west stand worked well and will be continued. The general admission will be to-morrow, gentlemen 15 cents, ladies free; grandstand to all 10 cents.

BASEBALL

KING EDWARD VS. QUEEN MARY

An interesting game of baseball was played on the Queen Mary grounds, between Queen Mary (Seniors) and King Edward (Juniors. The Queen Mary Juniors forfeited the game, and King Edward played the Seniors, which ended in the score of 9 to 8. Both teams had their winning streak, and by sheer hard playing of the King Edward team they blocked the tying run.

The batteries were:

Queen Mary—Paterson and Batten, (pitchers); Flowers and Soden, (catchers); King Edward—Daynard and Blondon.

LACROSSE

All the lacrosse players are reminded of to-night's practice at Riverside Park. The Hastings game has been set back a couple of weeks and the first game will be with Millbrook here.

Opening of the Golf Season

The Peterborough Golf and Country Club will open the season to-morrow afternoon with a match between the President and Captain. Every playing member is asked to be on hand. Game will start sharp at two o'clock. Luncheon will be served afterwards.

SERGT. HAMILTON TELLS OF DEATH

ilton, who is now visiting in the city, a guest of her sister, Mrs. W. Kincaid, Stewart street. It was commenced on May 7th and finished on May 10th. He refers in it to Corp. Art. Reynolds of Port Hope, nephew of Mr. Charles Reynolds of Bethany.

Belgium, May 7th, 1915.

Dear Mother,—I received your letter of April 11th, also a parcel of tobacco. It sure was nice of Lem to send me the cigars. I must write him soon.

Well, mother, we came in here on April 23rd and have had a very hot time ever since as we have been fighting day and night, one time assisting an attack and next repelling the enemy's attacks.

On April 27th we had a very hot time of it, losing one sergeant killed and ten wounded, but at that we got off very light, as high explosive shells were exploding all over us. The small field pieces were sprinkling shrapnel all over us, and 6 in. and 8 in. Howitzer shells throwing earth and fragments of steel all around. Some pieces of steel from these big ones travel as far as half a mile.

Last night we were standing to our guns three times, 12, 3 and 4 o'clock, repelling attacks. In fact we get very little sleep. I understand we are to be relieved soon to go back country for a rest. It will be most acceptable, especially as several of the boys have attacks of nerves.

One of our officers has just come in from his turn as observer in the forward trenches and says the dead on the ridge in front of us is something awful and he predicts fever if they don't get them buried soon. Of course the fight has been going on for 15 days.

Well, I'll ring off here and if we go back country for rest I'll finish this up.

Yours lovingly,
HECTOR.
May 16th.

Well, we are in rest billet. Arrived here at 5 o'clock this morning, and after feeding up the horses we slept most of the day.

We sure had 16 days' of fierce fighting at our last position. We do not expect to be here more than two or three days, so will soon be at it again. It is not so bad as you would imagine, although it keeps you dodging at times.

Tell Charlie that Art is in good health and in the best of spirits.

EUCHARISTIC CONGRESS IN MONTREAL JULY 10

Coincidence with the holding in Montreal of the Canadian Eucharistic Congress on July 13th, 14th, 15th next, there will take place (in that city) the Solemn Dedication of the New Congress Hall adjoining St. Patrick's Church. The new building is of reinforced lime stone and is of the most thoroughly fireproof construction available, and cost approximately $175,000.

It includes besides a spacious auditorium in which the Congress meetings of the English Section will be held, a number of other interesting departments, viz.: A Lady Chapel, Vestry for Clergy and Sanctuary Boys, Choir Practice Room, two Assembly Halls for Societies, a Board Room, a Banquet Hall and Kitchen Annex.

The handsome edifice destined to serve as headquarters for the various activities of the foremost English-speaking parish of Montreal, will be solemnly dedicated by His Grace Archbishop Bruchesi in presence of a large attendance of bishops, priests and laity, on Sunday, July 11.

The preacher on the occasion will be His Lordship Bishop Hayes, the well-known auxiliary of Cardinal Farley, of New York.

Election In Manitoba in a Short Time

Special to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, Ont., May 28.—It is understood here that there will be a provincial election in Manitoba within six weeks. Voting is likely to take place before July 10, which is about the date prairie farmers cut their hay. In order to demonstrate to the country at large that he was not a partner to any deal, Premier Norris has practically decided to appeal to the people.

The prediction is made here that when a vote is taken only a corporals' guard of the Conservative members, who condoned the wrong-doings of the Robbin Government will be left in the Manitoba Legislature.

The Point of Contact

YEARS AGO, retail buyers met retail sellers at the counter. To-day they meet first in the columns of the newspaper. The advertising is the vital point of contact. There, may be seen what is wanted, how, when, and where, it may be purchased.

EACH MORNING, when the shopping expedition for the day is planned, the EXAMINER is consulted in thousands of homes. Its advertising pages, with descriptions of goods and prices, is a never failing guide to the ladies of Peterboro.

PRACTICALLY all the shopping is done at the breakfast and tea table, when the list is made out. This is the modern way.

The Examiner
goes home and stays there.

Attended The Big Service In St. Paul's

Pte. Jas. Robertson Slightly Wounded at Langemarck is Recovering His Health

Another Peterborough boy who is fighting his way back to health and strength, following wounds that he received at the battle of Langemarck, is Private James Robertson of the 57th detachment, 2nd Battalion, First Canadian Expeditionary Force. In a letter to Mr. W. Thompson, Jr., 475 Rubidge Street, the Peterborough soldier tells of his experiences.

"I am now at home in Kent, about nine miles from London. I was hit at Ypres. I was not wounded very badly. Just a scratch on the hip. I was down to St. Paul's Cathedral on Tuesday night where a memorial service was held for the Canadians who fell at Ypres. It was a fine service. The Guards Band played the dead march and the buglers sounded the last post outside the doors. I suppose everything is going on the same in Peterborough. How is recruiting going on? I think they will soon introduce conscription here.

I suppose you would like to know how I got hit? We are going up to reinforce the Canadians, who had taken a trench earlier in the night. We had to get out in the open to draw the fire of the enemy so that the rest of the battalion could get into the trench. They got in all right, but very few of our company got back off that open place of ground. I was one of the few. I got back to our trench all right. There was no room in the trench for a lot of us so we had to dig ourselves in behind the trench. It was while I was digging that a shell exploded behind me and a piece of it hit me on the hip. I have the piece of shell with me and will leave it in England when I go back to the front."

She will return home with her parents for a few days before leaving for Chicago, where she has been offered a splendid position in her work.

AFTER HOUSECLEANING

Have your piano tuned. Piano makers advise tuning at least once a year, as the change of season affects the instrument. J. W. Fry, tuner for the Peterborough Music Co., holds a certificate for this profession. 'Phone 445 or 946. Residence, 189 Rubidge Street.

FATHER AND BROTHER WERE KILLED IN MINE

Mr. Alex. Hadden of Peterboro' Doubly Bereaved by Yesterday's Accident

Mr. Alex. C. Haddon of Peterborough, who has just graduated from McMaster University, has received a telegram giving him the terrible news that his father and brother were killed in the awful mine explosion, at Nanaimo, B.C., yesterday. Forty miners were trapped by a gas explosion in the reserve mine of the Western Fuel Company, and it is feared that some twenty-four are dead. The bodies of Mr. Hadden's father and brother have been recovered and are being sent to Hamilton, their old home, for interment. Mr. Hadden, who is very well known here, will have the sympathy of the community.

How Addresses of Local Soldiers Are Required

The Adjutant-General's Branch of the Militia Department Makes Request

Presently after receiving notification of casualties among the Canadian Expeditionary Force, now at the front, the Department at once sends telegrams to the next of kin advising them of the casualty and its nature.

It has happened, and will happen again, that the next of kin has moved from the address given by the soldier to the Department at the time of enlistment, and the telegram is returned.

In such cases the Department has arranged that it will at once wire the Branch of the Patriotic Fund, asking if the correct address can be supplied. All branches have most cordially agreed to afford every assistance, and will endeavour to locate the family and relatives to ensure safe delivery of all communications. But it would seem reasonable that it is not well to wait until some important communication is sent, and non-delivery follows, to go out and find the address. The Peterborough Branch wishes to at once have all addresses on fyle, and will so soon as the same are procured, transmit to the Department a copy that it may be ready for immediate use.

It is asked that all addresses, whether the family has moved or not, be at once sent to the rooms of the local Branch of the Fund in Peterborough, where they will be registered for use. This will not be required in the cases of the wives or families of married men, whose addresses are already on fyle, and kept correctly posted up. But the addresses of single men when at home with their relatives are most particularly needed. These may well be forwarded by telephone or by post card, and the information will be gladly received. It would be well if those who see this intimation would pass it on to the benefit of those immediately interested.

Youth Thrown From a Wagon

Melville Anthony, the four-year-old son of Mr. L. Anthony, 288 Water Street, suffered a serious accident yesterday afternoon, when he fell off of his father's express waggon. The accident occurred on Mark Street. The waggon was standing on the roadside when the horse suddenly moved ahead, throwing Melville Anthony to the ground. He was picked up unconscious and removed to Dr. Eastwood's where his injuries were attended to. He was later removed to his home. No bones were broken but the youth received injuries that will incapacitate him for some time.

MONTREAL, May 28—Asked whether there is any truth in the rumours which have even appeared in the press that a German is in charge of the Governor-General's private car 'Cornwall and York,' Mr. W. A.
